HISTORY OF MONTANA

HON. PARIS GIBSON. Among the state soldiers of Montana the name of Paris Gibson, who died December 16, 1920, will always have a high and important rank. His influence has been felt in the broad development of the state, though his chief and particular fame rests in his title as "Founder of Great Falls."

He was probably not the first to recognize the commercial possibilities of the Great Falls of the Missouri River, but his initiative and practical experience in the use and development of water power enabled him to bring fantastic dreams down to the place of realized facts.

Mr. Gibson was a real American by inheritance as well as by the most exacting standards of modern times. He was born at Brownfield, Oxford County, Maine, July 1, 1830, a son of Abel and Ann (Howard) Gibson. His first American ancestor, John Gibson, was born in England in 1601 and settled in Eastern Massachusetts in 1631. In the maternal line his ancestor James Howard was a resident of Massachusetts as early as 1643, and in the Howard line Senator Gibson was the grandson of a Revolutionary soldier, while his grandfather Gibson was a soldier in the French and Indian war.

Paris Gibson was liberally educated, attending the Fryburg Academy at Fryburg, Maine, and graduating in 1851 from Bowdoin College in Maine. Just half a century later, in 1901, Bowdoin conferred upon him the honorary degree LL. D. He left college to become a farmer, and enjoyed his first active participation in politics in his native state. In 1853 he was elected a member of the Maine Legislature.

In 1858 Paris Gibson came west and located at the chief industrial center of what was then the northwestern frontier, Minneapolis, or St. Anthony's Falls. Minnesota was still a territory. He was a resident of Minneapolis for over twenty years, and helped establish some of the earliest industries in that great city. In 1858, with William W. Eastman, he built the first merchant flour mill at Minneapolis, known as the Cataract Mill. In 1860 he also erected the first woolen mill, known as the North Star Woolen Mill. In succeeding years Paris Gibson saw Minneapolis become an important city and the great country around it developed agriculturally. In 1879 he came to Montana, locating at Fort Benton, where he engaged in the sheep business. Soon afterward he examined the territory around the confluence of two branches of the Missouri River, known then as the Great Falls of the Missouri. He possessed the technical understanding of water power development, and from his long residence at Minneapolis had gained the knowledge and the initiative to make use of the possibilities at the Falls in Montana. In 1884 he founded the City of Great Falls, and about that time he interested the late James J. Hill in the site. The City of Great Falls, like many other portions of the Northwest, owes much to the genius of the master railroad builder, but the presiding genius of Great Falls from the beginning was the veteran statesman and business man, Paris Gibson. In recent years Mr. Gibson suffered almost a complete loss of sight, but long before that misfortune intervened he had the satisfaction of seeing a wonderful fruition to his early hopes and plans regarding Great Falls.

While Paris Gibson had been less of a politician than many men of smaller note in Montana, he enjoyed exceptional honors at the hands of his fellow citizens. He helped draw up the organic law of the state as a member of the first constitutional convention of 1889. He served as a member of the Montana Senate in 1891, and in 1901 was chosen United States Senator for the unexpired term of William A. Clark. This last honor was the more gratifying because he had never considered himself as a possible candidate for the office. He served in the United States Senate until 1905. Senator Gibson was a democrat, and while a resident of Minneapolis was a member of the Church of the Redeemer, Universalist, and at Great Falls a member of the Unitarian Church.

August 23, 1858, at Brownfield, Maine, he married Valeria Goodenou Sweat, daughter of Jesse and Valeria Sweat. She was born in 1838 and died at Great Falls August 20, 1900. To their marriage were born four children. The two surviving sons are Philip and Theodore. Philip married Mary Douglas August 9, 1882, while Theodore married Mary Johnson April 9, 1888.

EDWIN LLOYD KIMBALL, who is a veteran of the World war, has for several years been identified with Montana, and is branch manager for the Rogers-Templeton Lumber Company.

Mr. Kimball was born at Melrose, Wisconsin, June 12, 1895. His paternal ancestors were colonial settlers from England, first locating in Boston and afterward in the State of Maine. His grandfather, Albert Kimball, was born at Quincy, Illinois, in 1843, was reared in that city, and became an early settler at Neilsville, Wisconsin. For several years he was a farmer and later served as postmaster and otherwise was prominent in the civic and political life of the community. He was a veteran of the Union army during the Civil war. He died at Neilsville in 1910.

Ed Kimball, father of Edwin Lloyd, was born at Neilsville, Wisconsin, in 1866, and was reared and married there. After his marriage he moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, and the greater part of his active life was spent in the service of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway. After 1900 his headquarters were at Washburn, Wisconsin, where he died in 1904. He was a railway conductor for many years and a member of the Order of Railway Conductors. Politically he was a republican and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Ed Kimball married Miss Maggie Brule, who was born near Montreal, Canada, in 1868, and died at St. Paul in 1898. She was the mother of two children: Clare and Edwin. The former is the wife of George F. McDonald, an employe at the State Capitol at St. Paul, Minnesota.

Edwin Lloyd Kimball was three years old when his mother died and nine at the death of his father. He was reared to the age of fifteen by his grandparents at Neilsville, Wisconsin, and from the age of fifteen to seventeen lived with his uncle, W. Scott Davis. He attended the high school at Neilsville, graduating in 1912. After leaving school he worked for six months on a farm near Sioux Falls, South Dakota, after which he was in the employ of the Goodyear Tire Company at San Francisco until February, 1915, then spent a short time at Albuquerque, New Mexico, and returned to Neilsville, Wisconsin, where he was in the service of the Wisconsin Bell Telephone Company until the winter of 1916. For about a year he was with the Bulletin Publishing Company at St. Paul, and then with the St. Paul branch of the Illinois Steel Company until April, 1917. Mr. Kimball made his first visit to Montana in the spring of 1917, and was on the Great Falls Tribune until he enlisted.

Mr. Kimball was in the aviation service, volunteering in October, 1917. He received his preliminary training at Fort George Wright in Washington, and went overseas in March, 1918, having foreign duty until December, 1918. He was a member of the Three Hundred and Seventy-Eighth Aero Squadron. He was mustered out December 27, 1918, and after a brief visit to St. Paul returned to Great Falls, Montana, where he formed his first connection with the Rogers-Templeton Lumber Company. Beginning as yard man, he was sent as manager of the yards at Ryegate, Montana, June 6, 1919, and February 1, 1920, was given the management of the company's business at Hedgesville.

Mr. Kimball, who is unmarried, is an independent in politics, a member of the Presbyterian Church, the American Legion, and is affiliated with Ryegate Lodge No. 101, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

MICHAEL J. RYAN. As far back as there is any record of civilized people those who have ministered to the comfort of the traveling public have received consideration, but in later days they have become even more prominent because of the wide acquaintance they enjoy and the influence they have upon the actions of those with whom they are constantly brought into contact. In order to succeed these men are obliged to understand human nature and the motives which influence their guests; they have to be, themselves, genial and companionable. If they are not excellent buyers and managers the upkeep will soon exceed the receipts, and no business conducted at a loss can continue for long, so that taking everything into consideration it is easy to understand why the proprietor of a hotel is a very representative citizen and prominent man, and why his opinions are held in such high regard. One of the men who is well known all through the Smith River Valley as well as the state itself is Michael J. Ryan, the genial host of the Ringling Hotel, who is also the founder of the Village of Ringling, owner of some of the leading places of amusement here, and a landowner of more than ordinary importance.

Michael J. Ryan was born in County Limerick at the Town of Lisnagry, Ireland, on December 10, 1880, a son of Jeremiah Ryan, born at Newport, County Tipperary Ireland, in 1838, who died at Lisnagry, County Limerick, Ireland, in 1882. All of his life he was engaged in farming. In politics he was a liberal. The Roman Catholic Church held his membership and he was a devout Christian. Jeremiah Ryan was married in County Limerick, Ireland, to Catherine Hall, born at Lisnagry, County Limerick, in 1843. She died at Lisnagry, Ireland, in February, 1906, having survived her husband for many years. Their children were as follows: Thomas, who resides at Lisnagry, Ireland, is engaged in farming; George, who resides in Ohio, is clerking, and Michael J., who was the youngest born. Mrs. Ryan was the daughter of Thomas Hall, born at Lisnagry, Ireland, in 1781, who died there in 1883, having been a farmer there all of his active years. For 500 years the Halls lived on the same farm on which he and Mrs. Ryan were born, and were engaged in cultivating the same land on which he made his living.

Growing up at Lisnagry, Michael J. Ryan attended the national schools there and the Christian Brothers School at Limerick, Ireland, and the Manchester Technical School at Manchester, England, which he left in 1902 and began working in an analytical establishment at Manchester, later being sent out by it to travel through the country districts of England and test the milk for the farmers.

In 1909 Mr. Ryan came to the United States, landing at New York City, New York, and he took out his first papers seventy-six hours after landing, probably the only case on record of this kind. Leaving New York City Mr. Ryan came West and located at Dorsey, Montana, and worked for his uncle, George Hall, a rancher of that district. It had not been Mr. Ryan's intention to come to this country to continue an employe, and in 1910 he took up a homestead of 160 acres, the present site of Ringling. For the subsequent six years he lived on this ranch, and in the meanwhile founded Ringling on a portion of it, erected his hotel, which he has made into the leading one in this section of Meagher County. He owns a pool and billiard hall and a moving picture theater, both of which he keeps up to standard in every respect, believing in furnishing clean and modern places of amusement for the people at a moderate price. It was Mr. Ryan who erected the lighting plant to furnish light to the Hall Addition, which is located on the north side of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad tracks, and comprises about one-half of the town. As a member of the Ringling Commercial Club and of its executive committee, he is continuing his public-spirited efforts in behalf of the place, and he has been very active in arousing interest and securing the establishment of the church parish, for he is a devout Roman Catholic. In later years he has bought other ranch property and now owns a ranch four miles south of Ringling, as the whole of the north side and a portion of the south side occupy the site of the original one.

On June 28, 1914, Mr. Ryan was married at Louisville, Kentucky, to Miss Katherine D. McGrath, a daughter of J. J. and Mary McGrath, who are still residents of Louisville, where Mr. McGrath is managing a hotel. Mrs. Ryan is a talented musician and is a graduate of the Louisville Conservatory of Music in both vocal and instrumental music. Her remarkable abilities have attracted considerable attention and afford genuine pleasure to music lovers in her neighborhood. Mr. and Mrs. Ryan have one daughter, Katherine, who was born on May 3, 1915.

There are some who claim that Mr. Ryan's remarkable progress is the result of luck, but those who understand these things better know that this is not true. Many have come to this and other portions of Montana and have been content to remain ranchers, or who have not had the ability or ambition to branch out. Not so Mr. Ryan, for he is of a different caliber. Each act of his has been a step forward toward a definite goal, and not one has been consummated without careful consideration. He has possessed the grit, the ambition, the foresight and the vision to promulgate and carry out to a successful completion plans which would have staggered any ordinary person. When his career is reviewed it is difficult to realize that a man who has just rounded his second score of years has managed to crowd into this brief period so much intelligent and constructive effort, and it can only be understood when the character of the man is studied. Meagher County is proud of him, Ringling intends to keep him, and Montana has no finer example of an upright, dependable and efficient builder of communities and business interests than he.

ODELL W. MCCONNELL. In addition to being one of the leading attorneys of the state, Odell W. McConnell is closely identified with many of the corporate and business interests of Montana and occupies an enviable position in legal and business circles. He is a son of the late Judge Newton W. McConnell, ex-chief justice of Montana Territory.

Odell W. McConnell was born at Hartsville, Tennessee, July 4, 1868, and was nineteen years of age when his father came to Montana. He was educated at Hartsville in the Masonic Institute and from there entered Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, graduating with the degree of A. B. in 1890, and with the degree of LL. B. in the law department in June, 1891.

Mr. McConnell began practice at Helena in 1891, and five years later became an active partner with his father. For several years he handled a general civil and criminal practice, but more and more his time and abilities have been taken up with corporation law. His eminence in that field is indicated by the fact that he is vice president and general counsel for the Helena Light and Railway Company, general counsel and director of the Montana Life Insurance Company, general counsel and director of the Conrad Trust & Savings Bank, general counsel and director of the Western Accident & Indemnity Company, and a director of several Montana banks.

Mr. McConnell, since he began practice in 1891, has continuously occupied the first numbered suite in the Union Bank Building. He served as prosecuting attorney of Lewis and Clark County two terms, and at different times has lent his influence and leadership to local and state affairs. He is a member of the County and State Bar associations, is a former trustee of the First Presbyterian Church of Helena, served as president of the Montana Club in 1918-19, is a member of the Helena Country Club, and is a Thirty-second Degree Mason, a Knight Templar and a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. McConnell owns one of the most perfectly appointed residences at Helena, 427 Lawrence Street. He married at Gallatin, Tennessee, October 28, 1891, Miss Annie Seay, daughter of Judge George E. and Mary E. (Lauderdale) Seay. Her parents reside at Dallas, Texas. Her father, now retired, was a distinguished Tennessee lawyer and for twenty years was chancellor of the Chancery Courts in his home state. Mrs. McConnell is a graduate of Ward's Seminary, one of the finest schools for girls in the South, at Nashville. Mr. and Mrs. McConnell have two children, Clara and Odell S. The former is a graduate of the Finch School of New York City, and is now the wife of Adam G. Thomson, a grain merchant at Duluth, Minnesota. They have one child, Alexander D., born in August, 1919. Odell S. McConnell graduated from Yale University in 1919, with the degree of A. B. and is now preparing for a legal career as a student in Harvard University Law School.

VERNE THEO HOVEY. Meagher County's interests are well represented in the pages of the Ringling Independent, owned and published by Verne Theo Hovey, one of the enterprising young journalists of this part of Montana, who has earned his right to be numbered among the efficient members of the Fourth Estate through his special talent for the work and his efficiency. He comes of an old American family, founded in New England during the colonial epoch.

Verne Theo Hovey was born in Hancock County, Iowa, on March 9, 1894, a son of Charles B. Hovey, whose birth took place at Spencer, Iowa, in 1868. He became a farmer of Hancock County, Iowa, later moving to Wright County, Iowa, and in 1900 he came West to North Dakota and homesteaded. After he had proved up his property he sold it, and in 1902 came to Montana, where he became a rancher in the neighborhood of Culbertson, living on his property until 1918, when he located at Libby, Montana, and there he is now in business as a contractor and builder. He had learned the carpenter trade in young manhood, so that he is able to carry it on from a practical standpoint. In his political belief he is a republican, while his religious convictions make him a Methodist. At one time he belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America, but he no longer maintains this membership.

Charles B. Hovey was married in Wright County, Iowa, to Minnie Smith, born in Tama County, Iowa, in 1877, a daughter of William Gasper Smith, born in Michigan in 1837. He was married in Iowa and was a pioneer farmer of Tama County, later moving to Wright County, Iowa. Still later he came West to North Dakota, and finally to Libby, Montana, where he lived in retirement until his death on December 9, 1919. During the war between the states he enlisted, in 1861, and served for two years, when he contracted chronic diarrhoea and because of this he was mustered out of the service and honorably discharged. Charles B. Hovey and his wife became the parents of the following children: Charles Jasper, who died at Culbertson, Montana, at the age of twenty-two years and one month, was at that time foreman in a print shop; Verne Theo, who was second in order of birth; Luona Ethel, who married Gleason Pilcher, formerly a rancher, but now an employe of the lumber mills of Libby, Montana; Bonnie, who married Floyd Thibodeau, an employe of the lumber mills of Libby, Montana; Alvin Smith. who is with his parents at Libby, Montana; and Raphael, who is also with his parents.

Verne Theo Hovey attended the rural schools of what was then Valley County, but is now Roosevelt County, Montana, and grew up on his father's farm, although when only ten years old he was apprenticed to the Culbertson Searchlight, and remained with that newspaper for six months, and then went with the Culbertson Republican, and remained with it for three years. He completed his apprenticeship with the Glasgow Currier, and then went as an all around journeyman printer with the Malta Call and remained for four months. Mr. Hovey was then made foreman of the Big Sandy Sentinel, and held that position for eleven months, when, on May 13, 1918, he became editor and business manager of the newspaper at Ryegate. On June 1, 1919, he located at Ringling and established the Ringling Independent, his first issue bearing the date of June 19, 1919. This paper is absolutely independent in politics, and its policy is to foster real Americanism and educate the people away from radicalism of all kinds, especially that which seems to dominate some factions in North Dakota. Although still a new organ, the paper has a large circulation in Meagher and surrounding counties, and is very popular with the more intelligent classes. Mr. Hovey belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He takes an interest in church and civic affairs, for he has located here permanently and owns his plant and office, located on Spencer Avenue.

In 1916 Mr. Hovey was married at Culbertson, Montana, to Miss Grace I. Gregory, born at Minneapolis, Minnesota, a daughter of A. I. Gregory, now a resident of Ryegate, Montana. Mr. Gregory was born at Rockford, Illinois, in 1850, but moved to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and there worked as a painter and decorator. In July, 1910, he came to Bainville, Montana, and until 1918 was engaged in ranching there, but in the latter year retired and located at Ryegate. He married Harriet Levett, born at Rockford, Illinois, in 1864, who died at Bainville, Montana, on October 23, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Hovey have two children, namely: Aloa Harriet, who was born in August, 1917; and LeRoy Jasper, who was born October 7, 1919.

George Thorson. Certain qualifications are demanded of the men who are selected to manage the affairs of large corporations, for without them it is recognized that success will not follow their efforts no matter how conscientious or willing they may be. They must be good business men, dependable and efficient, with a knowledge of their line and human nature, and possess that certain something, intangible though it may be, which enables them to inspire others with some of their own enthusiasm. The officials of the Intermountain Milling Company, with headquarters at Townsend, feel that the manager of their plant, George Thorson, does have these and other qualifications which make him the right man for the position, and certainly his conduct of the duties pertaining to it bears out this contention.

George Thorson was born in Chippewa County, Wisconsin, on February 21, 1878, a son of Theodore Thorson, who was born in New York City, New York, in 1845. When his parents moved to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Theodore Thorson was still a small boy, and he was reared in Wisconsin and there received his educational and practical training. After his marriage he became a pioneer farmer of Chippewa County, and when he retired he moved to Eau Claire, Wisconsin, where he is still residing. In politics he is a republican.

Theodore Thorson was married in Wisconsin, his wife having been born near New York City, and they became the parents of the following children: Thomas, who resides at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, is foreman for a lumber company; George, who was second in order of birth; Elizabeth, who died unmarried at the age of twenty-two years; and August M., who is an engineer for the Great Northern Railroad, lives at Whitefish, Montana.

George Thorson attended the rural schools of Chippewa County, and was reared on his father's farm, where he learned lessons of industry and thrift he has never forgotten. When he was sixteen years old he began to be self-supporting by working in a grain elevator at Chippewa Falls, and remained there for two years. Mr. Thorson then took a position with the Northern Grain Company at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, starting at the bottom and working up through several positions to that of foreman. He then became a salesman for the Washburn Crosby Company, flour millers of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and continued with that corporation until 1917, when he came to Townsend to become manager of the Intermountain Milling Company. The capacity of the mills are 250 pounds of flour per day, and an excellent grade of flour is produced. The officers of this company are: G. W. Meyers, president; W. S. Thompson, vice president; Fred W. Schmitz, secretary and treasurer; and George Thorson, manager. The mills are located along the Northern Pacific Railroad tracks.

Mr. Thorson is a republican, but has never had any desire to enter politics. A Mason, he belongs to Eau Claire Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Eau Claire Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Eau Claire Council, Royal and Select Masters; Helena Consistory No. 3, Scottish Rite; and he is also a member of Eau Claire Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Eau Claire Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1900 Mr. Thorson was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Lee, born at Fairfax, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Thorson have a son, De Los Russell, who was born on October 14, 1907. Since coming to Townsend Mr. Thorson has identified himself with the best class of its citizens, and is interested in contributing toward its advancement in every way possible, both personally and through the medium of his business, which as one of the industrial plants of Broadwater County is a valuable asset to this region.

John Doherty. While collegiate training may not be absolutely essential in the practical field of business, it cannot be denied that its broadening influence is desirable from every point of view. Commercial relations all over the world at the present day are problems that must be thought over and solved through well balanced judgment. In every line of trade these problems arise and the ability to treat them satisfactorily often makes the difference between profit and loss in the enterprise involved. In John Doherty, a graduate of St. Patrick's College, Dublin, Ireland, the O. K. Hardware Company of Townsend, Montana, has as manager an able, competent and discriminating business man.

John Doherty, familiarly known as "Jack," was born February 14, 1865, in County Antrim, Ireland, and bears the name of his grandfather, who spent his life in County Antrim, a farmer and school teacher. Mr. Doherty's parents were Michael and Sarah (O'Raw) Doherty, lifelong residents of County Antrim. The father was born in 1838 and died in 1918, and the mother, born in 1840, died in 1910. Of their children John was the first-born, the others being as follows: Mary, Patrick, James, Michael and Sarah, all of whom still live in County Antrim.

After completing a course in the National School in his native county, Mr. Doherty entered St. Patrick's College at Dublin, where he continued his studies until his graduation in 1887. For two years afterward he taught school in County Antrim, determining then to emigrate to America where the field of opportunity seemed wider, and in 1890 he landed in the harbor of New York City. From there he traveled westward to Montana, visiting on the way Chicago, Illinois, and Denver, Colorado, and arrived at Townsend in April, 1891. Shortly afterward he began work as a miner and continued in the mining business until 1900, when he accepted a position with the Berg Hardware Company, beginning at the bottom in order to thoroughly learn its every detail, and continued with that concern until it went out of business in 1907.

In the meanwhile, as Mr. Doherty became well acquainted with his fellow citizens, his sterling character and educational qualifications impressed them with such favor that in 1908 he was elected county clerk and recorder, and entering upon his duties in January, 1909, served six years, being re-elected in 1910 and again in 1912. After retiring from office he returned to the general hardware business for one year, and in 1916, when the O. K. Hardware Company was established, he was invited to become its manager and has efficiently filled this office ever since. This company, with commodious quarters on Broadway, is one of the two largest hardware concerns in Broadwater County, and does an immense business in hardware and farm implements. The officers of the company are: John James Macdonald, president; W. S. Thompson, vice president; W. L. Cronk, secretary and treasurer, with John Doherty as manager.

At Townsend, Montana, in 1899, Mr. Doherty was married to Miss Ada Van Voast, whose parents now deceased, were John G. and Florence (McFadden) Van Voast. Her father was a pioneer farmer near Townsend. Mr. and Mrs. Doherty have three children, namely: Doris, who is in the senior class of the Townsend High School; Florence and Emmett, both of whom are at school. Mr. Doherty owns the comfortable, modern residence on Cedar Street which is the family home. With his family he belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. In politics he is a democrat, but in matters pertaining to the public welfare of the city he is liberal-minded and notably public-spirited, entirely aside from political bias. He belongs to Helena Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and to Thrifty Homestead Lodge No. 717, Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

Frank T. Hooks is one of the rising young attorneys of Townsend who has returned to civil life after a period of service overseas during the great war, and is winning laurels in his profession, for he is a brilliant lawyer and fine citizen and a valuable adjunct to any community. He was born at Clinton, Iowa, on May 25, 1889, a son of Patrick Hooks.

Frank T. Hooks attended the parochial schools of Clinton, Iowa, and the Clinton High School, from which he was graduated in 1906. After being engaged in various lines of work, Mr. Hooks was connected with the Clinton Advertiser for one year. He then entered Georgetown University, Washington, District of Columbia, in the fall of 1910, and was graduated therefrom in 1914 with the degree of Doctor of Laws, and as a member of Delta Chi, a Greek letter fraternity. From June, 1914, until March 3, 1915, he was associated with Congressman Vollmer of Iowa in a law practice, but on the latter date he became confidential agent, traveling for the Department of Commerce of the United States Government, but resigned in October of that year and came to Townsend, Montana, where he entered upon a general civil and criminal law practice, in which he was succeeding very well when he left it to enlist in May, 1918, in the Intelligence Corps of the United States Army, and was overseas for thirteen and one-half months, serving in France, Belgium, Germany and Luxemburg. He took part in the Saint Mihiel drive, September 12-17, 1918, the Argonne drive of September 26, 1918, and was at the front until the signing of the Armistice put an end to active fighting. He then accompanied his command, the Seventh Army Corps of the Army of Occupation into Germany. From March 1, 1919, until June 7, 1919, he was a professor of the American Expeditionary Force University at Beaume, France. On the latter date he was ordered home, and was mustered out of service on July 17, 1919, and resumed his law practice at Townsend in August, 1919. His offices are located in the Power Block. By inheritance and conviction he is a democrat and Roman Catholic. He belongs to Washington Council No. 262, Knights of Columbus, in which he is a Third Degree Knight. In addition Mr. Hooks belongs to The Neighbors of Woodcraft of Townsend, to the American Legion and the Broadwater County Bar Association. He maintains his residence on Broadway. He is not married. A man of enthusiasms, Mr. Hooks knows the struggles of the poor and sympathizes with the claims of humanity against the heartless demands of avarice and greed. His experience abroad has broadened him and made him appreciate his own country and be glad that he was given the opportunity to serve under its flag. In his profession he is recognized as one of the men destined for great things, for without doubt the future holds many rewards in store for him, and assuredly whatever honors are conferred on him he will prove worthy of them, and then, as now, uphold the rights of the people to individual expression.

Henry W. Hardy. Eastern Montana has good reason to congratulate itself on the presence of such substantial men of enterprise as Henry W. Hardy of Sidney. Mr. Hardy came to this section of the northwest as a cattle man on the open domain, and has gradually transformed his efforts into practical farming, and his homestead ranch is a fine example of what can be accomplished in that line.

Mr. Hardy was born in LaCrosse County, Wisconsin, November 25, 1870, son of William Hardy. Further mention of the Hardy family will be found on other pages of this publication. Henry W. Hardy was educated in public schools, and lived at home to the age of twenty. He then went out to North Dakota, and for nine months was employed as a hand at Dwight for the Dwight Farm and Land Company. Returning to Wisconsin, he worked as a wage earner at different occupations until 1900, when he came West and went through Montana as far as Anaconda. He was a year at Anaconda cooking for contractor Jennings. He had learned the art of cook by various experiences in the lumber woods of Wisconsin and on ranches.

After these experiences thus briefly reviewed he identified himself with the early settlement of the lower Yellowstone Valley, entering his homestead on the North Dakota side of the line and below Fairview. The settlers ahead of him there were very few in number, including Benoit and Meadows and A. F. Nohle. Mr. Hardy and his brothers Charles and Samuel Hardy came together, traveling by railroad to Buford. They brought all their available cash with the intention of engaging in the stock business, and all of them made their home in the shack on Samuel Hardy's claim. The brothers were active as associates until 1913.

As cattlemen their first bunch comprised a hundred twenty head of Dakota range cattle. Their brand was "lazy EH." There was no limit to the range, and while the stock were eating the grass Henry and Charles were employed as cooks on ranches, by railroads, restaurants or hotels for several years, Sam remaining at the ranch and looking after the interests of the company. They reached their climax as stockmen when the country was settling rapidly, and for that reason had to dispose of their stock and take up general farming. They had bred up their cattle into good grades of Herefords and their chief market was Chicago.

After abandoning stock and beef production the brothers took up grain farming. Much of their combined domain was brought under cultivation and they did unusually well at "dry" farming. Some of the results obtained by them would compare favorably with the best results in eastern states. Mr. Hardy feels that luck attended their efforts occasionally and accounted for remarkable yields. On one occasion a quarter section sown to flax yielded twelve bushels to the acre with but a single rain. There was also a yield of forty bushels of wheat and eighty bushels of oats to the acre. In 1904 the brothers sowed their first alfalfa seed, and this matured a good cutting the second year, and successively two cuttings were obtained on the dry land.

Henry W. Hardy sold his land holdings in that region and moved to the Sidney locality, where he bought the Louie Josephson farm. The improvements here are most substantial, and the enlargement of the home has been made by the present owner. Here he resumed grain farming and for a short time was in the sheep business, feeding and finishing lambs, with such good results as to justify his continuation of the industry. His farm comprises all told a half section and he eventually planned to make it an alfalfa farm.

Mr. Hardy was one of the organizers of the Bank of Fairview, became one of its directors and is still a stockholder. He has also helped build up the town, he and his brothers erecting the building which is the home of the Montana Hardware and Furniture Company. In his school district Mr. Hardy helped haul the logs for the construction of the first schoolhouse located in McKenzie County, North Dakota, and the first school was taught by one of the neighbor girls, Miss Morrill.

Mr. Hardy cast his first presidential vote in Wisconsin for Mr. Cleveland in 1892, supported Roosevelt in 1904 and in 1908 voted for Mr. Taft and has ever since been a regular republican. At Sioux Pass, Montana, at the home of William Lewis on November 26, 1913, Mr. Hardy married Miss Catherine Flynn. She was born near Stockbridge, Michigan, September 19, 1876, daughter of James and Sarah (Brogan) Flynn. Her parents were natives of Mullingar, Ireland, where they were married, came to the United States in 1871, and her mother died in 1884 and her father in 1898. The Flynn family were farmers in Ingham County, Michigan. Mrs. Hardy was one of the following children: Mrs. Ernest Dakin, of Lansing, Michigan: Thomas, of Detroit; Mrs. Margaret Kelley, of Detroit; Mrs. Hardy; Christopher, of Fowlerville, Michigan; and Patrick, of Detroit. Mrs. Hardy was educated in a country district in Michigan and also at Bell-oak, and she came to Montana in 1910, joining some Michigan friends. She entered a homestead at Sioux Pass in Richland County, and is one of Montana's women who proved up a claim. Mr. and Mrs. Hardy have one son, William James, born January 6, 1916.

John Neubert. The history of Montana reveals the handiwork of many a great and noble soul who wrought heroically and unselfishly. Her smiling fields and splendid homes, her high-grade institutions, her happy, prospering people, speak volumes of someone's steadfastness of purpose, of someone's strength of arms, activity of brain—of someone's sacrifice. But time, that grim obliterator, before whose destroying fingers even the stubborn granite must in the end succumb, is ever at his work of disintegration. Beneath his blighting touch even memory fails, and too often a life of glorious achievement is forgotten in a day. "Lest we forget," then, this tribute to the late John Neubert is penned. Pioneer, early trapper, prospector and freighter, a public spirited, brave, kindly, generous man, it is the desire of the biographer, as it must be of all who knew him, that his deeds and his character be recorded for the benefit of those who follow after. By no means rich, as mere worldly possessions are estimated, his record was rich in a thousand thronging incidents of the rugged days, long gone, when hardy men stood shoulder to shoulder and fought to conquer the western wilderness.

John Neubert was a native of Germany, where he was born on October 8, 1838, and his death occurred at Fort Benton, Montana, on the 20th of August, 1914, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. In 1847, when nine years of age, he accompanied his parents on their immigration to the United States. The trip was made in a slow-sailing boat, requiring more than one hundred days to make the journey to New Orleans, where they landed. A short time afterward they removed to Sheboygan, Wisconsin, where he attended school, securing a good practical education. As soon as large enough the lad entered a furniture factory to learn the business, remaining there until 1855, when he started West with a party of men, their objective destination being Fort Benton, Montana. It was a long and tiresome journey, one which would not have been completed by men of less heroic mettle, for their trip was characterized by toil of the severest kind and by dangers and obstacles untold. They were compelled to pull their boats by hand up the Missouri River all the way from Sioux City, Iowa, to Fort Benton, an entire year being consumed in this journey. Arriving at Fort Benton, Mr. Neubert entered the employ of the old American Fur Company, which had been organized in 1809 by John Jacob Astor. He remained with that company until 1862, when he went to Alder Gulch and engaged in prospecting and staking out a claim. However, during his absence in Bannock another man jumped his claim. Mr. Neubert spent a number of years in prospecting and mining in various localities, and then returned to Fort Benton and again became connected with the American Fur Company. Some time later he engaged in the restaurant business, in which he was successful. Mr. Neubert was numbered among the pioneer Indian traders of Montana, and came in contact with the red men many times in various relations, some of which were not of a pleasant nature. At one time he entered into a big contract with the United States Government for cutting hay. It was during an uprising of the Indians, who were on the war path frequently, and Mr. Neubert found it necessary at times to keep constant guard for the protection of the men who were engaged in the cutting of the hay. The experiences of those early days can hardly be fully appreciated by the present generation, who today see no indications of the conditions which actually existed a half century ago, therefore it is hard for them to full appreciate the demands that were made on the courage, resources and energies of the pioneers. Those men and women who came here in those early days, inspired by the vision of the glorious days which were to follow, are entitled to the eternal gratitude of those who today enjoy the fruits of their sacrifices.

On June 20, 1871, in Leavenworth, Kansas, Mr. Neubert was married to Theresa Pander, who survives him. She was born in Germany on October 28. 1848, and is the daughter of Joseph and Helena (Myer) Pander, also natives of Germany. Mrs. Neubert is the fourth in order of birth of the five children born to her parents, who never left their native land. Mrs. Neubert came to the United State in 1865, being twenty-one days on the ocean, and landing at New York City. To Mr. and Mrs. Neubert were born three children, namely: Lucy is the wife of Charles H. Brinkman, a cattleman, and they have one daughter, Ruth. Cyrus Teton, who was born five miles from Fort Benton, being the first white child born in that locality, married Adaline Lapine. Albert John died at the age of four years. Ruth Brinkman, Mrs. Neubert's granddaughter, became the wife of John Taylor, and they have one daughter, Lillian Ruth, of the fourth living generation. Mrs. Neubert, who has passed the Psalmist's allotted span of three score years and ten, is in the enjoyment of her health to a remarkable degree and her mental faculties are as alert and keen as ever. She takes a live interest in passing events and delights to entertain her friends with narrations of the stirring events of the pioneer days. She refers to the fact that when she first came to Fort Benton there were more Indians here than white persons, and she has witnessed the passing of great herds of buffalo through the streets of that town. Deer and other wild game were plentiful and constituted a large part of the daily bill of fare.

Politically Mr. Neubert was a stanch adherent of the democratic party. His religious membership was with the Lutheran Church. He was a man of kindly impulses and earnest character, and as a broad-minded and upright citizen enjoyed to a notable degree the respect and esteem of all who knew him.

ARTHUR TUTTLE belongs to an influential pioneer family of Montana, one that came originally from England and established its home on the shores of the United States in New York. David Tuttle, the grandfather of Arthur, founded the family in Montana, where he was a pioneer of 1864. He was first engaged in placer mining at Alder Gulch, and in 1866 removed to Fishcreek in Jefferson County, where he was a rancher until his life's labors were ended in death, his demise occurring before the birth of his grandson Arthur.

A son of this worthy Montana pioneer, Sherman F. Tuttle, now resides at Boulder, Montana, one of its best known and most influential citizens. Born in Indiana in July, 1848, he moved with his parents to Des Moines, Iowa, in 1849, where he spent the years of his boyhood and youth up to the age of sixteen, coming then with his father to Alder Gulch, Montana, near Virginia City, and in this new mining country he completed his educational training. He began earning his own way in the world when still a youth, and until he reached his majority assisted in the support of his father's large family. After a time he took up ranching at Fishcreek in Jefferson County, and in his home there all his children were born. He proved successful as a rancher and in his cattle raising, and in 1878 he drove his cattle to the Judith Basin, although still retaining his home on the ranch.

In 1896 Mr. Tuttle removed to the Town of Whitehall and became manager of a mercantile establishment there, and while carrying on his mercantile interests also conducted a ranch which he had purchased near the town, continuing the dual occupations until he was elected the treasurer of Jefferson County in 1900, taking the oath of office in March of the following year. In October, 1900, Mr. Tuttle removed to Boulder in the discharge of his official duties, and he remained in the office for one term of two years, retiring then to a ranch he had purchased near the town and removing his stock there. This property has since been sold to the state as a part of the grounds for the State School for the Deaf and Blind.

In 1906 Mr. Tuttle left that ranch and purchased the Bank of Boulder, thus entering upon a career in which he is perhaps most intimately known and in which he has achieved his greatest success and prominence. He has since served the Bank of Boulder as its president, and the other officers at the present time are Ed Ryan, vice president, L. Q. Skelton, cashier and secretary, and Arthur Tuttle, assistant cashier.

The Bank of Boulder was established in February, 1888, as a state bank, was afterward a national bank for a time, and was again given a state charter. It is capitalized at $50,000, has surplus and profits amounting to $27,000, and its deposits are $600,000. Its president, Mr. Tuttle, is also the vice president of the Whitehall State Bank, and he has membership in the Bankers Life Company and in the State Bankers Association.

Throughout the period of his residence in Montana Mr. Tuttle has been keenly alive to its best interests, and as a business man and citizen he has been influential in upholding its high standards and assisting in its development. He was a representative to the Legislature in 1910 from Jefferson County, elected by the democratic party, and as a state official he proved his true worth and ability. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a member of Boulder Lodge No. 41, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was especially active in war auxiliary work.

Mr. Tuttle married Derinda J. Butts, who was born in Missouri in 1854, and a large family of children has blessed their union, of whom Arthur Tuttle was the first born. Cora, the oldest daughter, married a Mr. Kincaid and is now a widow residing in California. Her husband was a clergyman in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Sherman Tuttle is a physician and surgeon in San Francisco. He received his medical degree in the College of Physicians and Surgeons of that city. Claude H. Tuttle, who resides at Helena, Montana, is in the office of the internal revenue collector. Earl R. Tuttle resides on a ranch between Boulder and Whitehall. Ada married Joseph D. Moore, who is a miner residing at Boulder. Lulu married Gus Wellin, a butcher at Boulder, and Julian Errett, the youngest of the family, is a miner living in Butte.

Arthur Tuttle was born in his parents' home at Fishcreek in Jefferson County, Montana, March 22, 1874, and as a business man and citizen is proving worthy of the name he bears, one of the oldest and most influential in this section of Montana. From the rural schools near his boyhood's home he entered the State Agricultural College at Bozeman the same year the institution was established, 1893, and remained there as a student for one year. From that time until 1895 he was employed on the home farm, then for two years worked for his uncle, James Gordon, on his ranch in Madison County, returning at the close of that period to the home farm and remaining there until appointed deputy treasurer under his father, a position he also filled for two years and for a similar period served as the deputy under County Treasurer E. W. Burdick, afterward serving as an extra man in the courthouse until July, 1906.

At that time Mr. Tuttle embarked in the banking business as an employe in the Bank of Boulder, starting in at the very bottom of the business and gradually working his way up to the position he now occupies, that of assistant cashier. He has adopted the political faith of his father and votes with the democratic party. He is a member also of the Methodist Episcopal Church and one of its official board, and belongs to Boulder Lodge No. 19, Knights of Pythias, and is a past chancellor commander. He also belongs to Basin Aerie No. 874, Fraternal Order of Eagles. At the present time he is serving as clerk of the Town Council.

At Butte, Montana, in March, 1908, Mr. Tuttle was married to Miss Adeline Jacques, who was born in France but was reared and educated in the United States. She died at Boulder in 1911. Mr. Tuttle has an adopted daughter, Garnet, who is a student in the Montana Deaconess School at Helena. The Tuttle home is a modern residence in Boulder.

Col. Cornelius B. Nolan. Among the active, able, and influential members of the Montana bar, Cornelius B. Nolan, of Helena, has won unmistakable prestige in his professional career, his success being due to his comprehensive knowledge of law, his devotion to his work, and his ability to properly apply his natural and acquired forces to the cases in which he has been retained. A native of Ireland, he was born December 25, 1856, in County Limerick, where the days of his boyhood and youth were spent.

Bernard Nolan, the colonel's father, spent his entire life in County Limerick, Ireland, his birth occurring there in 1802, and his death in 1880. He was a stone mason by trade, and was a member of the Fenian organization. He married Catherine Hickey, a life-long resident of County Limerick, and they became the parents of the following children: Thomas, who immigrated to the United States in the '50s, served in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, and was afterward employed for thirty years in the postoffice at St. Louis, Missouri, where his death occurred; Catherine, living in County Limerick, Ireland, near Temple, is the widow of Michael Shaugnessy, a farmer; Ellen, who married James Dalton, died in Tioga County, New York, leaving six children; Patrick, who died at Newark Valley, New York, was there employed in the tannery of Davidge & Lanfield; Bryan, who followed railroading, died in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1890; and Cornelius B., the special subject of this sketch.

Coming to New York in 1873, Cornelius B. Nolan located at Newark Valley, that state, and continued his studies in the academy at Owego, New York. He subsequently worked for two years in track maintenance on the Southern Central and Delaware & Lackawanna railways as a day laborer. Going to Port Allegany, Pennsylvania in 1877, he was employed in a tannery two years, having charge of the drying department, and of the shipping of leather to Buffalo.

In 1878 Mr. Nolan went to Saint Louis, Missouri, to visit his brother Thomas, with whom he remained five years, in the meantime studying law with Rodger Foster, in the Temple Building, and attending the Saint Louis Law School, a department of the Washington University, from which he was graduated in 1883. Having in the meantime become proficient in the study of stenography, Mr. Nolan accepted a position as stenographer in a Saint Louis house in 1883, and in 1884 went to Chicago, where for two years he was stenographer for an agricultural house. Coming to Helena, Montana, in the fall of 1886, as stenographer for the agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, he remained in his office for seven months. Being then appointed by N. W. McConnell, chief Justice of the Territory of Montana, as court reporter, he retained the position until Montana was made a state.

Being then elected county attorney of Lewis and Clark County, Mr. Nolan served ably in that capacity for five years, during which time he was also engaged in the practice of his profession on the side, and later opened a law office in Helena. Elected attorney general of Montana in 1896, he served four years, during which time the celebrated Clark-Daily fight took place, Mr. Nolan having charge of the investigation by the grand jury of the alleged bribery of legislators, the investigation having been ordered by a joint resolution of the Montana Senate and House.

From 1900 until 1910 Mr. Nolan was successfully engaged in the practice of law in Helena, and was then elected to the State Legislature in order that he might help elect Thomas J. Walsh, with whom he had been in partnership for three years, to the United States Senate. Mr. Walsh, by the way, was subsequently elected to that position, and is still serving as United States Senator. After serving his legislative term, Colonel Nolan has since carried on an extensive and lucrative general civil and criminal practice, being a member of the well known firm of Walsh, Nolan & Scallon, with offices in the Penwell Block. He is a democrat in politics, and served with the rank of colonel on General Toole's staff in the State Militia, being inspector general.

Colonel Nolan is a man of excellent business ability, and has acquired property of much value, owning a modern residence at 112 East Lawrence Street; 2,500 acres of ranch land, two ranches being located in Broadwater County, and one in Park County; and owning in addition real estate in Wheatland County. He is a member of the Montana Club; of the Helena Commercial Club; and of the Lewis and Clark County Bar Association; the State Bar and the National Bar associations. Fraternally the colonel belongs to Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of which he was worshipful master in 1890; to Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; to Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar; to Helena Consistory No. 3, which confers the thirty-second degree of Masonry; to Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and to Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Colonel Nolan married, in 1894, in Helena, Miss Hattie Shober, a niece of John H. Shober, a retired attorney of Helena, and a daughter of Herod and Melvina (Scott) Shober, neither of whom are now living. Mrs. Nolan was born in Mantorville, Minnesota, and after her graduation from Valparaiso University, in Valparaiso, Indiana, taught school in Minnesota and Iowa, from the latter state coming to Montana in 1888. The colonel and Mrs. Nolan have no children.

John Scott Harrison. As assistant supervisor of surveys for Montana, J. Scott Harrison, of Helena, is intimately acquainted not only with the topography of the state, but with its geological conditions and mineral resources, his knowledge of its physical features being extensive and comprehensive. A son of the late James Findlay Harrison, he was born, April 30, 1867, in Linn County, Kansas, of distinguished ancestry, being a descendant in the eighth generation of Benjamin Harrison, the immigrant; in the fifth generation of Benjamin Harrison, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence; and in the fourth generation of Gen. William Henry Harrison, the ninth President of the United States.

Benjamin Harrison, the immigrant ancestor, came to America from England about 1642, settling in Virginia, where he subsequently served as clerk of the Common Council at Jamestown. Benjamin Harrison, the next in line of descent, became prominent in public affairs, serving as a member of the House of Burgesses, and being known as Counsellor

Harrison. The line was continued through his son, Benjamin Harrison, who served in the Virginia House of Burgesses. The maiden name of his wife was Anna Carter. Their son, Benjamin Harrison, the succeeding ancestor, a life-long resident of Virginia, was born in 1740, and died in 1791. He served as colonel of a regiment in the Revolutionary war, and was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He married Elizabeth Bassett, and through their son William Henry the line of descent was continued.

William Henry Harrison was born in Berkeley, Charles City County, Virginia, February 9, 1773, and in 1790 was graduated from the Hampden Sidney College. His military spirit being aroused by the Indian barbarities along the frontier, he applied to General Washington for a commission, and in 1795, as captain of a company of brave soldiers, was given charge of Fort Washington, the present site of the City of Cincinnati. On March 4, 1841, he was inaugurated President of the United States, and on April 4, 1841, just one month later, his death occurred in Washington, District of Columbia. While at Fort Washington he wooed and won "sweet Anne Symmes," and they became the parents of several sons and daughters.

William Henry Harrison was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1802. He was admitted to the Ohio bar in 1823, and located at North Bend, Ohio, where he was successfully engaged as an attorney-at-law until his death in 1838. For seven years he served as colonel of the Ohio State Militia. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Irwin, was born in Mercersburg, Pennsylvania, in 1802, and died in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1847.

James Findlay Harrison was born March 9, 1825, in Cincinnati, Ohio, and died at Mound City, Linn County, Kansas, February 14, 1907. As a youth he entered the United States Military Academy at West Point, but left during his senior year, and was later graduated from the University of Cincinnati. As a member of the First Ohio Volunteer Infantry he served throughout the Mexican war, being under command of Colonel Mitchell and Gen. Zachary Taylor. Returning to Cincinnati at the close of the conflict, he was admitted to the bar at Terre Haute, Indiana, where he engaged in the practice of his profession a number of years. Removing to Dayton, Ohio, he assumed possession of property he had there inherited, and lived upon its income for a while. In 1855 he was appointed first lieutenant of the Tenth Infantry, United States Army, but never served in that capacity. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted for three months and raised the Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, of which he was commissioned colonel. Resigning at the expiration of his term of enlistment, he subsequently served throughout the war, having been on the staffs of both Gen. W. H. Lyte and Gen. Phil Sheridan and being present at the battle of Chickamauga. Going to Linn County, Kansas, after the close of the war, he was engaged in farming and civil engineering for several years, remaining there until his death. He filled various official positions in Linn County, and was a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was a stanch republican in politics, and an active member of the Episcopal Church.

James Findlay Harrison was twice married. He married first Caroline Alston, who was born in South Carolina, and died in Dayton, Ohio, in 1862. The three children born of their union all died in childhood. He married for his second wife Alice M. Kennedy, who was born in Natchez, Mississippi, in 1842, and died in Kansas City, Missouri, in 1911. Five children blessed their union, as follows: John Scott, the special subject of this sketch; William Henry, a real estate broker of Kansas City, Missouri; Mary Randolph, wife of John Walter Farrar, a well known attorney of Kansas City, Missouri; James Findlay, a homesteader of Dell, Montana; and Archibald Irwin, who died March 7, 1920. He served in the Engineers Corps during the World war.

Although J. Scott Harrison attended the rural schools of Linn County, Kansas, he was in reality under the tutorship of his father, through whom he received a complete academic education. He subsequently read law at Mound City, Kansas, for two years, but a professional career did not appeal to him. Leaving home on attaining his majority, he followed civil engineering for a while, working in both Kansas and Oklahoma. From 1895 until 1899 Mr. Harrison was employed by the Geological Survey in the survey of the Indian Territory. Accepting then a position in the General Land Office at Washington, District of Columbia, he made surveys in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon, Washington and North Dakota, being examiner of surveys from 1900, when he made his first appearance in Montana, until 1910. In that year he was appointed assistant supervisor of surveys, and in 1911 was given charge of all the general land office surveys of District No. 1, which covers the entire state of Montana, his offices being located at 20 Federal Building. In 1919-20 he was director of the Lewis and Clark County War Savings Organization.

Mr. Harrison is a steadfast republican in politics. Fraternally he is a member of Mound City Lodge No. 33, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of Mound City, Kansas; of Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons, of which he is a past high priest; a member and past commander of Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar; of Helena Council No. 1, Royal and Select Masters, of which he is thrice illustrious master; of Helena Consistory No. 3, which confers the thirty-second degree; and of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Harrison is also a member and past president of the Montana Society of the Sons of the American Revolution; a member of the Society of Descendants of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence; and of the Helena Country Club. His attractive home is located at 801 Holter Street.

Mr. Harrison married, in Helena, Montana, in 1903, Miss Mary S. Hill, a woman of culture and refinement, who was educated at a ladies' seminary in Faribault, Minnesota. Her father, the late Joseph S. Hill, a pioneer settler of Fort Benton, Montana, and a prominent business man of that place, married Augusta F. Ford, who now resides in Helena, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are the parents of three children, namely: James Findlay Hill, who died in infancy; William Henry, born August 14, 1906; and Scott Hill, born September 30, 1907.

Ole Flaten. During a residence in Montana of about ten years Ole Flaten has figured prominently both in business and educational affairs. He has a very fine record as a teacher and school administrator, made both in this state and in Minnesota. Mr. Flaten owns a homestead which he took up and developed in Montana, but at present is giving all his time to his duties as manager of the Montana Lumber Company at Judith Gap.

Mr. Flaten was born in Goodhue County, Minnesota, December 10, 1883. His people for generations were prominent at Vang, Valdres, Norway. His great-grandfather on his mother's side was at one time a magistrate in that Norwegian community and otherwise active and influential in civic and political affairs. Mr. Flaten's paternal grandfather was Ingvald Flaten, who was born at Vang and died there, though for several years he lived in Goodhue County, Minnesota. His life was spent as a farmer.

Ole Flaten, Sr., was born at Vang, Norway, in 1842, and was reared and married there. His wife was Maren Wangenstein, who was born at Vang in 1842 and died in Goodhue County, Minnesota, in 1891. Ole Flaten was a studious and thoughtful man, very liberally educated, and was widely known for his knowledge of history. In Norway he taught in the Lutheran parochial schools. Shortly after the close of the American Civil war he came to this country, and was a pioneer settler in Goodhue County, Minnesota. He developed a farm, cultivated it and also taught in parochial schools. He died at Northfield in 1914. A stanch republican, he served as township assessor and also as a member of the school board. During his residence at Northfield he conducted a book store. He was one of the leading lay members of the Lutheran Church. Most of his children acquired liberal educations. The oldest, Nils, graduated with the A. B. degree from the University of Minnesota in 1893, received the Master of Arts degree in 1896 and the Doctor of Philosophy degree in 1900 from the same university, and has long been a prominent educator in Minnesota. He is now professor of French and Spanish at St. Olaf College, Northfield. During the war he was sent abroad by the Young Men's Christian Association War Council, and was on duty in Northern Italy. The second child is Randi, wife of Russell Barclay, an employe of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Minneapolis. Ingvold is a merchant at Rolette, North Dakota. Sigrid is the wife of Emil Brostrom, an employe of Tenant & Hoyt, millers, with home at Lake City, Minnesota. Dorothea is the wife of N. C. Pearson, of Minot, North Dakota. Ole, Jr., is the youngest of six children of his mother. His father married for a second wife Mrs. Heil, who is still living at Northfield. Her only child, Rudolph, is in the Northfield High School.

Ole Flaten spent most of his boyhood on a farm in Goodhue County, Minnesota. While there he attended rural schools, completed the work of the eighth grade at Dennison, graduated in 1904 from the preparatory department of St. Olaf, and then took the regular course of St. Olaf College, graduating Bachelor of Science in 1908. In college he was a member of the Alpha Beta Chi fraternity. Before coming to Montana Mr. Flaten was principal of the high school at Halstad, Minnesota, one year, and for five months teacher of chemistry and physics in the Redwing High School. He reached Montana at Lewistown in April, 1910, but soon went to Grass Range in Fergus County, where he took up a quarter section homestead, located twelve miles south of Grass Range. He proved up his claim and now owns altogether 200 acres. This land is in the immediate region where some promising oil developments have been carried on and his farm is under lease to an oil development company. From his claim Mr. Flaten went back to Minnesota and spent nine months at Sauk Rapids, and during the school year of 1913-14 was principal of the school at the Blackfoot Indian Reservation. He then resumed his ranch work. In 1916 he was candidate at the republican primaries for county superintendent of schools of Fergus County and lost the nomination by a very small figure. He has been in the lumber business since 1917, beginning as bookkeeper for the Montana Lumber Company at Grass Range. He was transferred and for one year was second man in charge of the company's business at Roundup, and then became manager of the plant at Judith Gap, where he has had his home since February, 1919.

Mr. Flaten, who is unmarried, is an independent republican, is affiliated with the Lutheran Church, is a past master workman of Judith Gap Lodge No. 46, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and a member of Grass Range Lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Besides his ranch property he owns a modern residence on High Street.

WILLIAM N. SMITH. The march of improvement is accelerated day by day, and each successive moment seems to demand of men a broader intelligence and a greater discernment than did the preceding, showing that successful men must be live men in this age, bristling with activity. The purpose of biography is to preserve the records of such men for the edification of succeeding generations; thus the lessons of biography may be far-reaching to an extent not superficially evident. A man's reputation is the property of the world, for the laws of nature have forbidden isolation. Every human being either submits to or rises above the controlling influence which touches, controls, guides or misdirects others. If he be honest and successful in his chosen field of endeavor, investigation will brighten his reputation and point the way along which others may follow with like success. The career of William N. Smith, well known business man and banker of Harlowton, is of that class of enterprising citizens whose example is calculated to be an incentive to others, for his efforts have met with a fair measure of success in life's affairs.

William N. Smith was born at St. Cloud, Minnesota, on September 15, 1868, and is the son of Charles W. and Laura E. (Thompson) Smith. Charles W. Thompson is a native of the State of Illinois, where he was born in 1840. He early learned the trade of a printer and in young manhood located in Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he was employed in a printing office. At the outbreak of the Civil war he was one of the first three to enlist in Company D of the old First Regiment of Minnesota Infantry, for three years. With this regiment he participated in many of the most important battles and skirmishes of that great struggle between the states, and at the end of the first enlistment period the strength of the regiment had been reduced to less than 500 men. Upon being mustered out at the end of his first period of enlistment, Mr. Smith at once re-enlisted in the Heavy Artillery, in which he was commissioned a captain, and as such served until the close of the war. He then located in Fergus Falls, Minnesota, where he engaged in the farm machinery business until 1917, when he retired and has since made his home in Miami, Florida. He served as deputy sheriff of Ottertail County, Minnesota, several terms, and also served several terms as chief of police of Fergus Falls. He was also honored in being selected as a member of the staff of Governor John Lind. Politically he was formerly a republican, but of late years has given his support to the democratic ticket. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the Masonic fraternity. Laura E. Smith, mother of the subject, was born in Vermont in 1843, and her death occurred in Miami, Florida, in 1919, at the age of seventy-six years. To this worthy couple were born five children, of which number the subject of this sketch is the eldest.

William N. Smith received a good practical education in the public schools of Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and at the age of eighteen years he began working in a flour mill there, receiving $1.25 a day. Soon afterward he became superintendent of the Page Flour Mill at Fergus Falls. He became an expert miller, and in 1891 he was appointed head miller and superintendent of the Grafton Flour Mill at Graftan, North Dakota, with which mill he was identified in that capacity for nineteen years. This mill subsequently became known as the Grafton Roller Milling Company, in which Mr. Smith became a stockholder, and in 1910 he was elected vice president of the company and superintendent of its milling operations. In 1911 he located in Harlowton, Montana, where he constructed the first flour mill in the Musselshell Valley. In 1912 Mr. Smith was one of the organizers of the Montana Flour Mills Company, one of the largest and most important milling companies in Montana. The company has flour mills at Great Falls, Lewiston and Bozeman, Montana, and a line of over fifty grain elevators, and of all this equipment Mr. Smith is the actual and responsible superintendent, as well as vice president of the company. On July 14, 1913, he became a director and vice president of the First National Bank of Harlowton, and on July 13, 1914, he was elected president of that institution.

Mr. Smith has been twice married, first to Bessie Mead, of Fergus Falls, who bore him three daughters, Gladys, Marian and Bessie. Some time after the death of his first wife Mr. Smith was married to Abby Hays, of St. Charles, Minnesota.

Politically Mr. Smith has been nominally a democrat, though at the present time he occupies an independent attitude. Never a seeker after public office, nevertheless he was induced by the citizens of Grafton, North Dakota, to serve as mayor and was elected to a second term in that office. His administration was an efficient one and was particularly characterized by the cleaning up of the bootlegging crowd which at that time infested that town. He served two terms as chief game warden of the State of North Dakota, and he served for many terms as a member of the local school board. As chairman of the Liberty Loan drives during the World war Mr. Smith made a record of which he has every reason to be proud. He was general chairman of all five drives in the county and was also chairman of the County Council of Defense, in which capacity he had every school district in the county thoroughly organized. It was mainly through his systematic organization and his personal efforts that Wheatland County was awarded the silver cup, with the following self-explanatory inscription:

Awarded to Wheatland County
For the Largest Oversubscription in Montana
Fourth Liberty Loan Ninth Federal Reserve District at the Launching of the U. S. S. S. Wheatland, Montana, by the Skinner & Eddy Corporation,
August 4, 1919, Seattle, Wash.

Mr. Smith refers to this distinction with considerable pride, for it reflects not alone the result of his personal efforts, but also the loyalty and generosity of the people of this county, who failed in no demand made on them during the great world crisis. Fraternally Mr. Smith is a member of Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons; Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena. Mr. Smith is universally recognized as a splendid citizen, one of Harlowton's leading men of affairs, progressive in all that the term implies; a man of lofty character, sturdy integrity and unswerving honesty.

ROBERT S. TINGLEY. This well known citizen is a descendant of one of the honored old pioneers of Montana, who left his ancestral hills in the old Buckeye State many years ago and came to Montana, taking an active and effective part in the great work of development which was incumbent on the first settlers of the country. They did their work wisely and well, those brave and hardy old pioneers, and today we of the present generation are reaping the fruitage of their labors. The subject of this sketch has successfully carried forward the work which was inaugurated by his father and today he is numbered among the representative men of his section of the state.

Robert S. Tingley was born on Smith River, Deep Creek, Chouteau County, Montana, on October 24, 1870, and is the third in order of birth of the six children born to his parents, Robert S. and Louise (Campbell) Tingley. The father was born in the State of Ohio in 1841, and he died at his home here in August, 1889. His widow, who is a native of Montana, is yet living, in the seventy-fourth year of her age. Robert S. Tingley, Sr., moved from Ohio to Wisconsin with his parents when a mere child, and there he secured his school education. Later the family moved to Iowa, where he lived until 1862, when he came to Montana with his father and brother, Clark T. They made the long and at that time dangerous trip overland and thence by boat up the Missouri River to Fort Benton, whence they drove overland to Bannock. There Mr. Tingley engaged in prospecting, mining and trapping, but later "squatted" on a tract of Government land in the Prickley Pear Valley. There in 1872 he engaged in the cattle business, which he pursued for a time, but some time later he located near where the City of Great Falls now stands. In 1874 he located in Fort Benton and engaged in the meat business, in connection with which he took Government contracts for supplying meat and furnished supplies for the steamboats which plied the Missouri River. In the spring of 1879 Mr. Tingley sold out his business interests in Fort Benton and went to Texas, where he bought cattle, which he drove over the trail to the Black Hills of Dakota, where he disposed of them. Subsequently he bought the J. L. Perkins stock herd of nearly 4,000 cattle, which he took to the Moccasin and Cone Butte ranges, and to this business he continued to give his attention up to the time of his death, making his home at Big Sandy. He had the distinction of being one of the first settlers west of the Missouri River and north of the Marais River, in the neighborhood of the Blackfoot Reservation. In politics he was first a whig and later a republican. He had a large part in the history of the early period of Montana. He was one of the pioneer freighters in the territory, driving out of Fort Benton, Helena, McCloud and Cow Island. In 1878 he lived in Fort Benton, his family occupying the upper floor of the old fort there.

Robert S. Tingley, Jr., received his education in the public schools of Fort Benton, his boyhood days being spent under the parental roof. As soon as old enough he became his father's associate in business and continued to be his assistant in all his interests up to the time of his death. The subject then assumed the management of the business, to which in 1907 he added the breeding and raising of horses. In 1910 he disposed of the cattle and the oldest stock of horses, retaining only the younger and stronger animals. At the present time he is confining his attention to the cultivation of his land and the raising of horses. In 1910 also Mr. Tingley engaged in the livery business in Big Sandy, continuing that line up to 1915, when he disposed of the stable and became the proprietor of the Grand Opera House, since which time he has been interested in the amusement business. He has been successful in all his enterprises and enjoys an excellent reputation as a far-sighted and shrewd business man, whose judgment is seldom at fault, and whose success is due largely to the energy, determination and perseverance of his methods.

Mr. Tingley was married on October 5, 1898, to Jeannette A. Rutan, who was born in Indiana, the daughter of Charles F. and Elizabeth Rutan. The father is a native of Massachusetts, but now makes his home in Los Angeles, California. His wife is a native of Indiana. Mrs. Tingley is the eldest of their three children, two of whom are living. To the subject and wife have been born two children, Lorain M. and Orville M.

Politically Mr. Tingley is not bound by party lines, preferring to vote for men and measures which meet with his approval, regardless of party. Fraternally he is a member of Treasure Lodge No. 95, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. Quiet and unostentatious in manner, he nevertheless has left a strong impress of his individuality upon all with whom he has come into contact. He is public spirited and lends his support to any cause that has for its ultimate object the betterment of his locality in material, civic and moral lines.

H. F. Nelson. Financial and lumber interests have a worthy and efficient representative at Willow Creek in the person of H. F. Nelson, who has been a resident of this locality since 1914, and who during the time that has passed since then has been an important factor in the development and progress of this section. A man of sound judgment and great energy, it has been his fortune to have been the architect of his own prosperity, for each upward step in his career has been gained through his own effort and as a result of his intelligent application of his inherent abilities.

Mr. Nelson was born in Inwood County, Iowa, February 13, 1880, a son of Peter and Julia (Schneider) Nelson, and a grandson of Halver Nelson, of Norwegian descent. Halvor Nelson, who for some years was a farmer in the vicinity of Claremont, Iowa, retired from active pursuits in 1896 and went to California, where his death occurred. Peter Nelson was born in 1858, in Iowa, and for some years was engaged in farming in Inwood County, which was the county of his rearing, education and marriage. In 1881 he removed to Nora Springs, that state, where he owned and operated a flour mill, but in 1893 went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, where after some years he retired. In 1902 he made removal to Los Angeles, California, where he is still living in comfortable retirement. He is a republican, and he and Mrs. Nelson are members of the Congregational Church. They are the parents of two children, H. F. and William H., the latter a real estate operator of Porterville, California.

H. F. Nelson was educated in the public schools of Minneapolis, Minnesota, following which he attended a business college in that city for two years, and when he left that institution in 1899 he secured employment in a lumber yard. In 1902 he went with his parents to Los Angeles, where he was variously employed, packing oranges, etc., for two years, then locating at Millbank, South Dakota, where he was proprietor of a clothing business until 1914. In that year he came to Willow Creek, Montana, and here founded his present lumber yard, situated along the Northern Pacific Railroad tracks, the only yard of its kind here. The company, of which he is president, is known as the Nelson-Thorndyke Company, his partner being Eugene Thorndyke. With Mr. Thorndyke, also, he founded the Willow Creek State Bank, a successful institution with a capital of $20,000 and surplus of $9,000, the officers of which are: F. B. Roberts, president; H. F. Nelson, vice president; and Eugene Thorndyke, cashier. The banking house, situated on Main Street, is built of cement blocks and is one of the community's imposing structures. The Nelson-Thorndyke Company handles lumber, hardware and everything in the building line, and does a thriving business under able and energetic management. Mr. Nelson is the owner of a modern residence on Main Street and two ranches of 960 acres on the South Bench of Gallatin County, and with Mr. Thorndyke owns other ranches to the extent of 930 acres in Gallatin and Jefferson counties. Mr. Nelson is a stanch republican and takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs and has been a supporter of numerous movements tending toward civic betterment. Fraternally he is affiliated with Millbank (South Dakota) Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Millbank Chapter, Royal Arch Masons.

Mr. Nelson was married at Los Angeles, California, in 1903, to Miss Lois Robertson, who was born in that city and attended high school there, and they are the parents of three children: Bernice, born in 1906; Robert, born in 1908; and Richard Peter, born in 1911.

Arthur E. McFatridge, clerk of the State Board of Examiners of Montana, has spent the greater part of his active life in educational work. He was an Indiana teacher, and left his native state to enter the service of the Indian Department as a teacher in Government schools. This work brought him to Montana about ten years ago, and in 1917 he was appointed to his present responsibilities by the State Board of Examiners.

Mr. McFatridge was born in Ripley County, Indiana, May 9, 1867. His paternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish and his great-grandfather came to this country from the north of Ireland. His father, John McFatridge, was born in Jefferson County, Indiana, in 1832 and spent all his life in Jefferson and Ripley counties. He was a skilled blacksmith, and made that trade the chief means of providing for his family. He died in Ripley County January 27, 1898. He was an active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows. John McFatridge married Nancy Wyatt, who was born in Jefferson County, Indiana, in 1836, and died in Ripley County in June, 1909. They had a large family of children: Mary A., wife of James O. Milligan, a carpenter and builder in Ripley County; George W., a farmer who died in Jackson County, Indiana; Cynthia, wife of William H. Murdock, a railroad man living in Ripley County; John H., who is employed by the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company and lives at St. Louis; Etta, wife of Frank Heaton, a Ripley County farmer; Arthur E.; Charles A., stone sawyer by trade, living at Springfield, Illinois; Cora, of Indianapolis, widow of E. E. Jackson, who was a locomotive engineer; Lelia, who died in Ripley County, wife of Harry Chaille, a resident of Cincinnati.

Arthur E. McFatridge was educated in the rural schools of Ripley County, graduated from high school at Holton, Indiana, in 1885, and prepared for his profession in the Southern Indiana Normal College at Mitchell. He remained there until within half a term of graduation. His work as a teacher in the public schools of Indiana covered a period of ten years. For the last two years he was principal of schools at Holton, but resigned in January, 1898, to enter the Government service as an Indian teacher. He spent four years in the Indian schools of the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota. He was then promoted to inspector of Indian day schools, and continued that work on the Rosebud Reservation about four years. For two years and two months he had charge of the Winnebago Reservation in Nebraska, and for three years was Indian agent on the Umatilla Reservation near Pendleton, Oregon. In 1910 Mr. McFatridge came to Montana as agent on the Blackfoot Reservation at Browning, an office he filled five years. Mr. McFatridge in 1915 founded the Browning Review on the Blackfoot Reservation, and was editor and publisher of that newspaper two years.

He then came to Helena to accept the appointment as clerk to the State Board of Examiners, and has his offices in the State Capitol. This board is the purchasing agency for all state supplies and also audits all claims against the state. Mr. McFatridge is a republican in politics, a member of the Christian Church and has been an Odd Fellow thirty-two years and a Mason since 1899. He is affiliated with Eureka Lodge of Odd Fellows at Pendleton, Oregon, and also maintains his Masonic Lodge connections at Pendleton. He is a member of Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. Mr. McFatridge is a member of the Helena Commercial Club and the Young Men's Christian Association. He and his family reside at 736 Sixth Avenue. He married at Holton, Indiana, in 1890, Miss Clara Cox, daughter of Squire and Martha (Murdock) Cox. Her mother is still living in Ripley County, where her father, a farmer, died. Mrs. McFatridge is a graduate of the Holton High School in Indiana. They have one son, Leslie V., who was born July 9, 1891, and is one of the successful young business men of Montana. He graduated from the high school at Pendleton, Oregon, and is now manager of a large mercantile establishment at Big Sandy.

Harlon L. Hart. Few names are more deservedly prominent in the official and business life of Helena and Montana than that of Harlon L. Hart, the present state treasurer. He was elected to that office in 1916, and entered upon its duties on the 1st of January, 1917, for a term of four years. His offices are located in the State Capitol Building.

Mr. Hart traces descent in direct line to John Alden, and on the paternal side belongs to a family which came from England to Massachusetts in the early history of the country. He was born in Peru, Vermont, July 15, 1874, and his father, Eli R. Hart, was from New Hampshire, born at Swanzey in the state in 1837, and he died at LaPorte, Indiana, in October, 1915. He was reared in the City of Swanzey and its vicinity, but after his marriage was a resident of Vermont, spending the most of the time while in the latter state at Bellows Falls and White River Junction, and was foreman of furniture or chair factories at both places. In 1882 he left Vermont to become a resident of Euclid, Ohio, where he was made manager of the extensive farming property of Leland Brothers, well known hotel proprietors at that time. In 1888 Mr. Hart removed to Hot Springs, Virginia, to take charge of the plantation in connection with the large hotel there, spending three years there, and then went north to LaPorte, Indiana, where he was made manager of the large wheel factory of the Niles & Scott Company, the largest factory of its kind in the world at that time. Mr. Hart spent the remainder of his life at LaPorte. He was an honored veteran of the Civil war, having served in Company H, First Vermont Heavy Artillery. He enlisted for the service as a private, and was mustered out with the rank of captain. During his army service he was captured by the Confederates and spent fourteen months in prison, of which eight months were spent in the notorious Libby Prison, suffering all of its horrors and privations. The republican party had in Mr. Hart a worthy supporter, and for two terms he represented his district in the Vermont State Legislature. In the Masonic fraternity he gained the thirty-second degree, and he was also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Eli R. Hart was married at White River Junction, Vermont, to Augusta Wright, who was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1838, and died at Buhl, Idaho, in 1917. Eight children were born to bless this union, as follows: Edgar, who died in an epidemic of scarlet fever during the time his father was confined as a prisoner of war at Libby Prison; Herbert and Herman, who were also victims of the same terrible scarlet fever epidemic, and Addie was the fourth of the family to become its victim, and all of these four children died during their father's confinement in Libby Prison. The fifth born, Belle, died in Cleveland, Ohio, at the age of sixteen years. Stella married Edgar Van Riper and resides at Buhl, Idaho, where Mr. Van Riper is a farmer. In 1917 she was grand matron of the Order of Eastern Star for the State of Idaho. Leon, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Hart, died of influenza at LaPorte, Indiana, in 1919. He was a gardener and the owner of a large greenhouse.

Harlon L. Hart, the sixth in age in the above family, attended the public schools of Euclid, a suburb of Cleveland, through the common grades, and later graduated from the high school at LaPorte, Indiana, while in 1913 he graduated from the LaPorte Business College. Returning then to Cleveland, Ohio, as court reporter for the firm of Squier, Sanders & Dempsey, he spent two years in that capacity, and then went to Chicago for the S. K. Martin Lumber Company, the largest corporation of its kind in the United States at that time. Mr. Hart served that company as a stenographer for a short time, leaving it to become associated with the Alexander & Edgar Lumber Company at Iron River, Wisconsin, for whom he traveled for nine years through the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan, his territory practically comprising the central states. In 1904 Mr. Hart went to Mason, Wisconsin, as assistant manager of the White River Lumber Company, at that time operators of the largest mill east of the Rocky Mountains, with a capacity of 500,000 feet of lumber a day. He remained with this company until they finished sawing all of their timber and resigned from their employ in September, 1907.

It was at this time that Mr. Hart became associated with the life and interests of Montana. Many years of hard work had broken down his health, and he came to Montana to find renewed vigor in this free and open country. Locating near the Town of Hamilton in the Bitter Root Valley, he purchased a ranch there, but was soon called from its work to assume official duties, for in the fall of 1912 he was elected to the office of treasurer of Ravelli County and re-elected to that position in the fall of 1914. He served four years as a county treasurer, and had the distinction of being the only republican elected on the county ticket in 1912.

After the expiration of his duties as a county official Mr. Hart was awarded higher honors and was made the state treasurer of Montana. He is an efficient worker in the ranks of the republican party, is a member of the Baptist Church and has gained a high place in Masonry. He belongs to Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Hamilton, of which he is a past master, is a past high priest of Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, is a member of Helena Council No. 1, Royal and Select Masters, a member of Crusade Commandery No. 17, Knights Templar, at Hamilton, member of Bagdad Temple, Ancient and Arabic Order Nobles of Mystic Shrine at Butte, and a member of Helena Consistory No. 3, thirty-second degree. He is at the present time grand junior deacon of the Grand Lodge of Montana, grand master of the Third Veil of the Grand Chapter of Montana, and grand patron of the Order of Eastern Star of Montana. He is a member and a past patron of Leona Chapter No. 31 of the Order of Eastern Star at Hamilton.

Mr. Hart sold his ranch in 1919, and the family home is at 837 Sixth Avenue, Helena. He was married at LaPorte, Indiana, in 1894, to Miss Bertha E. Crowl, a daughter of J. O. and Jennie Crowl, who still reside in the City of LaPorte, where the father is a retired farmer. Mrs. Hart is a graduate of the LaPorte High School. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hart. The oldest, Lester O., born in 1896, enlisted in the Regular Army in 1916, and has been promoted to the rank of lieutenant. He was with the Third United States Engineers in Honolulu, and during the World war was an instructor at Camp Johnson, Jacksonville, Florida. The second son, Lynden, died at the age of seven years. Russell H., born January 2, 1900, enlisted for service in the World war in Aviation Corps No. 674, Aerial Squadron, was sent overseas to England, and remained there with a flight squadron, testing aeroplanes. He is a skilled mechanic, and is now associated with the Baird & Harper Lumber Company at Warland, Montana.

Charles H. Reifenrath was born in Waukegan, Illinois, October 22, 1878, but has been a resident of Helena, Montana, during the greater part of his life. For many years he has been a leading newspaper man in the city, and is regarded as one of its most public-spirited citizens. At present he is the owner of the Northwestern Stockman and Farmer and general manager of the Montana Record-Herald.

Mr. Reifenrath's father, Herman Reifenrath, was born in Germany in 1832, and died at Helena, Montana, in February, 1918. Coming to the United States as a young man, he settled near the City of Waukegan, Cook County, Illinois, and there married Eliza Ann Gartley, who died at Helena in 1914, and by whom Mr. Reifenrath had six children: Minnie, who married Mr. Carson, now at Manila, Philippine Islands; Ella, married to James H. Bondy, of Great Falls, Montana; Gertrude, married to John F. Davis, an attorney of Spokane, Washington; William, who was killed in a railroad wreck at De Hart, Montana; Anna, the wife of Wallace D. Coburn, of Hollywood, California; and Charles H., the youngest of the six children.

Herman Reifenrath was for many years stationmaster, first in Chicago for the Northwestern Railroad, and after having been with the same railroad in Minneapolis, Minnesota, came to Helena, Montana, in 1885 as station master for the Northern Pacific Railroad, from which position he retired in 1915.

In the course of an unusually busy life, Charles H. Reifenrath has held many positions of trust and importance as an employe of several large concerns, working up from the beginning of the newspaper business to the head of it.

In 1904 he purchased an interest in the Northwestern Stockman and Farmer, which he now owns. This paper was established in 1890 by Russell B. Harrison, a son of former president Benjamin B. Harrison.

In 1914 Mr. Reifenrath, in company with Dr. O. M. Lanstrum, George Mayors, Con Hildebrand and Frank Whalen, organized the Record Printing Company, and became the active manager of that concern on January 1, 1916, when he likewise became general manager of the Montana Daily Record. The name of this paper was changed in 1916 to the Montana Record-Herald. It is a republican paper, recognized as the leading republican paper of the State of Montana, being also by way of succession from the Radiator, established in 1865, the oldest paper in the state.

As a leading republican Mr. Reifenrath has been chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Lewis and Clark County, and in 1900 was a candidate for treasurer. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, and of King Solomon Lodge No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Montana Club, the Rotary Club, and the Helena Commercial Club, of which last organization he has been a director.

Mr. Reifenrath was married to Miss Grace Mable Wilson in 1907, who was born in Mankato, Minnesota. Before her marriage she taught music in the public schools of Helena.

They have three children, Charles H., Jr., Wilson G. and Elizabeth, and occupy a modern residence at 731 Stewart Street, Helena.

James Travis, one of the leading men of Cascade, has been associated with much of the development of this part of the West, and is one of the most highly respected citizens of the state, as well as one of its pioneers. He was born in Somersetshire, England, September 10, 1852, a son of James and Elizabeth (Holland) Travis, both natives of Somersetshire, he being born in 1827 and she in 1830. His death occurred when he was seventy-four years old, and hers when she was seventy. They had eight children, of whom five are now living, James Travis being the eldest of the family. By trade a blacksmith, James Travis, the elder, followed his calling in England until 1871, but in that year came to the United States and was engaged in prospecting and mining in the vicinity of Helena, Montana, where he spent the remainder of his life. In religious faith he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. After obtaining his papers of citizenship he espoused the principles of the republican party, and held to them the rest of his life.

James Travis, whose name heads this review, attended the public schools of England, and a night school at Helena, Montana. In 1869 he left England for Quebec, Canada, on the steamship Astoria, and after a short period spent in Quebec he went to Montreal, and then came to the United States, New York City being his first stop. From there he came West to Laramie, Wyoming, by rail. At that point he drove six yoke of oxen and traveled overland with them to Helena, Montana, being three months on the trip. Reaching Helena, he was engaged in prospecting and placer mining on Ten Mile Creek until the fall of 1874 when he made a trip to Chestnut Valley, and for about two months was engaged there in hunting buffalo and looking the land over. He then returned to Helena and went into quartz mining. In 1885 he sold his mining interests and came back to Chestnut Valley to engage in the cattle industry, at one time having as many as 2,000 head of cattle. At present he owns and controls about 2,000 acres of land, and is still interested in stockraising on an extensive scale. In 1909 he ran for state representative on the republican ticket, and was beaten by only two votes. He and the candidate on the democratic ticket agreed before election that there would be no contest, so no recount was taken of the votes. For about forty years Mr. Travis has been a member of the school board, and has done much to improve the educational advantages offered the children of this section. In addition to owning a large amount of property at Cascade, Mr. Travis built and owns a large brick garage, and is a heavy stockholder of the Cascade Co-operative Association.

In 1885 Mr. Travis was married to Jennie Winmill, who died in 1891, leaving two children, namely: Ida, who is the wife of Christie Johnson and has three children, two sons and one daughter; and Addie, the younger of the two sisters, married Leo Shefieer, of Helena. In 1892 Mr. Travis was married to Jennie Perrine, born in Washington County, Iowa, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Arnold) Perrine. James Perrine was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1800, and died in 1886, aged eighty-six years. His wife was born near Steubenville, Ohio, in 1824, and died in 1886, aged sixty-two years, having borne her husband seven children, four of whom are living. Mr. Perrine came to Ohio in 1839, where he remained for some years, and then went to Washington County, Iowa, and there died. In politics he was a whig. By his second marriage Mr. Travis has a daughter, Elizabeth Ann. She married John E. Day, and they have three children, one daughter and two sons.

James Travis did not advance from the poor young prospector to the man of ample means and large interests without hard work and the exercise of shrewd common sense. Early in life he recognized the fact that unless he was willing to work he could not hope to advance, and never spared himself during his earlier days, but steadily forged ahead until he was able to acquire a sufficient amount to make substantial investments. Since coming to Cascade he has interested himself in developing this region, and to him a large amount of credit is due for the present prosperous condition. As a republican he has worked for his party, and is one of its leaders in the city and county. Such men as he are a valued addition to any community with which they cast their lot, and Cascade recognizes its obligation to him.

ISAAC S. MARTINE is the present sheriff of Teton County. He has been an invaluable public official, and his record in business and in civic affairs has entitled him to the complete confidence of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Martine was born on his father's farm near Sleepy Eye in Brown County, Minnesota, April 20, 1876. His parents were Isaac and Elizabeth (Werring) Martine. His father was born near Rochester, New York, and died in 1897, while his mother is a native of England and is still living in her seventy-seventh year. The parents were married at Racine, Wisconsin. Isaac Martine, Sr., went to Wisconsin when a young man, and left his farm in that state to enlist in Company F of the Second Wisconsin Infantry at the breaking out of the Civil war. He was wounded in the first battle of Bull Run, and was so severely injured that he was incapacitated for further duty as a soldier and the rest of his life suffered a handicap upon his normal strength and functions. From Wisconsin he moved to Minnesota and was a pioneer in Brown County. He was a republican and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Of his four children three are still living: Isaac S. being the youngest.

Isaac S. Martine grew up in a rural district in Minnesota, attended school in winters, and graduated from high school with the class of 1898. For seven years he was a successful teacher in Minnesota and Idaho. He went to Idaho in 1905 and for two years was connected with the Idaho State Land Board. In 1909 Mr. Martine came to Conrad, Montana, and engaged in the real estate and loan business. He was also head of the police department of that town. From Conrad he removed to Choteau and in 1915 was appointed deputy sheriff. Later he served two and a half years as deputy county clerk and on November 5, 1918, was elected sheriff of Teton County.

Mr. Martine is affiliated with Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Choteau Chapter No. 25, Royal Arch Masons, Bethany Commandery No. 19, Knight Templar, and the Great Falls Consistory, Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. Politically he is a republican.

July 17, 1900, Mr. Martine married Kathleen Johnson, a native of Sleepy Eye, Minnesota. They have seven children: Gladys, Alice, Myrtle, Howard, Ruth, Lucile and James.

PAUL JACOBSON, clerk of the District Court at Choteau, at the time of his death, was a permanent resident of Teton County for many years, and held a number or responsibilities in public affairs.

He was born in Lac qui Parle County, Minnesota, April 9, 1875. His parents, Peter F. and Matilda (Quenemoen) Jacobson, were both natives of Norway, his father born April 14, 1842, and his mother in 1844. The latter died in 1916. They were married in Iowa, and of their twelve children eight are still living, Paul being the sixth in age.

Peter F. Jacobson was a prominent pioneer of Minnesota. At the age of fourteen he crossed the Atlantic by sailing ship and after a long voyage he and his widowed mother landed in New York. He came to the years of manhood in Fayette County, Iowa, where he finished his education in American schools. He did some farming on his own account in Iowa, and after his marriage moved to Lac qui Parle County, taking up a Government claim and becoming one of the first settlers in that section. He built a log house with a shingle roof, the first structure of its kind in the county. Besides farming he was also a merchant and for several years was an Indian trader. He also represented his county in the State Legislature for several terms. Peter Jacobson remained an honored resident of Minnesota until 1898, when he spent a year in Washington and Oregon and for about a year also lived at Choteau, Montana. He then retired to Billingham, Washington, where he is still living. He is a republican in politics. His living children are: Jacob, a native of Iowa; Elizabeth, who was the first white child born in Lac qui Parle County, Minnesota; Rachel, Olaf, Marie, John, Martin and Manford.

Paul Jacobson acquired his early education in his native county of Minnesota and lived at home on his father's farm until he was twenty years of age. In 1898 he moved to Washington and Oregon, and in June, 1899, located at Choteau, Teton County, Montana. His first employment here was on a ranch. He clerked in local establishments for several years and in 1904 was appointed under sheriff. He held that office two years and then resumed clerking. He was appointed and served one year as superintendent of weights and measures for Teton county. Following that he was a merchant at Choteau, but in 1912 disposed of his business. He was appointed deputy clerk of the Nineteenth District Court. He was chosen clerk of the District Court in 1916 and gave a well ordered and efficient administration of that office from January 1, 1917, until his death, which occurred August 5, 1919. He was a republican and was elected clerk on that ticket.

May 1, 1905, Mr. Jacobson married Miss Blanche Kennedy, a native of Michigan. They had one daughter, Margaret Elizabeth. Mrs. Jacobson was appointed by the Commission to the position of clerk of the District after the death of her husband.

C. H. Drake. The gentleman to a brief review of whose life and characteristics the reader's attention is herewith directed is among the foremost business men of Pondera County, and has by his enterprise and progressive methods contributed in a material way to the commercial advancement of the locality. He has in the course of an honorable career been most successful in the business enterprises of which he has been the head and is well deserving of mention in the annals of his section of the state.

C. H. Drake is a native son of the Hawkeye state, having been born at Rossville, Fayette County, Iowa. His parents were Simeon H. and Cecelia (Henderson) Drake, natives of New York State and the parents of three children. The father died in 1899, when sixty-two years of age, while the mother is still living at the age of eighty-three years. Simeon H. Drake, who had been a soldier for the Union in the War of the Rebellion, became a physician by profession, having graduated from the Chicago Medical College, now the Medical Department of Northwestern University. He first practiced his profession at West Union, Iowa, but later located at Jamestown, North Dakota, and still later at Butte, Montana. His last professional work was at Choteau, Teton County, where he spent his last days. He was a member of the National and State Medical Societies, and was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he was a republican.

C. H. Drake's first identification with the business interests of Montana was in 1890, when he engaged in the drug business at Butte. Later he opened a drug store at Whitehall and in 1898 engaged in the same business at Choteau, Teton County. Here he at once assumed a leading place among the business men of his community, and in 1899 he received from President McKinley an appointment as postmaster of Choteau, and two commissions to the same office from President Roosevelt, thus serving three terms and giving entire satisfaction to the patrons of the office. At one time Mr. Drake owned and operated seven different drug stores in Teton County. In 1910 he located in Conrad, Pondera County, and opened a drug store. He organized the Montana Telephone Company, of which he became secretary and treasurer, and of which line he had been the original builder. Mr. Drake also has extensive farming interests, and his progressive spirit is shown in the fact that he was one of the first men in Pondera County to irrigate his land for agricultural purposes, and has thus shown the way to greater possibilities for the farmers in this community.

Mr. Drake has been married twice, first to Jessie Dobyns, a native of Kansas, to which union were born two children, Harry H. and Helen H. After the death of his first wife Mr. Drake married Mary H. Conrad, a native of Virginia. In politics Mr. Drake is a republican, and he takes an intelligent interest in the trend of public affairs, giving his support at all times to those movements which promise to advance the best interests of the community in which he lives.

George B. Calvert. Few citizens of Great Falls are as widely and favorably known as George B. Calvert, one of the most successful builders and contractors in this section of the state and one of the community's most useful and highly esteemed men. His life has become a part of the history of the community in which he has made his home for many years, and his long and honorable business career has brought him before the public in such a way as to gain the esteem and confidence of his fellow men and give him a reputation such as few of his contemporaries have attained. Keen perception, tireless energy and honesty of purpose, combined with mature judgment and every-day common sense, have ever been among his most prominent characteristics, and while laboring for individual success and for the material interests of the community, he has also been largely instrumental in promoting the moral welfare of those with whom he has mingled.

George B. Calvert was born in Lindsey, Ontario, Canada, on June 7, 1866, and is the son of William and Eliza (Holladay) Calvert. William Calvert was an Englishman by nativity, born in 1834, and his death occurred on January 15, 1918, at the age of eighty-four years. When but four years of age he was brought to America by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Calvert, who located in Ontario, Canada. He was there reared and educated, and on attaining maturity he became a building contractor, in which he was fairly successful. He erected the first saw-mill in Ontario. During the building of the great Erie Canal he acted as a foreman. He continued in his line there until the spring of 1880, when he removed to Winnipeg, Canada, and was there occupied as a building contractor up to 1884, when he came to Helena, Montana, and was similarly occupied for several years. He then located at Anoka, Minnesota, where he was engaged in contracting up to 1888. He then came to Great Falls, and was prominently identified with the building operations of this city and vicinity up to 1907. In that year Mr. and Mrs. Calvert moved to Tacoma, Washington, and there they celebrated the golden anniversary of their marriage on February 16th of that year. They spent their remaining days in Tacoma. In Ontario, Canada, Mr. Calvert married Eliza Holladay, who was born in the north of Ireland in 1835, and who died in 1914, at the age of seventy-nine years. They became the parents of seven children, four sons and three daughters, of whom six are now living. Of these children the subject of this sketch was the third in order of birth.

George B. Calvert spent his boyhood days under the parental roof and received his education in the public schools of Ontario and Winnipeg. On completing his education he became associated with his father in the contracting business, their relation being maintained from 1889 to 1901, they having come to Montana in August, 1887. Since 1901 Mr. Calvert has carried on his operations alone and has been very successful, his operations covering a wide range of country contiguous to Great Falls. During the past two years he has erected all the buildings for the Montana Power Company, including the new sub-station and warehouse, costing about $110,000. He is now building for himself seven houses, all of brick construction and ranging in value from $4,500 to $7,000, and which he expects to sell on completion. He is thoroughly conversant with every detail of the various building trades, and is therefore competent to advise prospective builders and save them money. Absolutely honest in all his transactions, he has gained an enviable reputation for reliability and enjoys his full share of the business in his line in this section of the state.

On September 21, 1890, Mr. Calvert was married to Minnie M. Patterson, who was born in Springfield, Illinois, and to them have been born four children, namely: Alice, the wife of Herbert H. Bell, of Dallas, Texas; Bessie is the wife of R. W. Page, of Great Falls; George C. and Jerald.

Politically Mr. Calvert is a republican and has taken a keen interest in local public affairs, and has served as alderman from the fourth ward, having been first elected in 1910 and serving seven years. Fraternally he is a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Woodmen of the World. He is also a member of the Commercial Club and the Rotary Club of Great Falls. Mr. Calvert is a man who would have won his way in any locality where fate might have placed him, for he possesses sound judgment, coupled with great energy and business tact, together with upright principles, all of which make for success wherever and whenever they are persistently and rightly applied. By reason of these principles he has won and retains a host of friends throughout this section of the state.

WHEELER O. DEXTER. Nearly sixty years have been numbered with the past since Wheeler O. Dexter, a venerable and highly honored citizen of Fort Benton, came to the section of country included within the scope of the present work. Upon his arrival this section of the treasure state was largely an undeveloped region, awaiting the awakening touch of the sturdy pioneer to transform its wild lands into rich farms and beautiful homes, to found cities and towns, to establish churches and schools, and in many other ways to reclaim the country for the use of man. Mr. Dexter well deserves mention with the substantial men of this section of the country, for he has seen and taken part in the work of development, and his reminiscences of the early days here are indeed interesting, so that it is with pleasure that a review of his long, interesting and useful career is herewith presented.

Wheeler O. Dexter was born in Steuben County, New York, on July 31, 1843, and is the son of Belal and Annie (Snyder) Dexter, who were both also natives of the great Empire State. The father, was born in 1800, and died on February 15, 1851, and the mother, who was born in 1812, died in 1872, at the age of sixty years. Of their three children the subject of this sketch is the youngest child and the only survivor. He was only seven years old when his father died, so that it became necessary to a certain extent that he should look out for his own welfare. After attending the public schools he entered Ithaca Academy, paying for his board by doing chores. But he was ambitious to secure an education and took advantage of every opportunity to improve his knowledge. The habits then formed have never left Mr. Dexter, who has all his life been a close reader and a keen observer of men and events, so that he is an unusually well informed man on general topics.

On January 4, 1864, Mr. Dexter enlisted in Company F, Sixteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, with which he served until mustered out on June 24, 1865. He was on the James River under heavy fire for ten days and saw much arduous service. For a time, however, he was detached from his command, being detailed as a clerk at headquarters. After his return from military service Mr. Dexter went to the oil fields of Pennsylvania, where he worked for a while, but on June 6, 1866, he went to St. Cloud, Minnesota, and joined the Fisk outfit, who were making ready for a western migration. They were fitted out with a miscellaneous assortment of equipment, including ox teams, mule teams, horse teams and cow teams, but Mr. Dexter rode his own horse. He accompanied the expedition and visited Fort Benton on August 27 and 28, 1866. On the 2d of September following he arrived at Helena, and at once obtained employment as a night clerk in a hotel. Some time later he took the position of engineer in a sawmill, having in the meantime erected a cabin. In February, 1867, he became engineer in a quartz mill, where he was employed about a year, and then he engaged in prospecting for coal. He was successful in locating coal on the Missouri River, below Cow Island, and he also engaged in the wood business at Cow Island, having wood yards also along the river from Cow Island to Grand Island and supplying fuel to the steamers plying the river. He later broadened his operations and furnished the boats with meat, having an ice house and handling deer, mountain sheep and other game. After the river water was too low in the fall for the river boats, Mr. Dexter hauled passengers to Fort Benton and Helena, and then wintered in the Gallatin Valley. Later he engaged in threshing, burned charcoal and cut wood, which he hauled to Bozeman and sold. In 1874 he engaged in the meat business at Bozeman, but in the spring of the following year he came to Fort Benton, where he engaged in freighting. He also opened a lumber yard, having a sawmill at Highwood, and in that way proved a godsend to the pioneers. In 1885 and 1886 Mr. Dexter inaugurated two ferries across the river at Great Falls and also built the first steam launch at that place. He also built a ferry on Sun River. In 1877 he bought the first threshing outfit at Fort Benton and did a vast amount of work for the farmers of that section. In 1890 Mr. Dexter took up a homestead and engaged extensively in the breeding and raising of horses, in which he met with splendid success. He has been handling farm machinery, gas engines, stationary engines, marine engines and general road supplies for several years, and has met with excellent success. He has also given good service as public administrator, which position he has filled for many years.

During the long period since Mr. Dexter came to this state as a pioneer he has passed through many unusual and interesting experiences, which if collected in permanent form would make a most interesting and valuable collection of sidelights on the early history of the Northwest. Among the incidents with which he was personally connected, he relates that at one time his horses were stolen by the Indians. He spent twenty-eight days in the search for them, finally locating them in an Indian camp. It was necessary to secure the help of the Indian agent, who gave the Indians some stores which belonged to them anyhow and so got the horses released. At another time Mr. Dexter was riding across a rough section of the country on a very slow horse, when he came across a bear with two cubs. He did his best to spur his horse to quick action, hoping to get away without attracting the attention of the mother bear. He failed in his attempt, but when the horse discovered that the bear was after him he showed a wonderful exhibition of speed, making a runaway of it and leaving Mrs. Bruin far behind. While hunting buffalo for his winter supply of meat in 1875 Mr. Dexter was so unfortunate as to have his entire load of meat upset, a part of the load falling on him in such a way as to crush the bones in his neck, as a result of which he was paralyzed for a considerable length of time.

For a half century Mr. Dexter has been a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and is a life member of Chouteau Lodge No. 25. He is also a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. His old Civil war associations are kept alive through his membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, his local affiliation being with Sheridan Post No. 25 at Great Falls. He retains an active interest in this honored organization and attended the national encampment of the Grand Army which was held at Columbus, Ohio, in September, 1919. He has played well his part in the drama of civilization and because of his achievements and his sterling qualities of character he enjoys a well-deserved popularity and is eminently entitled to representation in a work of the character of the present volume.

Sumner St. Claire Franks, agent of the Continental Oil Company at Gilman, is one of the substantial men of the Sun River Valley. He was born at Goldfield, Wright County, Iowa, on April 7, 1866, a son of James L. Franks and grandson of John Franks.

James L. Franks was born at Nottinghamshire, England, in 1818, where he was reared and learned the butchering trade. In 1853 he came to the United States and located in Henry County, Illinois, and there became owner of a coal mine. Later he went to Tama, Iowa, where he engaged in a land business, but when he went to Goldfield, Iowa, he engaged in farming. In 1875 he made another change, going then to Wadena, Minnesota, where he continued to farm until his death in 1898. After coming to America he became a republican, and in 1880 was census taker in Wright County, Iowa, and always was prominent in the public affairs of the several communities in which he lived. The Episcopal church held his membership, and he was consistent in living up to its requirements.

The marriage of James L. Franks took place in England, when he was united with a Miss Boote, who bore him the following children: James, who lives near London, England; and John, who was a captain in the English army during the Real Rebellion in Canada, but of recent years his brother has lost track of his movements. The first Mrs. Franks died in England, and after coming to the United States James L. Franks was married to Mary Ann Burton, born on Staten Island, New York, in 1838, and died at Wadena, Minnesota, in 1904. By this marriage James L. Franks had the following children: Ben Lewis, who is a blacksmith of Cohasset, Minnesota; Florence, who married Alfred J. Caswell, a railroad man of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Martha Wright, who married Byron Waite, a farmer of Erie, Illinois; Sumner St. Claire, who was fourth in order of birth, and George, who is a ranch owner, banker and prominent citizen of Minnesota.

Sumner S. Franks was educated in the public schools of Goldfield, Iowa, remaining on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years old, at which time he took a trip through Montana, Idaho, Washington and British Columbia, the date of his first trip to Montana being 1889. In order to support himself on this trip he worked in various lines, and then in 1895 returned to Wadena, Minnesota, and assisted his father for eight years. In June, 1904 he returned to Montana, landing at Augusta on July 4 of that year, and until September 17 worked on neighboring ranches. Once more he returned to Wadena, on account of the illness of his wife, and remained there, working on the farm he owned until her death, which occurred on April 4, 1905. By the end of April of that same year he returned to Augusta and was employed in ranch work, and prospected, mined and acted as a guide in the mountains for three years. Then, until the founding of Gilman, Mr. Franks worked in the vicinity of Augusta as a rancher, but when the former place was established in 1912, he became one of its pioneers and opened up its first restaurant, which he conducted until 1916, when he engaged with the Continental Oil Company and is now its agent for this section of Lewis and Clark County. Until 1919 he was also engaged in freighting, but no longer carried on that business. Although one of the new towns of Montana, Gilman is in a flourishing condition, and Mr. Franks is proud of the fact that he did pioneer work here and can lay claim to assisting in getting things well started.

In politics Mr. Franks is a republican. He belongs to the Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a member of Augusta Lodge No. 54, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Augusta Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. He owns a restaurant located on Central Avenue, and his residence, which is on the same thoroughfare, has mining interests and is a stockholder in the Wymont Oil and Gas Company. As one of the trustees of the Gilman Park Association he is doing much to afford the people of this community a recreation ground.

Mr. Franks was married in 1898, at Wadena, Minnesota, his wife being a native of Woodside, Oak Valley township, that state. Their only child is Richard L., who was born on May 30, 1902. He attended the Minnesota High School, and is now assisting his father. Mr. Franks was married in 1911 to Mrs. Harriet Nett, a native of Montana, born at Helena.

Edwin L. Norris. A long chapter of important Montana history was written while Edwin L. Norris was lieutenant governor and governor of the state, a period of eight years.

Governor Norris, who is now one of the esteemed residents of Great Falls, has been in Montana and engaged in the practice of law since the beginning of statehood. In fact he was admitted to the Montana bar about the same time that Montana was admitted to the Union.

He was born in Cumberland County, Kentucky, August 15, 1865, a son of W. W. and Martha (Nunn) Norris. His parents were also born in Cumberland County, and are still living, as are their three sons. Governor Norris was the second child.

He was educated in the Western Kentucky Normal School at Bowling Green and was admitted to the Montana bar October 8, 1889. For many years his home and practice as a lawyer was at Dillon. He represented Beaverhead County in the State Senate from 1896 to 1900. His service as lieutenant governor began January 2, 1905, and continued until April 1, 1908, when by the resignation of Governor Toole he became governor and filled out the unexpired term until January 1, 1909. He was regularly elected governor in 1908, and held office until January 1, 1913. On retiring from the office of governor he located at Great Falls and has resumed his practice as a lawyer.

GEORGE E. HURD is a well known Montana lawyer and since 1913 has been associated in practice with former Governor Norris, who that year left the governor's chair, and their offices have been at Great Falls. The firm Norris & Hurd commands a well deserved prestige and a large and important practice in all the local and state courts.

Mr. Hurd belongs to an old family of the state of Delaware. He was born on his father's farm in Kent County July 11, 1872, son of James H. and Martha (Godwin) Hurd. The parents were also natives of Delaware. The father was a Union soldier in a regiment of Delaware Infantry, was a farmer, and for many years specialized in standard bred livestock. He died in 1908, at the age of seventy-five, while his wife passed away in 1900, at the age of seventy-three.

George E. Hurd was the youngest of six children, five of whom are still living. He acquired a liberal education, attending the public schools of his native county, a preparatory school at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and was graduated A. B. from Amherst College in Massachusetts in 1896. He took the law course at Harvard University in 1896-97. As a youth he had mastered the art of telegraphy and when in 1897, on the advice of his brother, a rancher in Montana, he came to this state he used his knowledge of telegraphy as a means of earning his living while continuing the study of law. For about three years he was employed by the Great Northern Railway Company as telegrapher and station agent at Glasgow. In the meantime his earnest application gained him admission to the Montana bar in 1900, and from the first he had a lucrative practice at Glasgow. He was a popular citizen of that community, was elected mayor in 1902, served three consecutive terms, but on account of his law practice had to resign in 1907. In 1908 and for several years he was in partnership with E. M. Lewis, under the name of Hurd & Lewis. By action of the State Legislature he was appointed special prosecutor for the state in 1911.

Mr. Hurd has been in many political campaigns as a democrat and was a political associate of Governor Norris before they became partners in the law. He is a member of the Cascade County and the State Bar associations.

On December 20, 1900, the same year that he began law practice Mr. Hurd married Mary E. Hargadine. She is also a native of Delaware and a daughter of Robert W. and Mary E. (Carter) Hargadine. Her father died at the age of forty-nine and her mother at fifty-six. Mrs. Hurd was the second in a family of seven children, six of whom are still living. Her father was a physician. Mr. and Mrs. Hurd have two children: Robert H. and George E., Jr.

AUGUST D. F. BUCHHOLZ, a justice of the peace of Augusta, is one of the most representative men of Lewis and Clark County and one who has played an important part in the history of this region. He was born at Parchim, Province of Mecklenburg, Germany, a town of about ten thousand located on a tributary to the Elbe River. He came into the world on August 6, 1876, a son of Frederick and Marie (Wilcke) Buchholz, who spent the greater part of their lives at Parchim. Frederick Buchholz learned the trade of a cooper in his youth, later became a farmer, and still later handled real estate, being thus engaged at the time of his death.

August D. F. Buchholz attended the public schools of his home town until he was fourteen years old, and completed his educational training with a year's course at Rostock, a Baltic seaport, where he secured a certificate entitling him to one year volunteer service in the German army instead of the otherwise three years' compulsory service. Life in the German army even for one year did not appeal to him, and he decided, with the gladly given consent of his father, to join his elder brother, Herman, in the United States.

In the spring of 1892 the lad landed in New York City, and after various delays, owing to floods and washouts, he reached Augusta, Lewis and Clark County, Montana, near which town his brother was engaged in cattle ranching. The first task set the ambitious boy was to learn to stay in the saddle, and he accomplished it by frequent "grabbing leather," and persisted until in a few days he was admitted to be expert enough to accompany another rider and a pack-horse loaded with salt for the cattle grazing on the North Fork of the Sun River in the Rockies.

Although still nothing more than a boy, he rapidly advanced, and while quiet and retiring in disposition, the freedom of the new life and the democratic spirit of the people strongly appealed to him and he resolved to permanently locate among them, and at the age of twenty years he invested his inheritance left him by his parents, who had in the meanwhile passed away, in 160 acres of land and a bunch of cattle, his ranch being near the Sun River Canyon. His sister Augusta lived with him and looked after his household affairs. Later they pooled their interests with those of their brother Herman, and the three of them lived on Willow Creek, a tributary of Sun River, until Herman was killed by the flying timbers of a shed roof which was torn off by the terrific west wind. Following this sad event the brother and sister moved to Augusta, and this town has been his place of residence ever since.

Although he has owned farm land ever since he reached his majority, his most important venture was made in 1919, when he acquired 400 acres of land adjoining the Augusta townsite, for which he paid what was then an unprecedented price for that locality of $85 per acre for the greater portion of it. Mr. Buchholz, with commendable foresight and public spirit, made valuable concessions to the Augusta Commercial Club, thus insuring the growth of the town, and had it not been for the unfortunate location of a railroad terminal two miles away, Augusta would today be one of the most flourishing of the little cities in this part of the state. As it is the newly established town of Gilman, which has sprung up about the railroad station, has taken away much of the trade which formerly came to the old town.

A brief history of the location of this railroad terminal is interesting in connection with Mr. Buchholz' biography. Augusta has never had the advantage of railroad facilities, its means of communication with the outside world being a daily stage to Craig on the Montana Central branch of the Great Northern Railroad. When a feeder was built up the Sun River Valley from Great Falls, construction was stopped within two miles of Augusta, for the alleged reason that the continuation to the town would be useless to the railroad, or at least an unprofitable spur, whenever the line should be extended across the mountains. A town was laid out at the terminal called Gilman, and the Augusta people invited to move at their own expense, if they wished to be on the railroad.

The people of Augusta, in turn, requested the road to move to them, but their appeal fell upon deaf ears, so they went before the State Legislature, then sitting at Helena in 1917, and had introduced a bill authorizing the Board of Railroad Commissioners to compel the construction of spurs to the length of two miles, instead of the provision of one mile spurs. In spite of the strenuous objection of the railroad interests and various alleged attempts to pigeonhole the bill, the Legislature stood by what they deemed the people's cause, and Governor Stewart approved the law on March 1, 1917.

The Railroad Commission held a hearing at Augusta soon thereafter, and concluded that the people were entitled to the extension asked for. They made an order to that effect, but before it could be executed the World war drew the United States into the Allied cause, and later the government took over the roads, stopping all but the most necessary construction. With the return of the roads to private ownership on March 1, 1920, has come to the people of Augusta renewed hopes of obtaining what they regard as their due. In the meanwhile there is much goodnatured rivalry between Augusta and Gilman; houses have been moved backward and forward, and while Gilman still holds the strategic position of the terminal, the splendid "pull together" spirit of the Augusta people has won the admiration of the surrounding country to such an extent that the latter bids fair to hold its lead over the former, even without the road extension.

In the fall of 1904 Mr. Buchholz was elected justice of the peace of Augusta township, which gives him jurisdiction over a large territory, for judicial townships embrace considerable space, Augusta Township containing 1,000 square miles. After he had held the office for two years he was re-elected, and has continued to hold this office continuously ever since with the exception of a winter when he was abroad visiting the land of his birth. He does not claim to have any great legal knowledge, but so equitable have been his judgments that up to 1920 not one of his decisions have been reversed by a higher court. Even during the war, when many of German birth were discriminated against, the voters of Augusta Township recognized Mr. Buchholz' one-hundred per cent Americanism by re-electing him by a handsome majority. He bears the unique distinction of having in 1916 been nominated by three political parties, the democratic, republican and socialistic.

The panic of 1893 made him a republican, and since then he has affiliated with that party, although at times having his name printed in the democratic column of the election ballot, when a nomination by two parties gave him his choice. About 1900 Mr. Buchholz joined the Modern Woodmen of America, and some years later, the Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World. In 1920 he was clerk or secretary for all three of these fraternities in the local lodges at Augusta.

While a member of the Augusta Methodist Episcopal Church and one of its energetic workers, he was never accused of being orthodox, and when a friend once asked him for his creed, he is reported to have answered: "Little I know of God, devil, spirit, heaven or hell, and less about my soul, but I know we are here and have to make the best of it. Ignorance is my worst enemy, intelligence my dearest friend, and to live forever is my greatest hope."

On May 29, 1905, Mr. Buchholz was married at Helena, Montana, to Emma Wilcke, of Parchim, Germany, a daughter of the German army commissary official, Frederick Wilcke. She is an accomplished musician, and takes an interest in all matters related to an improvement of the social life of the community. Mrs. Buchholz is a great lover of nature and of all things beautiful.

HUGH S. MCGINLEY. Only those who come into personal contact with Hugh S. McGinley, a representative citizen of Fort Benton and one of the popular and successful attorneys of that section of the Treasure State, can understand how thoroughly nature and training, habits of thought and action have enabled him to accomplish his life work and made him a fit representative of the enterprising class of professional people to which he belongs. He is a fine type of the sturdy, conscientious, progressive American of today—a man who unites a high order of ability with courage, patriotism, clean morality and sound common sense, doing thoroughly and well the work that he finds to do and asking praise of no man for the performance of what he conceives to be his simple duty.

Hugh Samuel McGinley was born in Davenport, Iowa, on August 4, 1881, and is the son of Hugh and Susie P. (Duffin) McGinley. The father was born in Ironton, Ohio, in September, 1857, and the mother in Davenport, Iowa, on May 11, 1864, and they were united in marriage in the latter city on May 11, 1880. They became the parents of two children, the subject of this sketch and a daughter, Susie T., who is the wife of Guy E. Thomas, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Hugh McGinley was brought to Davenport, Iowa, by his parents when a mere child, and received his education in the public schools of that city. His first active work was in the hardware business in Davenport, with which he was connected up to 1878, when he engaged as a traveling salesman for a wholesale hardware house, having his headquarters in Chicago, and covering practically the entire Northwest through to the coast, including St. Paul, Minneapolis, Billings, Butte and Helena, Montana, from which latter point he traveled by stage routes through Montana to Fort Benton, thence through Washington, Idaho and Oregon. In 1887 he located in Spokane, Washington, where, two years later, he became manager for the Spokane Hardware Company. He retained that position up to August 4, 1891, when the plant was destroyed by fire. Mr. McGinley then engaged in the implement business under the firm name of C. E. Woodruff Company, of which he was the "company." At the same time he also conducted a general mercantile store at Ellensburg, Washington, up to 1894, when he moved to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and engaged as a traveling salesman in the hardware business, in which he is still engaged. He is an expert salesman and has been very successful in that vocation. Politically he is a stanch supporter of the democratic party.

Hugh S. McGinley secured his elementary education in the public schools of Minneapolis, Minnesota, after which he was student in St. Thomas College at St. Paul, Minnesota, and the University of Notre Dame at Notre Dame, Indiana. Then, having decided to devote his life to the practice of law, he entered the law department of Minnesota University, where he was graduated with the class of 1903. In 1904 he was admitted to the bar of Minnesota and was engaged in the practice of his profession until 1906, when he became identified with the legal department of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad for about a year. In 1907 Mr. McGinley applied himself to the study of railroad construction with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad for a few months. In November, 1907, he again took up the practice of law, opening an office in Minneapolis, but in 1910 he came to Montana, locating in Great Falls, where he remained until July 1, 1911, when he located in Fort Benton, where he has since remained. He has been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of law here, and has richly earned a high reputation as an able and successful attorney. In 1911, at the Cascade County Convention, he and Howard Green were placed in nomination for County Attorney, and he was defeated by only seven votes. The result was not entirely displeasing to him, however, as prior to the convention he had expressed himself as not desiring the nomination. In 1912 Mr. McGinley was elected county attorney of Chouteau County, holding the office during 1913-14.

Mr. McGinley possessed a broad and comprehensive knowledge of the law and has been notably successful in his practice. He enjoys a large and representative clientele, having been connected in a professional way with much of the most important litigation in the local courts, as well as in several of the adjoining counties.

Politically, Mr. McGinley is an ardent supporter of the democratic party and was chairman of the County Central Committee of that party during the years 1914 to 1918. He was also chairman of the local Draft Board from December, 1917, until the close of the war. Fraternally he is a member of Great Falls Lodge, No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On June 15, 1908, Mr. McGinley was married to Ida L. Koch, who was born in Keokuk, Iowa. Mr. McGinley is recognized as a man of strong and alert mentality, deeply interested in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community along material, civic or moral lines, and he is recognized as one of the progressive and representative men of his section of the state. His success in life has been the legitimate fruitage of consecutive effort, directed and controlled by good judgment and correct principles.

Forest M. Mack. To get ahead to a point where his income exceeds his demand, where his ability exceeds his tasks, where he can do the work he likes best, is possible to anyone, provided he learns to bend his energies in the right direction. When he determines to know, instead of assuming to know, he advances steadily, for no matter how powerful, energy and effort can never take the place of intelligent direction. Forest M. Mack is one of the successful merchants of Gilman, and he is a man who has learned how to intelligently direct the energies and efforts of others, not only in his business but in community work as well, and has earned for himself a reputation for sagacity and public spirit.

Forest M. Mack was born at Cedar Rapids, Nebraska, on September 1, 1886, a son of Roderick J. Mack of Marcellus, Michigan. Roderick J. Mack was born in 1855, and shortly after his marriage, which took place at Rome City, Indiana, he moved to Cedar Rapids, Nebraska. All of his active years he was engaged in farming, but retired in 1898 and returned to Rome City, Indiana, where he lived until 1905, at which time he located at Marcellus, Michigan. Well known as a Mason, he served the Rome City Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, as worshipful master for some years. In politics he is a republican and has always been strong in his support of his party's candidates and principles. Roderick J. Mack was married to Lanore Bidlack, who was born in Rome City, Indiana, in 1860, and died at Marcellus, Michigan, in 1917. Their children were as follows: Lulu, who married a Mr. Howe, a farmer, and they live at Rome City, Indiana; Forest M., who was second in order of birth; Florence, who married a Mr. Rowe, an electrical engineer who was killed by wire contact at Marcellus, Michigan, where his widow is still residing; Chandler, who is with a paper manufacturing plant of Three Rivers, Michigan; and Ulin, who is living with his father.

Forest M. Mack attended the public schools of Rome City, Indiana, and was graduated from its high school in 1903. For the subsequent year he was employed in a dry-goods store at Wolcottville, Indiana, which he left to go into a similar establishment at Fayette, Ohio. After a year at the latter place Mr. Mack decided to homestead, and went to Canada, passing through the Dominion to Edmunton, but found no location to suit him, and in 1905 came to Montana and worked on a cattle ranch owned by Sam Aiken at Gold Butte for a year. The next year he was on the cattle ranch of George Murray, on both of these ranches being a real cowboy, a somewhat different article from the one usually shown in the movies.

In 1907 Mr. Mack entered the general merchandise store of A. H. Fay at Gold Butte, Montana, and during 1908 and 1909 was manager of it. He then organized the firm of Ellis & Mack and on March 1, 1910, bought the store owned by A. C. Strode at Whitlash, in the Sweet Grass Hills, forty miles from the railroad, and for the three years they conducted it the partners freighted all of their merchandise from Chester, Montana. In the fall of 1912 they closed up their store, and during the ensuing winter erected a store, one of the first two to be built at Gilman, opening up with a full line of merchandise on March 1, 1913. On April 1, 1920, he bought the interest of his partner and is conducting this store, which has become the largest one in the northern part of Lewis and Clark County. The store is located on Main Street, and the stock carried is fresh and timely and offered at prices as low as is consistent with the quality and market quotations.

Mr. Mack is a republican both by inheritance and conviction. He belongs to Great Falls Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Great Falls Lodge No. 112, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. One of the founders of the Gilman Commercal Club, he is now its president, and he is one of the three trustees of the Gilman Park Association, his associates on the board being S. S. Franks and Oliver Bernier. Mr. Mack is also a director, secretary and treasurer of the Lewis and Clark County Fair Association, and was chairman of the first school board of Gilman, which built the first school and conducted it for two years by private subscription. He was on the building committee of the Presbyterian Church at the time the present edifice was put up, and is still a trustee of the church. Mr. Mack has other interests, being a stockholder in the Wymont Gas and Oil Company; owns his store building, which has a floor space 36 by 70 feet, and a storehouse in the rear of the store, his residence at Gilman, a lot on Main Street, two residence lots on Central Avenue, on which he proposes to erect a modern residence, four lots in the Park Addition to Gilman, and two ranches, one at Riebeling, Montana, and one at one and one-half miles north of Gilman.

Mr. Mack was married on August 10, 1911, at Long Beach, California, to Miss Edna E. Calvin, born at Des Moines, Iowa, a high school graduate.

Mr. and Mrs. Mack have no children. During the World war Mr. Mack was one of the active workers in behalf of the Liberty Loans, War Savings and Red Cross and similar drives, holding an official position. He contributed generously of his time and means to aid the administration in carrying out its policies. Since the Armistice was signed he, with other constructive men of his county, has endeavored to get things back to normal, and can be counted upon to do in the future, as he has in the past, a man's work in behalf of his community, his state and his country.

OLIVER B. PATTERSON. From the time of the organization of the Village of Savage until the present time Oliver B. Patterson has been identified with its improvement and development, and as both a merchant and farmer his name is a familiar one throughout the county.

Mr. Patterson was born in Lyon County, Minnesota, October 20, 1875, a son of Frank B. Patterson, who had his nativity in the State of New York, but gave his industrial life to Minnesota, and is now a resident of Omaha, Nebraska. He followed farming as a vocation, and lived the life of a private and industrious citizen. He married Mary A. Knox, a daughter of Charles Knox, also from the State of New York. She died in 1912, leaving the following children: Mrs. Bertha Knox, of Stanton, North Dakota; Oliver B., whose home is in Savage; Alice, the wife of Charles Hudson, of Omaha; Mrs. Parthenia Earnest Churchill, of Pipestone, Minnesota; Agnes, wife of Richard Worley, of New Salem, North Dakota; and Maude, the wife of Alfred Simard, of Sidney.

Oliver B. Patterson spent the early years of his life in the Town of Marshall, Minnesota, and when old and large enough to work he went into a grocery store and began his training as a merchant. He also attended the Marshall High School and graduated at the age of seventeen, after which he began to work steadily. Going some years later to Washington, D. C., he became associated with a brother-in-law there in the grocery business, and in the spring of 1907 he left the national capital and started out to win his fortune in the new Northwest, arriving a short time later in Montana. Through the influence of the St. Paul mercantile house of Griggs, Cooper & Company Mr. Patterson secured a position in the store of G. D. Holleck at Glendive. When the little Town of Savage was organized he cast his fortunes with it in the spring of 1910, and his name has since been prominent in its mercantile circles as a member of the firm of Brooks & Patterson. Mr. Patterson has been making his own way in the world since the early age of twelve years, and the success he has achieved in the passing time has been the ultimate reward of persevering industry and constant application.

Agricultural development has for many years played an important part in Mr. Patterson's life. The Patterson home is on his ranch two miles south of Savage, where many permanent improvements have been installed, and save for running water the home is a modern five-room dwelling. A double wall silo of 100 ton capacity has also been built, which Mr. Patterson fills with Russian sunflowers for silage, and he finds this crop to yield double the amount of an equal acreage of corn, while it produces ensilage of equal value. A flowing well at a depth of 190 feet, with a capacity of a gallon a minute of soft water containing soda as a prominent ingredient, is one of the important adjuncts of the farm. Mr. Patterson raises principally alfalfa and stock. His stock, which run under the brand the "Lazy J-C," are Herefords and Poland China hogs. His cattle is sheltered with windbreaks and feed racks, and his hogs are housed in a building 20 by 50 feet.

Mr. Patterson's political views were formed as he approached manhood and he began voting as a republican, casting his first presidential vote for Major McKinley at Marshall, Minnesota. During the years which have followed he has never missed voting at a presidential election nor has he failed to support the republican candidates. He also joined the Masonic fraternity in the City of Marshall, receiving his first degree there, but he finished the Master's work at Glendive, Montana.

He was married at Marshall, Minnesota, October 1, 1896, to Miss Tressa Ada Shake, who was born in that city, and she was reared in the same community in which her future husband grew toward manhood. Her birth occurred on the 13th of October, 1877, and she is a daughter of Fred and Mary (Cloves) Shake and one of their three children, a son and two daughters, namely: Mrs. Patterson, Elvia, the wife of Dr. H. E. Cleveland, of Burlington, Washington, and George E. Shake, of Minneapolis, Minnesota. One child has been born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, a daughter, Mildred, a sophomore in the University of Montana.

FRED W. SCHMITZ. The county attorney of Broadwater is a man who brings to his profession, along with those qualities indispensable to the lawyer, a keen, rapid, logical mind, plus the business sense and a ready capacity for hard work, those rarer gifts of eloquence of language, strong personality, an excellent presence and earnest, dignified manner, a thorough grasp of the law and the ability accurately to apply its principles, and all of these characteristics go to make Fred W. Schmitz one of the commanding figures before the bar.

Fred W. Schmitz was born at Brooklyn, Iowa, on February 4, 1886, a son of John Schmitz, who still resides at Brooklyn, Iowa. He was born in Germany in 1850, and came in young manhood to the United States, settling at Brooklyn and going into the shoe business, which he is still successfully operating. In politics he is a democrat. Mr. Schmitz is an Episcopalian and a very active supporter of the church. A member of the Odd Fellows, he has served his local lodge as noble grand. He was married at Brooklyn, Iowa, to Miss Mary Glixner, born in Indiana in 1854, who died at Brooklyn, Iowa, in 1906. Their children were as follows: Emory, who resides at Brooklyn, Iowa, is a dental surgeon graduated from the Iowa State University with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery; Florence, who married W. D. Keefe, manager of a piano house of Chicago, Illinois, was graduated from the Brooklyn High School; May, who was also graduated from the Brooklyn High School, married O. H. Gallagher, a dental surgeon, lives at Grinnell, Iowa; Fred W., whose name heads this review; Marguerite, who was graduated from the Brooklyn High School and Drake University, is a primary and kindergarten teacher and a Chautauqua teacher during the summer months; William, who is a locomotive fireman, lives in South Dakota; and Albert, who is a resident of Chicago, Illinois, enlisted in the United States Navy and served all during the World war in the transport service, was mustered out after the close of active fighting.

Fred W. Schmitz attended the public schools of Brooklyn, Iowa, and was graduated from its high school in 1903. He then entered the law office of U. M. Reed, of the old and well-known law firm of Scott & Reed of Brooklyn, with whom he remained from 1903 until 1906, and then matriculated in the law department of the Iowa State University, from which he was graduated in 1908 with the degree Doctor of Laws. From June, 1908, until February, 1909, Mr. Schmitz was in the law office of Tisdale & Heindel of Ottumwa, Iowa. Severing those connections Mr. Schmitz came to Townsend and became a member of his present firm of Kanouse & Schmitz, the leading law firm of Broadwater County, with offices on Cedar Street. Mr. Schmitz is a republican, and was elected on his party ticket county attorney in 1916, and re-elected to the same office in the fall of 1918. He took over the duties of his office in January, 1917, and his present term expires on January 1, 1921. The Methodist Episcopal Church of Townsend holds his membership and he is serving it as a trustee. Mr. Schmitz belongs to Valley Lodge No. 21, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Townsend, and he is now its treasurer. He is also a member of Helena Consistory No. 3, Scottish Rite.

Few people recognize the importance of the office of county attorney. It has immense possibilities for good and evil, and its powers have not infrequently been abused for personal or political ends and at a serious cost to the community, but fortunately for Broadwater in Mr. Schmitz the county has a man beyond reproach and one whose legal abilities are way beyond the ordinary.

JAMES E. KANOUSE. In the early days of the world's civilization the task of a lawyer was an easier one perhaps than at present. The necessities of the people did not require complex laws and the general probity was sufficient security in the ordinary transactions of life. Contracts requiring time for fulfillment were few, as most of the business was done through barter, and the prices of commodities were fixed by the common agreement of the people, and therefore contentions were fewer. However, from the beginnings of history there have been courts and advocates, and as early as 1681 definite mention is made of lawyers at Plymouth, Massachusetts. As business became enlarged there was more demand for men who could give advice and direct the people in the way of keeping the laws, and to defend those who broke the regulations. Gradually more and more of the leading young men began to enter the profession and by the time the American Colonies were ready to throw off the yoke and become independent the most brilliant of their men were enrolled among those who were devoting themselves to the practice of the law. Since then no other profession has given the country so many of its statesmen and leading citizens as has the law, and one of the attorneys of sterling integrity and decision of character of Broadwater County is James E. Kanouse of Townsend, senior member of the strong law firm of Kanouse & Schmitz.

James E. Kanouse was born at Woodstock, New Jersey on December 18, 1845, a son of Jacob Kanouse, and grandson of Rev. Peter Kanouse, a Presbyterian minister, who went into Wisconsin as a pioneer and became one of the best-known clergymen of the Northwest. His death occurred in Wisconsin. Jacob A. Kanouse, the father, was born in New York State in 1825, and died at Fort Benton, Montana, in 1905. Going to Newark, New Jersey, he was married in that city, and lived there until 1849, when he set out for California in search of gold, and also went to Mexico on that trip, meeting with gratifying success as a prospector. Returning home in 1853, he found himself dissatisfied with conditions, and so in 1855, came as far west as McLean County, Illinois, where he bought land from the Illinois Central Railroad, and remained, engaged in farming, until 1865, in that year crossing the plains to York Gulch, Montana, eighteen miles from Helena. There he prospected as a placer miner, but later became a school-teacher of Helena. Still later he went to Fort Benton and practiced law, having studied law and been admitted to the bar of New Jersey many years previously. In his political faith he was a republican, and stanch in his support of party principles. Jacob A. Kanouse was married to Hannah Hall, who was born at Hingham, Massachusetts in 1828, and died at Newark, New Jersey, in 1853.

James E. Kanouse attended the public schools of Newark, New Jersey, and Waterbury, Connecticut, being graduated from the high school course of the latter city in 1859. He then went to McLean County, Illinois, and from there enlisted in 1861 in the Union army as a member of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry under R. G. Ingersoll. Mr. Kanouse participated in the engagements at Pittsburg Landing, second battle of Vicksburg, the battle of Lexington, Tennessee, was in one of General Sherman's raids down through the Mississippi Valley to Meridian and back to the Tennessee border. He was then in the battle of Jackson, Tennessee, against Generals Price and Van Dorn, and in other minor engagements, and was mustered out in 1864, after a full three years of service at Memphis, Tennessee. During this period he was sergeant and acting sergeant major on detached telegraph service under General Grant at Vicksburg and in Tennessee, and ever proved himself brave and capable.

In 1865, finding old associations too dull after his years of military experience, the young man set out in search of a broader field, and crossed the plains with his father, but he chose Bozeman, Montana, and for a year he did farm work. He then became agent for the A. J. Oliver Express & Exchange Line at Virginia City, but after a year came to York in the Missouri Valley, and in the spring of 1868 bought out a homesteader, which property is located five miles south of Townsend. On it he was engaged in farming until 1910. In the meanwhile he and J. R. Marks bought, in 1900, several ranches and engaged in the sheep business, which connection was maintained until the death of Mr. Marks in 1908. At present Mr. Kanouse owns two ranches, one of 701 acres and the other of 320 acres, both of which are five miles south of the county seat of Broadwater County; and he also owns a 320-acre ranch in Madison Valley, Montana.

While giving attention to his business interests, Mr. Kanouse found time to develop his intellectual faculties along another line, studying law in his spare moments to such good effect that in 1900 he was admitted to the bar and established himself in a general practice at Townsend, he now being senior member of the firm of Kanouse & Schmitz, as before stated. He is also extensively engaged in mining as one of the owners of the Iron Mask Mine near Townsend, which is a lead and silver quartz mine, and of the Silver Wave Group. Mr. Kanouse owns the Vulture Mine, which like the other properties is a lead and silver proposition. From the time of the organization of the Townsend State Bank in 1899 until 1905 he served it as president, and was active in firmly establishing this oldest financial institution of Broadwater County.

A democrat, Mr. Kanouse served in the Territorial Legislature, and was a member of the constitutional convention. He is a Knight of Pythias, and belongs to Myrtle Lodge, Grand Army of the Republic of Helena.

In 1905 Mr. Kanouse was married at Helena to Miss Margaret T. Willett, who was born in Kansas.

WILLIAM ROWE. Nearly eighty years have dissolved in the mists of the irrevocable past since William Rowe, venerable pioneer, first saw the light of day. He has lived through one of the most remarkable, and in many respects the most wonderful, epochs in the world's history. There will never be another like it, for it embraced the period when the strong-armed homeseekers from the eastern states and from the western countries of Europe invaded the great West (he being among the number) and redeemed it from the wilds, bringing it up through various stages to the present high state of civilization. To all this he has been a most interested, and by no means a passive, spectator, having sought to do his full share in the work of progress in the locality which he finally selected as his place of abode. He talks most interestingly of the early days, when customs and manners were different, everything, in fact, unlike what our civilization is today. Because of his sterling qualities of character and his splendid record he enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him.

William Rowe was born in Cornwall, England, on February 2, 1840, and is the son of James and Julia (Williams) Rowe, both of whom were also natives of Cornwall. The father was born in 1801, and died on April 28, 1877, when seventy-six years of age, while the mother, who was born in 1802, died on December 29, 1876, when seventy-four years old. Of the thirteen children born to this worthy couple but two are living, the subject of this review and Mary Ann, the widow of William Davis and who lives in Fort Benton, Montana. James Rowe was reared and educated in Cornwall, England, and later went to work in the mines. After his marriage he went to Honolulu, and still later to California, whence he drifted into Mexico. In the spring of 1844 Mr. Rowe returned to England, and then brought to America his wife and their children, seven or eight in number, landing at Quebec. Their trip was made by a slow-going sailing ship, between ninety and a hundred days being consumed on the voyage. On the way across one of the children died and would have been buried at sea had it not been for the protestations of the mother, who was permitted to bring the body the rest of the way. From Quebec they continued their journey up through Montreal to Detroit, Michigan, thence to Chicago. From there they proceeded to Elizabethtown, Jo Daviess County, Illinois, the entire trip from Quebec having been made with a four-horse team and wagon. Mr. Rowe engaged in mining, in which he was prospered and was soon enabled to build a home for the family. He was an adept with many tools, being not only a carpenter and shoemaker, but was even able to make his own clothes. He later engaged in farming and stock-raising for a time, but after the death of his wife and while on his way to Montana to visit his son, the subject of this sketch, he died on the steamer Benton during the trip up the Missouri River. His remains were buried at Fort Beaufort. He was a faithful and honored member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

William Rowe was a lad of four years of age when the family immigrated from England to America, settlement being made at Elizabethtown, near Galena, Jo Daviess County, Illinois. The schools of that place he attended in winter, but at the early age of eight years he became a wage earner, his first work being dropping corn, for which he received twenty-five cents a day, working from sunrise to sunset. He was but a small boy at a small job, but he stuck faithfully to his work, and in that way earned enough to pay for a cow. In December, 1849, he left home and obtained employment at watering horses, but in the following spring he went to work for his brother-in-law, Henry Roberts, at farm work. Later he was employed at cabinet work in Galena for a time, but later went to work again for Henry Roberts, with whom he remained until seventeen years of age. Then he was employed to mix mortar and carry a hod, for which he received one dollar a day, but later obtained a chance to work for his board and opportunity to attend school. He then entered the employ of a Mr. Coleman, who was to pay him $160 for a year's work, but at the end of nine months he went to British Hollow, Grant County, Wisconsin, where he drove a team, hauling lead for Hymar & Vance. He was sent to Fairplay, where he bought lead for that firm, and later he went to Portage Lake, in the northern peninsula of Michigan, where he obtained work in the Franklin iron mine. From there he went to Detroit, Michigan, thence to Chicago, and to Galena, Illinois. During the following year he was engaged in driving for the Wisconsin Stage Company, after which he took eighty head of horses to LaCrosse, Wisconsin, for the Minnesota Stage Line, the J. C. Burbank Company. After breaking the horses, he took them to Winona, Minnesota, where on October 1, 1861, he put them to work on the road. During the following winter Mr. Rowe drove on the river between St. Paul, Minnesota, and LaCrosse, Wisconsin, but in the following spring he was sent to St. Cloud, from which place he drove the route to Elk Creek or Bailey Station. His next location was at Abercrombie, Minnesota, then at Campbell's during the summer of 1862. He was then called back to St. Paul with his teams and drove the stage between Henderson and St. Peter, Minnesota. In the fall of that year he witnessed the hanging of thirty-nine Indians who had been convicted of murdering white men, women and children during one of their uprisings at or near Mankato, where the hanging occurred. During the winter of 1862-3 Mr. Rowe drove stage between St. Paul and Redwing, and the following incident shows somewhat the character of the route he drove. On March 23, 1863, on his way up from Redwing, he was compelled to cross the Mississippi River. The ice had broken up and a ferry boat was used to transfer them to the other side. This time he did not want to cross on the boat, as it was exceedingly dangerous, but two of his passengers were very anxious to get through to St. Paul, so they decided to attempt the crossing. The stay line on the boat was made fast to a big boulder on the shore and Mr. Rowe drove his team onto the boat. The horses were on board, but as the wheels of the coach struck the edge of the boat they pushed it from the shore and the coach went into the icy water, the two men being drowned. The other six passengers were rescued. Later Mr. Rowe drove between St. Anthony and Anoka, Minnesota, and between Clearwater and Mantoville. Then Mr. Rowe changed his vocation and for a time engaged in the operation of a saloon and billiard hall in St. Cloud. In the spring of 1864 he bought a team of horses, harness and a wagon, and loading up with eleven barrels of flour, he headed for Selkirk, Canada. There he sold his flour and his watch and returned to St. Cloud, where he found his partner in the business there had sold his interest. Mr. Rowe then sold his own interest and went to St. Paul, where he entered the employ of the Minnesota Stage Company. About this time he met with a serious misfortune, losing the sight of both of his eyes for about two years. He went to visit his family in Illinois and while there had his eyes treated, with successful results, the sight being restored.

Wm Bower

For one year Mr. Rowe was in business in Grant County, Wisconsin, but in June, 1867, he landed at Fort Benton, Montana, having come up the Missouri River from Omaha on the steamer "Deer Lodge." From there he went to Helena, walking the greater part of the distance, and there bought a horse, with which he went with the stampede to Blue Cloud Gulch, where he engaged in prospecting and mining. Eventually he gave his claim away for a tincup and a butcher knife and returned to Helena, where he engaged in mining. Later he drove a six-horse stage outfit between Helena and Canada Ranch, but a year later returned to Fort Benton and engaged in the feed stable business. In the spring of 1869 he bought a span of mules and started for Silver Creek, but his mules got away and he chased them to Wolf Creek, thence to Helena, where he engaged in hauling dirt for $20 a day. He sold his wagon for $125 and neck-yoke and whiffletree for $25, and went to Pioneer City, where he worked in the mines as long as the water lasted, after which he engaged in prospecting and mining on French Gulch, where he was successful in finding gold and mined there for about a year. He then sold out and spent the winter at Arkansas Springs, Arkansas, in the hope of recovering his health. He then went to Deer Lodge, Montana, where he was appointed under sheriff, under West Jones, and night watchman. After two years' service he opened a billiard hall, which he later sold and in the fall of 1872 returned to Fort Benton and engaged in the hotel business. He was appointed sheriff of Chouteau County, serving two years, and then was elected for a similar period. He then was appointed United States deputy marshal, serving about six months, following which he was appointed United States mounted revenue inspector for Montana and Idaho, holding that position for about one and a half years. He then continued the operation of the hotel at Fort Benton and at the same time took a contract to carry the mail between Fort Benton and Helena daily for four years at $8,000 per year, also a special contract to carry the mail between Fort Benton and Fort Assiniboine for two years at $6,000 per month. He soon afterward sold his contracts for $26,700, and in the fall of 1884 he began buying horses, having his headquarters at Fort Benton. Then for about one and a half years he was engaged in the livery business and in the operation of a cattle and horse ranch, in which he has continued ever since. He is the owner of 340 acres of splendid land near Fort Benton, of which about 200 acres are in cultivation. At one time he was an extensive breeder of English shire horses, having paid as high as $3,500 for a stallion of that breed. He also bred Shorthorn cattle, and in all his operations has been progressive and enterprising. He also owns a number of pieces of city property in Sioux Falls and elsewhere.

On January 18, 1876, at Fort Benton, Montana, Mr. Rowe was married to Katie Jane Babbage, who was born on May 1, 1860, in Vancouver, Washington. Her parents were John and Catherine (Cullinane) Babbage, the former a native of Devonshire, England, and the latter of the city of Limerick, Ireland. These parents were married in San Francisco, California, on May 24, 1858, and to them were born six children, of whom four are living. Mr. Babbage was a clerk in the United States Mint at San Francisco, but at the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the United States Artillery, being first sent to Vancouver, Washington, thence to Washington, D. C. He participated in the second battle of Yorktown, and then was detailed as a clerk in the war department at Washington. He re-enlisted, but was retained in that position to the close of his life, in 1870.

To Mr. and Mrs. Rowe have been born sixteen children, seven of whom are deceased, all passing away in infancy except Harry, who died at the age of twenty-four years. The children living are as follows: Grace E. is the wife of Richard J. Pennock; Wilbur Garfield was married to Jessie M. Jenkinson, who is now deceased, and to them were born five children; Emma A. is the wife of William Jenkinson; Leslie Charles married Philemon Dupee and they have four sons; George Francis enlisted on October 6, 1917, in the United States service at Fort Benton, was sent to Camp Lewis and was transferred to Camp Mills, New York, where he was assigned to the Signal Corps in December, 1917. He was sent overseas, landing at Brest, France, and participated in all the drives in which the American troops took part. Edward Harrison enlisted on May 24, 1917, at Great Falls, in Company D, One Hundred and Sixty-Third Regiment, United States Volunteer Infantry. He was transferred to Fort Benjamin Harrison, then to Camp Green, North Carolina; Camp Mills, New York, and finally to Camp Merrill, New Jersey, whence he was sent overseas, landing at Brest, France. He was detailed for duty at Longres, France, having been promoted to chief cook. He was mustered out at Camp Mills, New York, on July 17, 1919. John McKinley enlisted on November 18, 1917, at Great Falls, in the Aviation Corps. He was first sent to Fort Wright, Washington, then to Kelley Field, Texas, and on January 14, 1918, he started for overseas. He landed at Brest, was later sent to England, being located near London, but after the armistice was signed he returned to Camp Logan, where he was mustered out in January, 1919. Mary Catherine is the wife of Josiah F. Lester, who enlisted at Spokane, Washington, in 1918, was commissioned a lieutenant, transferred to Camp Dodge, Iowa, and later to Camp Lee, Virginia, where he was finally mustered out in January, 1919. Minnie N. is at home.

Politically Mr. Rowe is an earnest republican, while fraternally he is a member of Chouteau Lodge No. 25, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which lodge he has served as master two terms. He also holds the distinction of being the first Mason raised in Chouteau County. Quiet and unostentatious and ever attending strictly to his own affairs, he has made better all who have come with the range of his influence, so that his career is eminently worthy of being recorded on the pages of the history of the state of his adoption.

John Thomas Neese is a business man of Savage. He has been identified with this community for a period extending over many years, for he came here as a youth and his success and achievements have been contemporaneous with the development of Montana.

Mr. Neese was born in Barren County, Kentucky, near the town of Glasgow, November 10, 1874, a son of John and Elizabeth (Nichols) Neese and a grandson of Elias Nichols. John Neese was born in Tennessee, and was a Kentucky soldier on the side of the Union in the war between the states. He was wounded during that struggle, and after the close of the war he received an accidental injury, which hastened his death. He was about sixty years of age when his earthly career ended, and he survived his wife, who was a native of Kentucky. Their children numbered the following: Henry, of Dawson County, Montana; Lucy, who died at the age of seventeen; Nancy, who married T. Spencer, and died in Kentucky; and John Thomas, of Savage.

John Thomas Neese grew up as a farmer lad, receiving in the meantime a limited amount of educational training, and almost the first thing which he sought in life was work. He arrived in this western region in August, 1894, and on the 10th of that month he found employment on the sheep ranch of Libby & Merril, with whom he remained as a ranch hand for two years, receiving $35 a month during the summer seasons and $30 in the winters. He then returned to his birthplace in Kentucky, but the lure of the west remained with him and after two years of farming there he came again to Montana, this time for a permanent residence. He began work for the cow outfit of Phil Dawe on Burns Creek, but a few months later transferred his activities to the ranch of Lossie Dawe and two months later became an employe of another of the Dawe brothers, working at the latter place for a summer and then engaging in business for himself.

During this period of employment of about three years Mr. Neese saved his earnings and with the capital thus accumulated bought a few cattle and associated himself in business with a partner on the head waters of Fox Creek. Soon afterward, however, he sold his interests there to his partner, took cattle on the shares with Lossie Dawe and moved to the Dawe ranch on Burns Creek. This partnership continued over a period of eleven years, during which time they raised cattle extensively and shipped their product to the Chicago market. After disposing of his stock interests Mr. Neese located in the new town of Savage and engaged in the livery business, succeeding Tref Simard, and he is still the liveryman there.

In addition to the homestead which he entered and proved up on Burns Creek Mr. Neese has accumulated other lands by purchase and has much of his estate under cultivation. His land is devoted to grain farming, and his ranch is divided into three farms, aggregating an estate of thirteen hundred and twenty-acres. His one farm under irrigation is destined for alfalfa growing, and he now has twenty acres devoted to that grass. Mr. Neese is also a stockholder and director in the First National Bank of Savage. He has built two residences in the town, which he owns in connection with his livery barn.

Mr. Neese was married in Barren County, Kentucky, January 25, 1897, to Maggie L. Cox, who was born in that county September 6, 1883, a daughter of a Kentucky farmer, James Cox. Of her parents' two children she was the only one to grow to maturity. The following children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Neese: Lucy B., Roy C., Walter, May, Dora and Margaret. Mr. Neese was given the right of franchise in 1896, and he cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley in 1900.

PARIS B. BARTLEY came to Montana in 1907, after a number of years' actual experience in general business and banking in Missouri, and is one of the prominent men in the financial life of Helena. He is vice president and active head of the Conrad Trust & Savings Bank, one of the strongest institutions in the northwest.

The Bartley family have played a notable part in Callaway County, Missouri, since the earliest times, beginning about the period Missouri changed its territorial form of government to statehood. Originally the Bartleys immigrated from the north of England to Virginia about 1690. A later generation of the family furnished James Bartley as a patriot soldier in the Revolutionary war. He served with a Virginia regiment and was killed in action.

The grandfather of the Helena banker was George Bartley, who was born in Virginia in 1800. In early youth he went to Kentucky and in 1819 went to Missouri and settled at Fulton in Callaway County. That central section of the Missouri River valley in Missouri was then receiving its first influx of settlers. George Bartley was a natural leader among men, and had a long record of participation in public affairs. He was deputy clerk and recorder, was clerk and recorder, served as probate judge and also as judge of the district court. He was allied with the democratic party. He died at Fulton in 1874. He married Mary Moore, who also had an ancestor in the Revolutionary war. She was born in Kentucky and they were married at Fulton.

The second generation of the family in Callaway County, Missouri, was represented by John Bartley, who was born in Fulton in 1828 and spent all his life in that city, dying in 1884. He was a merchant, a substantial business man, and an honored and influential citizen. He was a democrat and an active member of the Christian Church. He married Eliza Baskett, who was born at Fulton in 1837 and died January 31, 1915. Their surviving children except Paris B. are still in that section of Missouri: Don P. is vice president of the Callaway Bank at Fulton; Paris B. is the second in age; Alice G. never married and died at the old home in 1913; Ruth A. is the wife of W. F. Russell, vice president of the Southern Bank of Fulton, and Edna M. is the wife of F. C. Stokes, cashier of the Aux Vasse Bank at Aux Vasse, Missouri.

Paris B. Bartley, who was born at Fulton August 31, 1868, was carefully reared and educated, attending private schools and nearly completed his senior year in Westminster College, an old and notable educational institution of Fulton. After his college career he took up the business of tie contracting for railroad companies. He followed it eleven years, keeping his home in Fulton, but operating through Southeastern Missouri, Southern Illinois, Northeastern Arkansas and Western Kentucky.

Mr. Bartley in 1896 bought the Aux Vasse Bank in his native county and filled the post of cashier in the institution until 1907. He arrived at Helena December 23, 1907, and was connected with the American National Bank as assistant cashier until September 1, 1910. At that date he joined Mr. W. G. Conrad and assisted in organizing the Conrad Trust & Savings Bank. He was its first cashier and since January, 1919, has also been the active vice president. Besides the great personal resources of the Conrad family, a number of well known and prominent men of Montana are associated with this bank as directors or officers. In less than ten years the bank has attained resources of more than $2,750,000, the capital being $200,000 and surplus and profits nearly $135,000. Deposits at the close of 1919 aggregated nearly $2,500,000.

Mr. Bartley is also president of the Pondera Valley State Bank of Conrad, the largest bank in Pondera County. At the close of 1919 the resources of this bank aggregated nearly $750,000. Mr. Bartley is president of the Whitehall State Bank at Whitehall, a bank in the Jefferson Valley, with total resources of over $380,000.

Mr. Bartley is a member of the State and American Bankers associations. He was elected president of the Montana Bankers Association in August, 1920, and served as such during the years 1920-21. This was considered by him a signal honor inasmuch as his residence in the state had been of so short duration. He is a democrat in politics, a member and elder in the Christian Church, and in Masonry is affiliated with Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and is also a member of Helena Lodge No. 103 of the Elks, Montana Lodge No. 1 of the Odd Fellows, Helena Lodge of Moose, and State Treasurer Camp No. 6,306 Modern Woodmen of America. He is a member of the Montana Club of Helena.

Mr. Bartley and family live in a modern home at 707 Dearborn Avenue. He married at Moscow, Idaho, October 17, 1893, about fifteen years before he established his home in Montana, Miss Anna Lenoir Harwood. She is a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Sneed) Harwood, her mother now living at Dover, Missouri, where her father, a merchant, died. Mrs. Bartley finished her education in the William-Woods College at Fulton, Missouri. To their marriage were born two children: Paris H., the son, born August 25, 1894, is a teller in the Conrad Trust & Savings Bank; the daughter Helen is a highly educated young woman, a graduate of the Helena High School, attended the Ward-Belmont Seminary at Nashville, Tennessee, and afterward was a student in Bryn Mawr College in Philadelphia. On June 16, 1920, she married Thomas E. O'Byrne, of Birmingham, Alabama, where they will make their future home.

SAMUEL L. HOOD, cashier of the First National Bank of Savage and in many other ways prominently identified with the civic and industrial interests of the city and county, was born in Republican City, Nebraska, September 30, 1889, a son of Samuel Hood, whose birth occurred in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, in 1847. He was a son of Irish parents from Belfast, his father being also named Samuel. The senior Samuel Hood was a sailor and when he left the ocean he became an employe on steamers plying from Pittsburg to New Orleans, and was drowned in the Ohio River. By his wife, Sarah, he had four children, three sons and a daughter, namely: Thomas, who was seriously wounded while wearing the blue in the Civil war and died at the Soldiers' Home in Leavenworth, Kansas. Mrs. Elizabeth Evans, whose death occurred in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Samuel, who became the father of Samuel L., and George, who left home when a youth and was never again heard from.

Samuel Hood, the second of the name, entered the army during the Civil war by strategy, adding a number of years to his age, and in reality he was admitted when but fourteen to the Pennsylvania Cavalry. He was made a member of General Sheridan's Army and took part in the famous engagement at Winchester. He continued a faithful soldier until the close of hostilities and was discharged in 1865. Mr. Hood was still a youth when he left the army and shortly afterward he went to Republican City, Nebraska, where for a time he was engaged in the lumber business, subsequently homesteading near that city and becoming a farmer. He was enrolled among the early and influential citizens of Republican City and vicinity, and his death occurred there in 1900. In his political affiliations he was a democratic adherent prior to the second administration of President Cleveland, and afterward was a republican voter. He was an active Mason and was brought up as a Presbyterian.

In Republican City, Nebraska, Samuel Hood married for his second wife Margaret Hawley, who was born in Indiana in 1863, a daughter of Elisha Hawley. The Hawley family journeyed from their Indiana home to Nebraska in an ox wagon and settled near Republican City. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hood, Samuel L. and Claire C. Samuel Hood at his death also left two daughters by a former marriage, one, Mrs. H. K. Caswell, residing at McDonald, Kansas, and the other, Mrs. B. W. Packer, being a resident of Lincoln, Nebraska.

Samuel L. Hood attended the public schools in Republican City and supplemented this training by a course in the University of Nebraska. In 1904, in company with his mother and brother, he made the westward journey to Montana, landing at old Fort Buford on the 11th of March. On their arrival here their cash capital consisted of $5, this meagre sum being all that stood between them and actual want. The mother, who alone used her right as a homesteader, in order to attain ready money, secured work as a cook at the old road house at Newlon for Johnny O'Brien, while her sons remained at the claim, Samuel being assisted in its work by his younger brother. During more than a year the mother continued to bring in the money for their support by her labors as a cook, and she then became a factor on her claim and relieved the sons from a youthful bachelor's life. She proved up her claim and farmed it, and is still supervising its work.

The Hood family became grain farmers and horse raisers. From the beginning they secured good returns in crops, oats and potatoes both yielding well and were grown on the sod. During their first year in Montana seventy tons of hay were harvested on their half section, and the sale from this crop greatly added to their income.

The first team the family had in this state they brought with them from their Nebraska home, and with it Samuel L. Hood broke the first twenty-five acres of ground on the claim, which they planted to oats and potatoes. They secured their first cow by an "on time" purchase, and slowly they gathered together a bunch of horses as the nucleus of their stock raising industry.

Samuel L. Hood continued farming at the family homestead five miles from where the town of Fairview is now located until 1910, although during the winter months of 1907 and 1910 he attended the University of Nebraska, making his way through the agricultural department of that state institution, and on completing the course in 1910 he secured a position in the Mondak State Bank and remained in its employ for four years. During two years he was a collector on the road for the International Harvester Company and at the close of that period he came to Savage. It was in the year 1915 that he identified his interests with those of Savage, and as the cashier of the First National Bank he has come to be known among the influential and substantial men of affairs in this community.

Although active in all movements for the upbuilding and improvement of Savage and Richland County, Mr. Hood has taken no other interest in political matters than as a voter. He exercised his right of franchise with the progressive republicans in 1912, supporting Colonel Roosevelt for the presidency during that year. He received his Blue Lodge degree in Masonry at Mondak, Montana, and still has membership in the lodge there, but is also a member of the Consistory at Helena and of Algeria Temple.

At Billings, Montana, November 17, 1917, Samuel L. Hood was married to Miss Anna R. Mickelsen. She came with her oldest brother to Montana from Brush, Colorado, where she was born March 10, 1893, the youngest in a family of twelve children. She received her advanced educational training at Bozeman, Montana, and was a teacher in Richland county for five years before her marriage, the last three years of that time being spent as a teacher in the Savage High School. A daughter, Norma, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hood.

GLENWOOD H. CORRINGTON. While his connection with Montana has been a matter of only a few years, Mr. Corrington's name is intimately associated with a number of important commercial, ranching and civic interests in Musselshell County, particularly at Ryegate.

Mr. Corrington was born at Moweaqua, Shelby County, Illinois, April 21, 1888. His great-grandfather was an Englishman who settled in Kentucky at an early date. His paternal grand-parents were Isaac Newton and Mary Corrington. The former was born in Kentucky in 1833, and prior to the Civil war located at Jacksonville, Illinois. He was a saw mill operater, also a contractor and brick manufacturer, and during the war served on the Union side until severely wounded at the battle of Shiloh, He died at Jacksonville in 1913.

James Everett Corrington, father of the Montana merchant, was born at Carlinville, Illinois, January 21, 1869, and grew up in his native town and near Moweaqua. He married at Moweaqua and his home was in that city until 1906. As a contractor and builder he put up most of the buildings of Moweaqua, later he conducted the leading general store of the town, but since 1906 has lived at Decatur, Illinois, where he is in the wholesale grocery and produce brokerage business. He served as village clerk and two terms as mayor of Moweaqua. He is a stanch republican and is affiliated with the independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. James E. Corrington married Lorinda Smith, who was born near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, in 1872.

Glenwood H. Corrington is the oldest of three children. His sister Eula, a graduate of the Decatur High School, of Brown's Business College and the Millikin Conservatory of Music of that city, is now private secretary to the manager of the Huff Lumber Company at Decatur. Theodore, the youngest, is a senior in the Decatur High School.

Glenwood H. Corrington gained a thorough preparation for a business career. He graduated from the Moweaqua High School in 1905, spent one year in the University of Illinois at Urbana and took the complete commercial course, including stenography, at Brown's Business College at Decatur, graduating in 1907. The following years he spent as private secretary at Needles, California, to H. S. Wall, superintendent of motive power of the Santa Fe Railway Company. Then after a visit to Illinois he came to Montana in April, 1909. His first act on reaching the state was to take a homestead of 160 acres in the Big Coulee Valley. He proved up his claim, lived on it eighteen months, and later sold.

Mr. Corrington has been identified with Ryegate since the winter of 1910. He was in the employ of J. B. Gregg, a general merchant, until March, 1911, when, associated with Harry Henton and Mrs. Catherine V. Henton, he incorporated the Ryegate Mercantile Company. In 1914 he acquired the Henton interests and is now sole proprietor, though the business is incorporated with Mr. Corrington as president, G. H. Narverud as vice president and Mrs. Corrington as secretary and treasurer. This is now one of the two leading stores of Musselshell County outside of the county seat. The store is on First Street, carries a complete line of general merchandise, and enjoys a spirited trade drawn from a country twenty-five miles in a radius around the town. The company is incorporated with a capital of $50,000, all paid up except about $5,000.

Besides his store building Mr. Corrington owns a ranch of 416 acres in Stillwater County. He is one of three men extensively engaged in cattle ranching. The firm owns four sections of land in Sweetgrass County, leases two sections where Musselshell, Sweetgrass and Stillwater counties join, and still another two sections in Mussellshell County.

Every subject that concerns the welfare of Ryegate is a matter of personal concern to Mr. Corrington. He served as the first alderman from the First Ward when the town was incorporated, and held that office two and a half years. He has also been precinct committeeman for the republican party. Fraternally Mr. Corrington is worshipful master of Temple Lodge No. 101, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is affiliated with Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, at Harlowton, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Ryegate Lodge No. 186, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also the Encampment.

At Billings, Montana, July 3, 1915, he married Miss Vera May Edson, who, as noted above, is his business associate, being secretary and treasurer of the Ryegate Mercantile Company. Mrs. Corrington is a daughter of W. J. and May (Courtright) Edson, residents of Ryegate, where her father is a well known cattleman. She is a graduate of the Frederick High School of South Dakota and also of the State Normal School at Ellensburg, that state. Mr. and Mrs. Corrington have one son, James Winfield, born July 2, 1918.

WILLIAM M. ULM, auditor of the Musselshell Mercantile Company, is a Montana pioneer, and he and other members of the family have lived in Montana upwards of forty years. Mr. Ulm is a thorough business man, and has had a wide successful experience in ranching, merchandising and handling important affairs.

His ancestors were German colonists who settled in Pennsylvania prior to the Revolutionary war, subsequent members of the family becoming early residents of Ohio. His great-grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary war under General Washington. Mr. Ulm was born at Rossville, Indiana, February 8, 1862. His father, Wilson H. Ulm, also became well known in Montana. Born at Rossville in 1841, he was reared and married there, had a store in Indiana, and in the fall of 1878 came to Montana and homesteaded eleven miles from Great Falls. He invested his means liberally and acquired 1,000 acres, the station of Ulm being named in his honor. He subsequently added another quarter section, and did a large business as a stock raiser for several years. He finally sold his lands in 1896. In the meantime, in 1882, he had engaged in the general merchandise business at Helena, but sold out his enterprise there in 1885 and then returned to his ranch. In 1896 he removed to Long Beach, California, living five years retired and then returned to Indiana and died at Frankfort in that state in 1914. He was a democrat in politics, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was a member of the Christian Science Church. He married Martha J. Williams, who was born in Virginia and is now living at Frankfort, Indiana.

William M. Ulm was the only child of his parents. He received his early education in the public schools of Frankfort, Indiana, and came to Montana one year after his father, in 1879. He completed his high school course at Helena, and after leaving school in 1883 studied accounting under competent private tutors. He assisted his father in business until 1885, and then established a store of his own at Elkhorn, conducting it three years. Following that he was in partnership with Dr. Charles K. Cole as a stock rancher at Ennis until 1893. He then resumed the mercantile business at Toston, and developed the largest store in that town or section of the state. He sold it in 1906, and in that year removed to Ely, Nevada, and became purchasing agent for the Ely Townsite Company, being associated in that enterprise with George Gunn, who later died at Salt Lake City, and W. B. Thompson, now a prominent capitalist of New York City.

From Nevada Mr. Ulm removed to Long Beach, California, in 1911 and spent nine months recuperating his health. He was then called to New York to assist his brother-in-law, Dr. Charles K. Cole, in practical supervision of the fine country estate Doctor Cole was establishing on the banks of the Hudson River. He remained there looking after the building and adornment of the property until it became a handsome home, but after two years, the climate not being fitted to him, he returned to Lewistown, Montana, and has since given his services to several commercial organizations. For a short time he was receiver for the Family Grocery Company. For four years he was accountant and manager for the Grass Range Mercantile Company, and in September, 1918, came to Musselshell as auditor of the Musselshell Mercantile Company, the leading store in the town. Mr. Ulm is also treasurer of the Musselshell Commercial Club. Politically he votes independently.

At Helena February 11, 1884, he married Miss Lula E. Cole, a native of Illinois, and a sister of Dr. Charles K. Cole, mentioned above. Mrs. Ulm, who is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution in the chapter at Booneville, New York, is a graduate of the Helena High School. Mr. and Mrs. Ulm have two daughters: Lola, a graduate of the Montana State University at Missoula, is the wife of J. M. Falk, a certified public accountant, their home being at Hastings-on-the-Hudson. The second daughter, Ada, who completed her junior year in Montana University, is the wife of B. K. Beatham, manager of the grocery department of the Power Mercantile Company at Lewistown, Montana.

Joseph A. McDonough is one of the fortunate men of Montana, fortunate in the choice of a profession where his abilities and talents have had their freest scope, fortunate in the choice of a location at Great Falls, one of the best cities of the Northwest, and fortunate in the friends and clientele that have rewarded his stanch character and loyalty as a citizen and his industry as a lawyer.

Mr. McDonough was born at Hinsdale, Massachusetts, June 27, 1878, a son of Patrick J. and Mary C. (McCormick) McDonough. His parents were both natives of Ireland, were married very early in life, and coming to the United States lived for a time in Rhode Island and afterward in Massachusetts. Patrick J. McDonough for many years was a Massachusetts manufacturer, and died in 1915 at the age of seventy. His wife is still living, and of their five children four survive. One of Mr. McDonough's sisters was well known in Great Falls, Anna M., the wife of Wheeler Coy. She died here September 7, 1917.

Joseph A. McDonough was liberally educated, attending public school, and graduated from the law department of Boston University in 1899. He received the first prize for excellence in scholarship through the entire course. Admitted to the bar of Massachusetts the same year, he practiced at Boston, and in 1001 located at Great Falls and opened his office. His abilities soon attracted attention and a liberal clientage. From 1903 to 1911 he was a partner with George H. Stanton in a very large and extensive law practice. Mr. McDonough has handled cases in all the courts of the state, and his reputation as an able lawyer is practically state wide. He is a director and general counsel for the Conrad Banking Company of Great Falls, and has been attorney for a number of other corporations. He is general counsel for the Valier Land & Water Company, which has constructed the "Valier Irrigation Project," the largest Carey land project in the state. In 1910 he organized the Merrimac Cattle Company and is president and director of this rapidly growing livestock business, also managing director of the Maryland Cattle Company.

Mr. McDonough is sincerely devoted to his profession and his business affairs and has never sought any political honors, though affiliated as a staunch republican. He is a member of Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, and is a Shriner and an Elk.

August 27, 1913, Mr. McDonough married Miss Ella C. Rowles. She was born in Cascade County, Montana, a daughter of Presley H. and Ellen Rowles.

J. H. Matney, M. D. Thirty years of labor in his profession gives Doctor Matney much distinction in his profession as a physician and surgeon. Doctor Matney has been a resident of several states in the South and West, but for eighteen years has steadily practiced in Montana. His home is at Musselshell.

Doctor Matney was born at Lenoir, North Caroline, March 15, 1865. He is of the splendid Anglo Saxon stock which is found in the mountain districts of the Western Carolinas. His ancestors came from England and first settled in Virginia. Doctor Matney is a son of a Confederate soldier, though the family were firm believers in the Union.

His father, Thomas W. Matney, spent all his life in North Carolina, born in 1829 and died in 1895. He was a minister of the Methodist Church and as a circuit rider carried his work among many communities. He lived for a number of years at Lenoir, where he was reared and married, and after retiring went to Montezuma, where he died. He was all through the Civil war in the Confederate ranks, participated in the battles of Gettysburg and elsewhere, but after the war was identified with the republican party. He married Susie Wilson, who was born in Wilkes county, North Carolina, and died at Walkertown in that state in 1907. A brief record of their children is as follows: M. L., a traveling salesman living at Gage, Montana; W. C, a Methodist minister at Canton, North Carolina; J. F., also a minister of the same church, pastor at Libby, Montana; T. W., who was a professor in Bloomington College in Tennessee, where he died at the age of twenty-seven; Doctor J. H.; G. W., a Methodist minister at Mountain City, Tennessee; A. R., who died at Montezuma, North Carolina, at the age of twenty-four; W. L., a bookkeeper at Waynesville, North Carolina, and Minnie, wife of Samuel Blalock, county registrar of deeds at Newland, North Carolina.

Doctor Matney acquired his early education in the public schools of East Tennessee and took his medical course in the U. S. Grant University at Chattanooga, graduating from the medical department in 1891. For two years he practiced at Roane Mountain, Tennessee, and for seven years was busy with his professional labors in old Indian Territory, now the State of Oklahoma. In 1900 he removed to Atlanta, Kansas, and in 1902 came to Birney, Montana, and was identified with that community in a professional capacity until October, 1916. Since the latter date he has carried on a general medical and surgical practice at Musselshell. Doctor Matney also owns a ranch of 320 acres devoted to hay, grain and cattle three miles west of Musselshell on the Musselshell River. He is affiliated with the republican party, is a Methodist and is a member of Victory Lodge No. 124, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

In 1891, at Chuckey, Tennessee, he married Miss Cordia E. Donnelly, daughter of Maj. R. H. M. and Eliza (Allen) Donnelly, the latter now deceased. Her father is still living at the age of eighty-five at Chuckey, a retired farmer. He served with the rank of major in the Union Army during the Civil war. Doctor and Mrs. Matney have reared a family of three children, Pauline, the oldest, is the wife of W. K. Harris, a resident of Delphia, Montana; Thomas W. is a farmer at Sheridan, Wyoming, and the youngest, John H., Jr., now at home, has an interesting military record in the World war. He enlisted in December, 1917, was in the Aviation Corps, was sent overseas in October, 1918, and remained abroad for six months, having just been assigned to front line work when the armistice was signed. He was mustered out May 24, 1919.

D. Augustus Jones has been in Montana for eight years, and throughout that time has been accumulating a steadily growing practice and an increasing reputation as an able lawyer at Ryegate.

His father was a prominent Wisconsin lawyer, and in that state, at Sparta, Monroe County, D. Augustus Jones was born February 5, 1887. He is of Welch ancestry. His grandfather, David Foulkes Jones, was born in Wales in 1828 and married in that country Gwendolin Evans, who was born there in 1825. David F. Jones on coming to America settled at Utica, New York, where he followed his trade as a blacksmith, later took his family to Sparta, Wisconsin, and also worked at his trade there until 1869, when he removed to Ottawa, Minnesota. In Minnesota he was chiefly engaged in his duties as a Welsh lay preacher, performing missionary labors and upbuilding various churches in the state. He died at Ottawa, Minnesota, in 1889, and his wife at Mankato in the same state in 1910.

David F. Jones, father of the Ryegate lawyer, was born at Utica, New York, May 11, 1859. He spent his early life at Utica and at Sparta, Wisconsin, was educated as a lawyer and practiced his profession for many years in Wisconsin. At the time of his death, which occurred at Sparta, December 20, 1900, he was filling the post of United States district attorney in Wisconsin. For the responsibilities of this office he was chosen by President McKinley. He was an active republican and a member of the Congregational Church and the Masonic fraternity. David F. Jones married Flora L. Smith, who was born at Sparta, Wisconsin, May 23, 1859, and is now living in Fort Wayne, Indiana. D. Augustus is the oldest of three children. Mark F. is also a lawyer, a graduate of the law school of the University of Wisconsin, and is now practicing at Beach, North Dakota. Ida L., the only daughter, is secretary of the Y. W. C. A. at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

D. Augustus Jones was educated in the public schools as Sparta, Wisconsin, graduating from high school in 1908, and acquiring his higher literary education and took his law course at Chattanooga, Tennessee. He was a student in Grant College of that city for two years, and in 1912 was given the degree LL. B. from the Chattanooga College of Law. A few months later, on December 1, 1912, he arrived at Ryegate, Montana, and has since been busily engaged in handling a general civil and criminal practice. Mr. Jones, who is unmarried, is a republican, a member of the State Bar Association, and is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Robert C. Currie, present mayor of Ryegate, came to Montana comparatively late in life, after he had achieved independent means in the East. He has invested extensively in lands and other property in Montana and has given much of his time to public duties.

Mr. Currie was born at Dubuque, Iowa, September 23, 1850. His father, Robert L. Currie, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, in 1810, and married in that city Miss Agnes Gardner, who was born in Southern England April 17, 1820. Two of their children were born in England. Robert L. Currie was a marble cutter by trade. In 1840 he brought his family to the United States and settled at Dubuque, Iowa, where he followed his trade. In 1849 he went to California and a year's residence in the gold fields netted him a small fortune. Afterward he returned east and died at Dubuque in 1856. The last two years of his life had been chiefly spent at Nashville, Tennessee, where he was employed during the construction of the State Capitol building. He was a whig in politics, a member of the Church of England and of the Masonic fraternity. His widow survived him many years and died at Colesburg, Iowa, in 1905. At that time she was the widow of Thomas Brock, a native of Scotland, who died at Colesburg, Iowa, in 1869. Mr. Brock was a stone cutter. The only child of her second marriage is Franklin M. Brock, who is well known in Musselshell County, Montana, owning a wheat ranch of 1,140 acres near Ryegate. Robert L. Currie and wife had seven children. John, the oldest died in England in infancy: Jane L., who was born in England in 1840, lives at Colesburg, Iowa, widow of Henry A. Goodrich, a shoemaker, who died during the San Francisco earthquake. John G. Currie is a Montana pioneer, now living retired at Butte. He was born in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1842, and came to Helena in 1866. He was identified with the placer mining activities in that vicinity, later at Butte, and acquired several mining claims and is now living on his original claim in that city. The fourth child, Agnes, married Abraham Nunemaker, and both died, Mr. Nunemaker being a carpenter and builder in South Dakota. Mary Ann, the fifth in the family, died at the age of sixteen. Robert C. is the sixth, while the youngest, Sarah Ann, died in infancy.

Robert C. Currie acquired a public school education in Delaware County, Iowa, attending the high school at Colesburg in that county. When he was about twenty years of age he left school and began learning the trade of brick maker at Dubuque. Returning to Colesburg, he bought a half interest in a local pottery plant, but sold this at the end of five years and acquired a farm in Colony Township in Delaware County. Mr. Currie laid the basis of his substantial prosperity as an Iowa farmer, and gave his personal supervision to his farming interests for nineteen years. He still owns a farm in Iowa and another in Missouri. In the fall of 1898 he took up his residence in Colesburg and while in that town served as mayor two terms. In the spring of 1907 he left for California, spending a year at Los Angeles, and then returned to Iowa for a year.

Mr. Currie came to Montana in 1909. He exercised his privilege as a homesteader in the Big Coulee Valley, acquiring 160 acres in what was then Yellowstone but is now Musselshell County. He proved up his claim, lived on it four years, and later sold. Since 1913 his home has been at Ryegate, and he is now practically retired. He is a stockholder in the Ryegate Creamery. He has been in a position to give much of his time to public affairs, and for the past three years has held the office of justice of the peace and was elected the first mayor when Ryegate was incorporated in 1917. After one year he was re-elected, in 1918, for a two-year term, his second term expiring in April, 1920. Mr. Currie had a great deal of experience in public office in Delaware County, Iowa, serving as justice of the peace at Colesburg two terms, as assessor of Colony Township ten years, was a director of the Independent District of Colony Township School Board fourteen years and also served as town marshal and constable a number of years. At one time he was an Iowa school teacher.

Mr. Currie is a republican in politics. He was made a Mason in Constellation Lodge No. 67, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Colesburg in 1874, and is a past master of that lodge. He demitted and in 1915 helped organize Temple Lodge No. 101 at Ryegate, serving as the first worshipful master. Mr. Currie also helped organize and was the first worthy patron of Ryegate Chapter No. 77 of the Eastern Star, Mrs. Currie being the first worthy matron. He joined the Eastern Star in Colesburg, Iowa. His Royal Arch affiliations are with Greeley Chapter at Greeley, Iowa. He has taken all the degrees in Odd Fellowship, including the Lodge, Encampment and the Canton of Patriarchs Militant. He is a past grand of Colony Lodge No. 50 of the order at Colesburg.

At Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, in 1876, Mr. Currie married Miss Isabelle M. Bolsinger. She was born at Colesburg and she and her husband were schoolmates in public and high schools there. She is an active member of the Congregational Church at Ryegate and the Ladies' Aid Society. The Bolsinger family originated in Germany but were colonial settlers in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Currie's grandfather, Christopher Bolsinger, a native of Pennsylvania, served in the War of 1812, and afterward was a pioneer in Iowa, where he owned extensive farming interests. He died at Colesburg. Mrs. Currie's father was P. C. Bolsinger, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1816, and went to Iowa about 1846. He was one of the early settlers, a merchant, land owner, and built and operated for many years grist mills at Colesburg and Jefferson, Iowa. He died at Colesburg in 1879. Politically he was a democrat. He was one of the stanch members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in his home town in Iowa practically built and supported the church of that denomination for many years. P. C. Bolsinger married Margaret Wiggins, who was born at Wooster, Ohio, in 1826 and died at Colesburg, Iowa, in 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Currie have three children: John, living with his parents at Ryegate, is owner of two ranches. Ezra Cordel is the wife of Manuel Wiltse, a ranch owner. Alba Jane is the wife of Sidney Walker, who operates the Currie farm at Colesburg, Iowa.

JOSEPH A. FERRIS. Montana and the Northwest number Joseph A. Ferris among their frontiersmen and pioneers, for he identified himself with the Western region in pioneer days, and as a hunter, rancher, merchant and business man he took part in the work which transformed this region from a frontier country.

It was in 1880 that Mr. Ferris came into this Western territory from New Brunswick, Canada, where his birth had occurred December 12, 1856. His great-grandfather was the English founder of the family in that Canadian province, where he established his home on a farm and also engaged in lumbering. He was among the very earliest settlers of New Brunswick. Among his children are Joseph, the grandfather of Joseph A., and whose home was on the St. Johns River. Like his worthy father, he was both a farmer and lumberman. Joseph married a Miss Ferris, probably a distant relative, and included among their several children was Thomas R., who became the father of Joseph A. The other members of the family were Benjamin, who went to Western Canada and established his home in the Province of Ontario; Nathaniel; Charles, who became a New Brunswick farmer; Albert, who passed his active life in lumber mills as an engineer; Mrs. John Wasson; Mrs. Robert Wasson and Sarah, who married Absalom Day and moved to Texas.

Thomas R. Ferris was born in the early '20s, his birth occurring about sixty miles above St. Johns City, and his entire life was spent in that community, where he pursued the vocations of his forefathers. He lived during an era of peace and order, when political excitement was unknown in his community, but he always attended elections and cast his vote as his conscience dictated. He was a consistent Christian from early manhood, and reared his children in the fear and love of God. He lived to the good old age of seventy-five, his death occurring about twenty years ago.

Thomas R. Ferris married Catherine Ferris, a daughter of William Ferris. She still lives at the old family home in New Brunswick, having attained the age of eighty-eight. Of their eight children six lived to maturity: Mary, who married Christopher Douglas and died at Whites Cove, New Brunswick; William, of St. Johns, New Brunswick; Joseph A., of Terry, Montana; Sylvanus M., of Dickinson, North Dakota; Lillie, who married Sidney Steward and lives on the old Ferris homestead, and Maud, who married Charles M. Robertson, of the Ferris community at Whites Cove.

Joseph A. Ferris after obtaining his common school education remained on the farm until he had passed the age of maturity, and he also followed lumbering to some extent farther back in the interior. On leaving home as a youth he went on board a sailing craft trading between St. Johns and Portland, Maine, and intermediate points, and while thus engaged for three seasons he became familiar with the Bay of Fundy, the point where the highest tides in the world rises. Leaving that country in the fall of 1880, after a few seasons engaged in farming with other young men of his acquaintance he went on board a boat at Lower Jemseg, his destination being somewhere "Out West." The little party entrained at St. Johns, passed through Quebec and Montreal, through Ontario to Detroit, on through Chicago, and thence to St. Paul and Duluth, where they joined an outfit making ready for the lumber woods, and at Spiritwood Farm Mr. Ferris found his first work. His brother, Sylvanius, was also a member of the party, and after they had worked there a month they decided they had had enough of this strenuous labor and went on to the valley of the Red River of the North, the land of extensive farming operations, but they remained there but a short time.

Little Missouri was at that time the mecca of the West and the brothers and their sole companion decided to try their fortunes there, without knowledge of its whereabouts or conditions. They found it at the very edge of civilization, and being without bedding a haystack accommodated them the first night and on the following night a box car served them in lieu of a hotel, but finally they found a section house which offered them shelter. Looking about for some occupation, the trio observed that large quantities of wild game was brought into the tent town, and inquiry led to the information that hunters were shooting it back in the interior, and they decided to engage in the same business. Equipping themselves with a team and wagon, Winchesters and other necessary supplies, they set out for the region of big game along the Dakota-Montana line, establishing their camp on the Little Missouri River. For two years they hunted the antelope, deer and mountain sheep, and then went into the milder region and hunted buffalo. With the coming of spring they abandoned the business, as the meat could not be preserved fresh and they would not kill for the hides alone, and Joseph A. Ferris then took charge of the remnant of the Grange ranch stock.

In the fall of 1883 a young New Yorker came into the region to hunt buffalo, and it fell to the lot of Mr. Ferris to act as his guide, and the two spent a week or so together along the line of the two territories hunting the big game. The young easterner proved to be a hunter of skill, and this outing suggested to him the idea of the stock business. He was a man of means and established his ranch south of Medora, and from this point he obtained his experience and data for his articles on ranching in the West which he published in the Century Magazine and which were signed by Theodore Roosevelt.

After the termination of his successful career as a hunter Mr. Ferris turned his attention to a new enterprise and became a merchant. For more than twenty years he sold goods in Medora, his mercantile career being a successful one, but the town was sustained almost entirely by cattle men and ranchers, and when they abandoned the country business declined and Medora became the little village it is today. Toward the closing days of the ranching industry Mr. Ferris disposed of his mercantile interests and crossed over into Montana, where he established his home at Sidney. There he spent six or more years as a merchant, and then engaged in ranching at Malta, but after a brief season in this occupation he was offered a good price for his stock, accepted it and went out of business. He then came to Terry to make his home, locating here in November, 1918, and he has since lived retired. In his political affiliations he has given his allegiance to the republican party since becoming a naturalized citizen at Dickinson, North Dakota. For more than twenty years he served Medora as its postmaster. For a similar period he has been identified with Odd Fellowship, and in Masonry he is a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter in Terry, and is a member of Glendive Commandery.

Mr. Ferris returned to his boyhood's home for his wife, whom he married at Whites Cove, New Brunswick, January 27, 1886, Miss Lillie S. S. Robertson then becoming his wife. She is a daughter of Samuel B. Robertson and Ellen (Gibson) Robertson. She was born in Cambridge County, and attended school with her husband at Whites Cove. She is one of her parents' two children to reach mature years, her brother being Charles M. Robertson, of Whites Cove, New Brunswick. To Mr. and Mrs. Ferris have been born the following children: Arnold Douglas, of Sidney, Montana, undersheriff of Richland County; Carrie Ethel, who married Wilbert A. Brubaker and died in Terry October 4, 1918, the mother of three children, Albert, Harold and Jack; Ada Scott, who married Ralph E. Richardson, of Malta, and has two children, Bernadine and Hazel.

Arnold D. Ferris, a son of the well known pioneer, Joseph A. Ferris, was born at Medora, North Dakota, January 31, 1887, and he grew to years of maturity in his native town and received his educational training there, while later he attended the State University at Grand Forks. After completing the preparatory course of that institution he came to Montana, arriving here in the spring of 1909. While he was growing into manhood's estate he spent a portion of his time in his father's store in Medora, and also for a time was a cowboy on the range, but after coming to Sidney in 1909 he engaged in business with his father, who purchased the pioneer industry of Sidney and became the second merchant in the town. The father and son continued in business together until the enterprise was sold in 1914. Arnold D. Ferris then spent a year as a clerk in a clothing store in Sidney, subsequently had charge of the express and oil business of Augustus Vaux, was then appointed assistant postmaster under Burton S. Adams, and left that position to become undersheriff of Richland County under Sheriff Sullivan.

Mr. Ferris grew up under republican influences and cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Taft in 1908. He was elected one of the first aldermen of Sidney, became president of the Board of Aldermen, and at the death of the mayor he was appointed to fill the unexpired term in that office. He thus has the honor of serving on the first Board of Aldermen of Sidney and has in many ways played an important part in shaping its history and placing it on a firm foundation. He has passed all the chairs in Odd Fellowship and in Masonry, serving as master of Lower Yellowstone Lodge No. 90 for two years, and several times has been a member of the Masonic Grand Lodge, and has sat as a delegate for the Sidney Lodge of Odd Fellows in the Grand Lodge of the state.

Near Sidney, Montana, March 20, 1912, Mr. Ferris was married to Miss Marie Staffanson, who was born at Anaconda, Montana, September 6, 1888, a daughter of Ephraim and Elizabeth James Staffanson. In the early and formative days of this state the father came from Utah to Montana in an ox wagon and became a ranchman first in the Deer Lodge Valley, later, in 1907, casting in his lot with the farmers of the Yellowstone Valley at Sidney. He was born in Sweden, but came to the United States in childhood with his parents, and he grew to mature years in Iowa. From that state he went with the family to Utah, and about the time he reached manhood's estate he made his way to Montana. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Staffanson are: Addie, wife of Frank Finlayson, of Fairview, Montana; George, of Sidney; Marie, who became the wife of Mr. Ferris; Frank, of Sidney; Gwendolin, wife of Arthur Jorgenson, of Richland County, and Inez, the youngest of the children and a student in the Montana State Normal at Dillon. Two children have been born to bless the union of Mr. and Mrs. Ferris, Ethel and Arnold Douglas, Jr.

Howard G. Bennet. A resident of Great Falls since 1901, present county attorney of Cascade County, Howard G. Bennet has divided his time between his profession as a lawyer and several business and official connections.

Mr. Bennet was born at Port Jervis, Orange County, New York, February 23, 1875, and represents a very old and honored line of American ancestry. The Bennets were originally French Huguenots. They were connected with the earliest history of the French lace making industry. On account of religious persecution they left France, went to Holland, and thence to England. James Bennet came from England to America and settled in the valley of the Delaware River as early as 1668. Mr. Bennet's grandfather was James Bennet, a New Yorker. The parents of Howard G. Bennet were Galen and Elizabeth (Conkling) Bennet, both natives of Port Jervis, New York, where they were born in the year 1837. The father died at the age of seventy-five in 1912 and the mother in 1900. Elizabeth Conkling was a daughter of Dr. John Conkling, a New York state physician, who about 1818 made a prospecting tour through the then great West, and acquired some extensive real estate investments in Chicago and St. Louis. Galen Bennet was for many years a prominent business man at Port Jervis, New York, owning a flour mill, a saw mill and also a marble and granite business. He was distinguished by a love for fine driving horses. He was an Odd Fellow, a republican and a member of the Dutch Reformed Church.

Howard G. Bennett

Howard G. Bennet was the fourth in a family of five children, three of whom are still living. He acquired his early education in the public schools of Port Jervis and is a graduate of the University of New York with the class of 1896. In the same year he was admitted to the New York State Bar and engaged in a busy practice in his native town until 1901. In that year on coming to Great Falls he was connected with the Boston & Montana Smelter Company about four years. He was then appointed and served as chief deputy county assessor of Cascade County during the years 1905-06. On retiring from his official duties he took up general law practice, being a member of the firm Berry & Bennet of the City of Great Falls, serving for two years. In November, 1918, he was elected county attorney, and has given most of his time to the duties of that office since January 6, 1919. He is a member of the County and State Bar associations, and a republican voter. Mr. Bennet is affiliated with Rainbow Lodge No. 28, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Cataract Lodge No. 18, Knights of Pythias; Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks, and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He and his family are Congregationalists.

November 22, 1905, he married Miss Bessie Balstad, a native of Norway. They have one daughter, Elizabeth.

William E. Jones is a practicing attorney at the City of Harlowton, State of Montana. He was born November 11, 1884, in Butler County, Iowa, a few miles from the Town of Nashua in Chickasaw County. He is the son of Warren and Rachel Amanda Jones and was the youngest of a family of seven children.

At an early age he went with his parents to the Town of Nashua and was educated in the public schools at that place. Later he attended the State University of Iowa, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1908. After his graduation from the State University he served as an instructor in the high school at Cedar Falls, Iowa, for one year, and during the next two years was a member of the faculty at the State University of Iowa, occupying the chair of public speaking. In 1911 Mr. Jones resigned his position at the University of Iowa and entered the University of Chicago to complete his legal studies. In 1912 he was graduated from the law school of the University of Chicago with the degree of J. D. (juris doctor). After practicing a short time in the City of Chicago he moved to Harlowton, Montana, and formed a partnership with Robert N. Jones, under the firm name of Jones & Jones, which firm has existed ever since.

In November, 1916, he was elected to the Montana State Senate on the republican ticket, and while serving in that body was instrumental in introducing and passing the law which created the County of Wheatland.

On October 4, 1917, Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Frances M. Baxter, who is a native daughter of Montana and the daughter of E. C. Baxter, a rancher and banker of the City of Harlowton.

Mr. Jones is a member of the Wheatland County Bar Association and of the Montana State Bar Association. He is a member of the Acacia fraternity and of the Greek letter fraternity of Phi Delta Phi. He became a member of the Masonic Order in Bradford Lodge No. 129, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Nashua, Iowa, but upon taking up a residence in Montana he transferred the membership to Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Harlowton, Montana. During the year 1919 he was master of Masonic Lodge No. 69. Mr. Jones is also a member of Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons; Palestine Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Montana. He is also an active member in the Knights of Pythias at Harlowton and in Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Lewistown, Montana.

Sherburne Morse. Among the men of influence in Northern Montana who have the interest of their community at heart and who have led consistent lives, thereby gaining definite success along their chosen lines, is Sherburne Morse, who has long been regarded as one of our most progressive farmers, stock raisers and public spirited citizens. His well directed efforts in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his own business interests, and his sound judgment have brought to him prosperity, and today he enjoys the well earned esteem of all who know him.

Sherburne Morse was born in Bath, Maine, on April 11, 1870, and is descended from sterling old Yankee stock, his parents being Albion W. and Carrie (Sherburne) Morse. The father was a native of Sagadahoc County, Maine. They were the parents of four children, those besides the subject of this review being Rose Jane; Shirley Louise, the wife of Roy L. Estus, a ranchman in Teton County, Montana, and Bessie B., the wife of Oliver C. Durland, also a ranch owner in Teton County. Albion W. Morse was educated in the public schools of Sagadahoc County, Maine, and on attaining mature years he followed the vocations of his father, farming and shipbuilding. He was energetic and successful in business, having a large shipyard on the Kennebec River and a sawmill at Winnegant. Later he became a contractor, getting out large timbers for shipbuilding, and his death was the outcome of a cold which he caught while engaged in that work. Politically he was a republican and stood high in councils of his party, though never a seeker after the honors or emoluments of public office for himself. He was a man of fine personal qualities and was a leader in his community.

Sherburne Morse attended school at Pitch Pine Hills, Sagadahoc County, Maine, and Arkansas City, Kansas, he having removed to the latter place with his widowed mother soon after the death of his father. As soon as old enough to take up active work on his own account Mr. Morse went to Lynn, Massachusetts, and entered the expert department of the General Electric Company as a student, taking a full course in the business and becoming an expert in its various phases. In that capacity he became a traveling representative of the company in the Eastern states. In the fall of 1890 Mr. Morse returned to Arkansas City, Kansas, and engaged in the cattle business in that state, later going to Oklahoma, where he was employed as a cowboy, riding the ranges for an uncle, J. H. Sherburne, whose business was known as the X-H-X Cattle Company, their range being on the Salt Fork and Arkansas River. In the spring of 1897 Mr. Morse came to Browning, Teton County, Montana, and entered the employ of another uncle, Joseph H. Sherburne Morse, to look after the latter's cattle and horses. In 1905 he engaged in the cattle and horse business for himself, meeting with satisfactory success. In 1909 he filed on a homestead in Teton County, near Bynum, where he has since resided and which he has developed into one of the best farms in that part of the state. He is now the owner of 1,800 acres of land, a part of which he devotes to the raising of grain and hay, and a part is reserved for grazing land for his live stock. Mr. Morse has given considerable attention to the raising, buying and selling of cattle and horses, of which he has handled enormous numbers. Most of his cattle are shipped to the Chicago market, while his horses go to St. Louis, North and South Dakota, Omaha, Nebraska and to Canada. He breeds White Face and Shorthorn cattle, selling many of these animals to other ranchmen, and now has on hand between 200 and 300 head of cattle, having shipped 950 head of cattle during 1919. During the years 1907-8-9 Mr. Morse shipped to horse men in Ward County, North Dakota, 5,200 head of horses. He is undoubtedly today the best known horse buyer in the Northwest, and during the recent World war he furnished about 1,500 head of horses to the governments of the United States, France and England.

On March 15, 1916, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, Mr. Morse was married to Minnebelle Wiard, who was born and reared in Louisville, Kentucky, and to them have been born two children, Sherburne, Jr., and Caroline Louise.

Politically Mr. Morse has given his support to the republican party and has taken a commendable interest in public affairs, though not in any sense a seeker after public office. Fraternally he is a member of Conrad Lodge No. 80, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and his religious connection is with the Episcopal Church. He possesses a strong and vigorous personality and all who come within range of his influence are profuse in their praise of his admirable qualities. He is a most companionable gentleman and has a host of warm and admiring friends throughout Northern Montana.

Henry S. Kline was born in Amsterdam, New York, on May 6, 1871, and is the son of Howard and Phoebe R. (Birch) Kline. Both of these parents were also natives of New York State, the father, born in 1844, having died in 1908, at the age of sixty-four years. The mother, who was born in 1846, is still living. The subject of this sketch is their only child. Howard Kline was a merchant during a portion of his active life and retired from active business pursuits about two years prior to his death. Politically he was an earnest supporter of the democratic party, while religiously he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Henry S. King secured his elementary education in the public schools of Amsterdam, afterward attending the Amsterdam Academy, the Union Classical Institute and Union College, graduating at the last-named institution with the class of 1893. He then read law with Judge C. S. Nisbet and Louis H. Reynolds at Amsterdam, and in 1893 he was admitted to the New York State bar. He entered upon the practice of his profession at Amsterdam, but shortly afterward he moved to North Dakota, locating first at Fessenden, where he remained about eighteen months, followed by a location for some years at Anamoose, North Dakota. In January, 1911, Mr. Kline came to Havre and at once resumed the practice of his profession. During the intervening years to the present time he has handled a large share of the legal business before the local court, and has been employed in the courts of adjoining counties. By a straightforward, honorable course he has built up a large and lucrative legal business and financially has been successful to a gratifying degree. In 1902, while a resident of McHenry County, North Dakota, Mr. Kline was elected judge of the County Court and was re-elected in 1904 and 1906, thus serving six years. He is president and attorney for the Havre National Bank and is also interested in other local business enterprises. He has been a consistent "booster" for Northern Montana, and has been a firm believer in this section of the country. He gives his active support to every movement having for its object the advancement of the best interests of the community.

Politically Mr. Kline is an earnest supporter of the republican party, while fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order, in which he has attained to the degree of a Knight Templar, and is also a member of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On August 21, 1906, Mr. Kline was married to Elizabeth M. Payne, who was born at Towanda, Pennsylvania, and to them has been born a daughter, Eleanor Ruth. Mr. Kline to a notable degree enjoys the confidence and good will of his fellow citizens.

Edward T. Broadwater. A stock of merchandise under a tent was the first visible evidence of commercial activity in the City of Havre. One of the proprietors of that store was Edward T. Broadwater, who had been in Montana for nine years prior to coming to Havre, and whose interests as a merchant, stockman and banker have made him one of the prominent figures in Northern Montana.

Mr. Broadwater was born at Memphis in Scotland County, Missouri, November 22, 1861, son of Thomas J. and Martha A. (Smoot) Broadwater. His father was a native of Virginia, and at the age of nine years went to Missouri with his sister, Mrs. Ann M. Elgin, who lived at St. Charles, where he finished his education. In 1849 he and another young man from that community started overland for California with a mule team, joining a caravan that crossed the plains. He was absent about two years, and had many of the experiences in the gold fields that have been subject for history and romance.

He returned to the East by way of the Isthmus of Panama and New York City, and thence back to St. Louis. His chief business was as an architect and building contractor, and in 1859 he moved to Memphis, Missouri, where he continued his profession and business under the name of Legg & Broadwater. This firm did a business over practically the entire State of Missouri. One of their contracts was the construction of the new wings of the State Capitol at Jefferson City. Thomas J. Broadwater after he retired from business frequently visited his son at Fort Assiniboine, and took great pleasure in hunting big game and fishing in the territory. While so much of his life's energies were expressed in practical action, he was fond of books and literature, and composed some very creditable verse. He was a democrat but had no thought of public office. He died at Memphis, Missouri, February 28, 1908, aged eghty-three years, five months and seventeen days. His widow, who was born in Scotland County March 26, 1841, is still living at the old Missouri homestead.

Edward T. Broadwater earned his first money off-bearing brick in a brick yard at 75 cents a day, boarding himself. He was only twelve years of age when he performed that strenuous toil. He did this not out of necessity, but from the impulse of a restless, independent spirit that has made him a constant worker regardless of his prosperity measured in terms of money. He acquired a good education in the schools of his native town, and at the age of fifteen began clerking in a clothing, boot and shoe store there. He continued in that work for five years, and it gave him a detailed knowledge of mercantile transactions that served him well after he came to Montana.

Mr. Broadwater left St. Louis helping to take a bunch of horses to St. Paul, went from that city to Bismarck, North Dakota, and came up the Missouri River to Coal Banks, as far as the boat could go. He reached Fort Assiniboine in May, 1882, and was soon employed as a clerk in the post trading store. He was with the Fort Assiniboine business ten years, four years as clerk and six years as bookkeeper.

In the spring of 1891 Mr. Broadwater, associated with Simon Pepin, introduced their stock of goods to the present site of Havre and thus established the business long conducted by the Broadwater-Pepin Company. Their tent store was on ground subsequently occupied by the Great Northern Railway yards, and when the railway right of way was secured they made arrangements to surrender their land on condition that the railway company should make Havre a division point. That arrangement has been one of the biggest influences in the upbuilding of the City of Havre. The store building erected by the firm and Mr. Broadwater's private residence were the first permanent buildings on the town site. The Broadwater-Pepin Company did much more than a local business. They supplied commodities over a large area of Northern Montana, having a branch store on the Blackfoot-Indian Reservation and another at Harlem, Montana.

Since then Mr. Broadwater has been chiefly engaged in ranching and banking, and has had cattle and landed interests in Montana since 1891. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Havre in 1903, and remained a director when the bank was merged in 1907 with the Security State Bank. In 1914 he was elected president of this institution, and most of his business hours are spent in the bank's offices. He is a democrat, but like his father, without political aspirations, though he served four years as postmaster at Havre during Cleveland's administration and for four years was an alderman of the city. He is affiliated with the Elks.

October 22, 1890, a few months before he came to Havre, Mr. Broadwater married Miss Sadie Moon, a native of Cape Girardeau, Missouri, and daughter of Dr. Henry B. Moon, a dentist. Her brother was Maj. H. G. Moon, a regular army officer, who was wounded at the capture of Santiago during the Cuban war, and for a number of years was stationed at old Fort Assiniboine. Mr. and Mrs. Broadwater have two daughters, Marian Louise and Kathlyn E., the latter a member of the junior class of the Montana State University. Marian, who also finished her education in the State University of Minnesota, is the wife of Capt. Max P. Kuhr. Captain Kuhr at the beginning of the war with Germany entered the Officers Training Camp at Camp Lewis, was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Heavy Artillery, and during his service in France was promoted to captain.

COMMODORE B. ROBERTS has been a prominent lumber manufacturer and banker in Montana for over fifteen years. He has recently established his home at Great Falls, where he is president and principal owner of the Cascade Bank. He is a former state senator from Lincoln County, where he had extensive timber interests.

Mr. Roberts was born in Fulton County, Indiana, on the farm of his grandfather, December 9, 1875, a son of George W. and Lovina (Eley) Roberts, being the oldest of their four children, three of whom are still living. His father was born in Logan County, Ohio, and his mother in Knox County, Ohio, both in 1849. The mother died in 1918. George W. Roberts, who is still living, is a farmer and carpenter and followed both occupations in Ohio and Indiana. From 1884 to 1888 he was in the general merchandise business at Tippecanoe, Indiana, and during that period was postmaster under Cleveland's first administration. Since then he has given his chief time and attention to farming and stock raising. He is a democrat in politics.

Commodore B. Roberts acquired his early education in the public schools of Knox, Indiana, and earned his first money driving a grocery wagon at fifty cents a day. Later he was chief clerk in W. A. Pierson's grocery store at Knox, and left that position to go on the road as a traveling salesman for G. E. Bursley & Company, a wholesale grocery house of Fort Wayne. He was in the restaurant business at Knox for some time, and afterwards went to Chicago and engaged in the grocery business with J. W. Swartzell. On selling out to his partner he became chief clerk in the Chicago yards of the Nickel Plate Railway. For a time he was floorwalker in a Chicago department store, but was called from that position to resume his former responsibilities with the Nickel Plate Railway Company.

This is a brief survey of his business experience prior to coming to Montana in March, 1902. At Kalispell Mr. Roberts was engaged in the abstract, farm loan and general insurance business until 1909. He sold his business and took active charge of the logging of a tract of 2,300 acres of timber in which he was interested at Warland, Montana. Since 1906 Mr. Roberts has been interested in a valuable tract of timber land at Fortine, Montana, where he built a sawmill, constructed a logging railroad between the timber and his mill, and was busily engaged in manufacturing lumber there until November 1, 1917. In the meantime he and D. R. Peeler organized the Bank of Commerce at Kalispell, Mr. Roberts being vice president. He also organized the Security State Bank at Devon, Montana, and was its president. He bought the Cascade Bank at Great Falls on November 15, 1917, and has moved his residence to Great Falls and gives much of his time to his duties as president of the bank. He has also organized a chain of country banks.

Mr. Roberts represented Lincoln County in the State Senate from 1915 to 1919. He is a member of all the Masonic bodies, including the Scottish Rite Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is treasurer of Great Falls Lodge of Perfection. He is also a member of the Great Falls Lodge of Elks and is a past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias. Politically Mr. Roberts is a republican.

August 30, 1903, he married Miss Annis Elliott, a native of England. They have two children, Elliott J. and Gladys L.

CHARLES B. ELWELL. The legal profession in Hill County, Montana, has an able representative in the person of Charles B. Elwell of Havre, one of the leaders of the younger members of the bar, whose success since locating here has won him many warm friends and admirers in the city and country. In the broad light which things of good report ever invite, the name and character of Mr. Elwell stand revealed and secure, and though of modest demeanor his career has been signally honorable and useful. He is recognzed as a man of strong mentality and as one who honors the community by his residence there, so that there is peculiar consistency in incorporating in a work of this kind a review of his life and labors.

Charles B. Elwell was born in New Orleans, Louisiana, on December 28, 1888, and is the youngest of the six children, all of whom are now living, born to John B. and Hannah (Day) Elwell. John B. Elwell was born in Salem, Massachusetts, and is still living, at the age of sixty-eight years, and his wife, who was born at Beverly, Massachusetts, is living at the age of sixty-four years. The father was reared and educated at Salem, and later engaged in the railroad business, becoming identified eventually with the East Louisiana Railway, first as master mechanic but eventually became superintendent of the road, which position he held for some years. He then returned to Salem, Massachusetts, and engaged in contracting and building up to 1908, when he retired from active participation in business. Politically he is a republican, while his fraternal relations are with the Knights of Pythias.

Charles B. Elwell pursued his elemental studies in the public schools of New Orleans, Louisiana, and Salem, Massachusetts, and then, having determined to make the practice of law his life work, he entered the law department of Georgetown University, where he was graduated with the class of 1912. He was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia in 1912, and in that same year was also admitted to the bar of Massachusetts. In 1913 Mr. Elwell came to Montana, was admitted to the bar and at once located at Havre, where he has ever since been identified with not only the legal profession, but also with many other phases of the community life. On January 1, 1915, he entered into a law partnership with Henry S. Kline, under the firm name of Kline & Elwell, and they make one of the strongest and most successful law firms of this section of the state. In 1915 Mr. Elwell was appointed United States commissioner, which position he is still filling.

During the World war Mr. Elwell enlisted in the service of his country, being assigned to the artillery branch, in which he received a commission as second lieutenant in November, 1918. He was mustered out on December 5, 1918, at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, and at once returned to his professional duties.

Politically Mr. Elwell is a stanch republican, while fraternally he is a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 28th day of August, 1913, Mr. Elwell was united in marriage with Harriett E. Jarvis, who was born in Hancock County, Tennessee. Mr. Elwell is essentially a man among men, moving as one who commands respect by innate force as well as by superior ability. As a citizen he is public spirited and enterprising; as a friend and neighbor he combines the qualities of head and heart that win confidence and command respect, so that in all things worth while he stands as a representative citizen of his community.

GEORGE W. GLASS received a good practical education in the public schools of Canada, and remained at home until after the family moved to North Dakota. There his first money was earned in 1880, as the driver of an ox team, for which he received $20 per month. Later he went to St. Paul, Minnesota, where for eight years he was employed in a wholesale saddlery and hardware store. In 1909 he came to Montana, engaging in the lumber business at Dunkirk, in which he met with a gratifying degree of success. In the meantime he took a leading part in the organization of Hill County and on March 29, 1912, he was appointed clerk of the court, being regularly elected to the office in the following November. So eminently satisfactory was his discharge of his official duties that in November, 1916, he was elected to succeed himself, and is thus the present incumbent of that office. He thoroughly understands every detail of the county official business and is courteous and obliging to all who have business to transact in his office, being a firm believer in the principle that "public office is a public trust." Therefore one does not have to seek far for the explanation of his popularity in that community.

On June 18, 1889, Mr. Glass was married to Margaret McCabe, who was born in Canada, and to them has been born one son, Walter L. The latter secured his education in the public schools of St. Paul, Minnesota. In June, 1916, he enlisted in a New York cavalry regiment, with which he spent one year on the Mexican border. In March, 1917, he joined the One Hundred Sixth Machine Gun Company, Twenty-seventh Division of New York National Guard, in which he received a commission as first lieutenant, later being promoted to a captaincy. The division was mustered into the United States service and sent to France, where they took part in many of the sanguinary and hotly contested battles in which the Americans were engaged. Returning to the home country, he was mustered out at Camp Mills in May, 1919. On May 24, 1919, he was married to Helena Sanger at Ogdensburg, New York.

Politically Mr. Glass is an earnest supporter of the republican party, and fraternally he is a member of St. Thomas Lodge No. 30, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at St. Thomas, North Dakota, and Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has achieved a splendid record in public affairs and is eminently deserving of the confidence and good will which are his, for he is reliable, energetic and accommodating, and has given the people of his county the best service of which he is capable.

EDWARD F. BURKE. The railroad engineer is a trained man in a dangerous profession. As he covers miles of country with his strong hand on the throttle of his engine, through night and storm, perhaps he alone is the only one who ever really knows the heroic acts he sometimes performs in great emergencies, or how much the skilled engineer deserves what he is sometimes called, the every day hero. The great railway systems select their engineers for qualities not every man possesses, then train him and trust him, and what a fine body of men they are. One of the well known engineers of the Great Northern Railway in Montana is Edward F. Burke, who is an important citizen of Havre.

Edward F. Burke was born at Windsor Mills, Canada, December 29, 1862. His parents were Martin and Sabina (McLaughlin) Burke. The father was born at Little Falls, New York, and died in 1868. The mother was born in Ireland and survived until 1917. Their marriage took place at Bellows Falls, Vermont, and they had five children born to them, three of these surviving.

Edward F. Burke was the third born in his parents' family and was six years old when his father died. He was taken to Wakefield, Massachusetts, and there attended the public schools and later went to work in a mill. When nineteen years old he came West, and at Waseca, Minnesota, went to work for the Winona & St. Peter Railway Company, a branch that is now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. He began at the bottom as a wiper on the engine during construction work, and later became fireman, in which position he had much experience. He was fireman at Fergus Falls, Minnesota, during the winter of 1881-2 on the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad, then came to the Great Northern in the same capacity. In 1884 he was promoted to engineer, and in 1887 came with the Great Northern to Great Falls, Montana, and worked as freight engineer on this line from then until 1905, when he became passenger engineer on the division between Glasgow and Havre. Mr. Burke had the unpleasant experience of being engineer on the first train to be held up in Montana which occurred near Malta in 1892. He now handles the fast mail train between Havre and Wolf Point. Mr. Burke has a very wide acquaintance that is not confined to railroad men. He maintains his home at Havre and is highly esteemed here as a citizen, so much so, indeed, that he was elected mayor on the democratic ticket and gave the city an admirable administration, at all times standing for an honest and economical use of the public funds in the way of public improvements and other enterprises worthy of the city.

On April 17, 1893, Mr. Burke was married to Miss Margaret McGinn, who was born at Owatonna, Minnesota, and they have the following children: Alice, Edna, Genevieve, Edmund, Geraldine, Joseph and Evelyn. Mr. Burke is a loyal member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. His comfortable and attractive home is at 338 Third Street, Havre, Montana.

Peter Wallinder. After twenty-seven continuous years in the employ of the Great Northern Railroad, Peter Wallinder, of Havre, is now reaping the reward of faithful service and is air brake supervisor. He is also a man of importance in his community, which he has loyally and effectively served as alderman for a number of years, and is recognized as one of the most representative men of Swedish birth in this part of the state. Mr. Wallinder was born in Sweden March 29, 1873, a son of John and Christina (Peterson) Wallinder. John Wallinder was a farmer by occupation and spent his life in Sweden, where he died in 1890, at the age of fifty-four years. His widow survives him and makes her home in Sweden, never having left it. They had seven children, of whom five are still living, Mr. Wallinder being the sixth in order of birth.

Until he was nineteen years of age Peter Wallinder remained in his native land, but then left it for the United States, and upon his arrival in this country came West to Devil's Lake, North Dakota, reaching that region in the spring of 1892. There he completed his educational training which had been carried on in his native land. His first earnings in his new home were acquired working with a threshing outfit at $2 a day. After completing the season's work Mr. Wallinder entered the employ of the Great Northern Railroad as foreman of a drilling machine gang, and for about two years was engaged in drilling wells for the railroad. At the expiration of that time Mr. Wallinder began learning the machinist trade at Devil's Lake and other points, and was later transferred to Havre and later to what is now Gilford as leading machinist at the gravel pit. Subsequently he was made foreman of the Havre Roundhouse, which position he held for two years or until he resigned to resume work for the road as machinist. Again he was made foreman of the roundhouse at Havre, and again he resigned the position to re-enter upon work as a machinist, which he preferred, and he is now air brake supervisor, and one of the most valuable men in the employ of the road.

In 1902 Mr. Wallinder revisited his old home in Sweden, and on September 14, 1903, was united there in marriage with Louisa Bystrom, a native of Sweden. Mr. and Mrs. Wallinder have five children, namely: Harold T., Mabel, William, Stewart and Peter, Jr. Mr. Wallinder belongs to Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, which he is now serving for the second term as master; Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons, of which he is past high priest; and the International Association of Machinists, Havre Lodge No. 499. In politics Mr. Wallinder is a republican, and in 1909 was elected on his party ticket as a member of the Havre City Council from the Third Ward to succeed himself, he having been appointed to that office in 1907, and he has been successively re-elected ever since. A man of unusual ability, Mr. Wallinder has devoted himself to his calling and the upbuilding of his community, and his record as a public official is as stainless and admirable as that which he has made with the railroad company.

J. Clarence Manix. The people of Augusta and its vicinity are supplied with a fine and up-to-date stock of merchandise by the efficient firm of Manix & Vaughn, the leading merchants of Lewis and Clark County. The birth of J. Clarence Manix occurred at Augusta, Montana, on March 16, 1888, and he is a son of Philip A. Manix, born at Hartford, Connecticut, in 1845. Reared and educated in his native city, P. A. Manix came to Fort Shaw, Cascade County, Montana, as a soldier in the '60s, and after being mustered out of the service, came to the Sun River country. Having secured the contract for furnishing beef to the soldiers at Fort Shaw, he selected Augusta, or rather its present site, for he was the first to locate in this region, and founded the town. He built the first general store here and later branched out into other lines of business, invested in ranch property and handled stock, in short became a regular, all round good business man of his period and locality. From the organization of the republican party until his death, which occurred at Augusta in 1898, he supported its principles and candidates, but he never desired office for himself. The Roman Catholic Church had in him a devout member.

P. A. Manix married Margaret Gillogly, who was born at Bangor, Maine, and she survives him and makes her home at Augusta, Montana. Their children were as follows: Mabel, who married Anthony Pings, a dealer in agricultural implements, lives at Augusta; J. Clarence, who was the second in order of birth; John, who is a rancher of Augusta; Matilda, who married W. E. McManus, a rancher of Augusta; Rosetta, who married Austin Christian, a rancher of Augusta; Ursula, who is not married, is assistant cashier of the Peoples Bank of Augusta; and Helen, who is assisting her brother, J. Clarence, in his store. After the death of her first husband Mrs. P. A. Manix was married to J. C. Furman, who was a hotel proprietor and ranchman, and died at Augusta in September, 1919, leaving no issue. The Manix family, which has been in America for some generations, originated in Ireland.

J. Clarence Manix grew up at Augusta, where he attended school, and later entered the school at Saint Peter's Mission, which is a preparatory school, and when fitted for it took a commercial course at Gonzaga College at Spokane, Washington. In September, 1906, he returned to Augusta, and spent two years in ranching, and then entered the mercantile establishment of J. F. Kendrick, where he learned the business, and remained until 1912. In that year he and W. D. Vaughn took over this store and still maintain their partnership, having the leading general mercantile establishment in a wide territory, and drawing their trade from a radius of twenty miles. Their store is located on Main Street and their stock, which is fresh and timely, is admirably displayed and offered at prices as low as are consistent with the quality and market quotations. Mr. Manix owns a modern residence on Laura Street. He is a strong republican, and is local central committeeman. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. He belongs to Helena Council No. 884, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been made a Third Degree Knight.

On November 14, 1912, Mr. Manix was married at Helena, Montana, to Miss Helen Nilan, a daughter of J. M. and Margaret (Owens) Nilan, resident of 613 Hoback Street, Helena, where Mr. Nilan has valuable mining interests. Mrs. Manix was graduated from Saint Vincent's Academy, Helena. Mr. and Mrs. Manix became the parents of the following children: Walter James, who was born on February 16, 1914; Joseph, who was born on February 9, 1916; and Marie, who was born in May, 1919. Mr. Manix is a man of strong personality and has captured the confidence of all of his business associates. He possesses a strong and well-balanced mind, a shrewd business sense, and his well-directed efforts result in added prosperity not only to himself but his community as well, for he uses these characteristics for the carrying out of civic plans as well as in the conduct of his store, and he is naturally numbered among the distinctly worthwhile citizens of Augusta and Lewis and Clark County.

Irving W. Church is a prominent Great Falls lawyer. He has won promotion at every step in his career, his ambition and industry carrying him through the period while he was working to pay his expenses in law school.

Mr. Church was born on his father's farm in Waukesha County, Wisconsin, August 23, 1885, a son of George W. and Mary Jane (Seabold) Church, being the third in their family of four children. His father was a farmer in Waukesha County until 1895, when he moved to Milwaukee, and after that was in the employ of the E. P. Allis Company, one of the leading industries of Milwaukee, until 1903. He is a republican in politics.

Irving W. Church acquired his literary education in Lawrence College at Appleton, Wisconsin, and the University of Chicago, and graduated with the class of 1911 from the Columbia Law College. He paid his first visit to Montana in 1905, locating at Butte, where he was employed by the Street Railway Company as a motorman every summer from 1905 to 1911. His salary as a motorman went far toward defraying his expenses in law school. In 1901, at the age of sixteen, he also taught a term of school at North Lake, Wisconsin. During the winters of 1906, 1907 and 1908 he taught in the Wentworth Military Academy at Lexington, Missouri.

In September, 1911, Mr. Church began practice at Great Falls, Montana, as an associate of William G. Downing. On the death of Mr. Downing in 1912 he succeeded him as an attorney for the Great Falls National Bank and has since built up a large general practice of his own. Mr. Church is a member of the Cascade County and the State Bar associations is president of the Young Men's Christian Association of Great Falls, and is affiliated with Euclid Lodge No. 58, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks. He is a member of the Rotary Club and Commercial Club at Great Falls, is a republican in politics and a member of the Congregational Church.

August 23, 1913, Mr. Church married Miss Gertrude Longeway, daughter of Dr. Albert F. and Gertrude Longeway of Great Falls. Mrs. Church died February 20, 1915, leaving one son, Albert L.

John Alfred Nelson was for many years a prominent railway engineer, serving faithfully until he lost his life in service. Mrs. Nelson is an honored resident of Havre, Montana, with home at 400 Third Avenue.

The late Mr. Nelson was born in Sweden, June 24, 1866, son of John and Marie Nelson, being the third of their six children, three sons and three daughters. John Alfred Nelson was four years of age when his parents came to this country and located at Indianapolis. His father was a mason by trade, but for a number of years engaged in farming. John Alfred Nelson acquired a public school education in Minnesota, and as a boy went to work in the shops of the Great Northern Railway at Fergus Falls. Later he was promoted to fireman and in 1892 achieved his ambition in a post as locomotive engineer. He was one of the most efficient engineers in the service of the Great Northern. Strangely enough he lost his life not at his post of duty but while taking his meal in a dining car of the Great Northern. He died as a result of injuries on August 14, 1910.

During his residence at Havre Mr. Nelson was an honored member of Havre Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and also of Havre Chapter No. 30 of the Eastern Star. He was buried with Masonic honors. Mrs. Nelson was the first worthy patron of Havre Chapter, and is now in her tenth consecutive year as secretary of that chapter and is known as the chapter's mother.

Mrs. Nelson's maiden name was Franc Eleanor Curtis. They were married at Fergus Falls, Minnesota, July 4, 1893. Mrs. Nelson was born at Owatonna, Minnesota, only child of Frank and Marie (Stevens) Curtis. Her father was born in the State of Maine, April 30, 1843, and died May 16, 1882. Her mother was born at Beloit, Wisconsin, February 3, 1843, and died September 17, 1904. Her father was educated in the schools of Maine and when a young man went to the State of Minnesota. For many years he traveled as representative for a New York wholesale grocery house. He was a prominent Mason and in politics a republican. In 1875 Mrs. Nelson's parents removed to Santa Rosa, California, where she attended grammar school. In 1881 the family returned to Minnesota and located at Winona, where she continued her education. In 1883 Mrs. Nelson began teaching in Minnesota, and she taught occasional terms throughout the eight years while she was attending the State Normal School at Winona, from which she graduated with the class of 1891.

Mrs. Nelson is the mother of three splendid sons, Curtis Alfred, Robert Edward and Earl John. Curtis and Robert and now engaged in the transfer business under the firm name of Nelson Brothers at Havre. The son Earl is still carrying his studies in high school. Curtis Alfred volunteered and entered the officers' training camp early in 1917, being at that time a student in the Montana State College at Bozeman. He was discharged on account of disability. He is a member of Havre Lodge, No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of the Order of Eastern Star, Chapter No. 30. Robert Edward Nelson enlisted in November, 1917, becoming a member of the Four Hundred Eighty-fourth Aerial Squadron. He was on duty at Spokane, Washington, later at The Presidio in California, at Kelley Field, Texas, and spent a year in France, part of the time on front line duty. He received his honorable discharge in February, 1919. He is an Elk.

Simon J. Tracht. The gentleman whose name forms the caption to this sketch, one of the most successful and best known farmers of Hill County and one of the county's most representative citizens, was not favored by inherited wealth or the assistance of influential friends, but in spite of this, by perseverance, industry and a wise economy, he has attained a comfortable station in life. His career is one that should encourage others to press on to greater achievements. When he came to Hill County he set to work to overcome all obstacles that might lie in his path to success, and the comfortable competency and the high standing which he now enjoys is the result. Earnest perseverance, careful management and a willingness to work even in the face of obstacles—these are the elements which brought him prosperity, and while he has labored for his own advancement he has at the same time ever been vigilant in his efforts to forward the general efforts of the community.

Simon J. Tracht was born in Gasconade County, Missouri, on May 28, 1878, his parents being Simon and Florentine (Wieman) Tracht, both of whom were natives of Germany. The father died in 1878, about three months prior to the birth of his son, the subject of this sketch. His widow survived him many years, her death occurring on August 13, 1914. The subject is the youngest of nine children born to these parents, all of whom are living. Simon Tracht left his home in the fatherland in young manhood and came to the United States. His first location here was in Gasconade County, Missouri, of which he was a pioneer settler, and there he became of great service to the settlers in the capacity of a flour miller, which trade he had learned in Germany. Later he turned his attention to farming and also to some extent handled cattle and hogs. Politically he gave his support to the republican party.

Simon J. Tracht was reared on his father's farm and early learned the meaning of toil, and especially the kind of toil which was characteristic of pioneer farms in some parts of Missouri. He secured a good practical education in the schools of his native county. His first independent work was as a harvest hand at various places in Missouri, for which he received $10.00 a month. He followed that work for two years, and then moved to Nebraska, where for a time he was employed as a farm hand. He also worked as a clerk in a general mercantile store at Lorton, that state, for about five and a half years. He then went to Winside, Nebraska, where he spent about a year as a clerk in a general store, and then engaged in the mercantile business on his own account at Carroll, Nebraska, under the firm name of Bredemeyer & Tracht. They continued that business for about two years, at the end of which time Mr. Tracht moved to Kenmear, North Dakota, where, under the style of the Boston Store, he sold gentlemen's furnishings and kindred lines for about three months, at the end of which time he traded his mercantile interest for land, and then for about two years was employed in a department store. In December, 1909, Mr. Tracht came to what was then Chouteau County, Montana, and located on a homestead, to the operation of which he gave his close attention until 1919, when he entered upon the duties of the office of county treasurer, to which he had been elected and in which position he is now serving.

On the 13th of October, 1908, Mr. Tracht was married to Emma G. Genser, a native of Winona County, Minnesota, and to them has been born a son, Howard.

Politically Mr. Tracht has been a life-long supporter of the republican party and has contributed his active personal efforts to its success. As referred to above, on November 5, 1918, he was elected to the office of county treasurer of Hill County, entering the office on March 4, 1919. Mr. Tracht's honorable and successful career has not been a path of roses, for he has fought against and conquered many adverse conditions which would have utterly discouraged one of less sterling mettle. He has acted well his part in life and enjoys to a marked degree the confidence and good will of all who know him.

William B. Pyper has had many interesting associations with the commercial and public life of Montana, covering a period of thirty years. For over twenty years his home has been at Havre, where continuously for sixteen years he has capably sustained the burdens and responsibilities of public office.

Mr. Pyper was born at Oakwood, Ontario, Canada, August 6, 1867, son of George A. and Edith C. (Ball) Pyper. His father was born in Scotland in 1820, came to Canada at the age of thirteen on a sailing vessel, and while his early life was beset by struggles and disadvantages, and his first employment was as a humble clerk in a grocery store. he achieved a high position among the successful merchants of Toronto, where for many years he was in the wholesale and retail hardware business. He finally retired from business and died August 14, 1894. His wife was born at Niagara, on the Canadian side, November 7, 1833. She was of Loyalist stock, and her ancestry was traced back to Holland and some of the earliest communities planted in the American colony.

William B. Pyper, who was the second in a family of three children, had the advantages of the public schools of Woodstock, Ontario, to the age of fourteen, and after that chose to be dependent entirely upon his own resources. For four years he served an apprenticeship in the drug business at Woodstock, and it was his knowledge of the drug business that secured for him his first opportunities in the northwest. On March 4, 1889, the day Benjamin Harrison was inaugurated president, he left Canada for Chicago, went on the St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was employed in a drug store about five months, and on the 26th of September of the same year arrived in Great Falls, Montana. The following year he was manager of the drug department of Churchill & Webster at Great Falls, then for two years was employed as a druggist at Missoula, and for four years engaged in business for himself at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. After that he worked for various periods at Seattle, Winnipeg, Grand Forks, North Dakota, and Butte, and on January 12, 1899, came to Havre, where he took charge of the drug business of A. J. Broadwater and H. W. Stringfellow. In January, 1902, he established a business of his own but sold it in 1904 when he was appointed United States commissioner by Judge Knowles. Since then practically all his time and energies have been devoted to public affairs, though he has also some interest in ranching.

Mr. Pyper served as United States commissioner ten years. In April, 1904, he was elected city magistrate of Havre, in November of the same year was elected justice of the peace, and has performed the duties of those offices uninterruptedly to the present. In 1918 he was made superintendent of the United States Employment Service at Havre, and was a vigilant and zealous worker in behalf of the Government during the war. He has served as secretary of the Havre Industrial Association and the Chamber of Commerce. In 1902 he was county coroner of Hill County. Mr. Pyper for many years has been one of the most influential men in the republican party in his section of the state. For five years he was chairman of the County Central Committee, and has been present in many county and state conventions of the party. Mr. Pyper took his first degrees in Masonry at Woodstock, Ontario, February 5, 1899, later was a member of Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Great Falls, and became a charter member of Havre Lodge No. 55, being honored as its first master. He was elected treasurer of the lodge in 1902, and has served in that post consecutively. He was the first member of Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons, has been treasurer of the chapter since 1915, and in 1907 was elected grand patron of the Order of Eastern Star of Montana. He is also affiliated with Havre Lodge No. 1201 of the Elks.

July 8, 1908, Mr. Pyper married Miss Mary R. Sanderson, daughter of George T. Sanderson of Havre. Mrs. Pyper was born in Canada. Five children have been born in their home, Edith, Georgiana, Margaret, William B., Jr., and Virginia.

JOHN H. DEVINE. In such men as John H. Devine, clerk and recorder of Hill County, Montana, there is peculiar satisfaction in offering their life histories —justification for the compilation of works of this character—not that their lives have been such as to gain them particularly wide notoriety or the admiring plaudits of men, but that they have been true to the trusts reposed in them and have shown such attributes of character as entitle them to the regard of all.

John H. Devine was born in Washtenaw County, Michigan, on January 25, 1856, and is the son of John and Mary (Finnegan) Devine. The father was born in Albany, New York, and died in 1884, in the sixtieth year of his age, while his wife, who was a native of Michigan, died at the age of seventy-four years. The subject of this sketch was the second child in order of birth of the ten children born to their union, nine of whom are still living. John Devine left his native state in 1832 and located in Michigan, where his first years were spent in farming. Later he engaged in the stock business, buying stock through his section of the country and shipping it to Detroit and Buffalo. In politics he was an active democrat, while in religion he was a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

The subject of this sketch was educated in the public schools of Michigan, attending the grade schools of Webster Township, Washtenaw County, and the high school at Ann Arbor. His boyhood days were spent on the home farm and for a while he worked for an uncle, John Finnegan, in a foundry, for which he received his board, this being during his attendance at the Ann Arbor High School. When he was eighteen years of age Mr. Devine engaged in the agricultural implement business in partnership with his father at Dexter, Michigan. In 1884 he located at Devil's Lake, North Dakota, where for five years he was also engaged in the agricultural implement business. He then returned to St. Paul, Minnesota, where for three years he was employed as a bookkeeper, followed by seventeen years on the road as a traveling salesman in various commercial lines. In 1910 Mr. Devine came to Montana and in April of that year he located on a homestead two miles south of Lothair in Hill County. He devoted himself to the operation of this place until February 28, 1912, when for a short time he served by appointment as county clerk and recorder. In November of that year he was elected to the office, and so eminently satisfactory has been his discharge of the duties of his joint office that he was re-elected in 1914, 1916 and 1918, being the present incumbent of the office. The joint office of clerk and recorder is of great importance, and the people of Hill County chose wisely when they put Mr. Devine into the office and, knowing a good man when they had him, they have insisted on his retaining the office.

Politically Mr. Devine has always been an ardent supporter of the democratic party and has worked earnestly for its success. During the conscription period of the recent World war, Mr. Devine rendered efficient and appreciated service as secretary of the draft board.

On February 18, 1878, Mr. Devine was married to Katherine L. Denn, who was born in Dexter, Michigan, and to them have been born three children, namely: Francis H.; John L., who is a successful physician and surgeon at Minot, North Dakota; and Arthur J., who died in January, 1889, when five years of age. Mr. Devine's life has been one replete with duty well and conscientiously performed in all its relations, whether in the role of private citizen or public servant, and it is such traits that win in life's affairs. He has been an advocate of wholesome living and cleanliness in politics as well, and to a notable degree he today enjoys the confidence of all the people.

HAROLD FOSTER LEE for his age has had a remarkably broad and diversified business experience, and is one of the leading bankers and business men of the state.

Mr. Lee, who came to Montana about twelve years ago, was born at Des Moines, Iowa, June 12, 1880, a son of Lauren K. and Anna (Foster) Lee. His father was born in New York State and his mother in Vermont. His mother died in 1912, and Harold Foster is the oldest of her four children. His father graduated from Amherst College with the class of 1875 and soon afterward located at Des Moines, Iowa, where he engaged in the flour milling industry. Subsequently he moved to Valley Springs, South Dakota, continued in the milling business for a number of years, and later located at St. Paul, where he is now head of an advertising business known as the L. K. Lee Advertising Organization. In politics he is a republican.

Harold Foster Lee acquired his early education at St. Paul, Minnesota. On leaving school he went to work for the St. Paul branch of Swift & Company, was cashier, paymaster and assistant auditor, and gained most of his early business training with that company. In July, 1907, he came to Miles City, Montana, and was teller, later assistant cashier, and also a director of the First National Bank. He left Miles City in October, 1916, and has since been prominent in affairs at Great Falls. While in Miles City he served as a member of the school board.

Mr. Lee is vice president of the Commercial National Bank of Great Falls. He is also vice president of the First National Bank at Carter, Montana, was one of the organizers of the First National Bank at Froid, and one of the organizers of the West Side Bank at Great Falls.

January 12, 1905, Mr. Lee married Miss Grace Haupt. They have two children, Dorothy Grace and Alan Edson. Mr. Lee is a republican in politics and is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. During the war he gave much of his time to Red Cross and relief work, serving as a member of the executive committee of the Red Cross and as treasurer of the War Fund in both drives. He is chairman of the membership Committee of the Great Falls Commercial Club.

Abe Crosson. In almost all American communities there may be found quiet, retiring men who, while not importunate seekers after public favors, nevertheless have honors thrust upon them and appear prominent in public affairs and who exert a widely-felt influence in the community in which they live and help to construct the proper foundation upon which the social and political world is built. Such men do an incalculable amount of good by their efforts to ameliorate the condition of the human race in any way possible. They strive to eliminate evil in its many forms, eradicate suffering and leave to posterity a heritage of peace and freedom.

Abe Crosson was born on his father's farm in the vicinity of St. Thomas, Canada, and is the second in order of birth of the thirteen children born to his parents, of whom six sons and two daughters are living. His father, David Crosson, was a native of Pennsylvania, born on January 19, 1829, and his death occurred on May 19, 1908, in the eightieth year of his age. The mother, whose maiden name was Catherine McKey, was born in Scotland on May 11, 1831, and died on October 14, 1915. They were married in Toronto, Canada, January 6, 1852, to which province David Crosson had moved with his parents from Pennsylvania when he was quite young. The family were pioneer settlers in that community, which at that time was densely covered with timber, and out of this wilderness the father hewed a home for his family, and there he spent his last days, having been a successful farmer and respected citizen. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he held the office of elder for many years.

Abe Crosson spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, where he learned the true meaning of industry, and he received a good practical educational training in the district schools. He took an active part on the parental farm, and at the early age of twelve years he started plowing. From that time on he took charge of the plowing, and thus materially contributed to the success of the farm. His father was progressive in his ideas and was the first man in his locality to purchase a reaper, at which time the son Abe was sixteen years of age, and he remained in charge of the reaper until he was twenty-six years of age. He then engaged as a bridge carpenter on the Michigan Central Railroad, where he worked for about three years. He then returned to the home farm for about two years, but in the fall of 1881 he went to Winnipeg, Canada, and entered the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, with whom he remained during the winters of 1881 and 1882. Then, with others, he made the trip to Brandon with ox teams, looking for land, and continued on through to Moose Mountain on the Pipestone River, where he took up land. Later, during the Riel rebellion, he was employed to haul freight by the Canadian Government, continuing the work until the end of the rebellion, when he drove overland to Fort Benton, Montana, where he arrived in the spring of 1887. He later went to Sun River, where he was employed on a sheep ranch for about two years. Then he and his brother Samuel bought 500 head of sheep, which they wintered the first season on the Marias River. In 1890 they drove through to Milk River, continuing the sheep business up to 1910. From that time until 1915 Mr. Crosson lived on his ranch, but in the latter year he decided to retire from active labor and came to Havre to make his permanent home. Here he is comfortably situated and is richly enjoying a much-earned rest.

On the 18th of February, 1891, Mr. Crosson was married to Isabell McIntyre, who was born near St. Thomas, Canada, in March, 1853, the daughter of Alexander and Flora (Gilchrist) McIntyre, both of whom were natives of the Highlands of Scotland. Her father died on December 18, 1891, at the age of eighty-one years, and her mother passed away on December 3, 1908, at the age of eighty-five years and six months. They became the parents of ten children, two sons and eight daughters, of whom one son and five daughters are living. Five of the children were born in Scotland and five in Canada. Of this family Mrs. Crosson was the sixth in order of birth and the first to be born in Canada. The family had come to Canada in 1852 by sailing ship, landing at Quebec, whence they sailed up the lakes to Port Stanley. There the father created a valuable farm out of the wilderness and there spent the remainder of his days. He was a Presbyterian in his religious belief and was a man who commanded the confidence of all who knew him.

Politically Abe Crosson has been a life-long supporter of the republican party, in the success of which he has taken an active interest. In November, 1914, he was elected a member of the Board of County Commissioners, and in 1918 he was elected chairman of the board. He is a man of good business judgment, sound discrimination and unassailable integrity and is deservedly popular with the voters of the county. He is deeply interested in the general advancement of the county and gives his support to every worthy movement in the interest of the public welfare.

Thomas William McKenzie. The present postmaster of Havre, Mr. McKenzie, has been a business man and citizen of that locality a quarter of a century, and has gained a place of prominence in official affairs and in the promotion of the commercial interests of his city.

Mr. McKenzie was born at Shakopee, Minnesota, November 10, 1870, son of Angus William and Betsey (Chisholm) McKenzie. His father was born in Scotland in 1842, and was a small boy when his parents emigrated to Canada. He took up a mechanical trade and as a young man worked as a bridge carpenter with the Canadian Pacific Railway. On coming to the United States he located at Duluth, where he was bridge building superintendent for the St. Paul and Soo Railway during the remainder of his active life. He died at the age of fifty-six. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Betsey Chisholm, his wife, was a native of Pennsylvania. They were married in Shakopee, Minnesota, and she died in 1876.

Thomas William McKenzie, only child of his parents, acquired a public school education in his native state, attended high school at Shakopee, and in that town served an apprenticeship as a carriage painter at wages of 50 cents a day. He followed his trade as a journeyman in St. Paul, Chicago, Minneapolis and Indianapolis, and in April, 1896, arrived at Havre, Montana. For a time he continued work at his trade, then became clerk in a local drug house, and finally established a business in that line. He was one of the merchants of the city until 1906, when President Roosevelt appointed him postmaster. He was reappointed for a second term by President Taft in 1910, gave an able administration of the Havre postoffice for eight years, and was again appointed on March 11, 1920, for a four year term. In 1914 Mr. McKenzie became one of the organizers of the Havre National Gas Company, serving as its first general manager.

He was elected mayor of Havre in April, 1916, and re-elected in 1918 serving two terms. His has been a progressive administration, and he was a leader in the patriotic activities of Havre during the World war. Mr. McKenzie is a past master of Havre Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is a member of Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons, is affiliated with Butte Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and is a member of Havre Lodge No. 1201 of the Elks and Assiniboine Lodge No. 56, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. McKenzie is a republican. February 14, 1917, he married Margaret H. Auld, a native of Ontario, Canada.

Rev. Fredrick Hugo Eberschweiler, whose name and activities figure so importantly in the pioneer history of the church in Blaine County, was born June 19, 1839, in Prussia, Germany. He was educated in the College at Treves and entered the Society of Jesus on September 30, 1858. He was ordained a priest June 15, 1870, and during the Franco-Prussian war was a hospital chaplain. In August, 1872, he came to America and was connected with the work of the Jesuits in Cleveland and Toledo, Ohio, and Burlington, Iowa, until the summer of 1883.

In August of that year he came from Burlington, Iowa, to Montana, and was attached to St. Peter's Mission, being the first resident priest over a large district. While visiting the garrison at Fort Assiniboine the Indians requested that a mission be founded for them. Proceeding upon this request he received on November 1, 1885, an official letter from the Government Indian Bureau permitting him to erect a mission and school buildings on the reservation belonging to the Fort Belknap Agency. The Indian trader Thomas O'Hanlon erected for him a log cabin to serve as a chapel and priest's residence, and Father Eberschweiler occupied the building in 1885. It was the first mission house and church of any kind ever erected in the Fort Belknap Reservation. During the following months he spent much time acquiring a knowledge of the Assiniboine language, so as to enable him to teach the children who came from the agency school to his chapel.

Father Eberschweiler was founder of St. Paul's Mission in Blaine County. Following is his personal account of the beginning of that mission:

"On the first of May, 1886, the missionary went to the Little Rockies and selected for the mission the place on Peoples creek where it comes out of the woody mountains into a beautiful valley. He then traveled to Fort Benton to find a contractor and workmen for the erection of the mission buildings. Meanwhile a war between the Belknap Indians and the Canadian tribe of Bloods had started, and no man would come into their land and expose his scalp to be taken by either of the warring tribes. It was also not possible to get the material for the buildings. The Great Northern Railroad was not yet built, nor Great Falls.

"In summer time steamers brought all kinds of articles up the Missouri River from St. Louis to Fort Benton, from where they were freighted to other places in Montana and Canada. There was no surplus of lumber nor did any freighter like to come to a country of warring Indians.

"Father Eberschweiler returned to the Little Rockies, where he found some gold miners. He made a contract with Mr. Umstet to erect, with the help of his companions, large log buildings for a residence for the missionary, a church, school and dwellings for pupils and sisters. The necessary lumber was ordered and it arrived in the summer of the next year, 1887. The work was begun, logs were cut in the near woods, the foundation and basement were built. The corner stone was laid on the fifteenth of September, 1886. The work was stopped unfinished before winter. During the winter of 1886 and 1887 Father Eberschweiler remained at Fort Belknap.

"From January 18 to January 23, 1887, Indian commissioners from Washington made a treaty with the Indians by which the lines of the present reservation were defined and their petition regarding the Little Rockies agreed to and the selected place for the future mission given to the Jesuit Fathers. Father Eberschweiler subscribed to the treaty as witness. That summer the Belknap tribes and the Bloods smoked the 'Pipe of Peace.' The Mission buildings were, little by little, finished on the 15th day of September, just one year from the day when we started.

"Father Eberschweiler traveled with some Ursuline Sisters from St. Peter's Mission and some Indian pupils to St. Paul's Mission and occupied its first mission buildings.

"The successors of Father Eberschweiler built, in the course of time, large stone buildings for the flourishing mission."

Rev. Ambrose Sullivan, pastor of Saint Jude Roman Catholic Church of Havre, is one of the scholarly and efficient priests of his faith, and a citizen of high standing in his community. He was born at Newcastle, Pennsylvania, June 11, 1875, a son of Timothy and Johanna (Connelly) Sullivan, both natives of Ireland, Timothy having been born in County Kerry. He died in 1889, when just fifty years old, and she in 1881, when thirty-three years of age. They were married in Pennsylvania, and had four children, three sons and one daughter,

LOUISA PROCTOR ISRAEL O. PROCTOR

namely: Ambrose, who was the eldest born; Stephen J., who is also a priest and in charge of the Holy Cross Roman Catholic Church of Townsend, Montana; John B., who is a physician and surgeon of Havre; and Josephine, who is a resident of Townsend, Montana. Timothy Sullivan came to the United States in young manhood, landing at Boston, Massachusetts. A miner and miller, he worked at different places and in 1880 came West to Montana and located at Butte, sending for his family in 1881, and there he lived until his death. He was a strong democrat.

Ambrose Sullivan attended the parochial schools in Helena until 1889, when he went to Spokane, Washington, to attend Gonzaga College. In 1892 he joined the Jesuit order and after eleven years of study and teaching in various houses of the Jesuit Order in the Northwest was sent in the year 1903 to Montreal, Canada, to study theology. He was ordained priest in 1906 and was sent to Pendleton, Oregon, as assistant priest of St. Mary's Church, where he remained about a year, and then was at Cleveland, Ohio, for a year. In 1909 he was sent to Saint Ignatius Mission in Missoula County, Montana, and was there engaged in work among the Indians until 1916. Father Sullivan was then sent to Havre, and was here until the fall of 1917, when once more he went to Saint Ignatius Mission, and remained there until in August, 1918, when he returned to the parish of Saint Jude at Havre, and is still its pastor. He is a man of warm sympathies and a wide and varied experience of human nature so that he soon becomes the friend as well as pastor of his people, and, winning their confidence, is able to assist them in a worldly as well as spiritual sense. A splendid organizer, he has been able to expand the usefulness of his parishes and increase the membership of his congregations. As a man his sound common sense and broad outlook with reference to civic betterment fit him for the discharge of the responsibilities of good citizenship.

Merton D. Proctor. Agriculture has been an honored vocation from the earliest ages, and as a usual thing men of honorable and humane impulses, as well as those of energy and thrift, have been patrons of husbandry. The free, outdoor life of the farm has a decided tendency to foster and develop that independence of mind and self-reliance which characterize true manhood, and no greater blessing can befall a boy than to be reared in close touch with nature in the healthful, life-inspiring labor of the fields. It has always been the fruitful soil from which have sprung the moral bone and sinew of the country, and the majority of our nation's great warriors, wise statesmen, renowned scholars and distinguished men of letters were born on the farm and are indebted to its early influence for the distinction which they have attained.

Merton D. Proctor was born at White Sulphur Springs, Meagher County, Montana, on June 1, 1885, and is the son of Israel O. and Louisa (Klaue) Proctor. The father was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, on September 25, 1838, and died on September 23, 1910, at the age of seventy-two years. He was reared and educated in his native state, and in 1872 he came to Montana, making the trip by steamer from Sioux City, Iowa, to Fort Benton, whence he went overland to Helena. For some time he engaged in mining, but finally took up some Government land on Smith River in Meagher County, and engaged in the cattle business, being one of the pioneers of that locality, where up to 1890 there were but few settlers. Mr. Proctor also became interested in the dairy business and in cheese making at White Sulphur Springs, which he found to be a successful enterprise. Some time later he went into the dairy business at Great Falls, having his office at Boston Heights and near the smelters. Afterward Mr. Proctor bought land at Sandcoulee, where he continued the manufacture of cheese and butter up to the time of his death. He was an expert in this line and his products were in great demand throughout this section of the country. Politically he was a stanch supporter of the republican party. Mrs. Louisa Proctor was born in California in May, 1863, and her death occurred on January 25, 1899. They became the parents of two children, the subject of this sketch and an elder brother, Israel O., Jr.

Merton D. Proctor received his elementary education in the public schools at Great Falls, graduating from the high school, after which he became a student in the Montana State School of Mines at Butte. For about three years after leaving school, Mr. Proctor was engaged in mining, but at that time he turned his attention to stock raising and farming, locating in Cascade County, near Truly, and about seventeen miles southwest of Great Falls, on what was known as Sanders & Hops Ranch. He is conducting his operations along progressive, up-to-date lines, and is numbered among the successful agriculturists and stockmen of his section. He owns about 200 head of cattle, has 100 acres planted to wheat and about 150 acres to other grain. He also raises large numbers of hogs and sheep. He is conducting his operations in partnership with B. P. McNair, who is also a practical farmer and stock raiser.

Politically Mr. Proctor is an earnest supporter of the republican party, and takes an intelligent interest in public affairs, though he is not in any sense an aspirant for public office. His life work has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance, and the systematic and honorable methods which he has ever followed have resulted in not only gaining the confidence of all with whom he has had dealings, but also in the building up of a profitable industry and the accumulation of a good property while yet comparatively young in years.

John E. Peterson. To some it seems as though success were an evasive thing, but it is found that failure usually results from a lack of the characteristics which may be acquired by all, perseverance, energy, industry and resolute purpose. An analysis of the life records of successful men serves to show that these qualities have been predominant in them and have been the causation of their prosperity. At any rate this is the case with John E. Peterson, county surveyor of Hill County.

John E. Peterson was born in Sweden, February 28, 1879, a son of Carl and Fredericka Peterson, both natives of Sweden, who came to the United States in the spring of 1880, and homesteading in Kingsbury County, South Dakota, lived there until his death in 1901. For the first ten years Carl Peterson worked at his trade of a carpenter, but then devoted all of his efforts to farming. His widow survives him. They became the parents of seven children, of whom four are now living, and John E. Peterson is the third child in order of birth. Carl Peterson was a member of the Lutheran Church. After taking out his citizenship papers he espoused the principles of the republican party and continued to vote for its candidates the rest of his life.

John E. Peterson attended the public schools of the Dakotas, and then for five years was engaged in learning surveying. For the subsequent two years he was engaged in farming in North Dakota, but preferring to be in a center of industry, he opened a barber shop and conducted it for two years. Once more, however, he heeded the call of the soil, and homesteaded in Hill County in 1909, and was thereafter engaged in improving his farm until in 1918 he was elected surveyor of Hill County, since which time he has been fully occupied with the duties of that office. Like his excellent father he finds in the republican party the embodiment of his ideas and principles, and gives it his hearty support at all elections.

In 1904 Mr. Peterson was united in marriage with Bertha Rognes, born in Norway. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson have one daughter, Lucile. Mr. Peterson has kept in touch with all that pertains to the discharge of the duties of his office. His personal acquaintance with people of note is a broad one, and his spirit of good fellowship makes life brighter for those with whom he comes in contact. He is interested in all that pertains to modern progress and improvements along material, intellectual and moral lines, and is one of the most representative men of this part of the state.

JACOB A. MAYER. Faithful service in any line of endeavor is certain to bring about gratifying appreciation from those higher up, and in no calling is promotion more sure than that of railroading. The various branches of this industry are so interwoven that it has long been deemed necessary that those in authority must have a practical training and rise from the bottom in order to be able to handle the various problems which come up in each day's work. One of the men of Hill County who has had a long and varied experience in railroad work, and who has been honored by appointment to public office under the Federal Government by President Wilson, is Jacob A. Mayer of Havre, United States land receiver, and one of the best known railroad men in this part of Montana.

Jacob A. Mayer was born at Delano, Wright County, Minnesota, July 1, 1875, a son of John A. and Johanna Mayer, both of whom were born in Germany. In 1868 John A. Mayer ran away from his native land to escape the obligatory military service, stowed away on a sailing vessel, and was not discovered for six days. Mrs. Mayer made the trip across the ocean on a steamer prior to the year which brought her future husband to the United States. Both located at Delano, Minnesota, where they became acquainted and were married. Seven children were born of their union, of whom Jacob A. was the third in order of birth. John A. Mayer died on November 14, 1900, but his widow survives him. After coming to Delano John A. Mayer found employment with the Saint Paul & Pacific Railroad in construction work, and was later with the Great Northern Railroad in a similar capacity, rising in 1888 to be superintendent of construction at Great Falls, Montana. Still later he was made superintendent of the Montana division of this road at Havre, and was discharging the responsibilities of that position when he died. He was a democrat of the old school. The Roman Catholic Church had in him a conscientious member.

Jacob A. Mayer attended the schools of Delano, Minnesota, and Great Falls, Montana, and subsequently took a commercial course in the Minneapolis Business College, from which he was graduated in 1891. Following this he was stenographer in his father's office at Great Falls and Havre, and later became telegrapher for the Great Northern Railroad and was stationed at various points along the road. Desiring to gain a practical knowledge of railroading from another angle he became a brakeman, was promoted to be freight conductor and later passenger conductor, and was then made train dispatcher. His next rise in the line of promotion made him chief train dispatcher at Havre, from whence he was sent to Grand Forks, North Dakota, as trainmaster, and he subsequently held that position at Havre, and he still retains his service card. On March 31, 1914, President Wilson appointed him to his present office, and re-appointed him on April 1, 1918. Mr. Mayer belongs to Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Columbus, Catholic Order of Foresters and Order of Railroad Conductors. Like his father he is a very strong democrat and active in his party.

On January 20, 1903, Mr. Mayer was united in marriage with Anna Pogreba, born at Montrose, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Mayer have four sons, namely: Mark, John, Robert and James Wilson. Business acumen has become habitual to Mr. Mayer, but he has developed his proper estimate of values himself and has every reason to be proud of the fact that he has risen to an important position without sacrificing any advantage because of an unwillingness to exert himself. Much of his success lies in the fact that he has never undertaken anything until he knew its every detail from the bottom up.

MYRON W. HUTCHINSON, registrar of the land office of the United States Government at Havre, has the distinction of having served his country in its land office department for one-third of a century, and to have put in all of his mature years in this line of work, a somewhat remarkable record, and one which has associated him with much of the development of the Dakotas and Montana. He was born at Girard, Erie County, Pennsylvania, April 5, 1867, a son of David and Mary (Kaiser) Hutchinson. David Hutchinson was born in Erie County, Pennsylvania, January 21, 1830, and died on January 24, 1894. His wife was born in Germany on August 15, 1844, and was brought to the United States when a small child by her parents, who located at Girard, Pennsylvania. There she lived until her marriage. She and her husband had five children, three of whom are now living, Myron W. being the second in order of birth.

David Hutchinson raised a company for the Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and served as its captain until the close of the war between the North and South. Following his honorable discharge he returned to Girard and was there engaged in the practice of law until President Cleveland appointed him receiver of public moneys at Bismarck, Dakota Territory, where he remained from 1886 to 1890, in the latter year returning to Pennsylvania and going into practice at Erie. There he continued to live until his death. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and very prominent in that order. Politically he was an ardent democrat.

Growing up at Girard, Myron W. Hutchinson received his educational training in the public schools and academy of that city. In 1886 he entered the service of the land department of the Federal Government and was chief clerk of the land office at Bismarck, Dakota Territory, and held that office until July 1, 1910, when he was transferred to the same office at Havre and on October 1, 1911, was appointed registrar of this office.

On August 12, 1891, Mr. Hutchinson was married to Gertrude Griffin, who was born in St. Lawrence County, New York, and they have four children, namely: Irene, who is the widow of Ben Hurr Moore, formerly an attorney-at-law of Havre, who died in March, 1916; Myron W., Jr., who was educated at the naval academy at Annapolis, Maryland, class of 1915, was first on the battleship New Jersey, but later on the destroyer Porter, and during the great war was on transport and destroyer service in French waters with the rank of first lieutenant; Zaida, who married Clyde Churchill, of Spokane, Washington; and Douglas W., who is attending school.

A sound, conservative man, Mr. Hutchinson has devoted his life and abilities to the duties of his positions, and takes pride in the fact that his Government has had his services, for he realizes his privilege of being able to trace back to a patriotic line of forebears and a distinguished father who was willing to make sacrifices in order to respond to his responsibilities as a citizen.

HENRY RICHARD SPOONER. A typical American of the best class, who is proud of the record made by his ancestors in both war and peace, Henry Richard Spooner is one of the representative men of Havre, and passenger conductor for the Great Northern Railroad, in whose employ he has remained for twenty-two years. Henry Richard Spooner was born at Loganville, Wisconsin, August 11, 1865, a son of Albert Tyler and Mary (Cooper) Spooner.

Albert Tyler Spooner was born in Herkimer County, New York, May 14, 1833, and he died in 1904. His wife was born at Oldham, England, April 6, 1844, and she survives him, making her home at Saint Croix, Wisconsin. They were married in Richland County, Wisconsin, and three children were born to them, namely: Henry Richard, whose name heads this review; Nellie, who was the wife of William M. Johnson, died in 1891; and Andrew J., who is living in Saint Croix County, Wisconsin.

By trade a blacksmith, Albert T. Spooner found plenty of work when he came West to Wisconsin at the age of eighteen years, and was employed as such at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, when the trouble between the North and South resulted in war, and in 1861 he enlisted in Company F, Third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and participated in all of the skirmishes and battles of his command, including the second engagement at Bull Run, Harper's Ferry, Wilderness, Chancellorsville and Antietam. In the last fiercely fought battle he was wounded in the right leg and fell into a creek. For some reason or other the rescuing parties passed him over and it was several days before he secured the services of a negro and was hauled, in company with a wounded comrade, to Fredericksburg, where they were taken to a temporary hospital located in a church. The surgeons insisted that amputation was necessary, but the intrepid young soldier, learning that all of the men able to get to the depot would be taken north to Philadelphia, managed to drag himself on his hands and knees from the hospital to the depot. After reaching the Philadelphia hospital the verdict of the other surgeons was sustained by those in the larger hospital, but Mr. Spooner remonstrated so vigorously against the amputation that his leg was saved, and after three months he was sent home on a furlough. While the battle-scarred young veteran was trying to recover his lost health and strength he was astounded to learn that he had been drafted into the service, but after some investigation, the authorities gladly released him and explained that such action had come about through an error in the records. Upon resuming his peaceful occupations Mr. Spooner went into the sawmill business as a sawyer and filer, and continued to live at different points in Wisconsin until 1877, when he went to Clay County, Missouri, and spent about a year. Then, during the summer of 1878, he went overland to Montgomery County, Kansas, and until August, 1880, was engaged in farming and grade construction work for the St. Louis and Santa Fe Railroad. During the latter month he started back overland to Saint Croix County, Wisconsin, but had the misfortune to lose his horses by theft at Lawrence, Kansas, and it took some time to replace them, so the journey consumed six weeks. Upon his return to Wisconsin Mr. Spooner resumed operations in the sawmill business, and remained in it for years. He passed away in the Soldiers' Home near Milwaukee, Wisconsin. For a number of years he was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic Post at Knapp, Wisconsin, and he also belonged to the Odd Fellows. The Methodist Episcopal Church had in him one of its most faithful and conscientious members, and he so carried into his everyday life the creed he professed that he had no enemies, but countless friends.

Growing up under the careful supervision of a good father and mother, Henry Richard Spooner early learned the value of honest labor, and remained in his father's employ until he was twenty-three years of age. At that time he began prospecting for iron ore in Wisconsin, but after a year entered the employ of the Minnesota and Wisconsin Logging Railroad out of Spring Valley to Emerald, and was put on construction work. Later he was made a brakeman and then a conductor, remaining with that road until 1893, when he left to engage in farming and sawmilling, carrying on the former during the summer and the latter in the winter, going into the woods of Wisconsin to carry it on. In July, 1897, Mr. Spooner came to Havre to engage with the Great Northern Railroad as a brakeman, but returned to Wisconsin for the ensuing winter, coming back to Havre in February to resume work as a brakeman. In July of that year he brought his family to Montana, locating his home at Glasgow, where he resided for twelve years, and then came to Havre, which has since been his headquarters. In 1900 Mr. Spooner was made freight conductor, and in 1907 was promoted to be a passenger conductor, which responsible position he still holds. He belongs to the International Order of Railroad Conductors No. 272, and has represented this organization on the general committee for seven years, and was a party to drawing up the working agreement under which the conductors have been working since 1912. Well known in Masonry, Mr. Spooner has been connected with the order for many years. He was first made a Mason in North Star Lodge No. 46, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Glasgow, Montana, and served it as master. When he moved to Havre he demitted and is now a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. Mr. Spooner was made a Chapter Mason at Glendive and demitted to become a charter member of Glasgow Chapter, Royal Arch Masons. After being a member of Glasgow Commandery he demitted to become a charter member of DeMolay Commandery No. 15, which he served as the second commander. He also belongs to Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana.

On February 22, 1889, Mr. Spooner was united in marriage with Harriet Elizabeth Turner, born in Dunn County, Wisconsin, a daughter of William Harrison and Lavina (Brown) Turner, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Turner had thirteen children, of whom Mrs. Spooner is the second in order of birth. She was educated in the public schools of Chippewa County, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Spooner became the parents of the following children: Alta, who died in infancy; William A., who enlisted for service during the great war on July 21, 1918, in the United States Marine Corps, was rejected on account of disability, and was again rejected by the draft board in August, 1918, for the same reason, and he was married on September 15, 1913, to Lula Mae Theiss, they having two children, Henry Richard and William Joseph; Stella, who is the wife of C. B. Keopke; Ethel L., who is the wife of William E. Rae; and Gladys D., who is the youngest.

One who has always been a leader among his fellows, Mr. Spooner is a strong factor in his various organizations and community, and what he has accomplished along different lines stands to his credit as a constructive citizen and upright man.

ALFRED J. TRODICK. The gentleman whose name heads this sketch has long enjoyed prestige as a leading citizen in the community in which he resides and as an official against whose record no word of suspicion was ever uttered. For a number of years Mr. Trodick has been a prominent factor in the municipal life of Great Falls. His prominence in the community is the legitimate result of genuine merit and ability, and in every relation of life, whether in the humble sphere of private citizenship or as a public official, his many excellencies of character and the able and impartial manner in which he has discharged his duties have won for him an envied reputation.

Alfred J. Trodick was born in Denver, Colorado, on October 29, 1874, and is the twelfth child in order of birth of the thirteen children born to his parents, John and Bridget (Kelley) Trodick. John Trodick, whose death occurred on November 6, 1916, had a most interesting career. He was a native of France, having been born in Brittany in 1820. Though a Frenchman by birth, he served many years in the British navy and saw thrilling service, among the most unique of his experiences being at the battle of Sebastopol, where he was one of the twenty-seven sailors first to scale the walls. As a result of his valiant service in that engagement Mr. Trodick was presented with an appropriately inscribed sailor's sabre by Queen Victoria and also a Victorian cross, which is now a precious family heirloom. Forty-one years of Mr. Trodick's life were passed in active duty on salt water, part of the time as steward of vessels and part of the time as a captain. He sailed to all parts of the world, and for that reason his children were born in various countries. More than fifty years ago he came to the United States, settling first at Chicago. In 1887 he came to Montana, settling at Wolf Creek, Lewis and Clark County, where he was engaged in the hotel business up to the time of his death, which occurred in the one hundredth year of his age. His wife was born in Ireland in 1842 and died in England in 1878. Mr. Trodick was a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church and gave his support to the democratic party.

Alfred J. Trodick was educated in the public schools of Chicago, but when only twelve years of age he went to New York City and engaged as cabin boy on the steamship "City of Paris," sailing between that port and Liverpool. After eighteen months' experience on the water Mr. Trodick engaged with Anderson's Circus for one season, the itinerary of the company taking them to San Francisco, California. While there, young Trodick became a stowaway on a steamer bound for New Orleans, under Capt. John Charles. Some days after leaving port he was discovered by a sailor and taken before the captain. The young lad's situation was not particularly enviable, for he had come aboard with one small sandwich and 10 cents in money, and it was not customary to treat stowaways with much consideration. This case was the exception, however, for the captain kindly invited the lad to have a square meal, which invitation he promptly accepted. On their arrival in New Orleans, Trodick joined Robinson Brothers' Circus as a tight rope walker. At Kansas City he had a bad fall from the rope, but the manager requested him to try it again. He was not able to repeat the attempt, so was promptly discharged. He then went to Omaha, Nebraska, and joined Forepaugh's Circus, with which he remained until they reached New York City. As the circus was going overseas, Mr. Trodick enlisted in the United States Navy, from which he was discharged in 1889. He then enlisted in Company A, Eighth Regiment of United States Infantry, which was at various times located at Fort Robinson, Nebraska, Fort McKinney, Wyoming, and Fort D. A. Russell, Wyoming. He served throughout the Sioux campaign and in 1893 he received an honorable discharge at Yellowstone Park, at which time he ranked as first sergeant of his company. In 1894 Mr. Trodick came to Montana, locating on a homestead claim near Wolf Creek, Lewis and Clark County. There he established an athletic training camp, which he operated for four years. He then entered the employ of the Great Northern Railway Company as superintendent of a stone quarry, engaged in getting out stone for railroad construction work. He was with this company four or five years, and on September 11, 1909, he came to Great Falls and joined the fire department, that being under the administration of Mayor Murphy. His service proved so efficient, and so capable did he prove as a fireman that he rose to be first captain of the department, holding that position up to July 1, 1913. He was then appointed a sergeant of police, which position he held up to July 26, 1916, when he was made chief of the fire department, which position he is holding at the present time. That he is the right man for the position he occupies is generally acknowledged by all who are at all acquainted with his record in connection with the fire department. The position is one of large responsibility, but Mr. Trodick possesses just the qualifications for the work and he has earned the confidence of the people of his community.

On June 5, 1895, Alfred J. Trodick was married to Emma Rhein, who was born at Columbus, Ohio, but whose death occurred November 13, 1918. To them were born three children, namely: Harry John, who enlisted on May 7, 1917, in the Second Montana Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, was transferred to Company C, First Gas Regiment, United States Army, and left on December 14, 1917, for overseas. Landing at Dover, England, he was soon at the front with the United States troops and served with every United States army in France. He received an honorable discharge on March 6, 1919. The other two children are Margaret and Helen.

Fraternally Mr. Trodick is a member of the Masonic order, having been first raised in Basen Lodge No. 60, but later demitted to and is now a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 118. He is also a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Rotary Club and the Pacific Coast Fire Chiefs Association. Personally Mr. Trodick is a man of genial and unassuming manner, extremely well liked by all members of the department because of the courtesy with which he treats his men, and well liked by all who are so fortunate as to be numbered among his acquaintances.

Lou Lucke. While the general mercantile interests of Havre are adequately looked after by business men, in the particular lines of clothing and shoes there is no more experienced or competent dealer in the city than Lou Lucke. Mr. Lucke knows shoes from sole to upper, has manufactured them by hand and machine and is an expert on leather, and shoes and clothing have been the commodities he has handled throughout his entire business life. He established himself at Havre in 1903, and has not only been able through honorable business methods and courteous manner to build up a large and increasing business, but through high personal character has won the esteem and confidence of the public in general.

Lou Lucke was born at Freeport, Illinois, February 8, 1874, the second in a family of six children. His father, Rudolph Lucke, was born in Germany, in 1849, and was brought to the United States by his parents in childhood. He followed the trade of a barber, working for some years at Freeport and in other cities. His death occurred in 1892 in the City of Chicago, Illinois. The mother, Mrs. Pauline (Hetrick) Lucke, was born at Boston, Massachusetts. She survives, being now in her sixty-eighth year, and makes her home with her children, all of whom are living.

In the excellent public schools of Freeport Lou Lucke obtained an education that qualified him for almost any ordinary line of business. It happened that his grandfather was a very skilled shoemaker, according to the thorough methods of old days, and under his expert direction Mr. Lucke learned the trade and thereby adopted the handling of shoes when he first started out in business. In 1900 he came to Butte, Montana, and for one year he was in charge of the shoe business for the Good Luck Clothing Company at this point, after which he was a clerk for the Eagle Shoe Store at Kalispell in Flathead County, still later being transferred to the house at Great Falls, Montana.

With this varied business experience Mr. Lucke came to Havre in 1903 in order to embark in business for himself, opening and conducting a first class shoe store until 1909, when he put in a line of fine clothing. In the meanwhile he invested in land and now owns a ranch situated eighteen miles from Havre, where he is extensively interested in breeding full blood grass color Chesapeake dogs. This industry has proved very profitable.

Mr. Lucke was married December 25, 1903, to Miss Hattie Thackery, who was born in Michigan, where her people are well known, and they have three sons and one daughter, namely: Alvin, Scott, Louis and Janet.

As a business man Mr. Lucke recognizes the value of a live, progressive commercial body devoted to the interests of the city, and for some years he has been a hardworking member of the Havre Commercial Club. He belongs to other bodies also, some of a social nature, notably the Rotary Club, and is a valued member of Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is no seeker for public office but believes in political activity and is staunch in his support of the principles of the democratic party.

Henry E. Loranger. "Through struggle to triumph" seems to be the maxim which is appropriate for the majority of our citizens, and, though it is undoubtedly true that many fall exhausted in the conflict, a few by their inherent force of character and strong mentality, rise above their environment and all which seems to hinder them, until they reach the plane of affluence towards which their face was set through the long years of struggle that must necessarily precede any accomplishment of magnitude. Such has been the history of Henry E. Loranger, who has lived a busy and useful life and is now numbered among the active, successful and popular citizens of Havre.

Henry E. Loranger was born in Muskegon, Michigan, on December 22, 1864, and is the sixth in order of birth of the twelve children born to Joseph and Hermonie (Doegge) Loranger. The father was a native of France and died on January 19, 1896, at the age of sixty-two years; the mother, who was a native of Canada, died on February 21, 1906, when seventy-five years of age. Joseph H. Loranger came to Three Rivers, Canada, when fifteen years of age, and for some time thereafter was in the employ of the Canadian government. Soon afterwards he drifted over into the States, going first to Massachusetts, thence to Michigan, finally locating at Muskegon in the latter state. There he engaged in the lumber business, including a planing mill and box factory, in which he was successful financially. Eventually he returned to Canada, locating in Montreal, where he organized the Globe Baking Powder Company. He introduced the first baking powder into Canada, and the remainder of his active years were spent in that business. Politically Mr. Loranger was a stanch supporter of the democratic party and in religion he was a communicant of the Roman Catholic Church.

Henry E. Loranger was reared under the parental roof and secured his education in the public schools of Muskegon. He earned his first money as a newsboy, selling the Bay City Tribune at the age of eleven years, and then at the age of fifteen years he was employed in the lumber yards. His next employment was with the Michigan Central Railroad as a clerk in the freight department at Bay City. Later he was transferred to the train service, first as a switchman, then as brakeman, later as conductor, and finally as yard master at Detroit, whence he was transferred to Chicago in the same capacity. In the spring of 1897 Mr. Loranger came to Havre, Montana, and entered the employ of the Great Northern Railroad as yard conductor, holding that position three years. In 1900 Mr. Loranger engaged in the hotel business at Chester, Montana, his being the pioneer hotel at that place, of which he was one of the first settlers. He took a deep interest in the success of Chester, investing heavily in real estate there and erecting five buildings. Soon afterwards he took up a homestead five miles south of Chester, and there he engaged in the cattle and horse business, being one of the first to engage in that business in what is now Hill County. He was active in the initiation of improvements and developments in this locality, being one of the organizers of the Town of Chester and one of the first aldermen of that town. In 1908 Mr. Loranger sold his ranch and stock and in May, 1912, located his home permanently in Havre. About that time he was elected sheriff of Hill County, and, being re-elected to succeed himself, he served about two and a half terms, giving eminent satisfaction to the people by the manner in which he conducted the affairs of that office. After leaving the office of sheriff Mr. Loranger engaged in the automobile business at Havre, in which he is still engaged, being one of the most successful men in his line in this section of the state.

On the 5th of October, 1888, Mr. Loranger was married to Frances Jeanette Hansen, of Veesoit, Michigan, the daughter of Mostim William and Eugenia (Andre) Hansen, both of whom were natives of Christiana, Norway. They are both deceased, the father dying on June 25, 1913, when sixty-nine years of age, and the mother on May 13, 1916, at the age of seventy-three years. They were married in Christiana, Norway, and became the parents of ten children, seven of whom are now living. They came to the United States in 1867, locating at Manistee, Michigan, where Mr. Hansen engaged in farming, and was also interested in the lumber industry. He gave his support to the republican party and his religious affiliation was with the Baptist Church.

To Mr. and Mrs. Loranger have been born six children, namely: Arthur John was married to Gladys Rakestraw, and they have two children; Hubert E. married Hazel McKinnon, and they have one child; Francis Raymond, who will be mentioned in a later paragraph; Kenneth D. is a student in high school; Cecelia C. is a student in the junior high school in Brooklyn, New York; Dorothy E. is at home.

Francis Raymond Loranger attended the schools of Havre and graduated from the high school with the class of 1915, being the valedictorian of his class. He was deeply interested in all branches of athletic sports, in which he had gained high honors, notably in basket ball and base ball. In 1915 he entered the law department of the University of Montana at Missoula. When the United States entered the World war on the side of the Allies, Francis Loranger was one of the first to enlist in Havre, enlisting on June 14, 1917, in the Marines at Great Falls. He was first sent to Mare Island, California, but was later transferred to Quantico, Virginia. Afterwards he was sent to San Juan Hill, Santiago, Cuba, having been assigned to the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Company of the Seventh Regiment. On March 12, 1918, he was operated on for appendicitis and on recovery returned to his command. Later he was accidentally thrown from a moving motor truck and badly injured. He was hurried to the Brooklyn Naval Hospital, and soon afterwards was transferred to the Pelham Bay Park Hospital, where an operation was performed in the effort to restore him to health. His mother then took him to Los Animos, California, in the hope that a change of climate would be beneficial, and later took him to Fort Lyones, Colorado, where his death occurred on January 11, 1919. He was buried at Havre on January 18th with military honors.

Politically Mr. Loranger is a warm supporter of the democratic party, though he is not as active in public affairs as formerly. Fraternally he is a member of Havre Lodge No. 1201 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Havre Lodge No. 166, Fraternal Order of Eagles. He has always been deeply interested in whatever tended to promote the prosperity of his adopted town and county, and to him is the community largely indebted for the material development which it has enjoyed. He is a man of generous and kindly impulses, and enjoys to a marked degree the confidence and esteem of the entire community.

Joseph P. O'Brien. In placing the name of Joseph P. O'Brien of Havre, well-known railroad engineer and public spirited citizen, in the front rank of Montana's private citizens, simple justice is done to a biographical fact recognized throughout the northern part of Montana. A man of judgment and sound discretion, he has been a faithful employe for many years of the Great Northern Railroad, and has so impressed his individuality upon the community as to gain recognition among its leading citizens and public-spirited men.

Joseph P. O'Brien was born in Lafayette, Indiana, on August 23, 1863, and is the son of Patrick and Mary (Duley) O'Brien, both of whom were born in County Galway, Ireland. Both of these parents are deceased, the father dying in 1892, at the age of eighty-one years, and the mother in 1872, at the age of forty-six years. They were married in Louisville, Kentucky, and to them were born two children, namely: William, a railroad engineer, who lost his life at South Greenfield, Missouri, in 1911, when the boiler of his engine exploded; and Joseph, the immediate subject of this sketch. Patrick O'Brien came to the United States in young manhood by sailing ship, landing at New York City. The voyage was a long and tiresome one, requiring thirteen weeks on account of continued storms which blew them back to within two days of their starting point after they had been out nine weeks. From New York Mr. O'Brien went to Louisville, Kentucky, where he went to work for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, later going to the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad. He was first in the track service, but was later transferred to the train service. He was in different departments, but his last days were spent in the bridge and building department. Eventually he retired from active labor and spent his last days quietly in his home at Lafayette, Indiana. He was a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church, while in politics he was a stanch supporter of the democratic party.

Joseph P. O'Brien received his educational training in the public schools of Lafayette, Indiana, where his boyhood days were spent. His first employment was in hoeing corn, for which he received twenty-five cents a day. Three years later, at the age of fourteen years, he began clerking in a wholesale and retail grocery store at Lafayette, with which he was connected for about seven years. He then went to work for the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad as a fireman. Four years later he went to Fort Scott, Kansas, and went to work as a fireman on the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad. Four years later he was promoted to the other side of the cab, and was so employed there up to 1894, when he went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and engaged as engineer on the Great Northern Railroad. On July 7, 1895, he came to Kalispell, Montana, having been assigned to the run between Kalispell, Montana, Spokane, Washington, and Minot, North Dakota. About eight months later he came to Havre, where he has since resided. During the past eleven years he has been a passenger engineer on the road and is considered one of the most reliable and trustworthy employes of the Great Northern Railroad. It is said of him that in all his experience as a railroad engineer he has never struck a vehicle or a person, and he has been remarkably free from even the little accidents incidental to railroading. Mr. O'Brien is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and during the past eleven years he has served on the board of adjustment of that organization. Mr. O'Brien has, aside from his railroad employment, other interests, being the owner of a prosperous grocery store in Havre, and which in his absence, is operated by his son. He carries a well-selected stock of groceries and enjoys a large patronage.

On April 14, 1903, Mr. O'Brien was married to Elizabeth M. Bailey, who was born in County Carey, Ireland. To Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien have been born two children, John J. and Elizabeth M.

Politically Mr. O'Brien gives his support to the democratic party, and his religious connection is with the Roman Catholic Church. He is one of the most unostentatious of men, open-hearted and candid in manner, and enjoys to a marked degree the esteem of all who know him.

Edwin C. Carruth. One of the most complete and systematically managed farms and ranches in Montana is owned by a Havre business man, Edwin C. Carruth. Ranch management is only one of the features of a very busy career on the part of Mr. Carruth.

This Montanan, widely known for his versatile gifts and energy and influence, was born at his uncle's farm eight miles from Lake City, Minnesota, May 7, 1866, son of Virgil D. and Julia E. (Cooley) Carruth. His father was a native of Chenango County, New York, was educated in his native state, and was a gallant soldier of the Union for four years and six months. He first enlisted and served for three years in the Forty-fourth New York Infantry. His second period of service was with the One Hundred Forty-fourth New York Regiment. He was in all the battles of his regiment and, participated in many of the great engagements of the Army of the Potomac. He was present at the Grand Review of the victorious army at Washington on July 24, 1865. He was a member of a company known as the French Zouaves. He was mustered out with the rank of corporal. Following the war he spent his active career as a teacher. He lived for a time at Mount Pleasant, eight miles from Lake City, Minnesota. He also taught in Lake City and at Pepin, Wisconsin, until 1875. For many years he was superintendent of schools in Polk County, Minnesota, at Crookston. His last years were spent in the City of Washington, where he served as captain of guards for the pension bureau of the Interior Department. He died at Washington in January, 1899, and was laid to rest beside many of his comrades in Arlington Cemetery. He was an active member of the Grand Army and was a Mason. His wife was born in Oxford, Chenango County, New York, and is still living, in her eighty-fifth year, making her home on Coronado Island, California.

Edwin C. Carruth was one of four children, three of whom are still living. He had little opportunity to attend school regularly after he was nine years of age. He earned his first money husking corn at seventy-five cents a day. He also worked in a drug store at Crookston for eleven dollars a month. After several years of general commercial experience he became associated with W. E. McKenzie in the management of the Crookston Times. Mr. Carruth has been in the newspaper business both in Minnesota and in North Dakota. In 1893 he and Mr. McKenzie bought the Plainsdealer at Grand Forks, North Dakota, and continued that prosperous journal until 1901. Mr. Carruth on coming to Montana in 1901 was manager of the Hotel Havre at Havre until the building was destroyed by fire in 1904. He was associated with the construction of the new Havre Hotel, which was opened in March, 1905, and owns most of the stock of the corporation. About eighteen years ago he was granted a franchise by the City of Havre for the construction of a telephone system, and built up a prosperous independent exchange. In 1904 he also engaged in the real estate and insurance business and still carries that on, and is also manager of the Havre Hotel.

During 1912-14 Mr. Carruth was one of the principal promoters in prospecting for natural gas in the Havre field. He and his friends invested not only money but much time and energy to that end, and in later years they saw their early expectations realized in the abundant supply that now furnishes natural gas for domestic purposes to the City of Havre.

Mr. Carruth is owner of a sixteen hundred acre ranch, with the Great Northern Railway running through its center, located at Kremlin, twenty miles from Havre. He was the founder of the town of Kremlin. Mr. Carruth has more then $12,000 invested in machinery and equipment, and is one of Montana's farmers who believe in conducting a ranch on the same principles as a factory or store. He keeps books on all his operations, and has a system of reports for the daily field and machinery operation in line with the most approved system devised by agricultural experts.

At one time Mr. Carruth's name regularly appeared in the annals of American sport. He was an expert roller skater. When that sport was at its height in the Northwest, in 1890 he participated in many sectional and national races at Winnipeg, Manitoba, Fargo, North Dakota, Fergus Falls, Crookston and Minneapolis. From March 9 to 16 in 1895 he was in a six-day roller skating event on the Washington Avenue rink in Minneapolis, and took fourth place, all the eastern states being represented in the event, with about twenty starters. He holds the world's record for a hundred miles on roller skates. He is also a splendid shot, and participated in many events in Minnesota, North Dakota and also in Manitoba. He has used his shotgun not only in exhibition tournaments but as a devotee of duck shooting, and is still an ardent lover of outdoor life and activity in every phase. He is a deputy state game warden and has supervision over a territory covering 17,000 square miles.

On September 8, 1888, at Crookston, Minnesota, Mr. Carruth married Miss Emily A. McKenzie. She died at Grand Forks, North Dakota, July 26, 1902. On January 19, 1907, at Helena, he married Miss Ethel M. Dewar, a native of Crookston, Minnesota. They have two daughters: Ethel Cooley and Jean Clover.

For many years Mr. Carruth has been a leader in the democratic party. He served as city clerk at Crookston, Minnesota, and was secretary of the North Dakota State Central Committee from 1896 to 1902. He has been secretary of the Hill County Democratic Central Committee in Montana for the past ten years, and has been the manager of the democratic campaign in Hill County and is now a member of the State Executive Committee and County Committeeman. He was also secretary of the Chouteau, Hill and Blaine County Division Committee, which handled many difficult adjustments to be made when Hill County was created out of the larger Chouteau County. Mr. Carruth was one of the organizers of the Havre Business Men's Association. He is affiliated with Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons, and is a charter member of De Molay Commandery of the Knights Templar at Havre, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena and the Scottish Rite Consistory No. 2 at Butte. He is also member of Havre Lodge No. 1201 of the Elks and is a Knight of Pythias and Eagle. Taking it all in all he has had a strenuous life in Montana since coming to the state in 1901.

Elbert Homer Stone. A man of naturally sound judgment and shrewd perception, E. H. Stone, well-known merchant of Great Falls, has so ordered his career as to be eminently eligible to representation in a work of this kind. He has risen through his strictly moral habits, his attention to business and his desire to deal fairly, promptly and honestly with his fellow men, and his name stands high today in all business circles with which he has come into relationship. His social connections have ever been of the most pleasant character, and the fact that his surroundings are such as to make life enjoyable is solely due to his individual merits, his affable and courteous treatment of others and his strict adherence to justice in all his dealings.

Elbert Homer Stone was born in Macon, Missouri, on the 13th day of December, 1882, and is the son of Ronert E. and Laura L. (Gaunt) Stone, both of whom also were natives of Missouri. The father was born on May 25, 1860, and for a number of years was engaged in the lumber business, being associated with the Goodrich Lumber Company. In 1880 he came to Great Falls, Montana, and soon afterward located at Stockett, Cascade County, where for about ten years he was engaged in general merchandising. He then returned to Great Falls and organized the Star Clothing Company. He became the owner of a fine ranch of 1,000 acres, and on this place he engaged in the breeding of thoroughbred cattle, in which he was successful. In 1914 he was elected to the Legislature on the democratic ticket, serving one term. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Mrs. Laura Stone was born on January 18, 1864, and is the mother of three children, of which number the subject of this review was the first born.

E. H. Stone secured a good practical education in the public schools of Great Falls. During this school period he was exhibiting those qualities of initiative and enterprise which have characterized him in mature years, by establishing at different times two school papers, the "Patriot" and the "Stockett Post," the latter being established after the family had moved to Stockett. After completing his studies he became a clerk and bookkeeper for his father in the store at Stockett. Subsequently Mr. Stone went to California, where he was employed in mercantile houses at various places. Finally he engaged in the clothing business on his own account in San Francisco, but at the end of two years he sold the business and went to Portland, Oregon, where he organized the Old Salem Woolen Mill Company. He became the eastern buyer for this company, remaining principally in New York City for about three years. He then became the western representative for Hoffman, Rothschild & Company, until this firm went out of the clothing business in 1914. In that year Mr. Stone came to Great Falls and engaged in the clothing business, under the name of "Stone the Clothier," a name which has since become one of the best known among the successful mercantile houses of Great Falls. Mr. Stone has been financially successful in this enterprise and has also acquired a fine ranch of 1,040 acres in Teton County, Montana, where he is interested in the breeding of white-faced cattle, in which he has been very successful. He is also financially interested in a number of other enterprises, being a stockholder and director in the First State Bank at Sandcoulee, a stockholder in the Cascade Bank at Great Falls and in the American Bank and Trust Company at Great Falls. On November 1, 1919, Mr. Stone bought the Jensen Apartment Building at Great Falls, one of the finest apartment buildings west of the Twin Cities. He is treasurer of the Champion Silver Mine of Helena, and is also financially interested in opening of extensive coal mines in the northern part of state. He is also financially interested in several of the oil companies who are going after oil in this state.

On the 7th of October, 1915, Mr. Stone was married to Florence E. Dickinson, who was born in Benmidji, Minnesota.

Politically Mr. Stone is an ardent supporter of the democratic party, but is not an aspirant for public office. However, he was appointed and is now serving as police commissioner of Great Falls. He is a member of the Commercial Club and the Merchants Association. Fraternally he is a member of Astoria Lodge No. 180, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Astoria, Oregon; Lodge No. 14, Fraternal Order of Eagles, of which he is president; and Cataract Lodge No. 18, Knights of Pythias. Mr. Stone is a man who would have won his way in any locality where fate might have placed him, for he possesses to an eminent degree those qualities which make for success wherever they are applied. By reason of these principles he has won and retained a host of friends.

FRANKLIN T. MERRILL. The study of the life of the representative American never fails to offer much of pleasing interest and valuable instruction, developing a mastering of expedients which have brought about most wonderful results. Franklin T. Merrill, the well-known cashier of the Montana National Bank at Havre, is a worthy representative of that type of American character and of that progressive spirit which promotes public good in advancing individual prosperity and conserving popular interests.

Franklin T. Merrill was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, on February 18, 1887, and is the son of Franklin A. and Hattie (Teece) Merrill. The father was born in New York City, where he was reared and educated. Later he studied law and was admitted to the bar, following the practice of his profession in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Eventually he moved to Great Falls, Montana, where he lived up to the time of his death. His widow now lives in Havre. They became the parents of five children, namely: Franklin T., the immediate subject of this sketch; George E., who enlisted in Company B, Three Hundred and Sixty-second Regiment, Ninety-first Division, at Camp Green in the State of Washington, was assigned to the Signal Corps and was honorably discharged after the signing of the Armistice; Olive, who died in infancy; Arthur J. enlisted in the Quartermaster's Department, United States army, in which he was commissioned a first lieutenant, and is still in the service; Robert T. enlisted in the Aerial Service at Fort Wright, being assigned to the Three Hundred and Sixth Squadron. He was sent overseas and served with the bombing squadrons in England, Belgium and France.

Franklin T. Merrill was reared at home and secured his education in the public schools of Great Falls, Montana. His first employment was as a newsboy on the streets of that city at the age of fourteen years. He then entered the department store of Strain Brothers, where he was employed until nineteen years of age. He then became connected with the First National Bank of Great Falls, starting in a humble capacity and by faithful service and strict attention to duty he was promoted from time to time until in 1917 he was paying teller. He then located in Havre, where he had been elected cashier and manager of the Montana National Bank, which position he is occupying at the present time. He is peculiarly well fitted for the business to which he is devoting himself, possessing sound judgment, keen discrimination and a wise conservatism, tempered with a spirit of progress and enterprise which enables him to weigh carefully and judiciously every question put up to him.

Fraternally Mr. Merrill is a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he is a past exalted ruler, and of the Knights of Columbus. He was one of the organizers of the Rotary Club of Havre, and served as its first president. In matters political Mr. Merrill gives his support to the democratic party, though not a seeker after public office. Though not a resident of Havre for a great length of time, he is not underestimated by a people who have learned to appreciate his true value as a potent factor in business affairs. Though a man of unpretentious demeanor, he possesses that silent force that attracts men and enjoys a well-deserved popularity in the community honored by his citizenship.

James Holland came from Nebraska and other states to Montana twenty-two years ago with a good business record. His activities in Montana have been in the northern section of the state, and for the past fifteen years he has been one of the men of distinctive enterprise and ability in the affairs of Havre.

He was born at Jersey City, New Jersey, May 30, 1854, son of Martin and Margaret McMahon Holland. His parents were both born in County Monaghan, Ulster, Ireland, and both were born in 1832. Martin Holland came to this country at the age of sixteen in 1848, and landed from a sailing ship at New York City. In Ireland he had served an apprenticeship as a merchant or storekeeper's clerk. He was in the grocery business in Jersey City and lived there until 1855, when he went to Chicago and entered the lumber business. In 1861 he moved to Pontiac, Illinois, and was a lumber dealer in that city for a number of years. Having bought land from the Burlington Railway in Saline County, Nebraska, he moved his family out to occupy the land in 1877, and the rest of his active life was spent in Nebraska. He developed a fine farm with all the modern improvements. He was a devout Catholic, but never took any active interest in politics or public office. He died in 1911, and his wife died July 11, 1914. They were married in Jersey City, July 23, 1852. Margaret McMahon had come to this country in 1847. Martin Holland and wife had eight children, and two sons and three daughters are still living, James being the oldest child. Martin Holland and wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1902. At that time they were congratulated by their children, grand-children and many friends. In the company gathered to do honor to the old couple were also Anthony and Margaret (MacFarland) Gavin, parents of Mrs. James Holland. The latter couple also lived to celebrate their golden wedding in 1905, at which occasion Martin Holland and wife were guests.

James Holland was one year old when his parents moved to Chicago, and he spent most of his boyhood at Pontiac, Illinois, where he attended public schools, graduating from high school in 1873. He learned the carriage blacksmith's trade at Pontiac, and that was his line of work for about fifteen years. In 1877 he moved to the Black Hills district of South Dakota and conducted a blacksmith shop at Deadwood for two years. He then went to the home of his parents at Friend in Saline County, Nebraska, and continued blacksmithing there until 1885. From that year until 1895 he was a merchant at Broken Bow, Nebraska, building up a large trade in the hardware and implement business. He then removed to Kearney, Nebraska, and for two years served as superintendent of the State Reform School. In 1891 he was admitted to the Nebraska bar, but has made his knowledge of this profession chiefly serve his own business affairs.

Coming to Montana in 1897, Mr. Holland located at Gebo in Carbon County, and established there the Holland Lumber and Hardware Company. In 1904 he moved to Havre and engaged in business as the Holland Mercantile Company. His store was completely burned out in 1905, and the greater part of his prosperity accumulated by years of careful management was swept away. He resumed business as an undertaker and real estate dealer, and is still active in that line. He has put on the market several important additions to the city of Havre. For several years Mr. Holland was also engaged in farming largely on an experimental basis.

He organized and for four years was president of the Havre Industrial Association. He was also chairman of the County Reorganization Committee, and as a result brought about the formation of the new County of Hill in 1912. For the past twelve years he has been a member of the Havre School Board and for six years its president. He is a prominent democrat, and during the war period was chairman of the several drives for Red Cross, Knight of Columbus and the Allied war fund. He was also chief of the American Protective League. He is a member of the Elks, Knights of Columbus, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and for several years has been finance clerk of the Modern Woodmen of America.

The greater part of the success he has achieved in life Mr. Holland credits to his good wife. She was Miss Mary A. Gavin. They were married October 20, 1879. She was born in Ontario, Canada, and reference has already been made to her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Holland had eleven children, five of whom are still living: Edith, James G., Joseph and Josephine, twins, and Dorothy. James G., former clerk of Havre, has been associated with his father in business since 1903 under the firm name of Holland & Son. He is a graduate of the Acme Business College of Seattle and married Violet Lepper. The daughter Josephine is a Catholic Sister in the Convent of the Ursuline Academy at Great Falls. Joseph, her twin brother, enlisted in the Medical Reserve Corps at Fort Wright in Washington in 1917, saw active service in the Toul sector in France, and received his honorable discharge in 1919. The daughter Dorothy is a graduate of the Ursuline Academy at Great Falls and is now attending the State College at Bozeman.

Philip D. Clack. The Clack family is closely identified with the constructive work of developing Hill County, its members not only improving their own properties but promoting and completing what is known as the Havre Irrigation Canal, which is 9 miles long and 20 feet wide, by means of which a large region has been redeemed from the wilderness and made very productive land for agricultural purposes. One of the men who is widely known not only because of his membership in the Clack family, but also because of his own efforts as a ranchman and ice dealer of Havre, is Philip D. Clack.

His birth occurred in Lamar County, Texas, on July 7, 1877, and he is a son of John W. and Rebecca (Davis) Clack, natives of Alabama and Lamar County, Texas, respectively. When he was about fifteen years old John W. Clack was taken to Texas by his widowed mother, and there he was educated, completing his studies in Makinzie College. During the war between the North and South he served on the Confederate side, and at its close engaged in farming in Lamar County, Texas. Later he sold his farm and going to Fort Worth, Texas, was engaged in a drug business for five years. He then established himself in a cattle and farming production business in Western Texas, which occupied him until 1901, when he joined his son in Montana, and became one of the very prominent factors of Hill County, he and other members of his family building the Havre Irrigation Canal. His death occurred in 1915, when he was seventy-seven years of age. While not desiring to enter politics, he always supported the candidates of the democratic party, and took an intelligent interest in current affairs. The Presbyterian Church was the medium through which he expressed his religious ideas. The first wife of John W. Clack died in 1877, at the age of twenty-four years, leaving two children, namely: Maude, who is the wife of Ray L. Sands; and Philip D., whose name heads this review. Mr. Clack was married secondly to Josephine Davis, sister of his first wife, and she bore him two children, namely: Daisy Lee and H. Earl. After the death of the second Mrs. Clack, Mr. Clack was married third to another sister, Carrie Bell Davis, and they had two children, namely: Weaver and Louise.

Philip D. Clack grew up at Fort Worth and attended its schools until he was fifteen years old, when he began his business career with a partner of his own age named Burts Johnson. Learning that they could secure several hundred goats from a man about 100 miles from Fort Worth, these lads went to him and tried to negotiate a sale, but he, realizing their youth, would not accept the money until they were vouched for by some one of mature years. Not discouraged, the plucky lads traveled twenty miles to a mutual acquaintance and induced him to return with them so as to effect the transfer. The boys did so well with their first purchase that they later returned and bought the business from this same man. Mr. Clack continued in the stock industry in Texas until 1899, when he came to what was then Chouteau, but is now Hill County, and engaged as range rider with the Pioneer Cattle Company, continuing with it during the summer and fall of that year. For the subsequent five years he was in a draying business at Havre, but then sold it and began raising registered Shorthorn cattle on his farm, which is one and one-half miles south of Havre, and he is still in that industry, but in 1909 added the handling of ice to his activities and is the leading man in that line for this region. His farm is under the Havre Irrigation Canal, and he and other members of the family own about 2,500 acres, 1,500 acres of which are affected by the irrigation improvement.

On November 14, 1902, Mr. Clack was united in marriage with Cornelia Timmons, born in Young County, Texas, a daughter of J. Worth and Nannie (Willis) Timmons. Mr. Timmons is one of the prominent cattle men of Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Clack have three children, namely: Worth M., John R. and Cornelia. Mr. Clack belongs to Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Havre Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The Presbyterian Church holds his membership. He has inherited his political beliefs from his father, and votes the straight democratic ticket. Although still in the very prime of life Mr. Clack has many years of useful endeavor behind him, owing to the fact that he began to be self-supporting at an age when most boys are still in school and dependent upon their parents' care. Alert, vigorous and aggressive he has been able to bring a successful termination out of all his ventures, and he is a valued asset to his community.

JOHN A. ANDERSON. There was a time when Montana was not looked upon as a desirable territory for general farming, but that myth has been dissipated through the enterprise and careful methods of determined, intelligent agriculturists. While irrigation has brought many additional acres under profitable cultivation in recent years, there are farmers and cattlemen in Chouteau County who have prospered from the time they settled on their homesteads, twenty years ago. For about that length of time John A. Anderson has lived here, and through industry and thrift has been abundantly successful.

John A. Anderson was born in Sweden, March 31, 1876. His parents are Andrew and Christina (Johnson) Anderson, the former of whom was born in Sweden sixty-five years ago and the latter two years later. Their four children are living, John A. being the second in order of birth. The father was thirty years old when he brought his family to the United States and located at Norway, Michigan, where he is employed in the iron ore mines.

John A. Anderson had public school advantages at Evanston, Illinois. In 1897 he came to Montana and for some time worked in a sawmill in the Bear Paw Moutain region in Blaine County, and then homesteaded. Later he bought additional land, and from a small beginning has built up an extensive business as a general farmer and raiser of fine cattle, at the present time having 200 head on his ranch, which is situated thirty-eight miles south of Havre, Montana.

In 1912 Mr. Anderson was married to Miss Ellen Johnson, who was born in Sweden, and they have two children, Dorothy and John. Mr. Anderson pays close attention to his own affairs and has never been willing to accept any public office that would greatly engage his time, but his deep interest in the public schools has caused him to serve on the school board of his district for the past twelve years. He votes the republican ticket because he sincerely believes in the principles of that party. He is widely known and is considered a representative citizen of this county.

GEORGE WALLACE MERKLE for many years has been closely identified with the business, community and civic affairs of Belt. He is head of the leading coal corporation of the city, is also a merchant, and is widely known over that section of the state as a leader in the democratic party.

Mr. Merkle was born at Virginia City, Nevada, February 21, 1875, and all his life has lived in the atmosphere and environment of the mountain country of the West. His parents were Thomas and Mary Ann (Dempsey) Merkle. His father, who was born at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1841, was a butcher by trade, and went overland to San Francisco in 1863. At the discovery and early development of the famous Comstock lode he removed to Virginia City, Nevada, traveling from California overland with mule team. He did mining and prospecting there and also followed his trade, and in 1889 removed to Butte, where he again combined his trade with mining and prospecting in Mineral County. He is now living retired in the City of Butte. He has never been in politics, and has usually been identified with the republican party. His wife was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, and died in 1914, at the age of seventy-two. They were married in Virginia City, Nevada, where she had come when a girl, and of their nine children eight are still living, George W. being the fifth in age.

George W. Merkle acquired his early education in the public schools of Virginia City and later attended the Butte Business College. For a time he studied law in the office of Judge Frank P. Langan, of Nevada. He lived for a time in California and worked on a farm in Plumas County at $20 a month. At Virginia City he was employed in a grocery store for $40 a month and later, in order to learn a new business, accepted an opportunity to work in a clothing store at $15 a month. For a time he was in a broker's office at Virginia City and then came to Butte and put in eighteen months at the copper mines. Again he returned to Virginia City, clerked for a grocery merchant eight months, and then took the management of a grocery store at Gold Hill. He was there some six months and then returned to Butte, working in the copper mines six months and as timekeeper for a similar period.

Mr. Merkle came to Belt in the fall of 1898 as bookkeeper and later as cashier in the coal department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. He made good in these responsible relations to the corporation and on March 1, 1914, he leased the Anaconda Coal Mine at Belt and operated it personally for four years. On March 1, 1918, he organized the G. W. Merkle Coal Company and has since served as president of the corporation. On June 17, 1918, he also bought the mercantile interests of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Belt, and has the management of that flourishing local business. On March 1, 1919, Mr. Merkle also took over the management of the Waldo Hotel property.

Throughout his residence at Belt he has been identified with that group of local citizens planning and working for the welfare of the community. He was one of the organizers of the Commercial Club and served as its president, organized the Belt Amusement Association, and from time to time his name has been associated with other enterprises. He is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Modern Woodmen of America, is an active democrat, and as a young man in Nevada had some experience as a member of the National Guard.

June 17, 1902, at Belt, he married Miss Katherine Mary Murphy, a native of Canada. They have one daughter, Katherine Mary, born May 17, 1903.

ROBERT B. ANDERSON, one of the prosperous farmers of Hill County, has long been a resident of the West, and has lived long enough in Montana to participate in the momentous changes which naturally occurred when the open ranges were closed. He is a native of Scotland, where he was born on June 16, 1859, a son of William and Mary (Henderson) Anderson.

William Anderson was born in Scotland, but came to the United States with his wife and five children in 1869, and from then on was a resident of Pennsylvania. Entering the employ of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, William Anderson rose through several stages to be weighmaster and coal inspector, and was holding the latter position when he was taken ill, on March 9, 1897, his death occurring three days later, when he was seventy-four years and ten months of age. His wife, who survives him and makes her home at Avoca, Pennsylvania, was born in Scotland on October 30, 1832. They had five sons born to them, namely: James, John and Walter, all of whom reside at Avoca, Pennsylvania; Robert B., whose name heads this review; and William, who lives at Staten Island. William Anderson was a consistent member of the Langcliffe Presbyterian Church of Avoca, and his funeral services, begun at his late residence, were completed in this church, his pastor, Rev. D. T. Smyth, officiating. Fraternally William Anderson was a member of Valley Lodge, Knights of Honor. A man of sterling Christian character, honorable in all of his dealings, William Anderson was held in the highest esteem by all who had the honor of his acquaintance.

Robert B. Anderson arrived in the United States on his tenth birthday and completed his schooling in Pennsylvania. The trip across the ocean from Scotland is well remembered by Mr. Anderson, and it was taken on the steamer "Europia" to New York City. At what would now be considered an early age, he went to work in the coal mines, and later was employed in a powder mill. In 1880 he came West to Cheyenne, Wyoming, over the Union Pacific Railroad and went into the ranch and cattle business, his initial start being three head of cattle, but he increased his herd to eighty head. During the hard winter of 1886-7 he lost the greater part of his cattle, but resumed business in the spring and continued in it until 1888, when he sold and went to Bingham County, Idaho, where he was in the employ of the Warbonset Cattle Company, the largest of its kind in the country, as line rider. In the fall of 1892 Mr. Anderson came to Montana and took charge of the stock of this company in old Chouteau County, now Hill County, as foreman, continuing in that position until the company went out of business in 1896. In 1897 Mr. Anderson was appointed live stock inspector for the State of Montana at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, and held this position until 1901, when he returned to Chouteau County to a ranch he had previously bought, and locating on it took up farming and cattle raising. In time he took up a homestead near his original farm, and now has 480 acres of land, eighty acres of which he plants each year in wheat, which yields about forty-two bushels to the acre. Quite recently he reduced his herd from 100 head to fifty head. In 1910 he erected his present comfortable four-room residence. He is a republican and cast his first vote for James A. Garfield for the presidency, and has continued to support the same principles in politics ever since. While living in Wyoming he was elected a school trustee, and he has held that office in both old Chouteau and Hill counties. He is an active member of the Lincoln Farm Association and is a very representative man in every respect.

On January 3, 1898, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth Streit, born at New Orleans, Louisiana, January 16, 1876, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Curley) Streit. Joseph Streit was born in Germany, and he survives, making his home at Highwood, Montana, being now seventy-six years of age, but his wife died in 1891. They had five sons and one daughter born to them, Mrs. Anderson being the second child in order of birth. With fifteen other boys Joseph Streit left home with the intention of coming to the United States, but he was the only one who was successful, and it took some time to accomplish his object. He first made his way to France, where he learned to cook, and later he learned the coppersmith trade. Finally, in the late '50s, he took passage on a sailing vessel and landed in New York City, from whence he gradually made his way to New Orleans, Louisiana. When the war between the states broke out he enlisted in the Union service, and following the declaration of peace he re-enlisted in the regular army, following the calling of a soldier for thirteen years, serving under Colonel Moale. When Montana was still a territory he came to Highwood, and was one of the first three settlers of this section. He was one of the pioneers of old Chouteau County, and one of its first cattlemen, and was here before the county was organized. Although a democrat, he never took any active part in politics. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have two children, namely: Mary Isabel, who is the wife of Carl H. Wylade, of Seattle, Washington, and has one child, Robert H., now three years old; and William H., who is attending the Helena High School, Class of 1920.

The old days of the cattle industry are past, the closing of the open range bringing about a revolution in it, but those men who were foresighted enough to make provision for the inevitable change have greatly prospered and have done their part in developing the communities which have sprung up about them as a result of the division of land into homesteads, which brought in settlers. The men who were pioneers here naturally understand conditions better than those who have come here later on, and are able to deal with them in a more comprehensive manner, so the majority of them have been more successful. All, however, old settler and new, are proud of the advancement which has been made and of the prestige Montana has gained among the other states of the Union.

EDWARD O. REDWING. In all that constitutes true manhood and good citizenship Edward O. Redwing, successful ranchman of Hill County, is a notable example and none stands higher than he in the esteem and confidence of the people. His career has been characterized by duty faithfully performed, and by industry, thrift and wisely directed efforts he has acquired a liberal share of this world's goods, besides earning a reputation which has never been clouded by the commission of unworthy acts. Because of his generous and kindly nature he has won and retained the good will and esteem of all who have come in contact with him.

Edward O. Redwing was born on February 10, 1871, on his father's farm in Fillmore County, Minnesota. His parents, Alf. and Betsy (Henge) Redwing, were natives of Norway and both are deceased, the father dying in 1915, at the age of eighty-four years, and the mother passing away in 1910, at the age of seventy-five years. They were married in Winneshiek County, Iowa, and their union was blessed with twelve children, eight sons and four daughters, nine of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Redwing came to the United States on the same steamer, landing at New York City. At that time Mr. Redwing was a young man of nineteen years and full of ambition and enthusiasm, and he came at once to Winneshiek County, Iowa, of which he was one of the pioneers, and there he engaged in farming for some years. Later he removed to Fillmore County, Minnesota, where he bought 200 acres of land and there developed a fine farm. He carried on a diversified system of farming, in connection with which he gave considerable attention to the breeding and raising of fine horses, of which he was particularly fond. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, and served effectively on the school board for a number of years, being a strong advocate of education. Politically he was an earnest supporter of the republican party.

Edward O. Redwing was reared on his father's farm and secured a good practical education in the public schools of Fillmore County, Minnesota, which he was able to attend during the winters, his summers being given to the work of the paternal farmstead. He earned his first money by husking corn at the age of nine years, for which he was to get 50 cents a day, but he was unable to collect and never received his wages for that work. At the age of fifteen years he went to Dakota and worked for his brother Andrew for $25 a month. In 1891 Mr. Redwing came to Fort Assiniboine, Montana, where he went to work for the Great Northern Railway in the roundhouse. In the following year the roundhouse was moved to Havre, which at that time contained nothing but a water tank, no houses as yet having been built, but Mr. Redwing went there and continued his work with the railroad. Later he became a fireman during the construction of the road west to the Pacific Coast. In the spring of 1903 Mr. Redwing quit railroading and with two associates engaged in the cattle business, under the firm name of Redwing, Rehburg & Thompson. They began business with 100 head of cattle, the range being located about fourteen miles south of Havre. About one year later Mr. Redwing separated from his former associates and has since been alone in the business, a period of fifteen years, during which he has been more than ordinarily successful. In 1904 he filed on 160 acres of land in Chouteau County, now Hill County, and at the present time has about 5,000 acres of land in Hill County, in addition to which he also rents in two townships in Canada for grazing purposes. At the present time he owns about 2,000 head of cattle, most of which have been kept in Canada of late because of the drought which has prevailed in Montana. Mr. Redwing ships most of his cattle to the Chicago market, and has been notably successful in his operations.

Politically Mr. Redwing is a stanch supporter of the democratic party, and for many years he has rendered appreciated service as a member of the school board.

On June 27, 1904, Mr. Redwing was married to Honora Matilda Ryan, who was born in Duluth, Minnesota, a daughter of John J. and Delia A. (Joyce) Ryan, the father a native of Canada and the mother was born in Wisconsin, coming to Montana in 1893, the father took up land in Hill County, raising cattle until 1908, when he moved to Chenook, engaging in the livery business there. Mrs. Redwing is the eldest in a family of five children, three of whom are living. The parents are still living in Chinook, Montana, and they are the parents of three children, Delia Meyrl, Edna Rose and Margaret Mary. While he has carried on a special line of business in such a manner as to gain a comfortable competence for himself, he has also belonged to that class of representative men of affairs who promote the public welfare while advancing individual success.

WILLIAM EDWARD WILTNER. A prominent and well known citizen of Havre, Montana, is William E. Wiltner, who has led an eminently honorable and useful life and achieved a marked success in his chosen vocation, and at the same time has benefited the community of which he is a resident, for he has not been so selfishly absorbed in money-making that he has not had time for the higher things of life. Because of his splendid personal character, as well as because of his success in business, he enjoys the esteem and respect of the entire community.

William Edward Wiltner was born in Seneca Falls, New York, on May 19, 1876, and is the son of Joseph and Wilhelmina (Fahland) Wiltner, both of whom were natives of Germany. The father is still living, but the mother passed away November 28, 1919. They were married in Seneca Falls, New York, and became the parents of five children, of whom three are now living. Joseph Wiltner left his native land when about eighteen years of age, accompanying his parents on their immigration to the United States, and they landed at the port of New York. His future wife came to this country with her parents when ten years of age. Before leaving the old country Mr. Wiltner had learned the trade of marble finisher, at which trade he was employed in Seneca Falls, New York, for a time. In 1887 he moved to Polk County, Wisconsin, with his wife and four children, but soon afterwards moved to Stillwater, Minnesota, where he remained a short time. He then went to St. Paul, Minnesota, being employed in the construction of the state capitol building as a granite worker. In 1892 he went into business on his own account as a marble worker and tombstone manufacturer, which engaged his attention for some time, but eventually he went out of business and was employed by others as a foreman, in which work he is still engaged. He is a republican in his political views and in religion he is a member of the Congregational Church, while his wife is identified with the German Lutheran Church.

William E. Wiltner received his education in the public schools of Seneca Falls, New York, and then took a bookkeeping and business course in the International Correspondence School. He accompanied his parents on their removal to Wisconsin, and at Shell Lake, that state, he took his first employment, which was in a butcher shop. He soon acquired a thorough knowledge of that business and then went to Stillwater, Minnesota, where he continued in that line of work. In 1895 Mr. Wiltner came to Havre, and for about eleven years was employed in various meat markets. He then went into the meat business on his own account and has continued the business to the present time, his market being generally considered one of the cleanest and most up-to-date shops in the city. Fair dealing, prompt service and right prices have gained for him not only a fair share of the local trade, but also the respect of the public. He has been prosperous in his financial affairs and in 1915 he erected the Wiltner Building on Second Street, a splendid two-story building, with stone trimmings. He is also the owner of two ranches, on which he raises much of the stock which he butchers for his market.

On June 18, 1899, Mr. Wiltner was united in marriage with Margaretha Hops, who was born in Germany and whose death occurred on January 10, 1919. They became the parents of one son, William Marvin. On April 17, 1920, Mr. Wiltner was married to Miss Kate Fleener, a native of Indiana.

Politically Mr. Wiltner has been a republican for many years and has taken an active part in local public affairs. In 1900 he was elected alderman from the First Ward, serving one term, and in 1916 he was again elected to that position, serving two terms in all. For eight years he rendered efficient and appreciated service as chief of the fire department. Fraternally he is a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Assiniboine Lodge No. 56, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which lodge he has been secretary for ten years; and is also a member, as was his wife, of Lillian Lodge No. 47, Daughters of Rebekah, of which they were among the first members. He is a member of the Havre Band, of which he has been treasurer for fourteen years. In every relation of life he has so acted as to earn the respect of his fellow citizens, and today he is rightfully numbered among the representative men of his community.

ROBERT FELTON. Golden opportunity, awaiting a Midas-like touch of genius and ability, is not confined to the great centers of population and industry, but is resident far from the commercial turmoil of the metropolis. Upon the plains and in the rich valleys of an immense western empire has it beckoned to the capabilities and courage of able and talented men. There are many such men who have wrought in the evolution of the great Treasure State, initiated vast enterprises which have stimulated community growth and wrested fortune from an opportunity that has yielded to their power. Among the comparatively young men of Northern Montana who have reaped generous results from their strenuous efforts in recent years the name of Robert Felton stands out prominently and because of his splendid personal character as well as because of his success he is entitled to specific mention in a work of the character of the one in hand.

Robert Felton was born in Columbia, Tyrrell County, North Carolina, on March 17, 1890, and is the son of Robert P. and Emmeline D. (Davenport) Felton, both of whom also were natives of the Tarheel State. The father is now living on Clear Creek, Blaine County, Montana. They became the parents of seven children, six of whom are now living, and the subject of this sketch was the fourth in order of birth. Robert P. Felton was reared in his native state, attended the common schools and then took the collegiate course in Richmond College, at Richmond, Virginia, where he was graduated. He then entered upon the active practice of his profession at Columbia, North Carolina, where he remained until 1890, when he came to Montana, locating in Chouteau County, where he took a squatter's right to a homestead in the Milk River Valley. Later he located in the Bearpaw Mountain, on Clear Creek, where he engaged in the cattle business and in farming, which commanded his attention for about twenty years, since which time he, with his wife, has been engaged in the mercantile business. He is a good business man, carries a well selected stock of goods and is meeting with success. Politically, he gives his support to the democratic party, while his religious membership is with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Robert Felton was brought to Montana when a baby of less than one year and has lived here ever since He secured his school training in the public schools of Chouteau County, and since the age of nineteen years he has been identified almost continuously with the livestock business. He was one of the organizers of the Morris Turner Live Stock Company, of which he was manager up to 1919, when the company was reorganized under the title of the Bearpaw Live Stock Company, of which likewise Mr. Felton is manager. He has an intimate acquaintance with and understands thoroughly the technic of the cattle business and is thoroughly capable as the manager of a great enterprise like this one. The Bearpaw Company has four ranches, on which they have from 1,200 to 1,500 head of cattle and about 2,500 head of sheep. One of their properties is what was formerly known as the old Diamond Bar ranch, famous in the old days of the cattle business in Montana. The Bearpaw Company is widely known as one of the progressive and enterprising companies now operating in northern Montana, not a little of its success being attributable to the business management and personal qualities of the subject.

On June 18, 1918, Mr. Felton was married to Stella Soloman, and they have a daughter, Ruth. Mrs. Felton was born at Great Falls, Montana, the daughter of Wolf and Stella Soloman.

Politically Mr. Felton is a stanch supporter of the democratic party and has taken an intelligent interest in local public affairs. He has been especially interested in educational matters and served efficiently one term as school trustee. He has also served as notary public. Fraternally he is a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons. He has a fine presence and pleasing manner, his appearance denoting the intellectual, forceful, manly man. He has in him the elements which make men successful in the highest degree and is deservedly popular among his associates and the community.

DOMINIC SPOGEN. The names of such men as Dominic Spogen are those which the historian likes to see recorded, for they indicate the true history makers of a country. They have been men of strong arm and brave heart, willing to forego the pleasures of advanced civilization and undergo the hardships of a comparatively new country in order that they do the most for their families and succeeding generations.

The subject of this sketch was born in Luxemburg on June 24, 1861, and is the fifth child in order of birth of the thirteen children born to Peter and Barbara (Schaus) Spogen, both of whom were also natives of Luxemburg. They are both deceased, the father dying in 1910, when eighty-six years old, and the mother in 1913, at the same age. The father was a farmer by vocation and also conducted a general mercantile business, spending his entire life in his native community. In religion he was a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

Dominic Spogen received a good education in the schools of Luxemburg, studying in both German and French. In 1881, when twenty years of age, he immigrated to the United States, landing at New York City on the 2d day of July. His first employment here was on a farm for about six months, for which he received $12 a month. He then went with a brother to Jamestown, New York, where for about a year he was employed in a sawmill. Going then to Lake Linden, Michigan, he went to work in the stamp mill of the Calumet-Hecla Copper Company, remaining there about a year. In 1883 he went to Silver Cliff, Colorado, where for about eight months he worked in the concentrator mill for the Basick Mining Company, following which he was a short time in Butte, Montana, going from there to Anaconda in 1884. There he was for a short time employed in a stone quarry, but later he entered the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, for which he soon became a foreman in the concentrator department, remaining there until 1894, when he returned to Durango, Colorado, going from there to Lake City, that state, where as an expert he took charge of a concentrator, remodeling the machinery in such a way as to save the ore to a greater degree than had been done before. Later he returned to Anaconda, Montana, and became a foreman for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. He was requested by Marcus Daly to take charge of their interests in Belt, which he did, serving as superintendent here from 1905 to 1915 and giving entire satisfaction to his employers. In the latter year Mr. Spogen went into the real estate and mining business on his own account, and he has met with very good success. He holds a large interest in the Midnight Copper Company at Silver Camp, Montana, as well as interests in the East Belt Company at Belt, a coal company with an apparently inexhaustible supply of that mineral, one estimate being that there are at least 12,000,000 tons of first class coal and easily accessible. Of this company Mr. Spogen is secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Spogen has taken an active and public-spirited part in the affairs of the community with which he is now identified and is acknowledged to be one of its leading citizens. He takes an especial interest in educational matters and has rendered effective service as a member of the school board for eighteen years, being chairman of the board at the present time. To him probably more than anyone else is due the credit for the erection of the splendid high school building. He was one of the first members of the City Council of Belt, and in 1912 was elected mayor of the city. So eminently satisfactory was his administration of the affairs of the city that he was five times re-elected to succeed himself. In 1912 also Mr. Spogen was elected a representative to the State Legislature, serving one term. Politically he gives his support to the democratic ticket. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

On July 19, 1898, Mr. Spogen was married to Jennie Lochray, a native of Sharon, Pennsylvania, and to them have been born four children, namely: Leo R., who is a student in the University of Montana, at Missoula; Laura May, who after graduating from the public schools of Belt spent four years in preparing for teaching, and is now employed as a teacher about seven miles from Belt; Roy J. and Madaleyne. Mr. Spogen has by a course of right living earned the sincere regard of all who know him. Though not favored by inherited wealth or the assistance of influential friends, he has by perseverance, industry and a wise economy attained a comfortable station in life and is well and favorably known throughout Western Montana, being regarded by all who know him as a man of sound business principles, thoroughly up-to-date in all phases of the mining industry, and as a man who while advancing his individual interests does not neglect his general duties as a citizen.

JOHN B. KINSELLA is one of the typically progressive men of Hill County, whose operations in an agricultural line have resulted in his advancement in a material way. He was born at Fair Haven, Rutland County, Vermont, June 13, 1861, a son of Lawrence and Ellen (Burke) Kinsella. Lawrence Kinsella was born in Kings County, Ireland, and his wife in County Cork, Ireland, he dying in 1909, aged seventy-six years, and she in 1906, aged seventy-one years. Coming to Canada after he attained his majority, Lawrence Kinsella made the trip in a sailing vessel that took from seven to eight weeks on the trip and landed at Quebec, where he spent a short time. He then came to the United States and located permanently in Vermont, for many years being employed in the slate mills at Castleton, leaving that occupation only a few years prior to his death. He and his wife were married at Castleton and they became the parents of seven sons and six daughters, of whom John B. was the sixth in order of birth. Of this large family four sons and one daughter survive. The family, including the father and mother, were all members of the Roman Catholic Church. In politics Lawrence Kinsella was a democrat.

After attending the public schools of Fair Haven, John B. Kinsella was graduated from the Fair Haven High School in 1880, and then learned the trade of a stone cutter, working at it for five years, before he came west to St. Paul Minnesota, and was employed at work in stone cutting for a time.

Dominic Spugeon

He then started out from St. Paul with a trainload of cattle, 4,600 head, and brought them to Devil's Lake, Dakota. From there he drove them to the present site of Big Sandy in Montana. It was in June, 1886, when he took his cattle from the train at Devil's Lake, and November before he reached his destination with them, delivering them to the Diamond B Cattle Company. Mr. Kinsella remained in the employ of this company for two years, and then was employed in freighting from Great Falls into the Judith Basin. In the spring of 1891 he re-engaged with the Diamond B Cattle Company at Fort Assinniboine. It was at this time that the United States Government set aside a portion of the Indian Reservation from Fort Assinniboine, and in November, 1891, Mr. Kinsella homesteaded on his present location, just three days after the land was opened up, and before it was surveyed. He entered the cattle business with one cow, but increased his herd until he now has about 175 head of White Face and Durham strains and a number of horses of the Belgian Draft strain. He and his brother, Lawrence I. Kinsella, operate this ranch in partnership. When he first located on his land he put up a tent by a fine spring of running water, and it did him as a shelter for some time. While he is a democrat, he has never been willing to go on the party ticket for office, preferring to devote himself to his own affairs. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. Both he and his brother are held in the highest esteem in Hill County and deserve the confidence they inspire.

Lawrence I. Kinsella, who with his brother, John B. Kinsella, operate the fine ranch on the Little Box Elder Creek, twenty-five miles south of Havre, is one of the successful farmers and cattlemen of Hill County. He was born at Fair Haven, Vermont, and is the eleventh child of the thirteen children born to his parents, Lawrence and Ellen (Burke) Kinsella, both natives of Ireland, who are now deceased. A review of the Kinsella family will be found in the biography of John B. Kinsella preceding this sketch.

When he was but fifteen years of age Lawrence I. Kinsella was graduated from the Fair Haven High School, following which he took a course at St. Josephs College at Burlington, Vermont, from which he was graduated in 1889. He then attended the Grand Seminary at Montreal, Canada, but after one year returned to Burlington and took a three years' course in the medical department of the Vermont State University. His attention was then called to professional baseball, and he became a member of the Troy Club of the New York State League, and after two years with it went with the Toronto Club in the Eastern League, where he remained until 1898. In that year he went to Meriden with the Connecticut State League, and was a member of that club until 1900, that year bringing him West to Great Falls, Montana, as business manager of the Great Falls Club of the Montana State League, but after about two months he engaged with the Great Northern Railroad as checker on a gang of steel workmen, holding that position until November of that year, when he joined his brother on the present ranch, since which time he has devoted himself to ranching. He is a democrat and for twelve years has been a school trustee of his district. Like the other members of his family he is a Roman Catholic.

On January 27, 1906, Lawrence I. Kinsella was married to Anna M. Pflepsen, born at Cold Springs, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Kinsella have become the parents of the following children: Lawrence P., who died at the age of three months; Nicholas B., Rose Mary, Helen P., Margaret E., Anna C., Gertrude S. and Francis J.

The Kinsella brothers have not tried to do anything spectacular in their ranching, but have been content to go quietly along, steadily increasing the value of their property and the amount of their profits. Having supreme confidence in the future of the county and state, they are willing to devote the best years of their lives to improving this section, and take great pride in their neighborhood and its advancement.

George E. Gohn. Madison County has one of the ablest county clerks and recorders in this part of Montana in the person of George E. Gohn, whose experience in public office is a varied one and whose capabilities are unquestioned. He comes of an old colonial family, and his grandfather, George Gohn, was born in Pennsylvania, where he spent his life, and died near Wrightsville, Pennsylvania, before his grandson, George E. Gohn, was born. His son, George Gohn, father of George E. Gohn, was born at Wrightsville, York County, Pennsylvania, in 1834, and died at Missoula, Montana, in October, 1906. Reared at Wrightsville, George Gohn left his native place after reaching his majority and coming West, spent two years at Central City, Colorado, where he conducted a meat market and also was interested in mining. In May, 1863, he reached Bannock Montana, and in June of that same year located permanently at Virginia City, bringing his wife and daughter here in the spring of the following year. While primarily he had been attracted to the place on account of the mining possibilities, he soon saw that there was an excellent opening for a meat market, and was the pioneer in this line of business not only at Virginia City, but as far as is known he was the first to establish one in the entire state. As the place grew his business expanded and in time he erected a business block, in which his market was located. In 1868 he erected a comfortable residence and was numbered among the successful men of Virginia City. His health failed him, however, and he went to Missoula, Montana, in the hope of regaining it, but died there after a few months. A strong republican, he was elected assessor on his party ticket and re-elected, serving in 1872 and 1873, and he was also county commissioner for four years during the early days, and for the same period was county treasurer. In addition to serving in these offices he took a very active part in politics, and was one of the forceful men of his period. The Lutheran Church held his membership. He was a member of Montana Lodge No. 2, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he was past master; Virginia Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; Virginia Commandery No. 1, Knights Templar, and Oro y Plata Lodge No. 390, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. George Gohn was married at Central City, Colorado, to Anna Zweifel, born at Glarus, Switzerland, in 1842. She died at Virginia City, Montana, in 1898. Her parents brought her to the United States when she was twelve years old, and she was reared at Taunton, Massachusetts, and Central City, Colorado. Mr. and Mrs. George Gohn had the following children: Mary Frances, who died at Virginia City, Montana, in May, 1917, first married August Jessen, who was county clerk for four years, and after his death she married Gilbert H. Rew, also deceased, who was a carpenter and builder; George E., who was the second in the family; Philip Henry, who is assistant cashier of the Citizens National Bank of Alameda, California, and Ana May, who married Ira H. French, died in October, 1917, at Livingston, Montana, but he survives and lives at Spokane, Washington, where he is employed by the Portland Cement Company. Mr. French was born in Madison County.

Growing up at Virginia City, Mr. Gohn attended its schools until he was seventeen years of age and then began working in his father's meat market. In 1904 he was elected to the office of county treasurer, and held it for four years, and then returned to the meat market and conducted it until 1914, when he was elected county treasurer and the duties of that office occupied him for four years. Once more he came before the public, this time for the office of county clerk and recorder, and was elected by a gratifying majority, and is now discharging its duties, with offices in the courthouse. He is a very strong republican, and a power in local politics. Fraternally he belongs to Montana Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master; Virginia City Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons, of which he is past high priest; Virginia City Commandery No. 1, of which he is past commander, and Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Butte, Montana. He holds membership card No. 1 in Oro y Plata Lodge No. 390, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Alder Gulch Aerie No. 664, Fraternal Order of Eagles. Mr. Gohn owns his modern residence on the corner of Jackson and Idaho streets.

In April, 1896, Mr. Gohn was married to Miss Mary Frances Vickers at Virginia City. She is a daughter of Robert and Martha (Borrell) Vickers, residents of Virginia City. Mr. Vickers was a pioneer merchant of this city and is one of the highly respected men of his community. Mr. and Mrs. Gohn have had the following children born to them: George Harold, Robert Edward, Martha Mildred and Philip Harry. George Harold was born January 8, 1897, enlisted for service during the great World war in March, 1918, in the United States Navy, and made five trips on transport service as a fireman, and was mustered out in January, 1919. He is now in the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Butte, Montana. Robert Edward, who was born January 9, 1900, is in a meat business with George Dawson Vickers at Sheridan, Montana. Martha Mildred died when she was ten years of age. Philip Harry was born August 11, 1907, and is attending school. During all of his public service Mr. Gohn has proved his reliability and worth, and the people of Madison County are indebted to him for his faithfulness and capability, and he is so popular that if he cares to enter the race for another and higher office within the gift of the people there is no doubt but that he will be elected. Such men as he are rare in public office and when one of his calibre is secured the people like to retain him, knowing that in his hands their interests are carefully safeguarded.

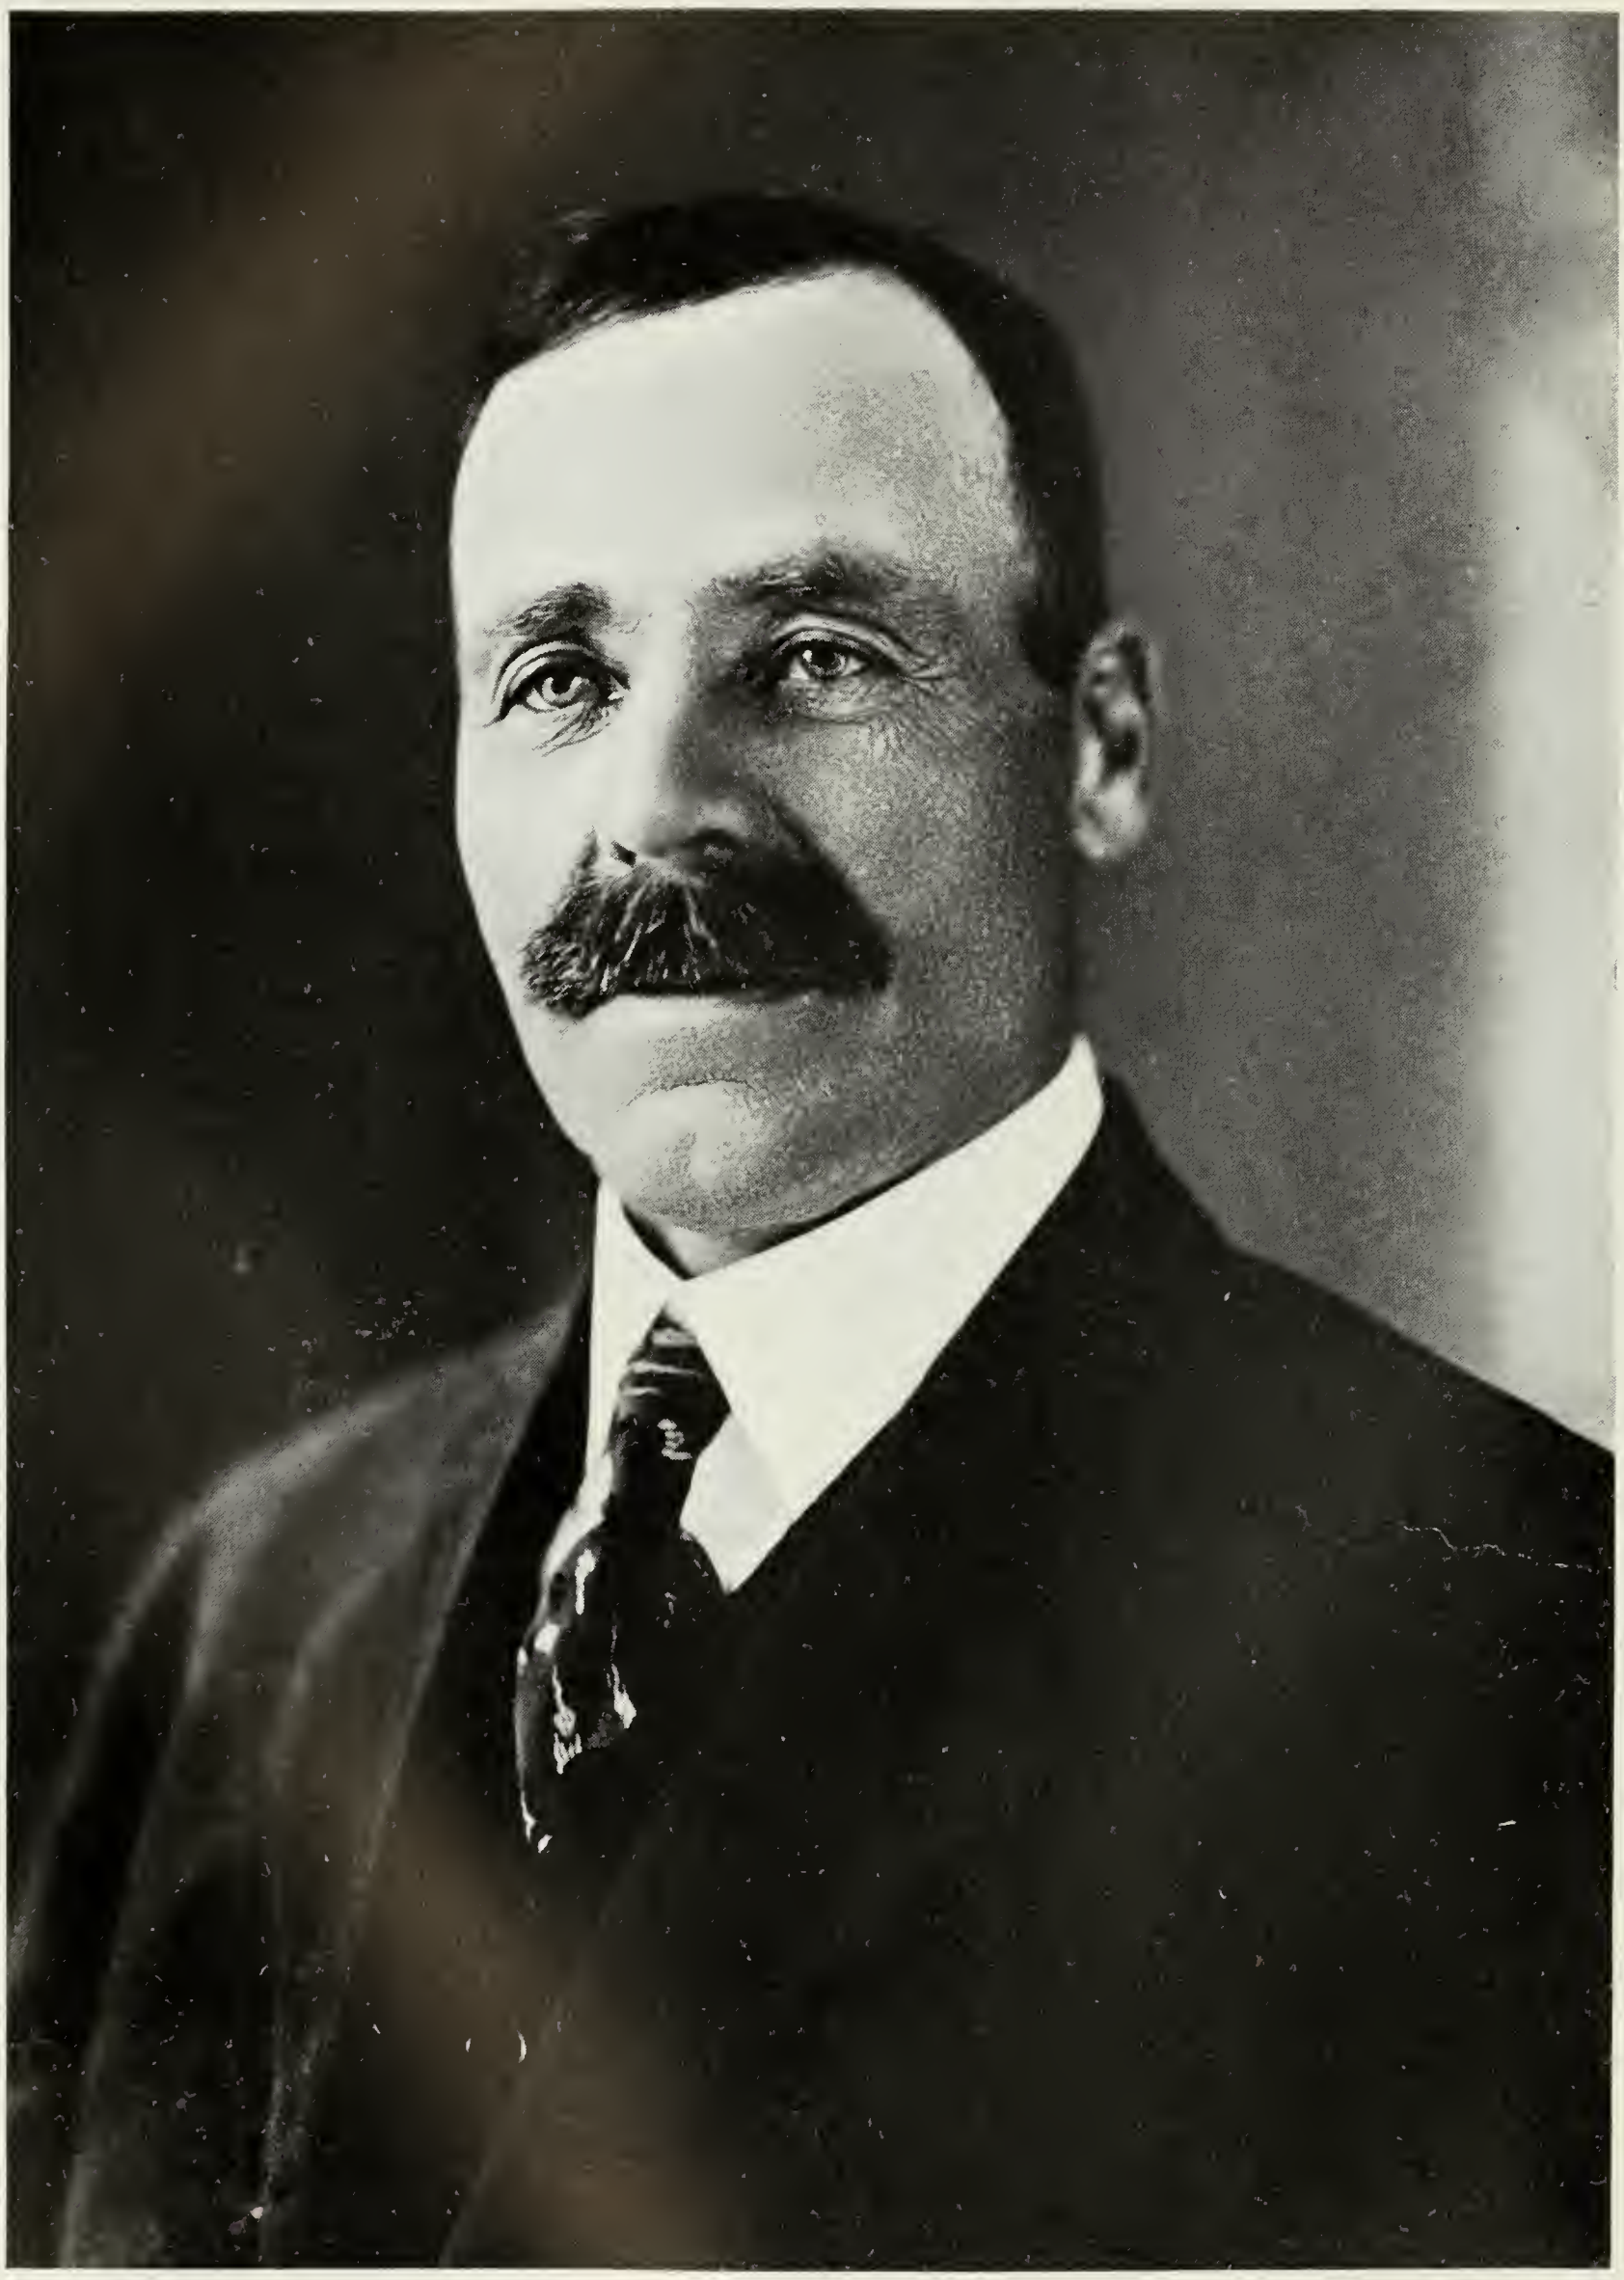
Robert Vickers. In business circles at Virginia City no man is held in higher regard than Robert Vickers, proprietor of one of the leading mercantile establishments of Madison County. He has not been a merchant all his life, however, for during earlier years, as a sailor, miner, laborer and traveler he was led into many strange places, and experience taught him lessons that have been very helpful in his present vocation, for which, judging from his success, nature evidently intended him.

Robert Vickers was born in Lincolnshire, England, February 15, 1830. His parents were William and Frances (Wilson) Vickers, both of whom were born in England. They were reared and married in Lincolnshire, where the mother of Mrs. Vickers died in 1899. When Robert, the youngest of the three children of the family was yet an infant, the father came alone to the United States and died shortly afterward in New Jersey. The two older sons were Dean Wilson and Thomas, the former of whom died on his ranch in Nebraska in 1913, and the latter of whom, a sailor, probably lost his life on the sea.

Mr. Vickers attended school near his mother's cottage in England until he was old enough to become a sailor, and before settling in the United States made two trips from Great Britain to New Orleans, one to Quebec, Canada, and then shipped on a vessel that rounded Cape Horn and sailed to its port on the coast of Chili, South America. By that time the youth had wearied of the life of a sailor, and, taking advantage of opportunity, escaped from the ship, and alone and on foot made his way to the City of Valparaiso. For a time he found employment in the harbor of that city, and made two short trips along the coast on a sailing ship, but it was his ambition to reach the United States and he put forth every effort to do so. In the spring of 1854 he reached San Francisco, and for the next ten years followed mining in the State of California and in Nevada, and at Austin, in the latter state, spent some months engaged in contracting and building. In April, 1865, Mr. Vickers came to Virginia City, and after following mining for eighteen months accepted a position as clerk in a store. In 1867 he established a clothing store in partnership with Henry Elling, but in the following year sold his interest to Mr. Elling and went back to England on a visit.

A year later Mr. Vickers returned to Virginia City and embarked again in the mercantile business, for twenty months conducting a tobacco and cigar store, then, in partnership with Edward Walter, bought the clothing store of Cohen Brothers, but sold his interest one year afterward. Mr. Vickers led an open air life for the next three years, buying and operating a ranch, then returned to the clothing business and conducted a store for nine months, following which he was in the sheep business for eighteen months. In the meanwhile he had become somewhat interested in politics and was elected assessor of Madison County, to the duties of which office he gave attention for two years. Relieved of official responsibilities, he returned once more to the business field, and again with Henry Elling as a partner, bought a clothing store and they built up a fine business. After the death of Mr. Elling, Mr. Vickers bought the Elling interest from the heirs and has continued the business until the present. He has developed and expanded it into one of the leading stores in Madison County.

In England, on April 5, 1869, Mr. Vickers was united in marriage to Miss Martha E. Borrell, who was born and educated in England. In 1919 Mr. and Mrs. Vickers celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. They have had the following children: Robert A., who is editor of the Hardin Tribune, resides at Hardin, Montana; Mary F., who is the wife of George E. Gohn; Dean, who lives at Tacoma, Washington; Nellie, who is the wife of Luther V. Buford, who has charge of the waterworks at Long Beach, California; George D., who is in the meat market business at Sheridan, Montana; Richard B., who is agent for the National Biscuit Company at Butte, Montana; Bessie M., who is the wife of Walter M. Brown, a mining engineer at Searchlight, Nevada; Martha F., who is the wife of Benjamin F. Stutenbury, of Virginia City, gives her father assistance in his business, and Ella R., the wife of Paul L. Mitchell, who is a druggist at Kansas City, Missouri



Pete Johnson

Mr. Vickers has been an active and public-spirited citizen since coming to Virginia City, taking an interest in all substantial enterprises for the public welfare and furthering all movements looking to law and order. He owns one of the city's comfortable and attractive residences. With his family he belongs to the Episcopal Church. In politics he is a democrat and at times has accepted public office, in which he has given honest faithful service. He has been school trustee many years and has served as alderman of his ward. His Masonic connections include membership in Virginia City Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he was worshipful master for five successive years; Virginia City Chapter No. 1., Royal Arch Masons, and was grand high priest of the state; Virginia City Commandery, Knights Templar, and for the past twenty years has been secretary of the Chapter and Commandery; and Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Helena. He also was grand patron of the Grand Chapter of the Order of Eastern Star of Montana.

PETE JOHNSON. A highly respected citizen of Belt who, although an American by adoption only, has had the interests of Cascade County at heart for a number of years is Pete Johnson, a man who has won success in life because he has been persistent and never permitted obstacles to thwart him in his course when once he knew he was right. He came here with no capital and, liking the country and having faith in its future, he cast his lot with the people of this locality.

Pete Johnson was born in Sweden on February 13, 1863, and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Oleson, both of whom are deceased, the father dying in 1904, at the age of ninety-two years, and the mother passing away when the subject was a lad of nine years. He is the seventh in order of birth of their eight children, six of whom are living. The father was an honest, hard-working farmer in Sweden and a member of the Lutheran Church.

Pete Johnson attended the public schools of his native land, and at fifteen years of age he shipped as a sailor on an ocean-going ship, following that vocation for some time. In the spring of 1880 he came to the United States, spurred by the hope of bettering his opportunity for advancement in this land of opportunity. Landing at New York City, he soon thereafter went to Chicago, where he remained for about four months, during which time he was employed in Kirk's soap factory, receiving $1 a day. In the fall of that year he went to Kearney, Nebraska, where he was employed as a farm hand, working from sunrise to sunset, for which he received $7 a month and his board. Following this experience he was for about one and a half years employed as a section hand on the Union Pacific Railroad, at $1.10 a day. During the summer of 1882 Mr. Johnson was employed in a brick yard in Denver, Colorado, following which he was for a short time again employed on a railroad at Gunnison, Colorado. Returning to Denver, he obtained work for a time in the Union Pacific Railway shops, but soon went to Pocotello, Idaho, where he went to work for the Oregon Short Line Railroad. For about three months he helped to lay the rails over the Snake River at the American Falls, Idaho, and then went to Grass Creek, Utah, where he mined coal for two months. He was next employed at the coal mines at Rock Springs, Utah, thence returning to Denver and not finding work there he went to Trinidad, Colorado, where he mined coal for a time and also at Ingleville, Colorado. Then in 1883, having determined to see more of the world, he went to San Francisco, and from there started for Alaska, that being during the crest of the excitement over the gold discoveries there. When he arrived at Victoria, British Columbia, he met a number of men who were returning from Alaska, having been unfortunate in their search for the precious metal and, discouraged by their stories of conditions there, he returned to Seattle, Washington, and engaged in mining at Newcastle, about twenty miles from Seattle. From there he walked to a place called Ensworth, there having been no railroad across the Cascade Mountains at that time, making a total distance of 275 miles which he had walked overland in nine days, the greater part of the time without food. That was in the month of July, but at that time the Cascade Mountains, over which he walked, had from a foot to three feet of snow. He then traveled by rail to Butte, Montana, reaching there in 1884, and during the following year he was employed in mines and smelters. From there he went to Anaconda, where he was employed in the Anaconda Company smelter for some time. From there he went to Timber Line, where he was employed in coal mining, but in 1886 he was again employed in mining at Butte. He walked from Butte to Helena at that time, there being no railroad between Helena and Butte, then going to Marysville working in the mines there for three months, and then returning again to Helena. From there he drove a freight team to Great Falls, crossing the Missouri River on a ferry boat at Great Falls, this being before the time of the railroads here. He spent the summer and winter prospecting for coal in Sand Coulee. In the spring of 1887 he bought a team of horses and at Sackett he built the first lime kiln in that section of the country. About the same time he located a tract of Government land about eleven miles south of where the Town of Belt now stands, and at the head of Neal Creek. There he built him a log cabin and entered the improvement of the land, which at that time had not been surveyed. Up to 1889 he farmed his land during the summers and mined during the winter months. He continued the improvement and cultivation of his land and was prospered in his labors, so that he began adding to his possessions from time to time until today he is the owner of about 3,200 acres of land. In connection with his agricultural operations Mr. Johnson has also given some attention to the raising of live stock at times. He makes a specialty of Hereford cattle and has been very successful in every phase of his farming operations. His son Roy is now associated with him in the ranch business, permitting Mr. Johnson to look after his other interests. In 1920 he completed a hotel and store building at Great Falls, which has proven a good investment. It is also worthy of note that Mr. Johnson's foresight in building a lime kiln was rewarded later, for he furnished the major portion of the lime used in building operations in the City of Great Falls.

In January, 1892, Mr. Johnson was married to Anna Larson, who was born in Sweden, and to them have been born the following children: Jessie, who died at the age of twelve years; Roy A., who married Persis Paulson, has a daughter, Julia Eleanor. As stated above, Roy is associated with his father in the ranch business. He is a member of Cascade Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Great Falls.

Politically Mr. Johnson gives his support to the democratic party and has taken a keen and intelligent interest in local public affairs. His ability and public spirit were recognized when in 1906, and again in 1908, he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, in which position he rendered good service to the county. Fraternally he is a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. On arriving in Great Falls Mr. Johnson possessed $2 in money and the world of ambition to succeed.

L. F. Molleur, M. D. In the great emergencies of life that threaten disturbance of physical well being and often mental equilibrium, the first thought and call is for the help of a physician, and seldom, indeed, is this call ever unheeded. It was such an urgent call that brought Dr. L. F. Molleur to Virginia City in January, 1919, when an epidemic of influenza threatened to decimate the city and local medical men were taxed to the limit of their endurance. With professional skill he rendered generous and unselfish service at that time, and has remained here as a resident and practicing physician and surgeon.

L. F. Molleur was born at St. John, Canada. His parents were Francis and Eulalia (Bachard) Molleur, whose ancestors settled at St. John many years ago. His father was born there in 1829, followed an agricultural life and died there in 1911. He belonged to the liberal party in politics, and he was a faithful member of the Baptist Church. The mother of Doctor Molleur was born at St. John in 1833 and died there in 1888. In their family of children L. F. was the third in order of birth, the others being: Adele, who is the wife of Rev. Edward Pelletier, a minister of the Presbyterian Church at Sault Ste. Marie, Canada; Perrier, who is a farmer near St. Philip, Canada; Cyril, who is a physician in Canada; Helen, who is the wife of Stanislaus Choniere, a miner at Boise City, Idaho; and Mrs. A. Flockhard, whose husband is in the wholesale bakery business at Sault Ste. Marie.

Educational opportunities were at hand in Doctor Molleur's boyhood and after completing a course of study at St. John he entered Victoria College at Montreal and was graduated from that famous university in April, 1890, with the degrees of M. D. and C. M. He established himself in practice at Waltham, Massachusetts, and continued there for eight years, then came to the great West and entered into practice at Butte, Montana. Two years later he became a resident of Melrose, Montana, where he practiced for eighteen years, serving during a large part of that time as health officer of the city and also of Silver Bow County. He became interested to some extent in the cattle business and conducted a ranch in Silver Bow County, which he sold in 1916. He still owns his residence at Melrose.

At Butte, Montana, in 1915, Doctor Molleur was united in marriage to Miss Mary Dudden, who is a daughter of Benjamin and Johanna (Fulton) Dudden. The father of Mrs. Molleur was a sailor in early life but later engaged in placer mining and was the discoverer of what is known as the German Gulch Mine. He is survived by his widow, who lives near Butte in Silver Bow County. By a former marriage Doctor Molleur has two children, namely: Aline, who is the wife of Isaac Dodgson, a farmer and rancher near Melrose, and Eugene, who enlisted for service early in the great war as an aviator, in 1918 was sent with the American Expeditionary Forces to Europe and still remains abroad. Doctor Molleur has made many personal as well as professional friends since he came to Virginia City. In addition to attending to a rapidly growing practice, he is serving as health officer of Virginia City and Madison County. He is identified politically with the republican party, belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is a valued member of the New York Medical Society. He attends the Presbyterian Church.

George P. Leinenweber. To comprehend and supply the necessities of trade is the foundation stone of commercial life, and not only communities prosper when intelligence and efficiency enter the mercantile business, but states and countries seek such mediums in their dealings with each other. To buy and to sell may not be difficult to any man standing still, but to be able to buy judiciously in order to sell profitably is something different, for this means active expansion, further opportunities, more distribution of wages and wider usefulness. Hence, the successful business man is a beneficent factor in a community, for his advancement means its chance of progress. In this connection may be mentioned an able business man of Alder City, George P. Leinenweber, who has built up a large mercantile enterprise here on a sound commercial foundation.

George P. Leinenweber was born in Madison County, Indiana, October 11, 1869. His parents were Mathias and Helen (Smith) Leinenweber, whose ancestors came from Germany and settled in Indiana in pioneer days. Mathias Leinenweber was born in 1839, and was one of the early settlers in Madison County, where he still lives on his pioneer farm, long since retired from active life. He married Helen Smith, who died in Madison County in 1909. Of their nine children George P. was the fourth in order of birth, the others being as follows: Rose, who lives in the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, is the widow of Joseph Speltz, who was a farmer; Lizzie, who is the wife of Frank Wolf, who is a farmer in Madison County, Indiana; John, who is a farmer in Illinois; Matthew, who is a farmer in Madison County; Frank, who came to Montana and engaged in mining, died at Boulder when twenty-eight years old; William, who is foreman of a stone quarry, lives at Indianapolis; Maggie, who is the wife of Andrew Burke, a farmer in Madison County, and Ella, who is a Sister of Charity and travels as a Catholic teacher.

George P. Leinenweber obtained his education in the country schools in Madison County. He remained at home assisting his father until twenty-one years of age, in the meanwhile gaining a knowledge of the carpenter trade. This he put to good purpose after coming to Missoula, Montana, in 1891, where he remained one year working as a carpenter and builder. His skill grew with experience, and during the following year at Bozeman he did a large amount of building, continuing in the same line at Virginia City. In 1901, however, when he came to Alder, he turned his attention to another line. Having traveled over a wide extent of country he had noted what the people needed most in order to live comfortably and make headway on farm and ranch and in the home. He resolved therefore to supply these needs. In the above year he established his large general store at Alder, securing a fine business location on Main Street, and put in one of the largest stocks ever brought to this section of Madison County. It covers all kinds of merchandise except dry goods, and includes farm implements and flour and feed. As a merchant he has been very successful, for patrons soon realized that they were being dealt with honestly. Since locating permanently at Alder Mr. Leinenweber has invested in property and has large holdings in city and vicinity. He owns all the land between his store and the river, owns his handsome store building and commodious warehouse, and has one of the most comfortable modern residences of the town.

At Virginia City in 1897 Mr. Leinenweber was united in marriage to Miss May Gilbert, a daughter of Henry and Margaret Gilbert. The father of Mrs. Leinenweber, the late Henry S. Gilbert, was a pioneer of Madison County, Montana, and formerly was a prominent brewer in Virginia City, in which place his widow still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Leinenweber have two sons, Orlando and Gilbert. The former assists his father when at home, but is a student in the Beaverhead County High School at Dillon, Montana. The latter also assists his father and is attending school at Alder. They both are promising and popular young men. In early manhood, Mr. Leinenweber became affiliated with the democratic party and has been a loyal supporter of its principles and policies ever since. He has frequently taken a useful part in civic affairs as a good citizen, but has accepted no political honors. He has been a Mason many years and belongs to the Blue Lodge and Chapter at Virginia City. He is a liberal contributor to all good causes and is universally respected.

James H. Hadzor, postmaster of Sheridan, is a native Montanan, and has been in business and official life in several localities of the state.

He was born in Madison County, in which is located the Town of Sheridan, where he has his home today, on July 26, 1887. His father, George F. Hadzor, was born at Newry, Ireland, in 1838 and was a boy when his parents came to Canada. In early manhood he went to the mining districts of the great West, was a miner at Salt Lake City, Utah, where he married, and in 1866 he came as a pioneer to Montana, crossing overland from Salt Lake City by prairie schooner. He engaged in gold mining at Pony, and then took up a homestead of 160 acres near Norris. This homestead is still owned by his widow. He lived on it and engaged in mining at the same time. His homestead is irrigated land located two miles south of Norris. As an expert miner his services were frequently employed by Marcus Daly. He was a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. George F. Hadzor, who died at his home near Norris in 1907, married Bessie Brown, who was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1840, and is making her home at the ranch near Norris. She is the mother of thirteen children, a brief record of whom follows: Isabell, wife of J. D. McLeod, a lumber and coal dealer and rancher at Norris; George B., on the home ranch at Norris; Marion, who died in childhood; Elizabeth, deceased wife of E. A. Barter, a rancher at Norris; Agnes, with her mother; Isaac D., connected with the Montana Power Company at Butte; James H.; Robert C. and Ray, both on the home farm; Paul, who is employed in a meat market at Ennis; Montana, working in a store at Harrison, was a soldier in the great war, enlisting in 1918 with the Ninety-First Division, taking part in the famous San Mihiel campaign, the Battle of Argonne Forest and serving as a machine gunner, being mustered out in May, 1919; Grace, wife of Lincoln McDonald, a rancher near Norris, and Edna, the youngest, a professional pianist and musician at Butte.

James H. Hadzor acquired his early education in the rural schools of Madison County. He left school and home at the age of twenty and spent three years in a store at Ennis, for six months was an employe of Lutey Brothers grocery house at Butte, was in a general store at Logan six months, and for four years was connected with the Buford Mercantile Company at Alder. He then established a business of his own, but after a year and a half sold out and for two terms or four years was deputy sheriff of Virginia City. On January 1, 1917, he located at Sheridan where he conducted a confectionery store and billiard hall. April 1, 1918, he was appointed acting postmaster and was commissioned postmaster April 24, 1919.

Mr. Hadzor is a democrat in politics. He is affiliated with Virginia City Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Oro y Plata Lodge No. 390 of the Elks at Virginia City, and Ruby Valley Aerie No. 1780 of the Fraternal Order of Eagles at Sheridan.

Mr. Hadzor married at Virginia City in 1910 Miss Viola Adams, a daughter of Elijah and Mary (McKee) Adams. Mrs. Adams lives with Mr. and Mrs. Hadzor. Her father was sheriff at Virginia City at the time of his death. Mr. and Mrs. Hadzor have three children: Howard, born August 23, 1912; Francis, born in 1913, and Bessie, born April 1, 1918.

Elmer J. Morse. Besides being postmaster of Laurin, Elmer J. Morse is associated as a partner with his brother, Oliver, in the ownership and management of the leading general mercantile establishment of the town, a business which has been built up on progressive lines and has an immense volume of trade over the territory tributary to Laurin.

Mr. Morse was born at Gering, Nebraska, June 3, 1889. His paternal ancestors were Scotch and colonial settlers in Massachusetts. His grandfather, Oliver Guernsey Morse, was born in Massachusetts in 1790, and spent his active life as a farmer at Binghampton, New York, where he died. Elmer J. Morse, Sr., father of the Laurin merchant, was born in Massachusetts in 1843 and was reared at Binghampton, New York. Before he reached his majority he enlisted in 1861 in the One Hundred and Third New Jersey Regiment of Infantry, and went through the period of hostilities of the Civil war as a Union soldier. After some years as a farmer in the East he located at Gering, Nebraska, in 1886, and continued farming in that state until 1895, when he retired and moved to Overbrook, Kansas, where he died June 5, 1897. He had served as county commissioner of Scotts Bluff County, Nebraska; was a very active member of the Baptist church and a republican and a Mason. He married at Grand Island, Nebraska, Nancy Shroy, who was born in Michigan in 1859 and died at Overbrook, Kansas, June 8, 1896. Ella, the oldest of their children, is the widow of James Tregemba, who was a farmer in Kansas, and she now lives at Topeka; Effie J. is the wife of Walter Nead, a teacher in the public schools of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Oliver S. is the business partner of his brother, Elmer, as noted below; Elizabeth is the wife of J. A. Garber, a farmer at Lone Star, Kansas; Elmer J. is the fifth in age; Myrtle is the wife of A. A. Chapman, a carpenter who makes a specialty of elevator construction and lives at Kenesaw, Nebraska, and Marshall, who died at Laurin, Montana, February 23, 1919.

Elmer J. Morse received his early education in the public schools of Overbrook, Kansas, being six years of age when his parents moved to that town. He graduated from high school in 1909, and in the same year came to Laurin, Montana. He worked as a sheep herder and ranch hand until 1913, when he joined his brother in establishing a general mercantile business, and they have rapidly developed the stock, the trade and the resources until they have the leading establishment of the kind in that part of Madison County.

Mr. Morris is a republican voter, is affiliated with Sheridan Lodge No. 20, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, with Virginia City Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; also the Knights Templar Commandery No. 1 at Virginia City, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte. On November 22, 1915, at Butte, Mr. Morse married Mrs. Anona Dahler, daughter of Ransom Widner and Annie McCanna. Her mother lives at Laurin. Her father, now deceased, was a gardener at Laurin. Mr. and Mrs. Morse have two children: Howard, born December 30, 1916, and Clifford born December 6, 1918.

Oliver S. Morse, the other member of the firm of Morse Brothers at Laurin, was born at Cozad, Nebraska, October 1, 1884, was educated in the public schools of Atchison, Kansas, and at the age of thirteen became a farm hand. In 1906 at the age of twenty-two he came to Montana, located at Laurin and like his brother was a sheep herder and for three years was in the sheep business for himself before he became a merchant. He is a republican and is affiliated with Shelton Lodge of Masons at Shelton, Nebraska.

June 15, 1915, at Butte, he married Miss Jessie Bock, daughter of J. D. and Jennie (Wilcox) Bock, now residents of Laurin, where her father is a farmer. Oliver Morse and wife also have two children: Nancy June, born June 1, 1916, and Oliver Daniel, born December 29, 1918.

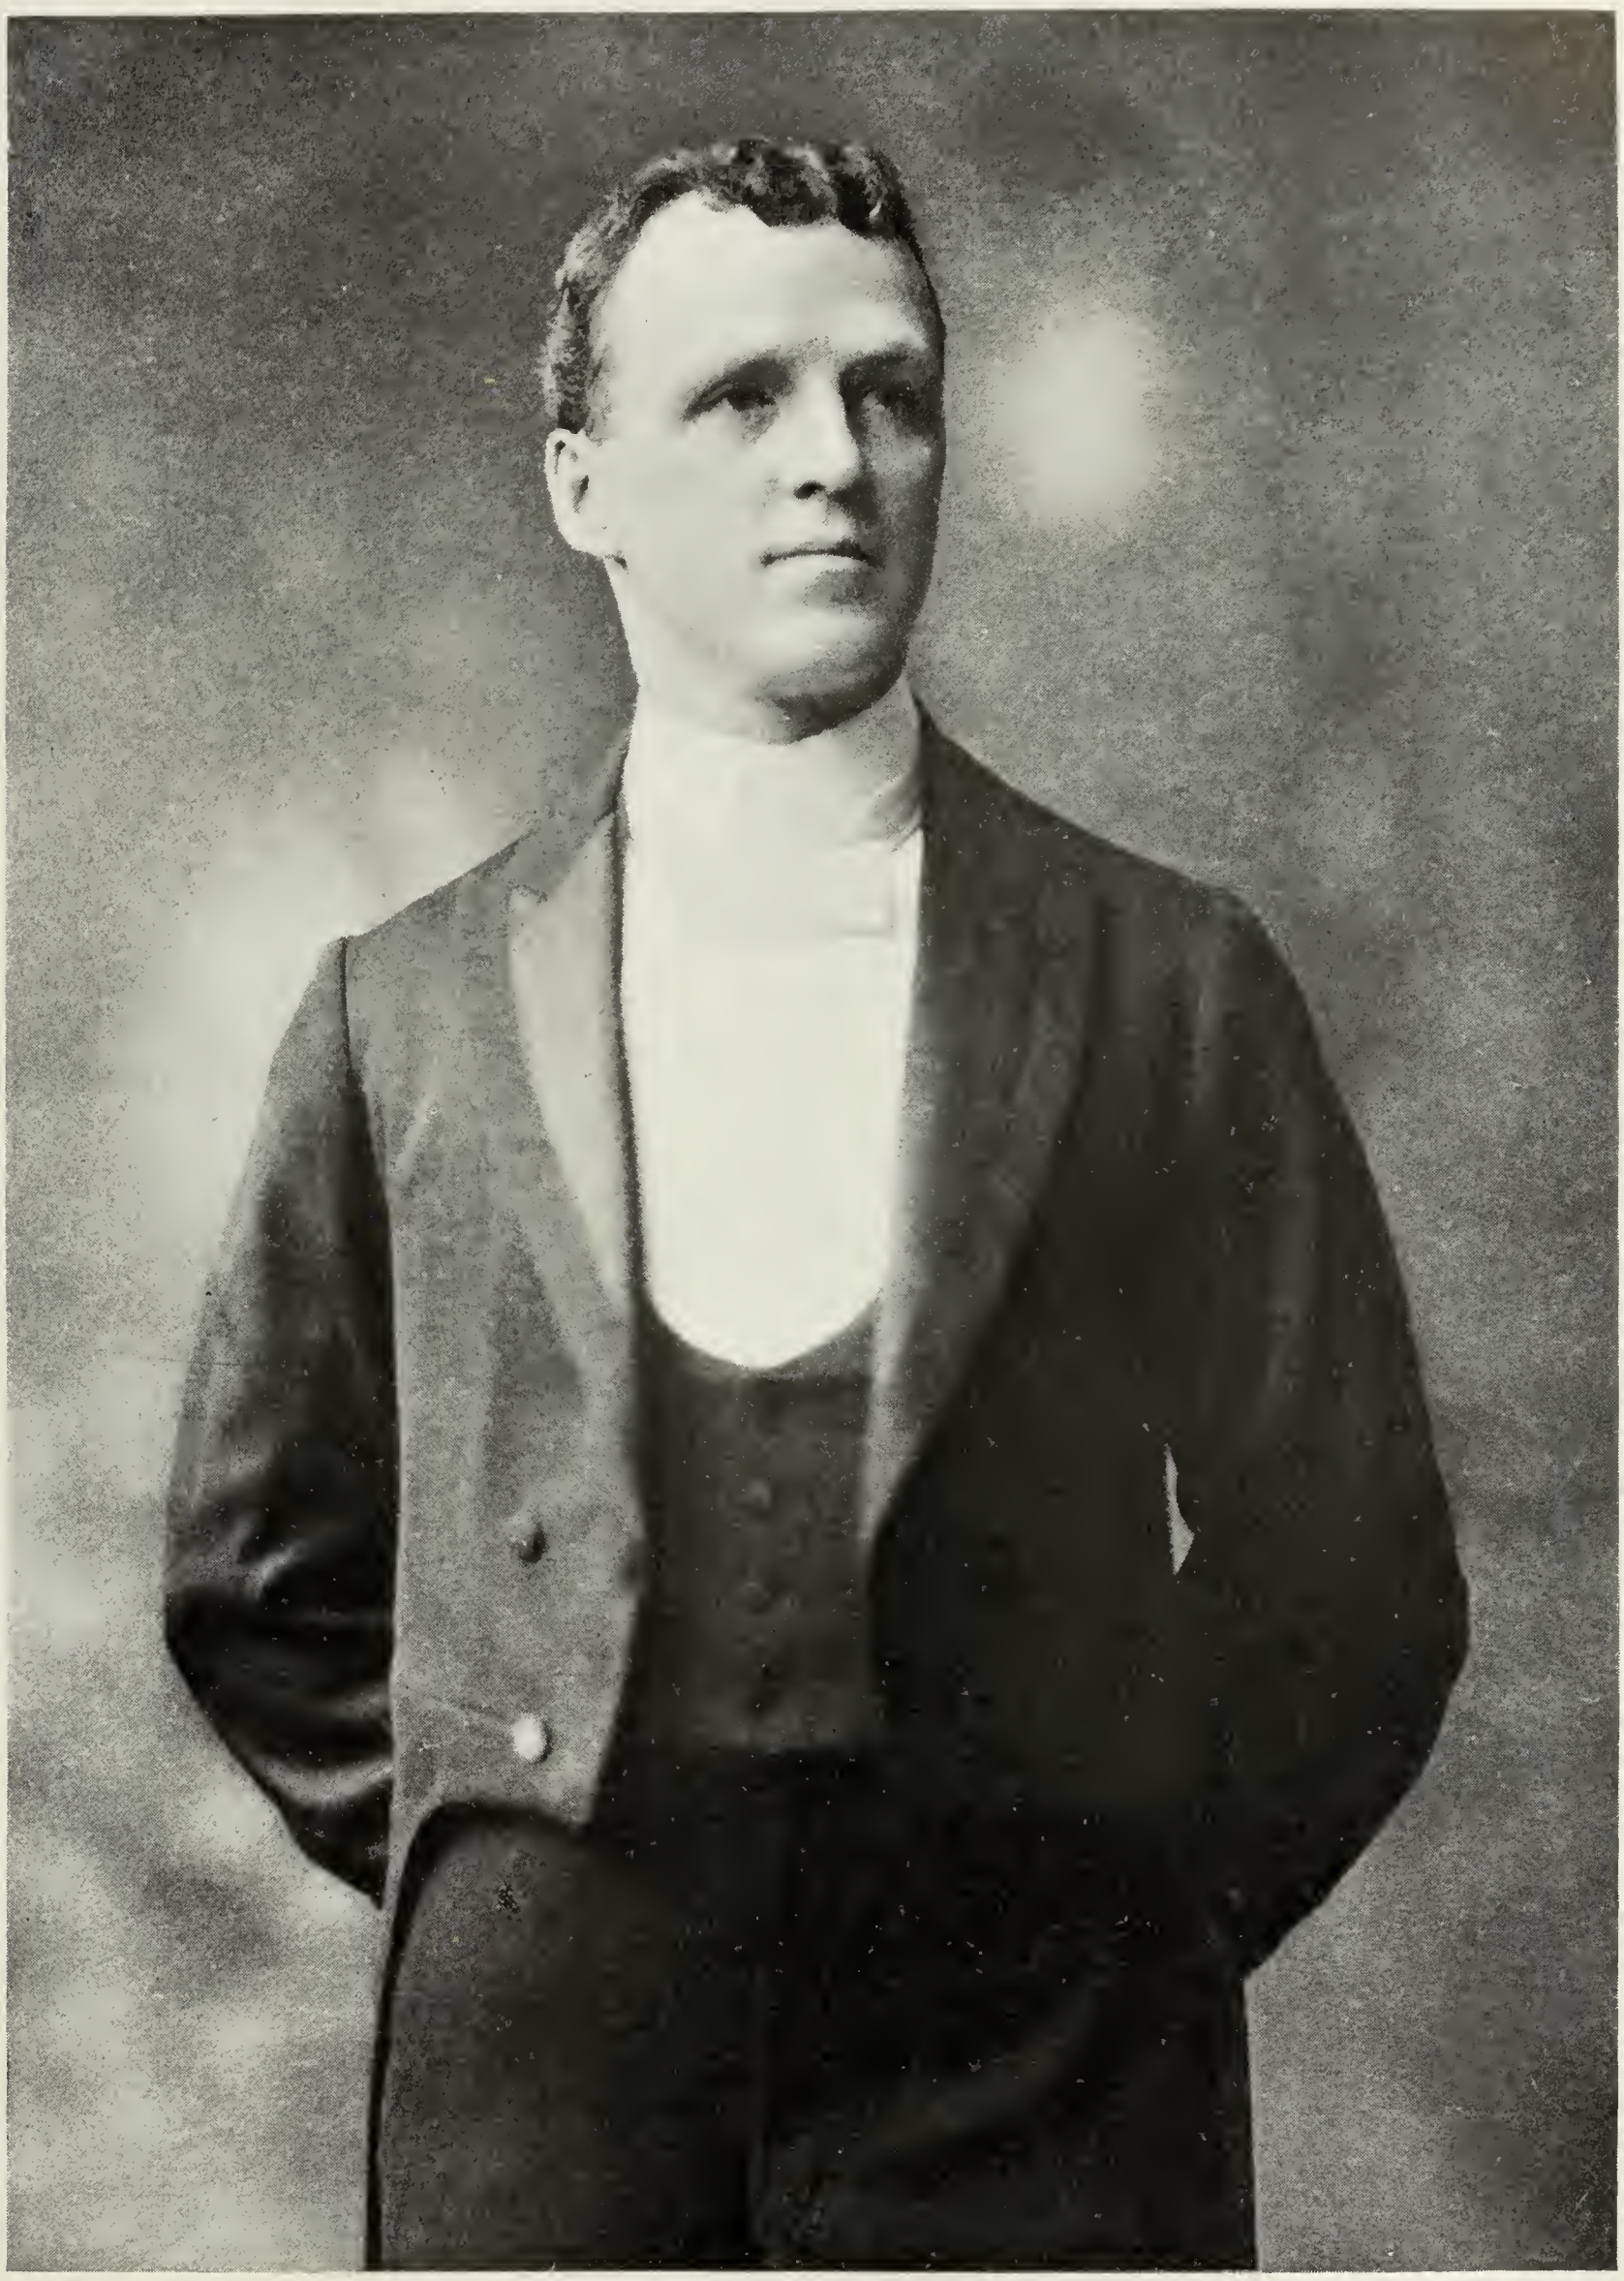
Herbert W. Brown. Among the citizens of Central Montana who have built up a comfortable home and surrounded themselves with valuable personal property, few have attained a greater degree of success than Herbert W. Brown, one of the public spirited citizens of Cascade County. With few opportunities except what his own efforts were capable of mastering and with many discouragements to overcome, he has made a success in life and has the gratification of knowing that the locality of his choice has been benefited by his presence and his counsel. He is regarded as a good business man, an excellent manager, a man who possesses sound judgment and keen foresight, and who believes in pressing forward, keeping the wheels of the car of civilization ever moving up the steeps. He has ever enjoyed the respect and esteem of those who know him, because of his friendly manner, business ability, his interest in public affairs and upright living, and he is regarded by all as one of the substantial and worthy citizens of the Town of Cascade, in whose business affairs he is taking a conspicuous part.

Herbert W. Brown was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, on the 29th day of April, 1866, and is the son of Mathew W. and Emily (Lynch) Brown. The father was born in Scotland and died in 1902, at the age of eighty-four years, while his wife, who was a native of England, died in 1907, at the age of seventy-eight years. They were married in St. Paul, Minnesota, and became the parents of three children, two of whom are living, the subject of this sketch being the youngest. Mathew W. Brown when but a mere child was brought to the United States by his parents, who located later on at Peterboro, Ontario, Canada. There he was reared and educated in the public schools, one of his playmates being James J. Hill, who was destined later to become one of the greatest railroad men of America. In young manhood Mr. Brown came to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he engaged in contracting and building. He was successful and spent the remainder of his days in that city. He was a republican in his political views.

The subject's maternal grandfather, Lynch, was an officer in the English army, but was retired on half pay and located near Guelph, Canada. He returned to England on a visit, and lost his life while on the return trip to America. The vessel on which he took passage was wrecked, and he made it first duty to secure the safety of two English girls who had been placed in his care, his own life being lost, however. His daughter, the subject's mother, later came to St. Paul, Minnesota, with two younger brothers, and it is a matter of record that she taught the first private school in St. Paul, in the winter of 1856-7. She also taught her students to play cricket, theirs being the first game of cricket to be played in St. Paul. She was a deep student of history and wrote many interesting articles and papers on that subject.

Herbert Brown possesses several very interesting historical relics, one of which is a map of North America in 1795, drawn on parchment and issued by A. Arrowsmith. It is from a survey made in 1771-2-3 for the King of England and the map was left to the subject by his mother. The latter's great-uncle, who was among the soldiers who reinforced General Wolf at Quebec, had taken with him from the old homestead a spice cabinet to use as a container for his fishing tackle, and this cabinet also was given to the subject by his mother. Mr. Brown also possesses an Indian chief's coat, covered with Indian scalps, and which was given to him by General Carlin, and who was in command of the Standing Rock Indian agency in Dakota. It was to General Carlin that Chief Sitting Bull surrendered. The coat had been handed down from chief to chief for many years, and is the coat referred to in Mrs. Custer's book, "Boots and Saddles." Mr. Brown has a fine collection of Indian curios, of which he is justifiably proud and of which he takes good care.

Herbert W. Brown is mainly indebted to his mother for his education, she having been a woman of unusual mental attainments in many lines. His first employment was in a hardware store at the age of eleven years. Later he attended a business college in St. Paul and in 1881 he was employed as a messenger in the Second National Bank of that city. Two years later he became paying teller, a responsible position for a boy of seventeen years. He then changed to the First National Bank of St. Paul, where he held several positions of trust and responsibility. In 1890 Mr. Brown went to Duluth, Minnesota, and in partnership with W. H. Alworth, engaged in the handling of pine lands and city real estate. The following year he moved to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and engaged in the grain commission business, under the firm name of the Gilbert Grain Company, of which Mr. Brown was secretary and treasurer. The financial stringency of 1893 compelled him to sacrifice practically all he possessed, and Mr. Brown obtained employment in a warehouse of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway. Beginning in an humble capacity, Mr. Brown by faithful and intelligent discharge of the duties assigned to him received promotions from time to time until he became traveling passenger and freight agent. In 1901 he was made traveling passenger and freight agent jointly for that road and the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, with headquarters at Helena, Montana. Later he was appointed contracting freight agent at St. Paul, which position he resigned to become manager of the South St. Paul Grain Company, distributors of a special sheep and cattle feed. Subsequently he resigned that position and in the winter of 1909 he came to Helena, Montana, and in the following



H. W. Brown.

February he became manager and cashier of the First State Bank of Cascade, holding that position until 1914, when he resigned and since that time has been devoting himself to the making of farm and livestock loans, in which he has met with splendid success. He is greatly interested in the farm development of this section of the state and in live stock, both of which have been greatly stimulated through his assistance. He was vice president of the Cascade Creamery Company and is joint owner with C. H. Austin of the Cascade Townsite Company.

Politically Mr. Brown has been a life-long supporter of the republican party, in the ranks of which he has been an active worker. In local public affairs he has been particularly interested and has been an effective and persistent worker for the welfare of the community. His public spiritedness and ability have been recognized by his fellow citizens in various ways. In April, 1915, he was elected mayor of Cascade, and so satisfactory was his administration of municipal affairs that two years later he was, against his personal desire, elected to succeed himself, and he was again elected in 1919 without opposition. In 1914 Mr. Brown rendered good service as president of the Good Roads Congress. In November, 1918, he was elected state representative, serving as a member of the Sixteenth General Assembly. In every position of responsibility, public or private, in which he has been placed he has so discharged his duties as to win the hearty commendation of all who know him and his work.

On April 29, 1903, Mr. Brown was married to Clara Bullard, a native of Montana and the daughter of Massena and Laura E. (Bywaters) Bullard. Mr. Bullard was a native of Virginia, who came to Montana in the '60s, and at the time of his death in 1914 he was one of the oldest lawyers in the state. He is survived by his widow. They were the parents of three children, of whom Mrs. Brown was the first born. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been born three children, Clara Bullard, Herbert W., Jr., and Marcia. Mr. Brown is a man of kindly and generous impulses, who easily makes friends of acquaintances. He has always been interested in outdoor sports and while a resident of Minnesota was a member of the well-known Minnesota Boat Club of St. Paul, in which he did effective work as an instructor in swimming and rowing. He was an expert swimmer and possesses a number of medals which he has won for his prowess as a swimmer in the waters of the United States and Canada. His life has been an inspiration to all who know him, for while advancing his own interests he has never lost sight of his obligations to the community in general.

JOHN F. FOX has been a resident of Twin Bridges twenty-two years, and during that time has been a constant stimulating factor in local affairs. He is one of he oldest merchants by continuous service in Madison County. He has joined with other local citizens in promoting other business enterprises needful for the prosperity of the community, and his active public spirit has touched the progress and history of his locality at many points.

Mr. Fox was born in New York City, October 7, 1860, and began getting a practical acquaintance with business when a boy. His father, Peter Fox, was born in New York City in 1823, was in the clothing business in New York for some years and afterward became a clothing merchant at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where he died in 1884. He was a democrat and a Catholic. Peter Fox married Louisa Bethausen, who was born at Cologne, Germany, in 1825, and died at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in 1883. They had three sons: William P., a merchant at Sandcoulee Montana; John F. and Harry F., who is a clerk in a store at Milwaukee.

John F. Fox began his education in the public schools of New York City, also attended grammar school and high school at Milwaukee, and at the age of fifteen went to work in a Milwaukee store at $1.50 a week. For ten years altogether he worked in various mercantile establishments in Detroit, Michigan. In the meantime he came out to Montana and for six months was associated with his brother, William P., in establishing a store at Sheridan, conducted as Fox Brothers. He then went back to Detroit, and in 1899 established his home at Twin Bridges and opened the business in dry goods and clothing which in subsequent years has become the chief concern of its kind in that part of Southwestern Montana. Besides the cares and responsibilities entailed by this business Mr. Fox has been active in promoting mining and farming interests. He was the first president of the Farmers Elevator Company of Twin Bridges, and held that position for several years. He and some of the local farmers were instrumental in establishing the elevator as a means of better marketing facilities in this part of Madison County. Mr. Fox is a director of the First National Bank of Twin Bridges.

Politically he is a democrat, is affiliated with Oro y Plata Lodge No. 390 of the Elks at Virginia City, and is a member of the Catholic Church.

In 1888, at Detroit, Michigan, he married Miss Katherine Wolfschlager, a native of that city. They have one daughter, Edna, who is a graduate of the University of Montana at Missoula. She is now the wife of Washington J. McCormick, attorney and representative from Missoula in the Legislature.

VOLNEY J. HAIN, recorder and clerk of Musselshell County, and one of the most efficient men in his line in this part of the state, has earned the confidence of his fellow citizens since coming to Roundup. He was born on his father's farm in Tippecanoe County, Indiana, January 13, 1875, a son of Levi J. and Lucretia (Chineworth) Hain, both natives of Indiana, where he was born January 8, 1838. They had six children, five of whom are still living, Volney J. being the youngest. His mother died when he was two years old. Levi J. Hain was brought up to be a farmer and educated in the rural schools. When he reached maturity he began farming for himself in Tippecanoe County, and continued there until 1895, when he went to South Dakota, and, buying a farm, was engaged in raising wheat until 1901. He then moved to Winneshiek County, Iowa, and there conducted a farm, engaging in farming and stockraising until 1910, when he sold, and coming to Montana homesteaded in Wheatland County, where he is now residing. While he is a stanch republican, he has never cared to enter public life. He is a Mason.

Volney J. Hain attended the public schools of Tippecanoe County, Indiana, and the Lafayette, Indiana, Business College, from which he was graduated in 1897, following which he was bookkeeper for several Lafayette concerns. In 1898 he went to Chicago, Illinois, and continued to be a bookkeeper in that city until 1905, when he came West to Dillon, Montana, as forwarding agent for the state line running from Red Rock to Salmon, Idaho. Two years later he became bookkeeper for John W. Morton, of Dillon, Montana, and remained with him for eighteen months. Seeing an opening at Dell, Montana, he opened and conducted a hotel there for two years, and then, selling, he returned to Chicago, and for six months was engaged there in a merchandise business. Once more he came to Montana, this time selecting Roundup as his objective point and was bookkeeper for the Republic Coal Company until he was made deputy county clerk of Musselshell County in 1914, holding that office until he was appointed in 1917 clerk and recorder of the county, and elected to the office on November 5, 1918, being admirably fitted by inclination and experience for it. Fraternally he belongs to the Loyal Order of Moose. The Congregational Church holds his membership.

On February 13, 1902, Mr. Hain was united in marriage with Cora May, who was born in Allen County, Ohio, a daughter of Jacob May, a fruit-grower and farmer of Brethren, Michigan.

Robert A. Morrill, M. D. Medicine is a subject as ancient as civilization itself, and in the classification of the world's professions it assumed its rightful place at the head of the list. Eminent men have adorned it in all ages, and able men have added luster to the pages of its history as a profession, and few have failed to honor it with their confidence either in or out of its ranks. Among the earliest to bring its immortal precepts into practice in Sidney and he who owns to the distinction of being the oldest in point of service in this field today is Dr. Robert A. Morrill, the gentleman whose name introduces this brief review.

Doctor Morrill dates his advent to Montana and to Sidney from June, 1906. He joined the promising village when it was the object of many inquiring glances from people from the Middle West, and its environment commended it as a future metropolis of the rich valley about it. Like the village itself, the doctor was beginning his career and it offered him the same encouragement it held out to other settlers, that of a seat at the council-house of citizenship if he proved his worth. He accepted the challenge and measured lances with the best that came, and is in the enjoyment of the reward which real service in one's calling always brings.

While practicing his art and contributing materially toward the health of his community through the fifteen years of his residence here, Doctor Morrill has revealed his capability in other directions. There was an opportunity for personal profit in the acquirement of valley lands, and he seized it and has developed under irrigation an acreage which stands out prominently as a food and forage-producing entity. He has acquired other lands upon the branch tributary to Sidney, and more than 1,000 acres of this bears the earmarks of his ownership in its permanent improvement and in the work of the reduction and cultivation of the soil. This ranch-farm at Mt. Pleasant is stocked with grade Shorthorn cattle and is the making of one of the desirable country estates of the locality. Sugar beets, alfalfa and corn comprise the products of the annual harvest of his valley farm and have proven themselves to be reliable as moneymakers and most satisfactory as real friends of the farmer. He passed through the experience of homesteading on the hill lands tributary to Sidney, and his patent to this land is a mute witness of some adversities which he encountered while the process of proving-up was going on.

Doctor Morrill divided his time between his profession and community interests which had to be served and helped to carry the burden of town as well as country development. He served as an alderman under different administrations of government in Sidney, and was on the council when the water and light plants were provided for, and when the movement for permanent walks assumed permanent and substantial form and was crystallized into the concrete paths about the city today. He proved himself a home builder through the erection of a generous modern residence, one of the attractive domiciles of Sidney, and he has in other directions forwarded matters which added to the value of property and the enjoyment of life in the county seat.

Politics has had little part in Doctor Morrill's life work. He followed the example set him at home and cast a republican ballot for Major McKinley for president when he came of age. While he has deviated from this course in later years, in national contests he is convinced that his early judgment was correct and that the policies and performances of the republican party are entitled to his future confidence and support. His parents' home was a Methodist one and he is a member of the same church where he received his youthful instruction. His fraternal connection is with the Masons, and he is a member of the Blue Lodge in Sidney.

Before he finished his education Doctor Morrill gave a year of active service in our first national effort in freeing the world of autocracy. He joined Company H of the Thirteenth Minnesota Infantry for service in the Spanish-American war. His captain was Bjornstad and his colonel Ames, and his regiment was mobilized at St. Paul and was ordered to Manila at once. It sailed from San Francisco on the transport City of Para and reached its destination August 7, 1898. It took part in the battle of Manila six days after it landed and served in the campaigns of General Lawton's army. Other engagements in which the doctor took part were Guiguinta, Mariquina Road, Santa Maria, Guingua, San Miguel, Salacat and San Isidro. Going to the Philippines, the City of Para stopped at Honolulu and on its return the transport Sheridan called at Japanese ports and gave the Thirteenth Minnesota a view of the America of the Orient. The regiment sailed from Manila for home August 13, 1899, and was mustered out at The Presidio October 4th, and Doctor Morrill immediately resumed his college work with as good a physique as he entered the service more than a year before. He is a member of Camp Carlton Post, Veterans of the Spanish-American war, at St. Paul.

The Morrills of this review are of the ancients of New England. The old home is on the Merrimac River in New Hampshire, where Doctor Morrill's grandparents were born. His father is Amon E. Morrill, of Byron, Minnesota, who accompanied his mother to Plainview, that state, in 1862 and grew up among relatives and friends and was educated there. The father was but eleven years old when taken away from his birthplace at Franklin, New Hampshire, and brought west, and he learned the trade of wheelwright and was running a shop of his own and attending school when but sixteen years old. He settled at Byron early and married there Ellen, a daughter of Robert Hastings, a son of Erin and a farmer. Mrs. Morrill was born in the State of New York, passed away in 1881, and Robert A. is her only surviving child.

Doctor Morrill was born in Byron, Minnesota, August 14, 1874, and after the public school he attended Hamline University. He graduated from that institution in 1901 with the degree of Ph. B., and then took up his medical studies in the university of his state at Minneapolis, and graduated from there in 1905. He spent a year as an interne in the St. Paul City and County Hospital, and then came to Montana and began the serious affairs of life in the profession to which he is attached. He is a member of the Yellowstone County Medical Society and of the Montana State Medical Society, and, as already stated, is the oldest practitioner in Richland County.

Doctor Morrill married in St. Paul, August 16, 1906, Miss Dorothy Briggs, born in Spring Valley, that state, and educated in the public schools of Minneapolis. The issue of Doctor and Mrs. Morrill are Robert A., Jr., and Jane Ellen, aged twelve and six years. Doctor Morrill was a member of the county war board while we were helping to settle the status of democracy in Europe and removing from world-control some of the ancient royal houses of the continent, and he entered seriously into the movements fathered by our government for winning the war.

John A. Stewart. The taming of nature and the beautifying of the landscape about Crane, a little hamlet along the west bank of the Yellowstone in Richland County, has been contributed to greatly by a quartet of brothers who have given unsparingly of their industry for many years. They took up the work of that material improvement which is so important in planting one seed of civilization in any new country during the decade following 1882, and have continued it actively until the former semi-arid but grassy terrain is yielding abundantly of food and forage for the wants of man. These brothers are the Stewarts, and it is to make unbiased mention of a trio of them whose association together has been so conspicuous in the achievement of community results that this brief article has to do.

Perhaps John A. Stewart, of this fraternal group, has lent a stronger hand than his brothers, because it has been longer applied to the task, and for this reason it is fitting that he be made the immediate subject of this notice. Jack Stewart, as everybody knows him, identified himself with this locality in 1883 and passed the first five years of his life here in the vicinity of where his father broke ground two years before he came. His pecuniary needs required him to seek employment as a ranch hand, and his first eight years were devoted to the service of the "HD" outfit, the property of Douglass and Mayo, a pioneer concern in the stock business here.

When he had acquired some capital Jack Stewart began a more independent career. He entered a homestead near the mouth of Crane Creek and entered the stock business himself. He associated himself with his brothers, Neil and A. Malcolm—dubbed by his friends "Sandy"—and the firm of Stewart Brothers handled cattle and horses under the brand "Squobble O" and came to be a concern of importance on the range here as growers and dealers in horseflesh and beef. Jack, after a number of years, purchased the interest of his partners, and as the community settled up he was rather forced out of the stock business. He purchased a section of land of the Northern Pacific Company, and when the railroad built through the locality he laid off the townsite of Crane, and his hotel was one of the first buildings to be erected on the site.

Thus it will be seen that Mr. Stewart was quite extensively interested in valley lands when the subject of irrigation was mentioned in connection with the watering of this whole valley. He signed as a member of the Water Users' Association, encouraged development by parting with parcels of his land to those who continued actual development under the new method, and four splendid farms have been carved out of his tract, 500 acres of which is responding bountifully to the hand of the husbandman. More than 200 acres of the section were prepared for the application of the new and artificial irrigation by him, and he farmed it strenuously until 1917, when he parted with this also and ceased his work of further development. An indication of the value to this region of the irrigation project may be had by referring to the rapid rise in the value of lands under the ditch. Mr. Stewart sold his final tract at $45 an acre, another tract of this section brought later $100 an acre, and more recently the owner sold another parcel of it for $135 an acre.

Jack Stewart followed his father into the United States, or came at his instance, from Ontario, Canada. He was born at Bowmanville, that province, March 25, 1863, was brought up on a farm and educated in the country schools. His father was David Stewart, who sought out this locality for the family in 1881, and who is mentioned further in the sketch of his son, David, in this work. With his hands and with the means at his command he has been an earnest promoter of the welfare of his locality since the acquirement of his homestead and the purchasing of the railroad section from which a quartet of good farms have been developed. He became a citizen by naturalization without delay after reaching the United States and allied himself with the republican party as a voter and is a member of the Richland County Central Committee of the party. He entered with enthusiasm into the erection of the first schoolhouse at Crane, and in earlier years he was a member of the District Board. In church matters he favored the organization of a community congregation and donated from his land a plot for the site of the first church, Congregational in denomination.

The Stewarts felt the cause of the United States during the World war as a personal interest and lent unstintedly their financial aid. Sandy Stewart, when he left Montana, went into Canada and there enlisted under the British flag to help fight the battle of the world for liberty and democracy, and he lies today in France, a sacrifice to the world cause. Every bond sale and every other drive for funds for the prosecution of the war was liberally supported by the brothers, who thereby rendered it much easier for Crane to "go over the top." Jack, Charles and Sandy Stewart never married, but Neil, who is one of the trio which lives in Crane, and who is older than Jack, married Arletta Gardner and is the father of three children. So it will be seen that the House of Stewart has not lagged in its duty to its community and its country. The importance of service in some useful capacity has not been overlooked, and, although few of them are family men, they have felt the thrill inspired by the presence of the newer generations and have been glad to help hang opportunities for them upon the pegs which mark their milestones from childhood to citizenship.

David Stewart. The Scotch name which introduces this article represents one of the numerous and worthy families of Richland County, and it has ever stamped its owners as among the sincere, industrious and honorable folk of their bailiwick. David Stewart, of whom it is the province of this review to make more than brief mention, has contributed much toward the popularity of the family about Crane and has passed almost a score of years in this locality.

He is a native of Bowmanville, Ontario, born fifty miles east of Toronto, Canada, July 18, 1856, and his coming to manhood was on his father's farm there. His is one of the ancient families of that British province and was founded by his grandfather, David Stewart, who immigrated from the Town of Refluch, Argyllshire, Scotland, when a young man and settled in the timber country of Ontario and turned his energies into the clearing of the land and the development of a home. He left nothing undone in the matter of posterity, for he gave six sons and two daughters to become citizens and virile beings about his declining years and to maintain the honor and integrity of the name. His sons were David, Neil, Duncan, Archibald, John and Peter, while his daughters were Jane and Jeanette, the former becoming the wife of John Lovkin and the latter dying without marriage.

David Stewart, the senior of this long list of sons of old David, was a child of three years when his parents immigrated from Scotland about 1834, and he drank draughts of frontier air deeply while lending a childhood and youthful hand to his father in the making of a wilderness home. He became a farmer himself when he assumed the dignity of a citizen, proved himself fairly successful as an accumulator of property, manifested an interest in the public affairs of his country in the consideration of public questions and lived in unofficial status through life. In the early '80s he prospected for a location along the boundary line of Canada, but within the United States, and chose it on the Yellowstone River in Montana. His destination by rail was Glendive, then the end of the Northern Pacific as it pointed westward, and he occupied the land in the Yellowstone Valley improved and developed by Jacob Wald and held a "squatter's" right there three years. He lived there from 1881 to 1884, and his was about the first attempt in all that locality made at farming. He was a compeer of Frank Lovering and John O'Brien, others who figured prominently among the early settlers of the region, and when he abandoned the place he returned to Canada and spent another seven or eight years, during which he made sure that his heart was with the pure air and the wild romance of the valley of the Yellowstone, and he returned here, but he was not permitted to take part long in the active affairs of the locality among his old neighbors, for death claimed him in March, 1898, when sixty-seven years old.

Continuing the reference to David Stewart, he married Barbara McMillin, who was born in Scotland, near the birthplace of her husband. She was only a child when she was taken to Canada, where she married, bore a numerous family and died when sixty-three years of age. Her children were: David, of this review; Neil, one of the trio of brothers now living in Crane; Jeanette, who married Robert Kelley; John Archibald, who is known universally as "Jack"; Barbara, who married Howard Bickford and died in Ontario; Alexander Malcolm, who was killed in battle in France while a Canadian soldier; Charles, a ranchman at Crane, Montana, and Maria, who died at Fairview, Montana, as Mrs. John McMillin.

David Stewart, the senior of this numerous family, was educated in the country school near Leskard Village as he passed through his childhood and youth, and he was a factor on his father's farm till long past his majority. When he sought the United States and established himself in Montana he was following the example of his brothers and sisters who preceded him, and his first year was spent on a sheep ranch, that of G. D. Hollecker, west of Glendive. Subsequently for a time he and his brother engaged at the mason's trade and contracted some important work in Glendive, that of laying the foundation of the Jordan Hotel, and at Sidney that of the construction of the stone church, the first place of worship provided in all this region. When he abandoned the trowel he turned his attention again to the farm and located near Crane, where he soon filed on his homestead, the spot he still occupies.

The survey for the irrigation project has been made prior to his filing on his claim, and Mr. Stewart sensed the importance of the enterprise and the advantage one would have, eventually, who owned some of the lands under the system of irrigation. He was one of the first users of water from the Yellowstone when it was turned into the ditch and alfalfa and corn, besides the grains, have constituted the products which his farm has added to the agricultural output of the valley and which have carried its owner forward toward the position of independence which is headed his way.

The first home of Mr. Stewart still stands and still shelters his family. It is the proverbial log cabin which seemed mansionlike to the pioneer and which was ever comfortable and hospitable. The landscape about the cluster of buildings which mark the family home, once nude of forest trees, is now being shaded by the ash and the cottonwood, which lines the ditch sides or which have prospered through the nurturing care of the family when threatened with destruction by drouth until they cast their shadows far out and welcome the traveler to their cooling shades.

David Stewart returned to Canada when he decided to marry. He left a young woman behind him when he sought the United States to prepare himself for taking a wife, and went back for her when his plans appeared certain of achievement. On June 11, 1901, he married Sarah Gibson, a daughter of William Gibson and Eliza Ferguson, both of Irish blood. The Gibsons were farmers near Leskard, and Mrs. Stewart was born in Cartwright Township of her native county. The seven children of the Gibson household were: John W., of Elmvale, Ontario; Sarah, born April 14, 1858; Mrs. Margaret McFarlane, of Saskatchewan, Canada; Susan, Mrs. Albert Blow, of Francis, Saskatchewan; Samuel, of Collingwood, Ontario, where his younger brother, Albert, resides; and Joseph, who is located at Innes, Saskatchewan.

The issue of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are David Ferguson and Albert Malcolm.

The political status of Mr. Stewart is republican in national elections. His first presidential vote was cast for Colonel Roosevelt, and in the months we were doing our bit to win the war he was a member of the local defense committee and the family bought liberally of bonds and gave freely to the cause of the Red Cross. He has been actively connected with the educational phase of his district, and he and Mrs. Stewart aided in the establishment of the community church and have followed the progress of this Congregational body from its inception to its last item of expansion.

Alvin Hodson. The worthy old pioneer whose name appears herein was at the time of his death one of the few links in the chain that connected the present age to a period buried in the mists of the past. He enjoyed the distinction of being one of the oldest living settlers of what is now Cascade County, and was a witness of its development to its present prosperous condition as one of Montana's most advanced and enlightened counties. Homes and towns sprung up on every hand from the time he first saw the county in its primitive wildness and beauty. Fertile, well-tilled farms, with all the adjuncts of civilization, have taken the place of the former lonesome reaches which sheltered beasts of prey and, at no very remote period, the painted savage. The music of traffic, industry and husbandry make melody where once only disturbed by the symphony of the breeze, the dirge of the winter storm, or the first blasts of the tornado.

Alvin Hodson was a native son of the old Empire State, having been born in Onondaga County, New York, on May 20, 1837. He was the son of Charles and Euphemia (Norington) Hodson, farming folk. The father, who was the son of English parents, was born in 1802 on the Atlantic ocean while his parents were crossing to America. He died in 1890. His wife, who was born in New York State in 1807, died in 1865. Of the nine children born to this worthy couple, one only is living, the subject of this review being the fifth in order of birth.

Charles Hodson led a very active and useful career. For many years he was identified with the lumber industry and "ran" logs on the Seneca River. Later he engaged in farming and dairying in Onondaga County, being a pioneer of that county. He was held in high regard in his community and was appointed guardian for many orphan children. Politically he was an old-line whig and on the disintegration of that party he aligned himself with its successor, the republican party. His religious membership was with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Alvin Hodson spent his boyhood days on the home farm and secured such educational training as was afforded by the schools of that period during the winter months. His first employment was in picking up potatoes, for which he had to take his pay in potatoes. In 1852 he accompanied his parents to Green Lake County, Wisconsin, the trip being made by boat from Buffalo, New York, to Sheboygan, Wisconsin, thence overland to Oshkosh, and then up the Fox River by boat to Berlin, where they located on Government land. In 1862 Mr. Hodson left Wisconsin and started overland with horses for Bannock, Idaho, where he arrived on September 1st. For a time he was engaged in prospecting and mining, but later was occupied in freighting between Helena and Fort Benton. In 1870 he returned to Wisconsin to visit his family, and spent about a year there. In 1871 he returned to Chestnut Valley, Montana, and engaged in the cattle and horse business, in which he was one of the pioneers in this section of the country. During the years following he was very active in that line of effort and met with splendid success. In 1909 he retired from active labor and afterward gave but little attention to active business affairs beyond the necessary oversight of his private affairs. He was the owner of 3,500 acres of land.

Politically Mr. Hodson always gave his support to the republican party and took an intelligent interest in public affairs, though he never had any ambition for public office for himself.

On January 4, 1880, Alvin Hodson was married to Julia Austin, who was born in Valparaiso, Indiana, the daughter of Thomas and Cornelia (Garrison) Austin. Her father was a native of Kent, England, born in 1809, and died in 1902. The mother was born in Wayne County, New York, in 1828, and died in 1887. They were the parents of four children, of whom two are living. Mr. Austin came to the United States by sailing ship when he was twenty-one years old, first locating in Wayne County, New York, where he followed his trade as a butcher. Later he located in Valparaiso, Indiana, and engaged in the meat business, but in 1879 he came to Chestnut Valley, Montana, and engaged in farming during the remainder of his active years. Religiously he was a Presbyterian, while in politics he was a democrat. In 1879 the subject's wife, then Julia Austin, came up the Missouri River from Bismarck to Fort Benton on the steamer "Key West," accompanying her father. Then her father and Mr. Hodson came by wagon to Chestnut Valley and in the spring of 1880 the mother and another daughter, Elizabeth, made the same trip to Fort Benton, thence overland to Chestnut Valley.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hodson were born seven children, namely: Luella, who was the first white child born in Chestnut Valley, is the wife of E. J. Couch, a ranchman in Cascade County, and they have a daughter, Luella; Mary is the wife of J. W. Dockery, a ranchman in Chestnut Valley, and they have two children, Herschel and Eveline; John was married to Isabel Travis and they have three children, Charles, Philip and Mabel; Bessie is the wife of J. H. Hughes, a merchant in Cascade, and they have two children, Wesley and Hortense; Charles is superintendent of the home ranch; Hattie died in 1909, at the age of fifteen years; and Mabel died in the same year, at the age of twelve years.

Mr. Hodson's career presents a notable example of those qualities of mind and character which overcome obstacles and win success. He was not only eminently successful in business, but he was universally respected in social life and as a neighbor he discharged his duties in a manner becoming a liberal-minded, intelligent citizen of the state where the essential qualities of mankind have ever been duly recognized and prized at their true value.

James D. O'Brien. One of the well known young farmers of the Yellowstone Valley, where Fox Creek joins the murky waters of the big river, is James D. O'Brien, whose life from birth has been passed upon the spot still sacred as his home. The flight of time has hurried him from the cradle through the period of youth and half way across the span of "three score and ten" and he passes the "half-way" with no exhibition of terror at the prospect of the finish, for he comes from the loins of one of Montana's brave old pioneers. He is carrying the burden of a modest valley farmer, producing the staple articles of food and watching them go into the great agricultural stream which flows on toward the feeding-grounds of the world. He is one of the heaving tide of worthy citizenship which maintains the world in equilibrium and shares in the prosperity or the adversity as it is measured out to the human race.

As told elsewhere in this work, the O'Briens are all but native to the soil of Montana from its discovery date. James D. himself was born upon the face of this commonwealth and his natal day was June 10, 1885. He was coached to manhood by a father who knew how to train sons for useful and honorable lives, and it is with pardonable pride that he refers to John W. O'Brien, his lamented sire. Young James grew up in the store and about the road ranch his parents kept on the highway leading from Glendive to the Missouri River, and his education was presided over chiefly by the lady teachers of the county, chief among whom was Miss Tina Hackney, who left an indelible impression upon her pupils and who was honored with the office of county superintendent of Dawson County.

As he approached man's estate James D. familiarized himself with the affairs of the store and the developing ranch of his parents and was a close associate of his father when the store was burned and the business snuffed out almost as completely as if it had never been. He was filling a man's place on the ranch long before this untoward incident, and to this work since has he devoted his talent and his time. For some years he was a stock raiser and a small feeder and shipper, but the invasion of the region by the emigrants bent on farming curtailed the range and even changed him from a stock man to a farmer. Every year he has harvested grain from the seed of the springtime, and in the great drouth of 1919 he threshed 900 bushels of wheat, which proved to be the best grain marketed at the Sidney Mills that year.

Mr. O'Brien's home is the old domicile which stood before his parents came to the spot as the successor of "French Jo." Its logs are hoary with age and its low ceilings and squatty appearance pronounce it at once the home of some old pioneer. The cluster of cabin structures which mark the O'Brien domicile and suggest to the traveler the doings of years long dead stand just out of reach of the ever encroaching waters of the Yellowstone and commune, as it were, with the spirit of the decaying ruins out upon the highway where the voice and bustle and business has long been still.

James D. O'Brien is, as his rank as a citizen, a counterpart of his father. Justice is still enthroned in the old seat where the elder placed it, democracy shines where it ever shown when the senior of the name worshiped it and the political activities of the son are fashioned in keeping with the ancients of the democratic faith. He lives alone where his childish voice resounded among the cottonwoods and echoed upon the night air, and the service to his locality which he has rendered has been done as a good citizen setting a virtuous example and in aid of the war drives in behalf of the winning of the World war.

Rev. Charles David Crouch. Pastoral and many executive and penetrative duties have made Rev. Mr. Crouch a prominent figure in Montana Methodism.

He was born at Plumstead, England, December 3, 1863, a son of William and Caroline (Baker) Crouch. He was ten years of age when the family came to America in 1873, and he grew to manhood and finished his education in the public schools of Salt Lake City, Utah. As a youth he mastered the book binder's trade, and from that trade he earned his living for twenty-one years in the states of Utah and Montana. In 1898 he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1903 he graduated in the theological course from the Montana Wesleyan University at Helena. In 1913 he was awarded the degree Doctor of Divinity by the University of Pugent Sound at Tacoma, Washington. Doctor Crouch was pastor of the important churches in the state, at Butte, Great Falls, Missoula and Helena, and from 1908 to 1912, four years, was district superintendent of the Yellowstone District of the Montana Conference. Doctor Crouch is a trustee of the Great Falls Deaconess Hospital, of the Bozeman Deaconess Hospital and the Montana Deaconess School at Helena, and is a trustee and chairman of the board of directors of the Montana Wesleyan College at Helena. In politics he is a republican, and is a member of the Woodmen of the World and recently became affiliated with the Masonic Order.

November 29, 1882, at Salt Lake City, Doctor Crouch married Beulah A. Adams, a daughter of Barnabas and Julia (Banker) Adams. Mr. and Mrs. Crouch have two children, Leslie B. and Clara Dean, the latter the wife of Ross G. Gallup.

Isom Preuitt is a Montana pioneer and for many years has been identified with the community of Townsend, where he lives retired.

He was born in Madison County, Illinois, August 29, 1839. His father, Isaac Preuitt, was born in the same county, at the mouth of Wood River, three miles above where the City of Alton now stands on the Mississippi River, in 1814. That was a very early date in the history of Illinois and the middle west, and the birthplace of Isaac Preuitt was one of the familiar block houses which afforded protection to the settlers from Indian attacks.

Isom Preuitt acquired a common school education, grew up on a farm and farming has been the vocational basis for his entire career. When the Civil war came on he enlisted in 1861 and was assigned to Company M of the First Missouri Cavalry. He was orderly sergeant of his company, and Governor Fletcher promoted him to first lieutenant.

Soon after the close of the war Mr. Preuitt came out to Montana Territory, and while engaged in ranching and farming has frequently been honored with public offices. During 1866-67 he served as assessor of Meagher County. He was elected justice of the peace in 1876 and again in 1898-99 served as assessor of Broadwater County. He is a democrat in his political affiliations and has been a member of the Masonic Order since April, 1865. He joined the Odd Fellows in 1885. His wife has been a member of the Degree of Honor since 1883.

Mr. Preuitt married at Helena, Montana, June 6, 1886, Lodema M. Brownell. She was born at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, in 1844, and came to Montana at the age of twenty years. In 1868 she returned East and became the wife of W. T. Baker. The Bakers came to Montana in 1870, and her first husband died here in 1883.

David R. Edwards is a former merchant, for many years in business at Great Falls, and has been liberal of his time and means in behalf of every public spirited movement.

Mr. Edwards was born at Liberty in Clay County, Missouri, March 10, 1849, youngest of the five children and the only survivor born to John S. and Levina (Roberts) Edwards. His father was a native of Virginia and his mother of Kentucky. His father died at the age of sixty-three in 1860, and his mother at the age of eighty. His father moved to Northwest Missouri in 1821, was a pioneer cabinet maker and for many years engaged in the furniture business at Liberty, making much of the furniture which he sold. He was a Mason and in politics a democrat.

David R. Edwards grew up in Missouri, learned the furniture business from his father, and in 1884 came to Montana, first locating at Helena, and later at Great Falls. He was managing partner with J. P. Curtin from 1892 to 1907, and then bought out Mr. Curtin and continued business under his individual name until he retired in 1918. Mr. Edwards is a life member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks. He is a democrat in politics.

Mr. Edwards married Mary C. Carey. To their marriage were born two children: Katherine; and Carey, who died at the age of nine years.

John K. Castner, who died December 29, 1915. was always called "the founder of Belt," and there is no question that the town owed its original impetus to his vision and enterprise. Mr. Castner was a pioneer in the Northwest, coming up the Missouri River to Fort Benton over half a century ago. For years his business was freighting. He explored all the country around Great Falls many times. He had been reared in one of the famous coal sections of the United States, Western Pennsylvania, and while not a professional coal miner, he had a knowledge of coal seams such as only a man reared in a coal district could have. He was probably the first to recognize the commercial nature of the outcrop at what is now Belt, and he was the first to exploit those deposits and market them.

John K. Castner was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, September 22, 1844, and was seventy-one years of age at the time of his death. He was educated in common schools, taught a term in Pennsylvania, and in 1867 started for the great West. He traveled by steamboat down the Ohio to St. Louis and thence up the Missouri to the head of navigation. His journey came to an end at Cow Island, 125 miles east of Fort Benton. His first employment was as a freight watchman, following which he became driver of a bull team between Cow Island and Fort Benton. He also located on a squatter's claim near Ulm, with Joe Largent as his partner, and remained there ranching and cutting hay until he sold his claim to Largent. After that he acquired an equipment of mule outfits and made himself and his organization an important factor in the freighting and transportation business of the Northwest.

It was in 1869 that Mr. Castner accompanied a party of prospectors to the Great Falls of the Missouri River, and he afterwards told how opinion was divided as to whether that location would ever become the scene of an important city. During 1870 Mr. Castner on horseback made an extensive exploring expedition all over the district around Great Falls, and it was then, with the keen eye of a prospector, he recognized and examined the coal formations at what is now Belt. He kept this knowledge in mind during subsequent years while continuing his freighting industry. It was in 1877 that Mr. Castner made the first efforts at developing the coal deposits of Belt. The development of the country had been such that there was a commercial demand for coal, though naturally much prejudice against it, as is always true of the people of a prairie country. He hauled coal to Fort Benton but gave it away so as to convince the people that it would burn. In time he had a considerable demand created, and acquired extensive holdings of mining claims, also platted a townsite, and gave Belt its first commercial prominence, that of a coal camp. He continued producing and freighting coal to different markets until 1894. An associate with him in the ownership of the coal interests at Belt was Senator T. E. Powers. In 1894 they sold their joint mining interests to the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and thus Belt became the chief coal property of that great corporation. The coal mines of Belt have always been one of the chief commercial resources of the town, though Belt in the past quarter of a century has attained a much more important significance than that of a coal town.

In the twenty years before his death Mr. Castner used his business enterprise for the benefit of the community in many ways, and was always one of the most loyal and public spirited citizens. He owned and operated for over thirty years the Castner Hotel. The main street of the city is known as Castner Street. When Belt was incorporated in 1907 Mr. Castner was the unanimous choice of the citizens for the office of mayor, a post he held for three years. Belt has a splendid school system, and no one gave more earnest thought or consideration to the problems of local education than the late Mr. Castner. For several years he was president of the board of education.

Mr. Castner was an enthusiastic republican and an ardent admirer of the late Colonel Roosevelt. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was a director of the North Montana Fair Association and a member of the Montana State Pioneers Society.

At Fort Benton in 1877 Mr. Castner married Miss Mattie Bost. Mrs. Castner, still a resident of Belt, is distinguished as a very capable business woman, and during her husband's lifetime and since she has carried on some very creditable enterprises on her own account. Mrs. Castner came to the Northwest in the fall of 1876, traveling up the Missouri River on the steamer Nellie Peck from St. Louis. After Mr. and Mrs. Castner established their home at Belt she took charge of the stage stopping station, serving meals at 50 cents apiece, and her skilled cookery gained a justified fame far and near. In those days she served an abundance of wild game, and the guest at her table usually had a choice among such fine flavored meats as grouse, prairie chicken, deer, antelope, elk, buffalo steak and mountain trout.

A number of years ago Mrs. Castner bought 640 acres in the Highwood Mountains, and stocked it with horses and cattle. As a successful ranch woman she has sent large numbers of cattle to the Chicago markets, several times sending three carloads at once. She sold her ranch in 1918 for $17,000. Mrs. Castner is the largest individual property owner in Belt. At her home she still maintains a fine garden and was the first to raise sweet potatoes in the town. Her land holdings include one tract a mile long parallel with the Great Northern Railway. Mrs. Castner, who had no children of her own, reared a boy, who is now thirty-nine years of age.

Allen Barnes Palmer. Montana is distinctively a cattle producing state and fortunes have been amassed in this industry, and the future of this very important branch of agricultural activity is more promising than ever. Because of the opportunities offered in it, a number of the most enterprising men of the state have devoted themselves to this industry and have no reason to regret such action. One of these typical Montana ranchers is Allen Barnes Palmer, owning and operating a very valuable ranch eight miles east of Cascade.

Allen Barnes Palmer was born in Bradford County, Pennsylvania, January 12, 1856, a son of Lathrop and Emeranzer (Coats) Palmer. Lathrop Palmer enlisted in a Pennsylvania volunteer infantry regiment for service during the war between the North and the South at Compton, Pennsylvania, in 1862, and was under the command of General Sherman. After participating in all of the battles and skirmishes of his regiment he lost his life in the battle of the Wilderness. His widow, who was a native of Pennsylvania, did not long survive him, but passed away in 1868, aged forty years. They had three sons and two daughters, of whom two survive, Allen Barnes and his brother Nelson of Moline, Illinois, the former having been the eldest born.

Growing up in his native county, Allen Barnes Palmer was educated in its schools, and he earned his first money helping to operate a cross-cut saw, for which he received $1 per day. Later he worked out as a farm hand in the summer and attended school in the winter, and he also learned the stone mason trade. In 1876 he attended the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and the following spring came as far west as Illinois to visit his brothers, Frederick and Nelson, who were then living at Pontiac. After some time with them Mr. Palmer went to Adair County, Iowa, and for about a year was engaged in a contracting business as a stone mason, but then left for Fremont, Nebraska, and later was a foreman in a brick yard at Wahoo, Nebraska, and also did some contracting in his trade. Returning to Adair County, Iowa, he carried out some contracts there which took about a year, and then came to the Territory of Montana, arriving here in March, 1880. He traveled by rail to Ogden, Utah, from whence he came to the Blackfoot Canyon by the Oregon Shortline Railroad. His next lap of the journey was performed by stage to Helena, and from there he proceeded again by stage to Chestnut Valley.

Having reached his objective point, he hired out to Jacob Seiben, a sheepman, and for several years was occupied with sheep herding, working at his trade as opportunity offered. Subsequently he went to Fort Benton and engaged in contracting stone work during the winter and in the summer superintended the sheep ranch of Fisk & Caldwell on the present site of Lewistown. During this period Mr. Palmer had some experiences with the Indians, as did all of the settlers of those early days in the territory, but managed to defeat any hostile intentions they may have had with regard to him.

Having secured a standing in his new home, Mr. Palmer returned to Bradford County, Pennsylvania, going down the river from Fort Benton to Bismarck, Dakota, and thence home by rail. On August 13, 1882, he was married to Wealthy Titus, born in Bradford County, Pennsylvania. The bride and groom proceeded back to the West in a leisurely manner, consuming about a year, as some time was spent in Iowa. Upon reaching Chestnut Valley Mr. Palmer bought 160 acres of land in which is now Cascade County, and embarked in farming and stock-raising, adding to his ranch from time to time until he now owns 3,200 acres, and he also owns 2,400 acres of land in Teton County, which is operated by his son. At the present time he is building over fifty miles of wire fence. He has about 500 head of cattle and 150 head of horses of the Percheron and Shire strains, owning stallions of both. One of his stallions, which is a show horse, weighs 2,350 pounds. In addition to his extensive stock interests Mr. Palmer is secretary of the Cascade County Co-operative Association, a general merchandise concern. For the past ten years he has served on the school board, and has always been in favor of improving the educational facilities of the neighborhood. Politically Mr. Palmer votes the republican ticket.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer have two children, namely: Raymond T., who married Ethel Robinson, has a daughter; and Nola, who is the wife of George Jemison, has a daughter. Mr. Palmer has taken his son into partnership with him in the Teton County ranch, and as the young man has been trained to the work under his father's supervision there is no doubt but that he will be equally successful. The family is a very well known one in the state, and Mr. and Mrs. Palmer are numbered among the honored pioneers of Montana, to whose efforts much credit is due, for they came here at a time when hardships and privations were a part of the everyday life, and rendered valuable assistance in dissipating them and bringing about the conditions which prevail today.

ALBERT R. OBERGFELL. The name of Obergfell represents one of the earliest pioneer families of what is now Richland County. It was first introduced into Montana by Matthew Obergfell, the father of Albert in March, 1882, and a location was then made at Newlon, on the flat above the mouth of Fox Creek. The name has ever since continued a prominent one in the annals of the industrial life of the community.

Matthew Obergfell was born at Glenegen, Baden, Germany, learned the carpenter's trade in the land of his birth, and came to the United States when he had reached his majority. From Indiana he enlisted in the Civil war, and gave three years of service in the artillery department, and in all that time escaped wounds. Following the close of the war he located in Kansas City, Missouri, where he followed the carpenter's trade for some time, and was there married. His next location was at Indianapolis, Indiana, where he continued the work of his trade and finally also engaged in farming, and it was from that location in March, 1882, that he started with his family for the untamed and unsettled region of old Dawson County, Montana. He possessed a fair education, had familiarized himself with the English language, and had taught his children to speak both the German and English tongue.

Matthew Obergfell brought the family by rail to Glendive, soon provided himself with a cow, horse and a yoke of steers, the latter furnishing the motive power for turning over the virgin sod, and thus began his life as a rancher in the Northwest. He was limited as to cash capital, but possessed the knowledge of a trade which provided him with the means for procuring the substantial things of life for his family, working during the winter months at Fort Buford or at Ridgelawn or on the O'Brien improvements at the mouth of Fox Creek, but spring always found him at the ranch following the plow or otherwise preparing his land for a crop. The shelter for his family and stock he erected of logs. He had prepared to enter this tract as a homestead when it should come into the market for settlement, and furnished an official the money with which to place his filing on the tract, but the official failed to do so, and the buildings Mr. Obergfell had erected had to be transferred to another site. They were moved to his homestead, and to this particular tract he acquired title by the entry and proof procedure. Matthew Obergfell passed the remainder of his active life on that homestead, and his prosperity as a farmer and stockman, chiefly the latter, gained for him prestige and enabled him to acquire other lands until at the time of his death he owned a section and a half.

He had married Barbara Stierle, a sister of Charley Stierle, who was one of the first settlers to locate in the Newlon region of Richland County and whose life history is recorded elsewhere in this publication. Mrs. Obergfell was also born in the Fatherland, and she passed away on the Richland County homestead, surviving her husband about two years. The children in their family were: Charley, a stockman who died in Richland County, June 11, 1920; Mary, wife of Maj. Charles B. Lowmiller, of Poplar, Montana; Albert Robert, of this review; Paul, who is farming near his brother Albert; Annie, wife of George Williams, of Sidney; Celia, the wife of R. L. Wyman, of Glendive; Isadore, more commonly known as Jake, is a stockman near Newlon; August is also engaged in ranching in this county; Rosie is the wife of Pat Kelley, of Richland County; Matthew is likewise a Richland County stockman; and John, the youngest of this large family of children, is also one of the Richland County farmers.

Albert R. Obergfell was born in Indianapolis, Indiana, February 13, 1873, and was nine years of age when he began life in Montana. His school advantages during his youth were meager, but he early learned to ride the range and work with stock, and for a number of years he worked out as a ranch hand, putting his earnings in the family treasury in a common cause. The father provided his sons with horses when they became independent ranchers, and he was regarded by his sons as the head of the family until he passed away. After his marriage Albert Obergfell established his home at the old family homestead where he had spent the days of his boyhood and youth, and there he has ever since remained, engaged extensively in the stock business. During the period of the World war the price of horses was high, and the Montana raiser reaped his profits during that time. Mr. Obergfell's brand for his horses is "JE" and his cattle brand is the "KH." His ranch is known as the JE Ranch. He has given no consideration to farming, the stock business being his chief concern, and his pasture comprises three sections in the hills of his home region.

The Albert Obergfell Ranch of 800 acres lies three miles southwest of Sidney, and is one of the attractive rural places of the county. The main ditch of the Yellowstone project crosses his land and runs just in front of his home. His barn, erected in 1916, is 30 by 38 feet and 14 feet to the square, with mow room for thirty tons of hay. The residence, which was built in 1918, is on the bungalow plan, modern in all its appointments, containing the Delco lighting system, laundry equipment in the basement, the "Baby Hoover" electric sweeper, and the outlay of this delightful eight-room house was the plan to a large extent of Mrs. Obergfell.

Mr. Obergfell married in April, 1914, Mrs. Lydia Pinkley, who was born in Branch County, Michigan, July 10, 1868. Her parents died during her childhood, and she was reared at Jackson, Michigan. Ed, Mrs. Mary Tulip, Bert and Mrs. Obergfell constitutes the children of their parents and their father was James Coon, and their mother was Nancy Waterman. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Obergfell has been without issue.

When Albert Obergfell reached the voting age he cast his ballot in opposition to the political principles of his father. Two of the sons of the family espoused the democratic party and five became republicans, Albert R. casting his lot with the democrats. He has always been without political aspirations, and has never become affiliated with a lodge. He was reared in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mrs. May Ball, of Sidney, has the distinction of being at the head of the only commercial hotel at this point, and she is further honored as being one of the early pioneers of Eastern Montana. Her influence and help have gone out in many directions in her community, have aided in the establishment of many of its public institutions, and among the many benefactions which stand to her credit may be mentioned the Sidney Hospital, to which she very materially contributed.

Mrs. Ball came to Montana from Dunn County, Wisconsin. She was born and reared in that region, and arrived at womanhood with the experience of a farmer's daughter and with but a mediocre educational training. She arrived in Montana in September, 1895. Her uncle, Albin Tubbs, had just preceded her to this state, and he afterward became a well known settler in Ekalaka, and an extensive stock man as well as a freighter between Wibaux and that place, near which he now resides. Mrs. Ball's first efforts for self support in Montana were as a cook for Ben Lawlis, the manager of the Piere Wibaux Ranch, and she spent the winter there. In the following summer she was married in Glendive to William Ball, and they established their home twenty-five miles northeast of Wibaux, where they were engaged in ranching for ten years before leaving the locality and moving to Sidney. While success attended their first industrial efforts on the ranch, adversity soon followed and at Sidney they began again at the bottom of the ladder, Mr. Ball becoming a freighter between Mondak and Sidney. They arrived here on the 17th of May, 1905, and on the 5th of the following June Mrs. Ball began furnishing food to the people as they arrived in Sidney. She was on the townsite before any of the important business enterprises had been started, and hers was the first frame building to be occupied on the site. It was a three-room house and is still in use as a dwelling, and its location was the very spot where Mrs. Ball's dining room in the Valley Hotel now stands. For three years she maintained her boarding house in this primitive fashion, and then erected and moved to a frame hotel, the predecessor of the now famous Valley Hotel. This frame hotel contained twenty rooms, and in 1915 it gave way to the three-story reinforced concrete structure named the Valley Hotel, the only three-story building in Sidney. It is strictly modern in all its appointments, contains thirty rooms, and the basement is used as a sample room, store room and furnace room. The Valley Hotel lends prestige to Sidney and the surrounding community, and meets every demand of the traveling public.

Mrs. May Curtis Ball is a daughter of George A. Curtis and Celia Carter Curtis and a granddaughter of Alpheus Curtis, who was born in Rochester, New York, and was a plowstock maker throughout life. He moved from New York to Mukwonago, Wisconsin, in the early '40s, and he spent the remainder of his life in Waukesha County. He married Emma Stuchfield, who came as a little maiden of ten years from England to America, and she died in Dunn County, Wisconsin, when she had reached the age of seventy-nine years. The only child of that union was George A. Curtis, the father of Mrs. Ball and who now makes his home with his daughter. Mrs. Curtis married for her second husband Martin Tubbs, and their children were: Albin, of Ekalaka; Frank, who maintains his home in Sidney; Ida, who married Harry Smith, of Watsonville, California; and Wales W., of Earl, North Dakota.

George A. Curtis was born at Mukwonago, Wisconsin, August 23, 1844. He received but a limited educational training and spent his youth upon a farm. He still owns the Wisconsin farm which he homesteaded, but, as above stated, he now makes his home with his daughter in Sidney. On the 20th of September, 1867, he married Celia Carter, whose death occurred May 10, 1905. Their children are: Amy, now Mrs. McArthur, of Sidney, Montana; Mrs. May Ball, also of Sidney; Mrs. Irene Reid, of Grand Forks, British Columbia; Claude C., of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Roy W., of Sidney; and Lila M., a teacher in the Sidney schools. Mrs. Ball became the mother of two children, but her daughter, Madge, her older child, died in Sidney at the age of four years. Her son, William Curtis Ball, is attending the public schools.

Mrs. Ball was reared at home under republican teachings, her father being a staunch supporter of that political faith, and he cast his first presidential vote for General Grant in 1868. Mrs. Ball cast her first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt in 1912 and voted for Charles E. Hughes for President in 1916. During the World war she was one of the active workers in the Red Cross organization, and in many ways her influence and effective work have ramified throughout Sidney and Richland County.

Burton S. Adams. On the scroll of honor which recites the deeds and achievements of serious and purposeful men in Montana appears the name of Burton S. Adams, who is serving his second term as postmaster of Sidney. While he has rendered his town and his Government efficient service in the postal department, it is not this service which gives brilliance to his record of achievements within the state, but in a different field and where scientific training and experience had to do with the foundation work of development which has since taken place. He brought to the state a personal equipment for engineering work and for several years he was a modest factor in the scheme of land surveying, in the designation of mineral lands by survey as a deputy United States surveyor and on the work preliminary to the construction of irrigations projects which have come to be a large factor in achieving agricultural fame for the treasure state.

In preparation for his profession of civil engineer Mr. Adams laid the ground work for his education in the schools of Faribault, Minnesota, near which city he grew up, took a preparatory course in Carleton College at Northfield and finished his professional course in the Valparaiso University in Indiana, where he graduated with the degree of C. E. in 1889. He did much work in the field while taking his course, and thus acquired the practical as well as the theoretical knowledge of his profession, and his first position upon entering upon his career in the field was as assistant to the engineer in the construction of the waterworks system of Middlesboro, Kentucky, and he continued with the company for some time, not only as a builder but in charge of the steam plant of the city. When that connection was severed he came to Montana and found work with the Great Northern Railway Company as a transitman and later as the head of an engineering party in the field. He was appointed chief, in charge of the construction of the east end of the Cascade tunnel, by C. P. Smith, but it happened that he was then engaged in a mineral survey in the state, far distant from a telegraph office, and he failed to receive word of his appointment in time to accept.

He was appointed deputy United States mineral and land surveyor in 1894, and in succeeding years made public land surveys in Flathead, Lincoln, Sanders, Missoula, Blaine, Phillips, Valley, Roosevelt, Powder River, Custer, Fallon, Dawson, McCone and Richland counties. He made mineral surveys in West Fisher, Libby, Troy and Sylvanite districts of Montana, of Sumpter and Meadows districts of Oregon and of Granite Creek and Barkerville, British Columbia. He made surveys for the British Columbia Lumber Company on the Upper Frazer and Smoky rivers to the Peace River Divide. He was county surveyor of Flathead and Dawson counties, Montana, while active in engineering work, and was vice president of the O'Niel Lumber Company at Kalispell. Made surveys and plans for Big Fork Power Development, Ashley Lake Reservoir and Irrigation project.

He first visited the Yellowstone Valley, where his interests and his home now are, in 1899 and he made preliminary surveys of it in 1902. The construction of the project was recommended the next year and he has been an officer of the Water Users' Association, organized to co-operate with the Government in the construction of the project. He is chairman of the board of commissioners of Irrigation District No. 1, which is the successor of the Water Users' Association. He represented them in Washington, D. C., three times in the fight for rental orders and charges and terms of contract, and succeeded in getting a ten-year rental. He made the first survey of a part of the townsite of Sidney for Mr. Kennoyer, the present mayor, in 1904, upon which site J. A. Ferris established the first general store and Ira M. Alling built the first residence and located the first lumber yard. He was one of the officers and organizers of the Bank of The Valley and of the Valley Mercantile Company, and when he identified himself with the valley he acquired some irrigable lands, his home ranch, and a bunch of cattle four miles from the site of the new town. He has been secretary and president of the Commercial Club, and a member of the school board three terms.

Besides his work done in Kentucky as an engineer Mr. Adams was employed by Norfolk, Virginia, to do some municipal surveying, and he went from there to Chicago and worked on the survey for the water system for the World's Fair Park. With the termination of his work there he came out to Montana.

He volunteered for service in the Spanish-American war, and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the First Montana Cavalry.

He platted the towns of Whitefish, Eureka, West Libby, Rexford, Lindsay, Big Fork, Somers, Galata, Sylvanite and Sidney, Montana.

In 1895, Mr. Adams went to South America as an engineer for the Orinoco Company, which held a ninety-nine-year lease from the Venezuela government, and he was one of a party of fourteen which made a survey preparatory to the development of the delta of the Orinoco River. He helped make the first survey of that river for navigation, and was placed in charge of the first party of white men to reach the summit of the Imataca Mountains. After spending a year south of the equator he returned to Montana and resumed his connection with engineering as a land surveyor north of Malta-Harlem and Chinook.

Burton S. Adams was born in Rice County, Minnesota, April 11, 1870, and he grew up on the farm of Thomas C. Adams, his father. The senior Adams held to democratic principles in later life, and his son Burton S. cast his maiden ballot in support of the candidate of that party. He has served as United States commissioner and was appointed postmaster of Sidney in December, 1915, as the successor of Raymond A. Northey, and four years later he was reappointed by President Wilson. While we were winning the war and saving the world from German domination he was a member of the County Council of Defense, was chairman of the first Red Cross drive made here and chairman, also, of the Home Section of the Red Cross.

The Adams home in Sidney was deeply interested in the war because the oldest son of the family, Curtis, was a volunteer in it. He entered the service at the age of sixteen, one of the youngest of the fighting forces of America, and served where danger was present and real work was to be done until the Central Powers were exhausted and gave up the struggle. Returning home Curtis Adams became reinstated as his father's assistant in the Sidney office.

Burton S. Adams married in Flathead County, Montana, in 1898, Miss Emma Eckelberry, a daughter of a Union soldier of West Virginia, who came from Minnesota to Montana about 1889 and settled in Flathead County. The children of the Adams household are Wm. Curtis, Lorena J., Walter B., Earl J., Louise E. and Ralph V.

It will be seen in the foregoing brief review of Burton S. Adams that his thirty years since he entered upon his professional career have been filled with activities which count. A varied field has called him into service and his mark has been made upon both continents of the Western Hemisphere. He has familiarized himself with his own country by exploring it where duty called, and he has mixed with men of his profession who stand as monuments to engineering achievement in the development of the Northwest. He is yet young. There are other fields waiting for his invasion on some important mission, and there is vigor of body and mind unimpaired to cope with whatever professional or other problems of business to which he may be assigned. He yields to no man in interest in the solution of the future problems of the Yellowstone Valley, and while time treads lightly upon him it will be his pleasure and purpose to serve.

HARRY G. KETCHAM is the editor and proprietor of the oldest newspaper in Richland County, the Sidney Herald, which was founded in the year 1908 as a weekly journal and a supporter of republican principles. The paper was first established by Lewis N. Barton and Frank J. Matoushek, but a short time later this firm was succeeded by Mr. Barton, who continued as its owner and publisher until September, 1909, when William H. Ketcham, an old-time newspaper publisher, purchased it and conducted it under the same political principles as when it was founded. In 1910 Mr. Ketcham sold the paper to his son Harry G., who continued the issue of a weekly paper but modified its political leanings and made it an independent journal.

Harry G. Ketcham is a native of Stuart, Nebraska, where he was born November 3, 1884, but during his boyhood was taken by his parents to Crawford, Nebraska, where he graduated from high school in 1903. He had grown up, as it were, in his father's printing shop, and he entered the newspaper field as soon as he finished his education. He worked on the Crawford Tribune, his father's paper, and then going to Alliance, Nebraska, worked on the Alliance Times. From that field he came to Montana and secured a position with Publisher Burke in Red Lodge. On severing his connection with that journal Mr. Ketcham left the newspaper field for a time and became connected with railroad work in the office of the Northern Pacific Company at Red Lodge, serving first as a warehouse man and later as cashier of the office, and remained with the company for two years. At the end of that period he returned to Nebraska and resumed work with his father at Crawford, and when the father sold his paper and came to Sidney the son remained with the Crawford Courier, but finally joined his father at Sidney and succeeded to the ownership of the Herald.

William H. Ketcham, the father of Harry G., is now a resident of Seattle, Washington. He completed his career as a newspaper man on the Sidney Herald after sixty-three years spent as a journalist, having begun the work as a child of thirteen in Philadelphia. He was born in the Keystone State and was reared in Philadelphia. He subsequently worked in Washington and Baltimore, and he is credited with having laid the first type set on the Chicago Inter Ocean. He established his first newspaper in Michigan, and subsequently followed his newspaper career in Kansas, Nebraska, Michigan and Montana, always conducting his journals under the republican banner. His school training had been very limited, but the newspaper office gave him a splendid conception of English, and he gained a broad and comprehensive knowledge. He also possessed a facile pen, and in the mid-day of his journalistic career he carried strong editorials as a feature of his issues. He was always an active political worker, was a great admirer of Colonel Roosevelt and one of his strong supporters, and in his younger days he served as a congressman's clerk in Washington and spent a number of years in that capacity. During the period of the Civil war he was engaged to some extent in secret service work.

Mr. Ketcham, Sr., married in Jackson, Michigan, May 9, 1872, Miss Nevada Bannock, who is believed to have been the first white girl born in Sonora, California, Sierra Nevada Valley. She died in 1917, at Sidney, the mother of the following children: Leroy, who died in Bruning, Nebraska, unmarried; Mrs. Ellis Weatherford, of Seattle, Washington; William E., whose home is in Sacramento, California; and Harry G.

Harry G. Ketcham has not espoused the political faith of his father, and although his sympathies are with the republican party he holds aloof from party affiliations and in local matters supports the man rather than the candidate. His paper has been the official journal of the county for some years, and also does the official printing for Sidney. It took a very prominent part in the county division movement, and as a public organ was an undoubted force in creating sentiment and crystallizing it for the creation of the new County of Richland.

Mr. Ketcham has contributed one of the splendid business houses to the development of Sidney. In 1916 he erected the Herald Block, a solid concrete building 46½ by 100 feet, with full basement, one-half of which is used as the Herald's plant. His equipment for his publication comprises an intertype setting machine, power press, two job presses and other equipment necessary for the conduct of a complete power newspaper plant.

Mr. Ketcham married at Minot, North Dakota, June 1, 1912, Miss Josephine O. Fladager, who was born at Inwood, Iowa, a daughter of Mrs. Eline Fladager and she was the eighth born in a family of nine children. Mrs. Ketcham received her advanced educational training in St. Augustine College, South Dakota, and was a teacher when she became acquainted with Mr. Ketcham. Mr. and Mrs. Ketcham are the parents of a son and daughter, Harriet Josephine and William Harry.

ROBERT PERRY THOROUGHMAN. It is not so many years since Montana was practically undeveloped, although from its present condition it is difficult for the newcomer to believe this for the state has made such rapid strides forward as to make up for a late start. However there are a number of men, still vigorous and hearty, who can relate personal experiences with the Indians that for thrilling excitement outclass any moving picture thrown upon the screen, and which are absolutely true in every particular. Robert Perry Thoroughman, of Cascade, is a man who has passed through the different phases of life in this region, and has fought and conquered the red man in more than one encounter. He has prospected and mined gold, hunted wild game, been a cowboy, cattle raiser, and is now a retired resident of the valley where he made the greater part of his money, and at all times he has been a regular, red-blooded man, typical of the great West and its magnificent development.

Robert Perry Thoroughman was born at Saint Joseph, Missouri, December 18, 1847, a son of Oliver Perry and Mary (Magill) Thoroughman. Oliver Perry Thoroughman was born in Kentucky, and died in Montana in 1887, when sixty-six years old. His wife was born in South Carolina and died in Montana in 1884, when sixty-three years old. They had eight children, three of whom survive, Robert Perry Thoroughman being the second in order of birth. Oliver Perry Thoroughman was a miner at Saint Joseph, Missouri, which he left for Denver, Colorado, in 1862, traveling overland from there to Virginia City, Montana, and became one of the pioneer prospectors and miners of the territory, continuing in this line of activity until his death. For eight years he served Lewis and Clark County as a commissioner. He was an Odd Fellow and a democrat.

Robert Perry Thoroughman attended the schools of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Denver, Colorado. In 1862 he helped to drive a herd of cattle to Denver, accompanying his father to that city, and in 1863 rode the range. For the subsequent six months he was with Doctor Hamilton in the United States service as teamster. During 1865 he drove overland to Helena, Montana, with a team of mules, and was there engaged in mining on the site of the present Central Railroad depot. In 1874 he went to Flat Creek, Lewis and Clark County where he kept a road house. Having acquired a little capital, he invested it in cattle and ran them on the range in Prickley Pear Valley until July, 1880, when he drove his herd, in search of better pasturage, to Chestnut Valley, where he has since remained. Mr. Thoroughman made a success of the cattle business and is the owner of 1,120 acres of fine ranch land, but in 1917 sold his cattle and retired. He is a member of the Montana Pioneer Society, and the Odd Fellows, of which he a past noble grand. A very strong democrat, he was elected on his party ticket to the Seventh State Assembly and served for one term, and he has been deputy assessor for eleven years.

On March 23, 1870, Mr. Thoroughman was married to Anna E. Bickett, of Helena, Montana, a native of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Thoroughman have two children, namely: Joseph, who married Effie Johnson, has one son, Robert Perry; and Anna, who is the deceased wife of Edwin Newlan. Both as a private citizen and public official Mr. Thoroughman has done his duty and lived up to his obligations in every particular and few men stand any higher in the confidence and esteem of his associates than he.

Lossie Dawe. One of the earliest of the Montana pioneers is Lossie Dawe, who established his home within its borders before it was admitted to the Union of states, and his name is enrolled among the founders and promoters of the commonwealth.

Settling in the Valley of the Yellowstone, where he began making a permanent home, Mr. Dawe first found work on the ranch of Sears and Davidson, sheep men on Sears Creek, and he remained with those ranchmen for two years. He was without personal capital save his ability and willingness to work, and his first monthly wage of $30 soon became the nucleus of an asset. Following this first employment Mr. Dawe continued as a wage earner in the employ of Charley Smith, who was also well known among the early sheep men and ranchers, but six months later he became the employe of a cattleman, one of the best known settlers of this region and now known as Senator George McCone of Glendive. A year and a half were spent on the McCone Ranch, at the same monthly wage he received formerly. Mr. Dawe had then been in the country four years, and in partnership with C. G. Larson had accumulated a bunch of 125 head of cattle, worth at that time about $22 a head, and the two began ranching for themselves.

The partners located on the North Fork of Burns Creek, above the N. P. Ranch, and were merely users of the domain, all that they could utilize. They erected the necessary sheds and corrals and built a cabin for themselves, hauling the logs from the river and erecting a dwelling 14 by 16 feet, and while its room space seems small at the present time it on one occasion accommodated over night seventeen men, Mr. Dawe slipping in last and out the first in the morning to make room for the others to move. The partners remained there until 1895, when Mr. Dawe married, and during that period one of them looked after their cattle interests while the other, chiefly Mr. Dawe, went on the roundups of the country and thus added greatly to the treasury of the firm. When the partnership was dissolved in 1897 they sold 175 head of cattle, and with his share of this sum, perhaps $1,500, Mr. Dawe started the cattle business in partnership with his wife.

They began their career together as stockraisers with a cow and a calf and a bull, and remained at the old ranch. They lived on there for several years, and rather than enter the land when the Government survey was made they purchased a tract adjacent to the hamlet of Sidney for their future home. The Dawe ranch, as it came to be known, was subsequently sold to J. Thomas Neese, who was for a time the second partner of Mr. Dawe in both his cattle and ranching enterprise. The old ranch has finally disappeared, absorbed as claims of settlers, but the old house and barn are still in use.

Purchasing the southeast quarter of section 28, township 23, range 59, at Sidney, Mr. Dawe commenced the work of permanent development there in 1904, occupying the stone residence of six rooms and moving his family from the dirt-roofed cabin on the ranch to a comfortable home and in which his younger children have grown to mature years. Other improvements have been erected with the passing years, including the building of a tenant house in 1918 and additions to both his residence and barns. His stone barn was the first of the large and complete barns to be built in this community, and was erected by C. L. Stockwell. Mr. Dawe began his stock raising industry at this place with a bunch of registered Herefords, intended for breeding and sale, but this idea was soon abandoned and he eventually disposed of those animals and substituted Holsteins for dairy purposes, for several years following the business of selling milk and cream. Sheep finally followed the Holsteins on the Dawe ranch, and this proved a profitable venture, owing to the high prices received for both wool and sheep during the past few years. The homestead farm has been enlarged by the purchase of other lands, a part of which have been improved for cultivation and some of it irrigated.

Although the name of Lossie Dawe has been so long identified with the interests of Montana, he is a native son of the East, born at Norristown, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, August 14, 1868, a son of William T. and Rebecca (Dill) Dawe. The father was born in Cornwall, England, and was twelve years of age when brought by his parents to America, the family settling in Canada, but after the father's death they came into the United States and located in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. William T. was the youngest of the family of three sons and a daughter, the others being John, Jonathan and Sarah. William T. Dawe spent three years of active service as a Pennsylvania soldier during the Civil war, participating in many of the historic battles of that struggle, and on one occasion a rebel bullet clipped off the lobe of his right ear.

From his Pennsylvania home William T. Dawe subsequently removed to Macomb County, Michigan, and some years later migrated with his family to Texas, where he spent three years, living in Lamar and Hamilton counties and also spending some time in the Choctaw Nation. Tiring of the South, he returned to Michigan and remained there until the latter part of his life, when he followed his son Lossie to Montana and engaged in ranching. He passed away at Livingston, this state, in May, 1919, at the age of eighty-one years, and his wife died at Glendive in November, 1908. In their family were the following children: Jesse F., clerk and recorder of McCone County, Montana; Lossie, of Sidney; Phillemon R., who died one month after the death of his mother, leaving a wife and four children near Gettysburg, Montana; Mary E., the wife of E. J. Kiehl, of Livingston; and Benjamin, also of Gettysburg, Montana.

Lossie Dawe was reared and educated in Kent County, Michigan. He came to Montana by train on the Northern Pacific, and reached Glendive as a passenger from Columbia, North Dakota. He became identified with the community of Sidney when it contained only one log store, the postoffice, which was a part of the house he occupied, and a Methodist Church and a parsonage. He built the third business house of the town, which is now used to house the goods of the Johnson-Mercer Hardware Company, in 1906, and in 1910 associated himself as a partner with E. A. Kenoyer and engaged in the loan and real estate business under the firm name of the Montana Eastern Land & Investment Company, making loans, selling lands and writing insurance. The partners also dealt in real estate individually, and the building now occupied by the Sidney National Bank was their office. In 1915 the firm dissolved partnership, Mr. Dawe then resuming his occupation as a farmer. He was a member of the company which built the telephone system of Sidney and extended the line to Fairview, Savage and Crane, installing exchanges at all the places. Mr. Dawe served as the president and one of the directors of the company for a year. The Mountain States Telephone Company finally absorbed the system by purchase. When the First National Bank of Sidney was chartered Mr. Dawe secured some of its stock, and was a member of its board of directors until he disposed of his interest in the bank.

When Richland County was created from the boundaries of old Dawson he gave an active support to the movement, and thus took part in one of the most spirited county-division battles ever waged in the state. He also cast a ballot for the location of the state's capital at Helena. Mr. Dawe has been one of the most active workers Montana has ever had for a prohibition country. He was one of the original members of the prohibition party in this locality, voting that ticket when it was a known lost cause, and he has lived to witness the accomplishment not only of state prohibition but of a national one, and now that the question of prohibition is settled and a part of the country's organic law he gives his political affiliation to the republican party.

Mr. Dawe was married in Dawson County, in the community of Sidney, May 15, 1895, to Miss Lavenia G. Blakeslee, a daughter of Nelson and Mary E. (Gall) Blakeslee, who migrated from New York to the West and first settled in Brown County, Kansas, where Mrs. Dawe was born June 29, 1866, but she spent her girlhood days in Savannah, Missouri, and was educated there and in the Kansas State Normal. She came to Montana to continue her work as a teacher in Dawson County, and was teaching at Tokna when she became acquainted with Mr. Dawe. Mr. and Mrs. Blakeslee were the parents of the following children: Edwin, of Savannah, Missouri; Julia, the wife of J. R. McMillan, of San Jose, California; Mrs. Nellie Powell, who died at Netawaka, Kansas; Lavenia, the wife of Mr. Dawe; and Mamie, who married Frank Schilling, of Fairview, Kansas. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dawe, namely: Enid M., who graduated from the Sidney High School, spent one year as a domestic science student in the Agricultural College at Bozeman, and is now deputy county treasurer of Richland County; Glen B., a high school student of Sidney, a member of the class of 1920; and Eva and Mary, both in the Sidney schools.

The Dawe family gave an intensely patriotic service in the promotion of war work, and they are numbered among the public spirited and loyal citizens of their community.

Richard S. Nutt, president of the Yellowstone Valley Bank and Trust Company, traces his ancestry back to Scotland, to a remote ancestor of the family, LaFayette Nutt, who lived near Glasgow, Scotland. The first American ancestor was George W. Nutt, the grandfather of the Sidney banker, and he died at Clinton, Missouri, in 1917, when he had reached the remarkable age of 102 years. He married in his early life Margaret Littleton, who still survives him and has reached the age of 103 years. Of their eight children the father of the Sidney business man, John R., was the first born and the only soldier son of the family.

John R. Nutt married Helen Warner, a daughter of Isaac Warner. The Warner family were Quakers, and their ancestry crossed the ocean to this country with the Quakers who founded Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the William Penn colony. Mrs. Nutt died at St. Vincent's Hospital at Portland, Oregon, in 1916, at the age of seventy-three.

Richard S. Nutt was born at Colfax, Illinois, March 26, 1877, and his boyhood days were spent in that community and his early schooling was received in its rural schools. He came to Montana in May, 1897, a youth of twenty years, before there was a Sidney or even a Richland County, and it was with Dawson County that he first identified himself. He began his connection with this region as a cowboy, his first acquaintance being A. W. Mann, who was widely known over this valley as a ranchman. Having thus acquainted himself with the life and habits of the far West he returned to Minnesota to complete his education, entering MacAlester College, where he completed the scientific course and graduated with the degree Bachelor of Science.

With the intention of casting his lot permanently with Montana Mr. Nutt then returned to Mondak, where with other stockmen, he organized the Mondak State Bank, and assuming the cashiership of the institution he remained with it in that capacity until 1909. It was in that year that he came to Sidney, and with other local citizens he organized the Farmers State Bank and became its first cashier. The institution was capitalized at $20,000, and continued as a state bank until 1916, when it was chartered as the Yellowstone Valley Bank & Trust Company, with a capital and surplus of $110,000. Mr. Nutt became the president of the institution.

Outside of his banking interests Mr. Nutt has been engaged to some extent in ranching and stock raising. He was one of the original organizers of the Deaconess Hospital of Sidney, and is a member of its official board. He was made a Mason at Culbertson, Montana, and was one of those instrumental in the founding of Lower Yellowstone Lodge No. 90, becoming the first master of the lodge.

The Nutt family home in Sidney, at the corner of Stockwell and Kemmis streets, was erected by Mr. Nutt. He was married in St. Paul, Minnesota, June 16, 1908, to Miss Rose M. Metzger, a daughter of Samuel H. Metzger, one of the early settlers of St. Paul. Mrs. Nutt graduated in the same class with her husband at MacAlester College, and she afterward was principal for a year in the high schools of Drayton, North Dakota.

Thus far in this review we have only touched upon the incidents of chief moment in the life work of Mr. Nutt. That he has had a wide range of business experience is evident and that he has won the confidence and high favor of those who have had the good fortune to be associated with him is a fact. His training in the school of experience has developed a vision of rare merit and has prepared him for the handling of the larger transactions in finance approaching the trained expert. It is the judgment of those who have watched his success at the head of the Yellowstone Valley Bank and Trust Company that pronounced him a banker and it is the favorable results he obtains in the management of other important interests which pronounce him a man of affairs. He is unselfish in the promotion of any movement which promises well for his locality and is a volunteer always, and in the ranks, while the desired results are being achieved. He is wise in the selection of meritorious projects and rarely falls into the "loser" class, and it is this characteristic in his makeup that some of his jealous critics call selfishness. He pleads for harmony in his community, for he knows that "in union there is strength," and when big things are in prospect for Sidney or the big valley in which he lives he prefers the place of a private in putting it over and achieves results that distinguish him as a leader in spite of his humble rank. He is known far beyond the limits of his county for his public spirit and for the achievement of results, and his co-operation is sought by men of large interests in the founding and guidance of new industries. As faithful to a trust as the planets in their daily movements, as honorable in the performance of his obligations as the Government under which he lives, an untiring worker, sober and true is Richard S. Nutt.

PETER ANDERSON. Among the Montana citizens who have been identified with its interests and who have assisted in its upbuilding since it became a state of the Union is prominently numbered Peter Anderson, who came direct from his native Denmark to Glendive in April of 1889, the year Montana was admitted as a state. He was accompanied on this journey by his family, and they arrived in Glendive by train. Locating in the Valley of the Yellowstone, near where Sidney has since been established, Mr. Anderson found settlers here ahead of him, and a few of them still remain here, including the Kemmis, Kelch, Meadors and Cheney families.

Mr. Anderson started his life in Montana as a stockman, and after spending four years in an old shack some five miles below where Sidney is now situated he located his homestead two miles north of the townsite, and there he spent the remainder of his active business career. During nineteen years the family home was a comfortable log house 12 by 15 feet in dimensions, and was located four or five miles from the ranch house. This log dwelling gave place in 1907 to the present country home, the second good frame residence built in this region, and it contains thirteen rooms, and this and other improvements which he has added, including a splendid barn, makes the place one of the landmarks of the county.

Mr. Anderson started his business career in this region on a safe foundation, for he invested in milch cows and disposed of his milk and butter to the soldiers at Fort Buford, thirty miles distant. As long as there was grass he had plenty of milk, and with a good supply of milk there was always prosperity in his home. He finally, however, drifted into the raising of beef cattle, and in time became a shipper of his own stock. His brand was a diamond surmounted by the letter P, which marked both his horses and cattle, and it is still used on his remaining stock.

After a few years Mr. Anderson was able to add railroad land to his homestead. He was one of the first dry land farmers in the country, and he made a success of this mode of farming, pinning his faith to grain, oats being his chief crop. His best yield of oats weighed forty-two pounds to the bushel. His lands became available to irrigation when the waters of the Lower Yellowstone project were turned on, and then he began farming on a larger scale. His wheat yielded him thirty bushels to the acre, and flax, which proved a boone to the country, he raised extensively, he having been the first man to import flax seed into this region. He also imported into this region the first macaroni seed wheat, securing a half a bushel from the Government. With the passing of the years Mr. Anderson became recognized as one of the largest and most influential farmers of his community. He placed 400 acres of his land under irrigation. He joined the Water Users Association at its formation, and for several years served the organization as its treasurer.

Mr. Anderson secured his citizen papers in 1894, and his Americanization has been full and complete. He has also been influential in bringing others of his countrymen into the region, where they have played a conspicuous part in its settlement and development. He was the founder of the Danish colony of this locality, and as the result of his efforts some 500 people have established their homes here, representing Montana's most able citizenship. Two Danish churches have been erected, and although the majority of the Danish settlers are connected with farming, many have also engaged in other fields of endeavor.

As an American citizen and a participant in upholding its Government Mr. Anderson united his efforts with those of the republican party, casting his first presidential vote for McKinley. Since taking up his abode in Sidney he has served as a member of the board of alderman, and the chief work of improvement since his identification with this board has been the extension of the sewer system to the Yellowstone River.

From the beginning of their residence in Montana both Mr. and Mrs. Anderson were actively identified with the Methodist Church in their community, and continued their active membership therewith for fifteen years. In that time they assisted in the erection of the first church in the Yellowstone Valley, this being in the year 1900, and when the Danish congregation was organized six years later they transferred their membership and helped to build the Danish Lutheran Church. During her active connection with church work Mrs. Anderson was helpful in Sunday school work, serving as an efficient teacher, and she occasionally represented the Methodist Church in conference work. In 1917 the Anderson Ranch was sold and the family came to Sidney to reside, Mr. Anderson erecting a modern bungalow on Main Street.

Peter Anderson and his wife were both born in Denmark, the former on the Island Fyen and the latter on the Island of Sjalland, about thirty miles from Copenhagen. Mr. Anderson's birth occurred September 16, 1860, and that of Mrs. Anderson two years later, on the 6th of December, he a son of Anders Christofersen and Maren Niels, and she a daughter of Niels Josephsen, her mother being a daughter of Maren Willum. Mrs. Anderson was christened Bertha Josephsen, and she was one of a family of eight children, all of whom came to the United States, but at different times, Mrs. Anderson and her husband being among the early ones to immigrate. They sailed from Copenhagen on the Nord Deutsche Lloyd steamer bound for New York, from which point they journeyed on to Glendive, Montana, where a brother of Mrs. Anderson, Charley Josephsen, had already located. They began their life in the Northwest with a cash capital of $300, and they endured many hardships and privations during the years they were reducing the soil to fertility and laying a foundation for future years of prosperity.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson was celebrated in Denmark August 17, 1883, and a large family of children were born to them to bless their union. The first born, Marie, is the wife of Peter M. Anderson, of Sidney, and their children are Myrtle Irvin, Oscar, Glen and Dorothy. Neils Anderson, a resident of Prairie Elk, Montana, married Johanna Amundson. Dagmar, the third child of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, is the wife of Ira Albin, of Richland County, and the mother of four children, Effie, Paul, David and Donald, the two latter being twins. Lillian married Thorval Jenssen, of Broyson, Montana, and their children are Peter, Roy, Ralph, William, Ernest and Walter. Josephine is now the wife of James Hendrickson, of Three Buttes, Montana, and has three children, Marvin, Bernice and Hazel. Carl Anderson, the soldier son of the family, went overseas in the early part of the conflict and saw seven months of service in England and eight months service in France, operating as a machinist in the aviation service. He was discharged at Fort D. A. Russell, and reached home in May, 1919, since which time he has been a farmer and homesteader. Christina married Harry Brockway, also a soldier in the recent war, and they reside at Prairie Elk, Montana. Camilla is the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, and she is a high school student in Sidney.

Guy L. Rood, clerk of the District Court of Richland County, began his residence in this portion of old Dawson County in what may be termed the early and formative period of this community. He established his home here in 1892 as an emigrant from Kansas, making the journey by rail in an emigrant car containing his personal effects, a few chickens, two cows, two hogs and other farm commodities important as a beginning in a new country. He loaded his car at McPherson, Kansas, where he had spent a brief period of the many years of his residence in the Sunflower State, and unloaded his effects at Fort Buford, Montana, after a slow and uneventful trip across the intervening space of 1,200 miles.

The parents of Mr. Rood had preceded him to Montana, and it was upon their inducement and urging that he abandoned the trade which had for ten years been providing him a mere living and launched upon a new career in the new and unsettled Northwest. His birth occurred in Kalamazoo, Michigan, July 30, 1866, a son of Carrol L. and Lottie (Abernathy) Rood. The father was born in Cass County, Michigan, a son of Heman Rood, and he began his life's activities with a good educational training. During the period of the Civil war he was a resident of his native state of Michigan, and from there volunteered in Company A, First Michigan Cavalry, serving under General Sheridan. He took part in the famous Shenandoah campaign and other engagements during the three years of his military service, and suffered the loss of an eye before receiving his discharge. Again taking up civil life, Mr. Rood taught school in Michigan and Kansas, and was subsequently the first school teacher to locate in the region of his first settlement in Montana. It was in 1874 that he removed to Kansas, homesteaded in Cowley County, proved up his claim, but subsequently moved to Harvey County and farmed ten miles south of Newton until the grasshopper plague drove him from that country. Following this period he was the proprietor of a prohibition newspaper at Newton, Kansas, during the prohibition campaign, and after coming to Montana founded the Monitor at Glendive and conducted it a few years as a republican paper. On disposing of this journal Mr. Rood made a trip to Alaska, where he spent a few years prospecting and mining, and then returned to Montana and resumed his teaching during the winter months. He finally removed to California, and is now a resident of Sacramento, having attained the good old age of eighty years. His children by his first wife were: Guy L., of Sidney; and Claude, who died in Sidney, leaving a daughter, now Mrs. Hazel Schmidt of Springfield, Ohio. Carrol L. Rood was a second time married, but there were no children by the last union.

Heman Rood, the grandfather of Guy L., went to California during the early days of "forty-nine," but was lost out in that then unsettled region and lies buried in an unknown and unmarked grave. He married Mary Silver, and Granvil H. and Carrol L., were the two sons of their union.

Guy L. Rood grew to years of maturity on the farm of his grandfather Rood, receiving his schooling at Newton, Kansas, and there he also learned the tinner's trade, following it later at Newton, Halstead and McPherson, Kansas. It was at the last named place that he loaded his effects in a car and started for his new home in Montana. As a beginning for this new life he erected where the slaughter house now stands a log house of five rooms, but the last vestige of this early pioneer home has entirely disappeared. It was covered with dirt, as was the custom at that time, and it sheltered the Rood family for a period of about ten years. One of the first occupations Mr. Rood embraced for earning a living here was sheep shearing, and after he became an expert shearer he organized and commanded a crew of sheep shearers for several years. He obtained his start in the cattle business with a small bunch of stock, raising both cattle and sheep, also farmed, became the postmaster of the old Town of Ridgelawn and his wife conducted an inn there, and in fact for some years after his arrival in Montana he followed any occupation that would yield him an honest living.

From 1904 until 1910 Mr. Rood served as a United States land commissioner at Ridgelawn, and practically all the surrounding lands were filed on during his tenure in this position. His office long antedated the United States commissioner's office at Sidney, and in this position and in various other ways he took an active part in the initial settlement work of this region.

Mr. Rood finally homesteaded at Ridgelawn and there erected the first frame store building in the valley. Later he moved this building to Sidney, where it is still doing duty as a business house. In time he developed a farm of 420 acres at Ridgelawn, 120 acres of which are under irrigation and improved with some $6,000 worth of buildings. In 1914, soon after his election to the office of clerk of the District Court, Mr. Rood removed to Sidney, where he has improved a good home in the suburbs. He participated actively in the movement for the division of Richland County, and was elected to the clerk's office after the county was created. In a bill before the Legislature for creating the County of Richland he had been named as clerk and recorder, but this bill was vetoed by the governor. Mr. Rood subsequently became a candidate for the office of clerk of the District Court, was successful at the election and was re-elected in 1916.

Mr. Rood is a republican, and since giving his first presidential vote to Benjamin Harrison he has never missed an election where he could cast his ballot. He took an active part in convention work when that method was in vogue, and also carried his share of the responsibilities in the matter of the conduct of the school in his rural district. He is now serving the City of Sidney as a councilman.

Mr. Rood married in Halstead, Kansas, November 20, 1890, Miss Bertha Edison, who is a second cousin of Thomas A. Edison, the great American inventor. Mrs. Rood was born in Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Rood are the parents of three children: Carrol, who is married and engaged in farming in Richland County; Erma H., a high school graduate and now teaching school; and Glen J.

Mr. Rood was the first of five Masons to come into the Yellowstone Valley, and he is a charter member of Sidney Lodge No. 90, and is also affiliated with the Eastern Star and the Chapter at Glendive.

Richard Graham is a veteran flour miller, has served that industry in many localities of the North and West, and came to Great Falls as a miller nearly thirty-five years ago. Until he retired he was for twenty years or more engaged in the flour, feed and general grain business.

Mr. Graham was born in the Province of Quebec March 16, 1850, son of Archabel and Jennett (Black) Graham. His parents were both natives of Quebec and were farming people there. They were members of the Presbyterian Church and were the parents of ten children, seven of whom are living.

Richard Graham, sixth among his parents' children, lived at home and attended school to the age of fifteen. He learned the flour milling business by an apprenticeship under his uncle, Andrew Hodge, and in 1871 he came to the United States and was employed by the Baldwin Milling Company at Hudson, Wisconsin, until 1876. He then located at Hopkins, Minnesota, and was superintendent of the Harris Douglas & Camp Flour Milling Company, and subsequently followed his trade and business in other localities. In 1885 he came to Great Falls to become head miller of the Cataract Flour Mill Company, and held that position until 1893. He and J. D. Ross became associated under the firm name Graham & Ross in the flour, hay, grain, feed, wood and coal business, and that partnership was continued with mutual profit and advantage until December, 1917, when Mr. Graham retired.

He is a member of the Royal Highlanders, is a republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church. October 23, 1905, he married Eliza J. Collins. She was born in Bruce County, Ontario, a daughter of William and Mary Ann (Lewis) Collins. Her father was a native of the north of Ireland and died in 1917 at the age of eighty-three. Her mother was born near Ottawa, Canada, and is still living in her seventy-fourth year. Her parents were members of the Episcopal Church, and her father spent his active life as a farmer. Mrs. Graham was the oldest of eleven children. Mr. and Mrs. Graham have adopted two children, Almona Jean and John George, both at home and attending school.

Logan V. Fowell has earned a substantial position in commercial affairs, and is well known in several localities of Montana, but particularly at Judith Gap, where he is manager of what is now the leading general merchandise concern of the city.

Mr. Fowell was born in Richland County, Wisconsin, July 21, 1885. Practically all members of the Fowell family now living in the United States are descended from his grandfather, William Fowell, who was born in England in 1833. As a young man he and a sister started for the United States, but the sister died and was buried at sea. He was five weeks in crossing the ocean. He first settled in Ohio, and afterward became a pioneer of Richland County, Wisconsin. He spent all his active life as a farmer and died at Readstown, Wisconsin, in 1900.

Charles W. Fowell, father of the Judith Gap merchant, was born in Ohio February 2, 1858, and as a youth removed with his parents to Richland County, Wisconsin, where he was married and where for a number of years he was successfully engaged in the lumber industry. In 1916 he moved to Viroqua, Wisconsin, where he has since lived practically retired, though he owns a valuable farm stocked with a herd of high grade Hereford cattle. Charles has exemplified a high degree of public spirit, and has made himself a useful member of his community. He held a number of county offices in Richland County, was active in promoting the civic welfare of his locality, and has given all the strength of his influence to the republican party. He is a member of the Methodist Church and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Charles W. Fowell married Armintha Searles, who was born in Ohio, June 27, 1868. Logan is the only son and the oldest of three children. His sister, Grace, lives with him at Judith Gap. Blanche is unmarried and at home with her parents at Viroqua, Wisconsin.

Logan V. Fowell attended the rural schools of Richland County, Wisconsin; graduated from the high school at Readstown in 1903, and in 1905 graduated from the Wisconsin Business University at LaCrosse. After one year as assistant cashier of the State Bank of Readstown he came to Montana in 1906 and with home at Harlowton had charge of the commissary for the contractors engaged in building the Transcontinental line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway through Montana. In March, 1907, this business engagement being completed, he became a merchant with the firm of H. E. Marshall, who had stores at Harlowton and Martinsdale. In those places he acquired a thorough and fundamental knowledge of general merchandising and in August, 1913, moved to Judith Gap, where he entered the service of Beers & Haynes, general merchants. In November, 1918, Mr. Fowell was instrumental in establishing the Judith Gap Commercial Company, and has since been its active manager. The officers of the company are: Walter Witt, president; George Kidder, vice president; William Nordland, secretary; R. G. Shields, treasurer, and L. V. Fowell, manager. The company owns a large and well equipped business building, and has rapidly promoted its trade throughout Wheatland County. Mr. Fowell is also secretary of the Ubet Oil Company, and has a modern and comfortable home on High Street in Judith Gap.

Politically he is identified with the republican party. He has not sought public office, though it is a matter of record that he was one of the first city council at Harlowton. He is affiliated with Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Harlowton; Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, and Gordon Lodge No. 89 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Straw, Montana..

March 27, 1907, at Townsend, Montana, he married Miss Etta Townsend, daughter of William and Lucy Townsend, the latter now deceased. Her father is a Montana pioneer, coming to the territory in 1884, and for over thirty years has been a successful rancher and still lives on his ranch at Martinsdale.

Richard Graham

Mrs. Fowell is a graduate of the Townsend High School and finished her education in a young ladies' seminary at Helena. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fowell; Kenneth, born May 10, 1908; Theron, born November 26, 1911; Murlen, born August 25, 1914, and Kathryn, born February 28, 1916.

O. M. Lanstrum, M. D. For a physician and surgeon busied with the exacting cares and duties of his profession, Doctor Lanstrum of Helena has had an exceptional range of other activities in politics and business affairs, all indicating the versatile talents of the man and his ability to perform an astonishing amount of work in the twenty-four hours allotted to every day.

Doctor Lanstrum has been a resident of Montana for a quarter of a century. He is a son and grandson of a Union soldier during the American Civil war. His grandfather was John Lanstrum, a native of Sweden, who brought his family to this country in 1848 and settled on a farm at Knoxville, Illinois. He was well advanced in years when the Civil war came on, but he showed his patriotism for his adopted country, and enlisted in 1861 in an Illinois Silverspray Battery of Artillery. During his service he was captured, was confined in Libby Prison, and while coming north on an exchange boat died as a result of prison hardships.

The father of Doctor Lanstrum was Christian E. Lanstrum, who was born in Sweden in 1837 and was eleven years of age when he came to the United States. He grew to manhood on his father's farm at Knoxville, Illinois, and in 1861 joined Company B of the Eleventh Iowa Infantry. He was in four years of the fighting, his soldier's record including the battles of Shiloh, Gettysburg, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, the Atlanta campaign and Sherman's march to the sea. He was mustered out with the rank of captain, then returned to Galesburg, Illinois, and for many years followed merchandising there. In 1916 he removed to Seattle, Washington, where he died in December, 1919, at the advanced age of eighty-three. He was a very successful business man, wielded much influence in republican politics, and was a member of the Swedish Lutheran Church and an active Mason. At Natchez, Mississippi, he married Susan E. Crocker. She was born in Kentucky in 1843 and is still living at Galesburg, Illinois. Her brother was Gen. M. M. Crocker, a distinguished commander of Iowa troops in the Civil war. The children of Christian E. Lanstrum and wife were: Carl, an insurance man at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Frank, who for a number of years was employed as a printer at Butte, but died at Hot Springs, Arkansas, at the age of fifty; Fred, advertising manager for a newspaper at Indianapolis; Doctor Lanstrum; Evelyn, wife of Howard Waterman, a Seattle attorney; George, who is county commissioner of Lewis and Clark County and lives at Helena; and Claude, state manager for the United States Rubber Company at Great Falls, Montana.

Oscar Monroe Lanstrum was born at the home of his parents in Galesburg, Illinois, November 26, 1869. He attended the public schools of his native city and also Knox College at Galesburg, from which he received his A. B. degree in 1891. He took his medical course in the University of Illinois Medical School at Chicago, graduating M. D. in 1894 with the highest scholarship in his class, and at the same time receiving his Master of Arts degree from Knox College. Doctor Lanstrum is a member of the Phi Gamma Delta and also a member of the medical fraternity of Nu Sigma Nu. During 1894-95 he practiced in Chicago and in December of the latter year located at Marysville, Montana. He enjoyed an increasing practice and participation in the affairs of that community for ten years, but since 1905 has been a resident of Helena. He has always kept up with his professional interests in the capital city and still maintains offices at 12 Edwards Street. Doctor Lanstrum has several times interrupted his professional routine to take advanced courses in medicine and surgery at the New York Post Graduate School.

Doctor Lanstrum is one of the prominent republicans of Montana. He served two terms as member of the Montana House of Representatives, from 1903 to 1905, in the Eighth and Ninth sessions. He was chairman of the republican County Central Committee one term, in 1906, and chairman of the State Central Committee in 1908 and chairman of the executive committee of the State Central Committee in 1910. He was also chairman of the Montana delegation to the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1912. Doctor Lanstrum came into national prominence during 1918, when he had the distinction of receiving the republican nomination for United States Senator in the state primaries, and defeating Miss Jeannette Rankin, Montana's first congresswoman.

Doctor Lanstrum is president of the Montana Record Publishing Company and from 1904 for a number of years was managing editor of the Montana Daily Record. He is a property owner and interested in a number of other business enterprises. He is interested in some ranch properties in Lewis and Clark County, and among other real estate at Helena has a modern home at 802 Madison Avenue. He is a director of the Tru Blu Biscuit Company of Spokane and Portland, director and assistant medical director of the Montana Life Insurance Company, a director of the Murgittroid Drug Company of Spokane, a director of the Montana Trust and Savings Bank, and owns some extensive mining interests.

Doctor Lanstrum is a member of the Swedish Lutheran Church, is affiliated with Ottawa Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Marysville; Helena Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar; is a past potentate of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and is an honorary thirty-third degree Scottish Rite Mason, his home affiliations being with Helena Consistory No. 3. He is a member of the Montana Board for the Masonic Board and belongs to the Montana Club, the Rocky Mountain Club of New York City; is affiliated with Marysville Lodge, Knights of Pythias; Montana Lodge No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Helena; Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and keeps up his professional affiliations with the County, State and American Medical associations. Doctor Lanstrum is a trustee of the Montana Wesleyan University. He was prominent in behalf of all war causes, and served as a member of several committees representing the positive patriotic forces of the community and state.

December 18, 1897, Doctor Lanstrum married Lillian Gertrude Conrad, of Marysville, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Conrad. Her parents now reside at Helena. Her father, who is public administrator, came to Montana in the early '60s, was a placer miner and afterward a pioneer merchant at Marysville. Mrs. Lanstrum was born at Cave Gulch, Lewis and Clark County, and completed her education in St. Peter's Mission School. Doctor and Mrs. Lanstrum have three children: Claude Conrad, born September 12, 1900; Frederick Crocker, born March 9, 1902, and Philip Monroe, born October 9, 1908.

GEORGE W. LANSTRUM, who came to Montana twenty years ago and is one of the Board of County Commissioners at Helena today, is a brother of Helena's distinguished physician and surgeon, Dr. O. M. Lanstrum.

George W. Lanstrum was born in Galesburg, Illinois, August 24, 1874, son of Christian E. Lanstrum. He grew up and received his education in the public schools of Galesburg, but left high school and took up the serious business of life as an insurance salesman. He was with the Covenant Mutual Life Insurance Association of Illinois for five years. After that he was employed in the Chicago office of the Republic Iron & Steel Company until he came to Montana in 1900. Mr. Lanstrum located at Marysville, and for about five months worked as a timber cruiser for some of the extensive lumber interests. For another two years he was superintendent of mines on the Big Blackfoot at Lincoln, and then became deputy county clerk and recorder under Percy R. Witmer. Mr. Lanstrum is one of the popular men in republican politics in the western part of the state. He served a four-year term as postmaster of Helena under President Taft. After retiring from that office he was in the wholesale and retail cigar business for two years. Mr. Lanstrum was a member of the Fifteenth Legislature in 1917, and was appointed county commissioner to fill an unexpired term and in the fall of 1918 was regularly elected to that office by a majority of 1,800 votes.

Mr. Lanstrum is a prominent Mason, being affiliated with King Solomon Lodge No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is junior warden; Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar; Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite, and is on the Divan of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of Helena Court No. 3 of the Royal Order of Jesters; Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a director and chairman of the grounds committee of the Helena Country Club.

November 1, 1905, at Helena, Mr. Lanstrum married Miss Bessie Hendricks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Hendricks. Her mother is still living at Helena and her father died in the Helena Hospital. This is the pioneer family of Marysville, and J. A. Hendricks in the early days was a freighter from Old Silver City to Marysville.

EMORY ARTHUR ANDERSON. Throughout his active business experience Mr. Anderson has been identified with the building and building supply business, and as a resident of Helena is manager of the local branch of the Boorman Lumber Company.

Mr. Anderson was born at Marshall, Lyon County, Minnesota, December 29, 1893. His father, Herman L. Anderson, was born in Sweden in 1855, grew up in his native country, had some experience as a soldier in the regular army, and coming to the United States in 1880 settled in Lyon County, Minnesota. For a number of years he was manager of the C. M. Youman Lumber Company at Marshall, but in 1915 removed his home to Minneapolis, where he is now a hardwood grader for the Anderson Brothers' Wagon Works. He is a member of the Christian Science Church and the Masonic fraternity. His wife is Sophia Carlson, who was born in Sweden in 1865. Her father, August Carlson, brought his family to this country and settled on a farm in Lyon County, Minnesota. He was born in 1840 and died in Minnesota in 1913. Emory A. Anderson is the oldest of four children. The next younger, Selma, is the wife of Ernest Constable, and they live at Minneapolis. Mr. Constable is a professional musician, now employed in the Donaldson store at Minneapolis. For about six years he was in the regular army and is a veteran of the World war, having spent eight months overseas. The other two children are Alice and Violet, the former married and living in Minneapolis and the latter a senior in the Minneapolis High School.

Emory A. Anderson was educated in the public schools of Marshall, attending high school through his junior year. He took the bookkeeping and general business course at the Mankato Commercial College, and on leaving college in 1914 removed to Minneapolis, where he spent nine and a half months with Charles Anderson in the contracting and building business. The following three years he was in the main office of the Lampert Lumber Company, then four months was manager of the Standard Lumber Company's plant at Lake Benton, Minnesota, and on the 22d of February, 1918, arrived in Montana. After a few days at Great Falls he was sent to Helena, March 7, 1918, as bookkeeper and office manager of the Boorman Lumber Company, and since August 15, 1919, has been manager of the local plant and office on Helena Avenue between Jackson and Main streets. The largest stock of lumber in Lewis and Clark County is carried by the Boorman Lumber Company.

Mr. Anderson is a republican, a member of the Christian Science Church, and his home is at 618 Peosta Street. He married in Minneapolis April 21, 1917, Miss Mae Gudmundson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. August Gudmundson. Her parents are residents of Minneapolis, her father being a carpenter foreman in the shops of the Soo Line Railroad.

JOHN D. ROSS, one of the oldest active business men of Great Falls, has been a witness and actor in the growth and development of the great northwestern country for over thirty-five years.

He was born on his father's farm in Nova Scotia March 14, 1860, son of Donald and Elizabeth (Sutherland) Ross. Donald Ross was born in Scotland in 1828 and came to Nova Scotia with his mother when he was quite young, received his education in that country, and as a young man hewed a farm out of the wilderness and spent his life as a Nova Scotia agriculturist. He died in 1902. His wife was born in Nova Scotia and died in 1880. Of their twelve children nine are still living, with John D. the oldest. The parents were active members of the Presbyterian Church.

John D. Ross grew up on his father's farm and attended school to the age of seventeen. He then worked out as a farm hand and in the fall of 1882 came to the Northwest and had his first experience working in the great lumber woods and camps around Tacoma, Washington. He also engaged in coal mining, and it was his interest in the coal mining industry that brought him across the country to Great Falls in the autumn of 1886. He prospected for coal, worked in saw mills, and in 1896 settled down to his permanent business in the flour, hay, seed, wood and coal business. His partner was Richard Graham, under the firm name of Graham & Ross, and the firm continued business for over twenty years, until Mr. Graham retired in December, 1917.

Mr. Ross is affiliated with Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons, Black Eagle

John D. Ross

Commandery No. 8, Knight Templars, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and the Lodge of Perfection, Scottish Rite, at Great Falls. He is also a member of Rainbow Lodge No. 28, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of the Presbyterian Church and in politics a republican.

On June 27, 1896, Mr. Ross married Miss Tena J. Ross. She is also a native of Nova Scotia. They have four children, Donald R., Helen, Hazel and John D., Jr.

A. I. Reeves. Any city, however large or small, has reason to be grateful for the presence of such a citizen as A. I. Reeves. Mr. Reeves has built up a large business in musical merchandise at Helena, though his relations with the community have many interesting aspects beyond that of a mere merchant.

Mr. Reeves was born January 11, 1864. For several years after his birth his parents had affixed no Christian name upon him. His father was a great Bible student and a minister of the gospel, and one day, when his small son, then between three and four years of age, was indulging his teasing propensities, the father reproved him by calling him "Ai." That cognomen stuck, and has remained his only given name. This is a biblical name, of a city in which the Ammonites dwelt, a people who were rather hostile to the children of Israel, and were usually contriving some means to tease and torment the chosen people.

Mr. Reeves' father was Michael Dean Reeves, who was born November 16, 1816, at Rising Sun, Indiana, and died September 11, 1906, at Parker's Prairie, Minnesota. His grandfather was in the Revolutionary war. He was lost, it never having been known what became of him. His given name is unknown now. He lived in Virginia on the Monongahela River, near where the salt works were located. He went there about 1745 and his family remained there until after the War of 1812. He came from Wales. His wife afterwards married a man by name of Meyers. His grandfather on his mother's side was Michael Dean Reeves, who was born in Kentucky. He and his wife were American born, she being twelve years old when married. Their home was about fifty miles south of Cincinnati. His mother's name was Thirzsey Dean, who was born in Kentucky in 1796 and died in 1831. She was English and she died in Oxford, Ohio, near Hamilton. His father, John Reeves, was born in Virginia in 1790, and died in Bartholomew County, Indiana, in 1845.

Michael Dean Reeves spent his boyhood in his native state and for fifty years was a Baptist clergyman and labored unceasingly in the cause of his church and community. At the age of nineteen he became a fellow of Christ at a camp meeting in Cook County, Illinois, where Chicago is now located, and was baptized in the Des Plaines River. In June of 1855 he moved to the Territory of Minnesota, where he was one of the early Baptist ministers and after the birth of his son, Ai, he preached in Fillmore County and Olmsted County, in 1876 moved to Ottertail County, and died at Parker's Prairie in that county September 11, 1906. He organized the second Protestant Sunday school and church in the state, and in other words, the first south of the City of St. Paul, in the Town of New Lebanon. It was at this place he was ordained a Baptist minister. As a youth he had served as a soldier in the Blackhawk Indian war. He was a republican in politics, though in later years he cast his vote where it would do most good for the cause of temperance. His first wife was Martha Harrington, to whom he was married in Will County, Illinois, and who died at Pleasant Grove, Minnesota. Two of their children are still living: Joseph, a minister of the Free Will Baptist Church, living in Nebraska, and Mrs. Sarah Reynolds, a widow whose home is at Helena. The second wife of Rev. Mr. Reeves was Mrs. Rider, a widow, whose maiden name was Newman. She was born in Pennsylvania in 1824 and died at Alexandria, Minnesota, in 1910. Her four children were: Harriet, wife of John Donaldson, a telegraph operator in Colorado; Ai, who as a matter of convenience has in recent years written his name as A. I.; Martha, who died at the age of five years, and Charles, a farmer in Minnesota.

A. I. Reeves acquired a rural school education in Fillmore County, Minnesota, at Parker's Prairie in that state, attended the public schools of Alexandria, and graduated in 1885 from the Pillsbury Academy at Owatonna. In the meantime he had taught in rural schools in Ottertail County for three years. While there he introduced community singing with much success and was the first teacher to popularize that class of music in the schools of Minnesota. After graduating he lived with his half-brother, J. D. Reeves, at Groton, in Brown County, South Dakota, and was employed on the Groton Independent newspaper for two years. He leased and operated the Independent for a year and then bought the Claremont Gazette in Brown County, remaining as editor and publisher three years.

Mr. Reeves came to Montana in 1892, for a short time was employed in the Livingston National Bank, then with the Livingston newspapers and in the old Albemarle Hotel. On leaving Livingston he spent one season as clerk in a leading hotel in the Yellowstone National Park, subsequently was employed in the Bozeman Hotel at Bozeman, spent a short time in Butte, and on returning to Livingston continued with the hotel where he had been first employed for a few months. In the fall of 1892 he became a resident of Helena. His first work here was for the Jackson Music Company's store, until the failure of that business in 1893, and he then remained in the service of the assignee. During 1893 he visited the Chicago Exposition and in the spring of 1894 opened a business for himself. Beginning with a capital of less than $150, his was obviously a very modest stock and shop at Main Street at the corner of Broadway. Mr. Reeves has studied the needs of the city in musical merchandise, has steadily expanded his business, and his store has long been considered one of the musical centers of Helena. At the present time this business maintains the largest assortment of musical literature for teachers, children and the public generally west of Minneapolis or St. Paul. The store is at 19 South Main Street.

During the World war Mr. Reeves, besides assisting in the various war auxiliary movements, was given the chief responsibility in conducting community singing as a means of re-enforcing the morale of the people and stirring up enthusiasm. He also conducted singing at Fort Harrison, Montana, for the soldiers in the camp, and was usually on hand at all public and patriotic gatherings, and frequently in moving picture theaters led impromptu singing. This community singing was considered so successful and had such good results that by general consent Mr. Reeves has been continuing it since the war, and it is one of the very best means of promoting general musical taste. Mr. Reeves believes, as General Pershing, that a singing army is a winning army and that appropriate songs sung by large numbers of people has an equally good effect on the civil morale.

During the past twenty-five years Mr. Reeves has brought to Helena many musical artists, including such celebrities as Paderewski, Shumann-Heink and the St. Paul Orchestra. He has worked unceasingly for the musical advancement of the community and has shown a great deal of public spirit and disinterestedness in his efforts to give Helena its proper place among the cities of the Northwest.

Mr. Reeves might well deserve another title, "friend of children." He has shown the greatest interest in the children of Helena, and the newsboys look upon him as a "daddy" and at their annual or more frequent picnics or banquets it is regarded as a matter of necessity that he be present and his absence would be keenly missed. On such occasions he always has a rousing songfest.

Mr. Reeves is a republican in politics and while at Claremont, South Dakota, served as city clerk. He is a past exalted ruler of Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks, is a member of Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Helena Aerie No. 16, Fraternal Order of Eagles; a member of the Montana Club, Helena Commercial Club, Helena Civic Club, and is president of the Retail Merchants' Exchange. His home is at the Montana Club.

Patrick W. Woods, proprietor of a hay, grain, feed and supply establishment at Helena, is a young business man who has worked steadily toward the goal of success and has seen his efforts well rewarded.

Mr. Woods is member of one of the pioneer families of Montana. He was born at Highwood, this state, December 6, 1885. His grandfather was Patrick Woods, a well remembered Montana pioneer. He was born in Scotland in 1809, lived there until young manhood, then came to the United States, was married in Missouri and lived on a farm near St. Joseph in that state. In 1864, following the first rush of gold seekers to Montana, he came to the territory and for a time indulged himself in placer mining at Virginia City. However, his training and experience best qualified him for farming, and he operated farms near Butte, near Toston, in the Prickly Pear Valley and at Highwood. In the early days he located at Helena, where he followed teaming, and later moved to Hardy, where he became associated with two of his sons, Allen and George M., in a farm and ranch. He died at Hardy in 1903.

Allen W. Woods, father of Patrick W., was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, in 1857 and was only a small boy when brought to Montana. He was reared in several localities where his father had farmed and acquired most of his education in the public schools of Helena. He married at Highwood, where he farmed, and in 1879 moved to Canada and spent a year in that country. Returning in 1880, he settled in the Bitter Root Valley and in 1885 moved to Tobacco Plains, Montana, where he spent two years, and since 1887 has been a resident of Hardy. All his life has been spent at farming and he has done well in a combination of livestock and agriculture. Allen W. Woods is a democrat, an active supporter of the Christian Church, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married Alice Woodiwiss, who was born in Canada in 1858. Their children are six in number: H. E., a farmer at Wolfcreek, Montana; George A., a North Dakota farmer; Patrick W.; V. R., a teamster for R. H. Claflin at Helena; Alzora, wife of Alf Pruitt, section foreman on the railroad at Simms, Montana, and Allie, wife of Lee Kearney, of Spokane, Washington.

Patrick W. Woods acquired his education in the public schools of the Bitter Root Valley, Tobacco Plains and at Hardy, and lived on his father's farm to the age of eighteen. For one season he operated a farm on his own account at Simms. At the age of nineteen, in 1904, he came to Helena, and after two years with the wholesale fruit and produce firm of Lindsay & Company, he took employment with T. P. Wood in the hay, grain and feed business at 6 South Park Street. He gave nine years of diligent service to his employer and at the same time accumulated some capital, and with his thorough experience and well established credit bought out T. P. Wood and has since been sole proprietor of the business. He moved the location in 1919 to 402 North Main Street, where he now has a well stocked plant, handling hay, grain, feed, flour and poultry supplies. He leases three warehouses along the Northern Pacific tracks, and does a business that extends all over Lewis and Clark County.

Mr. Woods is a member of the First Christian Church of Helena, is a democrat, is affiliated with Excelsior Lodge No. 5 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Royal Highlanders. His modern home is at 20 South Raleigh Street. He married at Cascade, Montana, March 16, 1904, Miss Ethel M. Kinsey, daughter of W. L. and Mary (Albright) Kinsey, the latter now deceased. Her father is a retired rancher and hotel proprietor, now living at Simms. To Mr. and Mrs. Woods were born four children: Nellie E., born in 1906; Lucy A., in 1908; Marie Irene, in 1910, and Shirley Evans, who was born February 17, 1915, and was accidentally killed when hit by a heavy truck on January 31, 1920.

John Hastings Kerrigan has spent the greater part of his life at Helena, was formerly in the tailoring business, but is now one of the proprietors of the Domestic Laundry, the leading establishment of its kind in Lewis and Clark County.

Mr. Kerrigan has made a great deal of his limited opportunities and advantages in life. He was born at Scranton, Pennsylvania, January 3, 1889. His father, Brian H. Kerrigan, was born in Ireland, where he married Mary Goff, a native of the same country. In 1884 they came to the United States and he was a miner at Scranton, Pennsylvania, until his death in 1892. He was a democrat and a Catholic. He and his wife had two children: Anna, wife of W. J. Brennan, a coal miner at Scranton, and John H. The mother, who is still living at Scranton, is now the wife of B. F. Hester an employe of a Scranton bank.

John Hastings Kerrigan came to Montana in 1899, at the age of ten years. He had attended school in Scranton and finished the eighth grade when he was thirteen years of age. At that early date he began learning the tailors' trade and followed it as a journeyman worker in Montana until 1914. He then acquired the facilities and opened a shop for dry cleaning, and conducted this business independently until December 15, 1919. At the same time from 1914 he was associated with the Domestic Laundry, and on December 15, 1919, he and G. A. Bussard bought out the plant, then located at 120 Broadway. In order to get better facilities and have room for expansion, they moved the plant to 115 West Lawrence Street on February 15, 1920. This laundry has all the modern facilities for doing high class work, and nearly all the machinery and equipment are new. The partners also conduct a dry cleaning department.

Mr. Kerrigan is affiliated with the Christian Science Church and is an independent in politics. His home is at 501 East Sixth Avenue. He married at Helena in 1908 Miss Virgie Bieber, daughter of J. A. and Dora (Septien) Bieber, both now deceased. Her father was an early settler at Helena and a miner by occupation. Mrs. Kerrigan is a graduate of the Helena High School. They have one son, John Hastings, Jr., born January 2, 1910.

TAYLOR BLADEN WEIR, lawyer, has been in practice at Helena since 1908. He was born at Hickory Grove, Prince William County, Virginia, March 23, 1883, his parents being Richard Mitchell Weir and Fannie Elizabeth (Wilcoxon) Weir, both of Northern Virginia.

He graduated from the Central High School and George Washington University at Washington, D. C., and is a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, the bar of the District of Columbia and the bar of the Supreme Court of Montana. Mr. Weir entered the law office of William Wallace, Jr., at Helena in April, 1908, and is still practicing in that office at 25 West Sixth Avenue. He is a member of the State Bar Association. He was married in 1910 to Miss Anna Katherine Goodman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Goodman, of Kendall, Wisconsin.

WILLIAM GLENDENNING, of Sidney, is one of the early developers of the county seat of Richland County, and has been a witness and a participant in its every day affairs. He was born in Gentry County, Missouri, April 24, 1856, a son of Henry Glendenning, who was born and reared in Missouri, devoted his time to farming until he entered the Union army, and died of disease at St. Louis. He was of Scotch descent, and his grandfather, the original Scotch ancestor in this country, located in Missouri as a pioneer. His posterity moved into Gentry County when all was new and unsettled, and they have since been represented there as farmers, sheep raisers and merchants.

During the war between the states Henry Glendenning served in the Thirty-third Missouri Infantry, and during his four years as a soldier took part in twenty-two battles, but was never wounded, despite the fact that numerous bullets pierced his clothing. His widow subsequently married Charles Thacker and is a resident of Sheridan County, Nebraska. The children born to Mr and Mrs. Glendenning are: William, of Sidney, Montana; Martha, who married Perry Warren, of Wellington, Colorado; Milton, of Chautauqua County, Nebraska; Jennie, who became the wife of Harvey Forney and died in Lyon County, Kansas; Fannie, who married Adolphus Tryon and resides in Pueblo, Colorado; Henry, of Greeley, Colorado. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Thacker: Elizabeth, who married Albert Morrison, and died in Pottawatomie County, Kansas; Lettie, who married Millard Vian, of Vian, Nebraska; Laura, the wife of Arthur Cutler and a resident of Sheridan County, Nebraska; Charley, who is with his mother, and Rosella, who married Ed Quincey and died in Nebraska.

William Glendenning grew to mature years in his native County of Gentry, Missouri, and at the age of twenty made his first trip to Kansas, where he remained for perhaps a year, engaged as a thresherman in the counties of Rice, Reno and Ellsworth. He then returned to his native State of Missouri, locating in Andrew County, where he was subsequently married. Going again to Kansas in 1884, he spent two years in Reno County, and from there went to Nebraska. He spent some eighteen years in the latter state, engaged in farming in Dawson and Cherry counties. It was from Loop County, Nebraska, that he made the journey by wagon into Montana and established himself on the north fork of Hay Creek, where in the spring of 1904 he became a tenant farmer. He remained with the locality until 1913 and then came to Sidney to reside permanently.

While in the Hay Creek region Mr. Glendenning entered a homestead and improved it with such buildings as were required to shelter his family against the rigors of this northern climate. He prepared for cultivating 100 acres of the land, fenced the tract, and became a grain raiser and stock man in a small way. His residence was a combination log and frame one and was one of the better homes of the locality when it was built, affording a degree of comfort to the family. While there he took part in the establishment of the first school district and helped build the pioneer school house. This became known as the Glendenning School House, and he was made a member of the first school board. This region was at that time still a part of Dawson County, and all judicial matters pertaining to it were transacted at Glendive. When the movement was inaugurated for the organization of a new county Mr. Glendenning favored it and assisted actively in the movement.

With the birth of Sidney he became interested in its future and contributed in a small way to its first building era. With his sons he erected the pioneer livery barn and named it the Sidney Barn. They conducted both a livery and feed business for a time and also a draying line, but after some months Mr. Glendenning decided that he could not carry on his farming operations successfully when absent and accordingly sold his business interests and resumed his place on the Hay Creek ranch. But finally disposing of his ranch, he returned to Sidney and again took up draying, which he followed for three years, and then transferred his interests to the garage business, opening the Sidney Garage. It was also a shop where machinery of all kinds was repaired. But after two years the property was destroyed by fire and Mr. Glendenning then entered the employ of the Sidney School District in the capacity of fireman in the high school, his present employment.

On the first of May, 1881, in Andrew County, Missouri, he was married to Miss Mary Adams, who was born near Terre Haute, Indiana, February 26, 1857, a daughter of William and Mary (Harrison) Adams. Her grandfather on the paternal side, William Adams, was born in Ireland, but came to the United States and died in Mason County, Illinois. His son, William, was the youngest in his family of fifteen children. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Glendenning, Robert Harrison, came from the New England states, and President Benjamin Harrison was his nephew.

William Adams, the father of Mrs. Glendenning, was born and reared near Bloomfield, Illinois, and spent his active life as a farmer. He eventually moved his family to Nebraska and died in Dawson County of that state in 1897, but his widow survives and resides near Williston, North Dakota. In their family were the following children: Mrs. Glendenning; Joseph, who died at Williston, North Dakota; Susan, who married Thomas Torbett, of Calgary, Canada; Jacob, who died at Williston, North Dakota; Amos, a resident of that state, and Laura, who married Edgar Webb, and died near Williston.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Glendening has been blessed by the birth of five children, namely: Marshall, who was accidentally killed April 17, 1912, while farming on Hay Creek, leaving a wife, formerly May Herbett, and a child, Hazel; Chloe married Byrd Pickett, of Sidney, and has three children, Willie, Clayton and Edith; Perry, who is the depot automobile service man of Sidney married Grace Baskin and has three children, Carman, Perry and Gail; Inez is the wife of Ray Clough, of Seattle, Washington, and their children are Leta and Cecil, and Lola, the youngest child, died at the age of seventeen years.

Mr. Glendenning's part in political matters has been purely local and merely as a voter. He gave his first presidential vote to James A. Garfield in 1880, and has ever since voted the national republican ticket.

JAMES W. PERRINE. Among the highly valued citizens of Cascade are some men, now retired from active life, who during their younger years not only made good records for themselves as business or professional men or agriculturists, but who, when their country needed them, responded to its call, and since then have been entitled to call themselves veterans of the great struggle between the North and South. One of these substantial men and veterans is James W. Perrine, for many years a successful farmer and stockraiser of Cascade County.

James W. Perrine was born in Wayne County, Ohio, September 15, 1839, a son of James and Elizabeth (Arnold) Perrine. James Perrine was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1800, and died in 1886, aged eighty-six years. His wife was born near Steubenville, Ohio, in 1824, and she died in 1886, aged sixty-two years. Of their seven children four now survive, James W. Perrine being the second in order of birth. James Perrine moved from Pennsylvania to Ohio in 1839, and was there engaged in farming until 1884, when he went to Washington County, Iowa, and there died. First a whig, he later became a republican. Although he was not connected with any religious organization, he helped in supporting the Dunkard Society, of which his wife was a member.

Growing up in Ohio, James W. Perrine attended school held in a log schoolhouse, walking several miles each way. When he was twenty-two years old he began working for himself. The next year, in spite of the loss to his personal interests, he enlisted in the Twentieth Ohio Independent Light Artillery and served from the fall of 1863 until the close of the war, participating in all the battles and skirmishes of his command, including those of Chattanooga, Resaca, Franklin and Nashville, and received his honorable discharge July 15, 1865, and in September of that year returned to Ohio, after which he went to Iowa and for the next seven years was engaged in farming and stockraising in Washington County of that state. He then homesteaded near Bolckow, Missouri, and was there engaged in farming for some twenty-seven years. The next move made by him was when he came to Cascade County, Montana, locating his first Government land near the Cascades, and here he carried on general farming, raising cattle, horses, wheat and hogs, and owning 520 acres of land. In 1917 he made a trip to California to visit his brother, Peter Perrine, and since his return has lived retired at Cascade. For fifteen years he has served on the school board, and he has also been road overseer for many years, being elected on the republican ticket. Mr. Perrine joined the Grand Army of the Republic at Great Falls, Montana. He holds membership in Whitehall Lodge No. 380, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Ohio; Chouteau Valley Chapter No. 413, Royal Arch Masons, and is a charter member of Meridian Lodge No. 105, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Cascade, Montana. He also belongs to the Pioneer Society.

On November 14, 1863, Mr. Perrine was married to Eliza Jane Berger, who died in 1896, leaving six children, three of whom are now living, namely: Edgar W., who lives at Kansas City, Missouri; Alma, who is the wife of Quincy M. Tucker, has four children; and Gertrude, who is the wife of John Herkrider, has one son. On April 10, 1905, Mr. Perrine was married to Mrs. Lillian M. Stone, and they have two children, Arnold and James M. Mr. Perrine has seven grandchildren and one great-grand child, of whom he is very proud. A man who has earned all he possesses through his own efforts, Mr. Perrine can look back with pleasure over his past career, and realize that where others might have failed he, through his industry, thrift and shrewd common sense, prospered, brought up his children, and is now enjoying the fruit of his years of labor.

GEORGE D. PATTERSON. The subject of this sketch early in life realized that success never comes to the idler or dreamer, and he has acccordingly devoted himself to ardent toil along lines that cannot but insure success. In such a man as Mr. Patterson there is especial satisfaction in offering in their life records justification for issuing such a compendium as the one in hand—not necessarily that the careers of such men as his type have been such as to gain them wide reputations or the admiring plaudits of men, but that they have been true to the trusts reposed in them, have shown such attributes of character as entitle them to the regard of all and have been useful in their several spheres of action, at the same time winning and retaining the confidence and good will of all with whom they had come into contact.

George D. Patterson was born on the 27th day of November, 1852, at Georgetown, D. C., and was the first born of the eight children who blessed the union of James O. and Jane Dela (Roche) Patterson. These parents were born, respectively, in Horford County, Maryland, and Georgetown, D. C., and both are deceased, the father dying at the age of sixty-nine years, and the mother when sixty-seven years old. James O. Patterson was a farmer by vocation and spent practically his entire mature life on his farm, which was known as Sweet Air Homestead. Politically he supported the democratic party and was elected by his fellow citizens to several public offices. His religious affiliation was with the Protestant Episcopal Church, to which he was a liberal contributor.

George D. Patterson was reared on the paternal farmstead and attended the public schools of his home neighborhood, completing his studies in the West Nottingham Academy in Cecil County, Maryland. The school was founded by the father of H. S. Magraw, who is now state bank examiner in Montana and who was a classmate of the subject in that school. The subject earned his first money by catching and selling rabbits, for which he received from fifteen to thirty cents each. He remained at home, assisting his father in the farm work, until 1877, in the spring of which year he went to Wyoming. That was during the historic Nez Perces war, and Mr. Patterson engaged in the dangerous work of driving a stage from Cheyenne, Wyoming, to Deadwood, South Dakota, a job for which only men of dauntless courage and splendid physique were fitted. In the spring of 1878 Mr. Patterson drove overland to Helena, Montana, and here was engaged for a few months as driver of the stage between Corer and Helena. In 1878 he came to the Smith River Valley and went to work on the sheep ranch of Cook Brothers, where he remained but a short time, returning to Helena. Thence, on the 12th of the following July, he came to Fort Benton and located a ranch on Shonkin Creek, where he was successfully engaged in the sheep and cattle business until 1894. He had been prosperous in his efforts during these years, and as the fruit of years of hard, unremitting toil, and in the latter year he moved to Fort Benton, where he has since resided. During his active years on the ranch Mr. Patterson gained an enviable reputation among his fellow ranchmen as a business man of excellent judgment and a tireless worker, who accomplished well whatever he undertook.

In politics he has been a lifelong supporter of the republican party and in 1889 he was elected a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Chouteau County, he being one of the first set of county officers chosen after the organization of the county. He rendered efficient service to the new county, assisting materially in getting the machinery of county government running smoothly during his four years of service. In 1912 Mr. Patterson was elected clerk of the County Courts, taking possession of the office on the 1st of January, 1913. So satisfactory was his discharge of the duties of this responsible office that he was elected to succeed himself and is thus the present incumbent of the office. Accommodating to those who have business to transact in his office, for he faithfully believes in the political maxim that "public office is a public trust," he has earned the honest esteem of all. Mr. Patterson has been an active worker in the ranks of the party to which he belongs, and stands high in its councils, having served for several terms as chairman of the County Central Committee. Fraternally he is a member of Benton Lodge No. 25, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of Bethany Chapter No. 35, Order of the Eastern Star, of which he was the first worthy patron.

Mr. Patterson has been twice married. His first union was on April 18, 1883, with Louisa E. Pratt, who was a native of Illinois, and whose death occurred on July 23, 1907. To this union were born six children, Louisa, John, Lenora B., George D., Jr., James O. and Margaret. On September 16, 1907, Mr. Patterson was married to Grace Gover, a native of Maryland. Mr. Patterson has been a public spirited man in all that the term implies, being interested in every enterprise tending to promote the general welfare and withholding his support from no movement for the good of the locality so long honored by his residence. His personal relations with his fellow men have ever been mutually pleasant and agreeable, and he is highly regarded by all, being easily approached, obliging and straightforward in all the relations of life.

WILLIAM D. KELCH. Few of the old settlers of the Yellowstone Valley antedate the coming of William D. Kelch, who for almost forty consecutive years has been a resident of what is now Richland County. Mr. Kelch is an honored retired resident of Sidney and many years ago developed a homestead adjoining what is now the townsite of that name.

The trail of his life has been blazed through many interesting chapters and experiences, beginning in early boyhood. He was born in Oneida County, New York, September 8, 1839, and at the age of twelve years accompanied his family to Genesee County, Michigan. His education was neglected because he ran away from home at the age of thirteen. Joining a bull train with California as its destination, he crossed the plains and reached San Francisco after six months on the road. When the caravan came to the North Platte River, the first four yoke of oxen that entered the stream went down out of sight and the animals and the wagon were not seen again. The party then desisted, and while the boy, Kelch, took charge and herded the cattle, the other men got out timber and built a rude bridge over the North Platte. This caused a delay of four weeks, and after that the party proceeded without further interruption on their journey. While in San Francisco young Kelch took up with some men who were mining around Eureka and went with them a time. Homesickness evidently overcame him, and as soon as he could acquire sufficient money he returned home by wagon train, crossing the North Platte River on the old bridge and reaching his Michigan home after an absence of more than two years. His whereabouts and his wanderings had been unknown to his parents until he arrived in person to explain.

After that for several years he served an apprenticeship as a blacksmith, and, having qualified for the trade, at the end of two years he became a journeyman, and practiced his calling in many remote localities, touring the United States from the East to Texas, thence to the British line, and walking all the way except when he crossed streams and ferried en route.

Mr. Kelch was again in Michigan when the Civil was broke out, and he enlisted in Company K of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, under Col. R. H. Minty. Joining his regiment at Lapeer, he went to the front at Louisville, and participated in the battles of Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, the Atlanta campaign, and helped capture the famous prison pen of Andersonville, Georgia. That campaign ended the big work of his company, and he was discharged at Louisville in the summer of 1865. He was unable to claim a single wound and never spent a moment in hospital or guard house.

Having discharged full well his patriotic duties he remained a steady workman at his trade in Michigan from 1865 to 1880, and in the latter year "took a leap in the dark" and came to Montana. In the meantime he had married Helen Stoddard, who died in Michigan. His only child is by that marriage, Delaskie, a farmer near Sidney, Montana. Delaskie Kelch married Alice Ogee and has three children, Billie, Rosabelle and Evert. For his second wife Mr. Kelch married Lizzie Taylor, who was his faithful and loyal companion for nearly forty years.

It was with his wife as his only companion that Mr. Kelch came to Montana, reaching the territory by train at Glendive, then the frontier railroad point for the Lower Yellowstone region. John O'Brien, the merchant and pioneer whose store and homestead was at the mouth of Fox Creek, having learned that some emigrants had just arrived at Glendive and wished to come down the river, hunted them up and brought Mr. Kelch and wife on his freight wagon to what is now Richland County, where they arrived April 12, 1880. Mrs. Kelch remained at the O'Brien home and store at Newlon, while Mr. Kelch, who had no capital, walked to old Fort Buford and went to work as a blacksmith in the government shops. His wife joined him there and they set up housekeeping and remained in Buford a year. Leaving the government service Mr. Kelch went to the Little Missouri River in North Dakota and put up 300 tons of hay preparatory to entering the sheep industry. That fall the vigilantes went through the locality, set the prairie afire and burned his hay. Remaining there until spring, his shack home was then burned with all its contents save a single chair. The $600 in cash that he had laboriously accumulated was destroyed by the same fire. The only clothing left to Mrs. Kelch was a calico dress, a squaw bonnet and a pair of moccasins, while Mr. Kelch had no clothing except trousers, shoes and hat. Then with his three cayuse ponies he moved over to the Yellowstone Valley in the vicinity of Sidney, where he began building a ranch. He worked alone for a time while his wife employed her services in a restaurant at Buford. The cayuse ponies were the foundation of Mr. Kelch's horse business. Their multiplication in time had the whole country black with horses. In a single year he branded more than 400 colts with the "Anvil-K," and at the climax of his business about 1,200 head bore that brand. His market was across the line in Canada and in Dakota. For thirty-five years he continued the business and on the whole it was profitable. A remarkable instance of horse longevity is that one of his original cayuse ponies survived until 1918, and was then killed by lightning near Sidney.

Mr. Kelch's homestead was a quarter section, joining the land where later the townsite of Sidney was laid. He developed a farm almost without a neighbor in sight, and his permanent improvement gave him the comforts of a home until he retired from business. By purchase he also acquired title to a section of railroad land near Sidney. This he fenced and utilized as a pasture and some years later sold at a handsome profit.

On selling his railroad land Mr. Kelch felt free to take a vacation and get some enjoyment from his years of labor. Rigging up a team and outfit he and his wife loaded the wagon with their personal effects and started on a trip to the Pacific Coast, driving through to Portland, spending the winter at Eugene, Oregon, and thence proceeding to Lake Port, California, where the outfit was sold. From there they journeyed by train to San Francisco, and after renewing some of his boyhood acquaintances Mr. Kelch returned to Montana and resumed his residence in Sidney. Since then he has handled but little business. Mrs. Kelch was his constant and loyal companion for thirty-eight years, passing away February 22, 1918, aged sixty-one years, one month and four days.

Such is a brief outline of the experiences of one of the most interesting old timers in Eastern Montana, and a highly esteemed citizen of Richland County. Politically Mr. Kelch is one of the few men still living in Montana who voted for Lincoln for president in 1860. He lived in Montana more than seven years before he was able to vote for president, but has always been loyal to the first party of his choice.

Rev. William Patrick Phelan. It is always a pleasure to revert to the life of a man who has spent his active years in the service of his fellow men, who, unselfishly, has sought to minister to those in need of spiritual guidance or physical succor, who, unmindful of the praise or blame of his fellow men, goes forward from day to day in the performance of his humble duty, content to know that he is honestly following the dictates of his own conscience and doing the Master's will. Such a man is Rev. William P. Phelan, pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Fort Benton, who for a number of years has performed a great and appreciated work among the people whom he is serving. A plain, hard-working, unpretentious gentleman, he never courts publicity, but has tried hard to build up a good congregation and, as all will agree, has succeeded admirably well.

William Patrick Phelan was born in Virginia City, Nevada, on May 1, 1882, and is the son of Robert and Catherine (Noughton) Phelan, both of whom were natives of Ireland, the father of County Tipperary and the mother of the City of Limerick. The father has been dead for a number of years, and is survived by his widow, who now lives in Fort Benton, at the age of sixty-nine years. They were married in Virginia City, Nevada, and became the parents of three children, Margaret, William P. and John, the latter dying at the age of nineteen years. Robert Phelan came to the United States when about eleven years of age and received his education in the public schools of Indiana. In the pioneer days of California he went to that state and was one of the first there to engage in prospecting and mining. In those days there was a great deal of placer mining. Later he returned to Virginia City, Nevada, where he became interested in mining, and also had a hotel there, being identified with that business up to the time of his death.

William P. Phelan received his elementary education in the public schools of Virginia City, Nevada, followed by attendance at All Hallows College at Salt Lake City, Utah. Then, having decided to devote himself to the ministry, he became a student in St. Patrick's College and Mento Marist College at Brookland, D. C. Completing his studies, he was ordained to the priesthood at the Cathedral of St. Ann, at Great Falls, Montana, on July 26, 1908. His first assignment was as assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Church at Billings, Montana, where he officiated from October, 1908, to May, 1910, since which date he has been rendering splendid service as pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Fort Benton.

The cause of humanity never had a truer friend than in Father William P. Phelan. Always calm and straightforward, never demonstrative, his entire life here has been a steady effort for the worth of Christian doctrine, the purity and grandeur of Christian principles and the beauty and elevation of Christian character. In a summary as brief as this must of necessity be, one catches but a brief glimpse of the place he has filled and the influence which he has exerted in this community. Charitable and kind, he never loses an opportunity to say a helpful word to all with whom he comes in contact, and in all the circles in which he mingles he enjoys the highest degree of respect and veneration because of his high character and accomplishments. Father Phelan is a forceful and impressive speaker, his pulpit utterances being characterized by vigor and fluency, as well as by logical and sound reasoning. With a keen understanding of the springs of human motive and action, he is kindly and tolerant in his judgment, and is therefore constructive in his attitude toward men and things. Because of his personal qualities and his genial disposition, he enjoys to a marked degree the confidence and esteem of the entire community.

Immaculate Conception Church. Fort Benton, probably the oldest white settlement in Montana, was established in 1846 by the American Fur Company, and named in honor of Senator Benton of Missouri. In the days before the railroad, Benton was very prosperous, being the mart of commerce and supply center for the whole upper Missouri country and all regions of the North. Here also the ministrations of religion were dispensed at an earlier date than elsewhere. As early as the winter of 1846-7, Father Nicholas Point was in Fort Benton. From this date till 1855 we find no indications of any priest having visited the settlement. Then we find that Rev. James Croke, afterwards vicar general of the Archdiocese of San Francisco, visited the place, as indicated by the Baptismal Register. As no mention of Father Croke appears after October, 1855, he appears to have remained only a short time.

The next visitation to the settlement was made by Father Nicholas Congiato, general superior of the Rocky Mountain Missions, September 2, 1858, as shown by the Baptismal Records. The place was called by him Fort Campbell. A rival trading post named after the Campbells of St. Louis had been set up in 1846 and the place was known for a time as Fort Campbell. The earliest Mission Records designate the place under both names. It appears first on the records as Fort Benton in 1855 and as Fort Campbell in 1858 and as Fort Benton in 1860 and is thereafter designated by that name.

As shown by the Mission Records, Father De Smet visited the mission in 1859. In the spring of 1860 we meet Fathers Haecken and Imoda and in July Father Congiato again visits Benton. In the spring of 1861 Father Imoda again visits Fort Benton and again in October returns with Father Giorda. In the summer of 1862 Father De Smet visits the mission. From the fall of 1861 until the spring of 1866 the priests of St. Peters Mission paid occasional visits to Fort Benton, principally Father Giorda, Father Menetrey, and Father Imoda. The Baptismal Records show a couple of visits from Father F. X. Kuppens. From 1866 to 1874 the mission was attended from Helena by Father Imoda and Father Van Gorp. Again in 1874 it is attended from St. Peters Mission by Fathers Imoda, Rappagliose and Guidi.

The first regular service was held in 1878 by Father Imoda. In 1878-9 Father Imoda built the Immaculate Conception Church, the first church edifice in town. From 1880 to 1883 Father H. Camp, S. J., was sent to the post and took charge of Fort Benton and dependencies. In 1883 the Benton people commenced the erection of a hospital, a substantial brick structure completed in 1884 at a cost of $12,000. In September, 1885, a colony of the Sisters of Providence arrived and opened the hospital, placing it under the patronage of St. Clare of Montefalco. In 1883 Father Camp was succeeded by Father Eberschweiler who held the post for four years. Father Tornielli was next in charge for two years. He in turn was succeeded by Father Casper Schuler and other Fathers of the Society of Jesus. About this time Fort Assiniboine, Shankin, Upper Teton and Highwoods were attended more or less regularly from Fort Benton.

The records show Father Monroe in charge from January, 1891, to July, 1892. Father Monroe was succeeded by Reverend F. X. Batens. His name first appears on the parish records in September, 1892. Father Batens was succeeded by Father C. G. Follet in April, 1893, Father Follet guided the spiritual destinies of the little parish from his advent in April, 1893, till August, 1898. During his incumbency the dependencies of Fort Benton included Fort Assiniboine, Havre, Nehiart (Lewistown).

Father Follet was succeeded in August, 1898, by Father Piedenz who was succeeded by Father O'Brien in July, 1900. Father Peter Gallagher appears on the records with Father O'Brien, but after December, 1903, seems to be the sole pastor of Fort Benton. In May, 1904, Father Follet is again assigned to Benton, to be succeeded by Father Thomas McCormack in October, 1904.

In September or October, 1906, Father McCormack was succeeded by the Reverend Joseph Parker, and he was succeeded by the Reverend John Hennessey in March, 1907. Soon after Father Hennessey's advent the tentative plans for the new Immaculate Conception Church took definite shape and a building and collecting committee appointed, consisting of the following members: Chairman Jere Sullivan, Sr.; treasurer, F. A. Flanagan, members, N. T. Chinedlin, James Bartley, William Early, A. O. DeLorimer, and Dr. Carroll. As a result of the untiring zeal of the pastor and the devoted co-operations of the building committee the beautiful stone church of the Immaculate Conception was finished and blessed by His Lordship Rt. Rev. Mathias C. Lenihan on December 8, 1908.

Father Hennessey having been transferred to St. Ann's Cathedral, Great Falls, Father Donnelly was appointed pastor in the early spring of 1910 and was succeeded by the present incumbent in May, 1910.

In the following year Big Sandy, which had been attended only at long intervals, was visited and arrangements made for regular service. In July, 1911, the Altar Society was organized, officers elected and plans for the first entertainment outlined. The first efforts were decidedly successful, as was every endeavor of these devoted women since. In 1912 and 1913 the first efforts were made to secure funds for the erection of the church. As the Catholics were very few the financial conditions of the land-seeker gave but little encouragement. However within a year and a half after the first start we were able to buy six lots in the choice part of the town, and December, 1915, saw a very neat and commodious frame church finished and the first Mass celebrated on New Year's Day, 1916. During 1916 the greater part of the debt was cleared. The years 1917 and 1918 will ever be memorable in and around Big Sandy. The complete failure of crops produced a condition bordering on poverty and consequently little could be done to secure funds.

The generosity and support of C. J. McNamara was a very great factor in our success in Big Sandy. Big Sandy having been placed on a solid footing, I next directed my attention to the little settlement of Carter. The first Mass was said in the early fall of 1911. We have a congregation of only twenty souls, men women and children. This mission is attended regularly once a month. On September 10, 1913, the first Mass was celebrated in Geraldine. This was the first service of any kind held in the town. The following November the Altar Society was organized, officers elected and plans perfected for entertainment and supper, the first social event under the auspices of a Catholic society. In the following spring subscriptions were taken and collections made for the new church of Geraldine. At this time Catholics were few among the settlers, but the response was most encouraging. From June, 1914, till October, 1916, we were able to show a balance in the bank of $220.00; $500.00 additional subscription, and $500.00 promised from the Extension Society. In October therefore we had plans drawn for the substantial church that is now a source of pride for every citizen of Geraldine. In October Reverend Father Morgan assumed charge of the Mission.

The next mission to receive attention was Highwood. From very early days Highwood had received spiritual attention, but this was very irregular. In 1914, however, Highwood began to be attended regularly twice a month, as was Geraldine. In the early fall the Altar Society was organized, officers elected, and plans for raising money for a building fund formulated. From the first the good ladies took the initiative, and when Father Morgan took charge in October, 1916, about $1,000 had been deposited in the Highwood Bank for the building fund.

BENJAMIN J. BOORMAN. The interest excited in a man's career is due either to his experience or to his achievements or a combination of both. In the way of experience Benjamin J. Boorman of Great Falls has had an interesting variety. In achievement his work as a lumberman both as a manufacturer and dealer may speak for itself.

Mr. Boorman, who has a national prominence in lumber circles, and was one of the men who appeared on the program at the meeting of the National Lumbermen's Congress at Chicago in April, 1919, was born on his father's farm in Grant County near Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, November 22, 1869. His parents, John and Eveline (Brodt) Boorman, were both natives of New York State. His father was born in 1829 and died in 1909, while his mother was born in 1833 and died in 1905. Benjamin J. was the seventh of their ten children, four of whom are still living. John Boorman was a Wisconsin pioneer and cleared up a farm in the wilderness of Grant County, and earned his livelihood from the soil. He was a Baptist in religion and a republican voter in politics.

Benjamin J. Boorman while a boy on the home farm acquired only a common school education. When he was twenty years of age in May, 1889, he arrived in Great Falls, then a mere village in the new State of Montana. A seeker for opportunities, he had to content himself with a job as messenger for the Rocky Mountain Telegraph Company at 50 cents a day. At that time the average charge for meals was 50 cents each and lodging 50 cents, so that young Boorman was constantly incurring a deficit in his finances as long as he worked for the Telegraph Company. The following year he was employed at a salary of $35 a month by the Great Northern Railway. The real opening to bigger and better things came when he entered the service of the Holter Lumber Company at Great Falls in 1891. He was with that organization until 1898, and during that time not only accumulated a great deal of experience and knowledge of the lumber business in every detail but managed to save out of his meager earnings the capital of $250, which was his principal asset when he branched out in business for himself. In 1898 he organized the Boorman Lumber Company in Flathead County near Kalispell. He started with one saw mill, but subsequent years saw a rapid advancement and expansion of his activities and interests until they now cover many sections of Montana. He has nearly a score of lumber yards, also mills, and is a recognized expert in many phases of lumber manufacture and as a practical lumber dealer. He is one of the most prominent members of the Montana Retail Lumbermen's Association and for years has been one of the most popular speakers at lumbermen's conventions. Mr. Boorman has the distinction of being the first man to successfully dry kiln larch lumber.

From his original enterprise established at Kalispell in 1898 he began the process of expansion and branching out ten years later and is now president of the Boorman Lumber Company, operating at Helena and Belgrade; of the Boorman-Power Lumber Company, with plants at Power, Sims and Gilman; of the Home Lumber Company at Cascade and Ulm; of the Manhattan Lumber Company of Manhattan, the Chinook Lumber Company of Chinook, and the Shelby Lumber Company of Shelby. He is also president of the Northern Montana Lumber Company of Cut Bank, president of the Boorman Mercantile Company of Valier, Collins and Brady, president of the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association and a director in the Lumbermen's Mutual Insurance Society.

Mr. Boorman served as a member of the Legislature in 1907 and 1909, and during that session was author of "The Eminent Domain" bill. He was a member of the Montana National Guard with Company A of the First Regiment in 1889. He is a member of the Great Falls Commercial Club, is affiliated with Great Falls Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Kalispell Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Cyrene Commandery No. 10, Knight Templars at Kalispell, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is a republican and a member of the Congregational Church.

December 27, 1892, at Great Falls, Mr. Boorman married Miss Calista Depew, third among the four children of H. Y. and Sarah (Campbell) Depew, both natives of Canada, but residents of Michigan when Mrs. Boorman was born. Mr. and Mrs. Boorman have one adopted son, Jack.

WALTER D. KEMMIS is a member of one of the earliest pioneer families in the vicinity of Sidney. It was in the year of 1884 that Thompson A. Kemmis with his family made the journey by rail from Walker, Iowa, to Glendive, Montana, where they were met by a relative who freighted them to the Sidney community, arriving on the 2d day of March. The husband and father entered a quarter section of land on the Yellowstone River, a mile and a half south of where Sidney was afterward located, and there developed a ranch and farm and spent the remaining years of an active life.

Thompson A. Kemmis brought far less than $1,000 with him into his new home, and the first property he purchased was a team of horses and a wagon, two cows and a few chickens, and as rapidly as possible he drifted into the farm produce business. The market for his product was at Fort Buford, about twenty-four miles distant, and the garrison at that time contained five companies of cavalry under the command of Major Bell, but the fort was later garrisoned by the Twenty-Fifth Infantry of colored troops. Although Mr. Kemmis always followed the farm produce business, he also gradually drifted into the cattle industry as a beef producer, shipping his product to Chicago until he retired from the farm and moved to Sidney. His stock ran under the brand "T.A.K." on the left shoulder.

The pioneer home of the Kemmis family in Montana was the proverbial log house constructed by members of the family, and this cabin did duty for some years, until replaced by a more pretentious dwelling of frame. The parents had children to educate and Thompson A. Kemmis had much to do with the organization of the first school of the community. The first term was held in the residence of William Meadors and was taught by Mrs. Annette Meadors, who was succeeded by Mrs. Fairfield, she later becoming the wife of Granville Stewart, one of Montana's important citizens. Walter Kemmis was one of Mrs. Fairfield's pupils, and he completed his schooling under her instruction.

Mr. Kemmis, Sr., was an active citizen of his locality in politics and other community matters and voted as a republican. He spent the vigor of his life in old Dawson County and was in sympathy with the movement to create Richland County. His name is enrolled among the honored pioneers of Montana and as one of its founders and upbuilders. His widow still resides in Sidney and has reached the age of seventy-one years.

Thompson A. Kemmis, who was born in Washington County, New York, September 29, 1829, was descended from a colonial family of that region. He was a son of Samuel D. and Mary (Rood) Kemmis. Samuel and Cornelius Kemmis, brothers, migrated from Washington County, New York, and wintered at Detroit, Michigan, en route to Illinois, where they finally settled in Whiteside County. It was there that Thompson Kemmis grew to years of maturity and received his educational training. In 1853 he crossed the plains to California, but after experimenting with mining a short time he returned to New York by the Isthmus of Panama, in 1856, and resumed his farming operations in Illinois. Just before the outbreak of the Civil war he moved to Nebraska, and at Omaha enlisted as a soldier in the First Nebraska Cavalry. His services as a soldier were performed on the plains of the West, guarding stage lines, etc., from Indian attacks and the depredations of the Sioux tribe. He was discharged in 1865, having escaped wounds.

The wife of Thompson A. Kemmis, Jane E., is a daughter of John F. Betey, who migrated from his native state of Vermont to Iowa and became a farmer in Clinton County and later in the vicinity of Walker, Iowa. He came out to Montana following the advent of the Kemmis family, and he and his wife now lie buried here. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kemmis are: Walter D.; John F., a farmer of Richland County; Thompson A., Jr., of Kemmis, Montana; Orra J., of Sidney; Phebe A., the first child of the family born in Montana, and who is now Mrs. William Goings, of Rockford, Illinois, and William C., just older than Phebe, whose death occurred in this state.

From the early age of fifteen until he started ranching for himself Walter D. Kemmis worked out as a ranch or farm hand, having herded sheep, punched cows, sheared sheep, cooked at ranches and for roundups, and carried mail between Glendive and Buford. He was born in DeWitt County, Iowa, January 28, 1870, and he contributed his wages to the family treasury until he came to the age of maturity, earning from seventy-five cents a day up as a shepherd and cowboy. The best wage which he received was as a sheep shearer, his record being 166 sheep a day of ten hours, making this record on the 4th of July, 1896. Sheep shearing was worth from 6 to 9 cents a head and he followed that occupation during the summer months from 1885 until 1899.

Mr. Kemmis started his independent career as a rancher within thirty feet of where the family stopped for their first dinner eaten in Richland County. His father purchased his team outfit from Austin Diltz, the owner of the farm where Walter now lives and on which he started on his business career, and the senior Mr. Kemmis left his two eldest sons in charge of the personal property on the place while he found places for his numerous family of children. Walter Kemmis began his stock raising enterprise with a few cows and soon afterward secured a carload of yearling steers in Minnesota, and at once became a ranchman on a small scale. His homestead adjoined the Diltz ranch and his pioneer dwelling was a comfortable log cabin, which sheltered him until a better one was erected for the reception of his wife, and this in turn gave place to his splendid frame house of nine rooms in 1914.

The history of the ranching industry of Mr. Kemmis is that of a cattleman and farmer. In 1895 the feed problems confronted him seriously, and he began farming for the growing of feed. He crossed his high grade of range stock with the Durhams and Herefords and recently he engaged in the breeding of registered Shorthorns. The head of his herd of Shorthorns is one of the best registered animals in the county, and at the exhibition of the Tri-County Fair at Culbertson Mr. Kemmis won first prize as well as sweepstakes on this bull. He has been growing his own hogs and shipping a carload each year, disposing of his animals at a year old and at a weight about 225 pounds. His preference is for the Duroc Jersey hogs.

The ranch and farm of Walter Kemmis has grown under his supervision and management from the original eighty acres purchased of the Diltz farm to three-quarter sections under the ditch and 1,000 acres of dry land, some of which he farms. Mr. Kemmis is connected with the ditch project of the Lower Yellowstone irrigation project, and almost his entire three-quarters are under cultivation, and respond to the waters of the Yellowstone. He became interested in the industry of grain growing in this region and with his brother became the proprietor of a threshing outfit in 1901 and for ten years was one of the leading threshermen, threshing in that time more than a half million bushels of grain.

Mr. Kemmis cast his first presidential vote in Montana for Benjamin Harrison in 1892. At Glendive in that same year he was a delegate to the Republican County Convention, and served on the platform committee, writing a portion of it himself. His conduct in this instance was such as to commend him to party leaders and he attended many republican conventions until that system was abolished by law. He was given the progressive republican nomination for the General Assembly in 1912, received the highest vote given to the nine men running, entered the Thirteenth Assembly, and served under Speaker McDonald of Kalispell. He was made a member of the judiciary, ways and means and roads committees, and succeeded in having passed a bill adjusting differences between old counties and new with reference to assets in excess of liabilities. In 1914 he was defeated for the House as a candidate from Richland County, but was again elected in 1916 and served in the Fifteenth Assembly, under Speaker Judge O'Connor, a democrat. His committee assignment in that assembly was light, which gave him ample time to devote to legislation, and he was the author of the Accredited High School Law, under which thirty-three counties now operate. All new counties automatically come under this law. He was also the author of the Search and Seizure Act, a measure designed for the better enforcement of prohibition, and this became a law. In the extraordinary session of that year he was the author of the resolution ratifying the national prohibition amendment, and offered at the preceding regular session and secured the passage of a resolution for the relief of settlers of Northern Pacific Railroad lands in Richland County who had settled on the lands after their selection by the railroad company but had not been notified of such selection and had made improvements on the lands. He memoralized Congress to abandon the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers as navigable streams within the State of Montana, the purpose of which was to permit the construction of wagon and railroad bridges over the streams without the necessity of draw spans. He also secured the passage of a bill creating Richland County in 1913, but the governor vetoed it on the ground that the Legislature did not have the power to create counties, a question the Supreme Court subsequently passed upon favorably to the law. In his first session in the Legislature Mr. Kemmis cast a ballot for Thomas J. Walsh for United States senator, in compliance with a promise to be bound by the choice of the people in primary for that office.

He was elected presidential elector at the presidential preference primaries in 1920, receiving 26,879 votes. During one term he served as justice of the peace of his precinct, this having been during the old Dawson County jurisdiction, and for a number of years he also filled the office of clerk of the Sidney School District. For some years he served as trustee of schools, was for an extended period a member of the Dawson County Free High School Board, and it was this school experience which caused him to introduce a bill in the Legislature for accredited high schools as against the county free high school bill, under which eighteen counties of the state still operate.

At the home of his father in old Dawson County on the 16th of October, 1894, Mr. Kemmis was married to Miss Hannah E. Will, a daughter of William and Sarah (Colquhoun) Will, the father born at Wellington Square, Canada, and the mother in the locality of Niagara Falls. Mr. Will was drowned in the Missouri River at Ponca, Nebraska, and his wife died in Sidney in 1913. The children in the Will family were: Miss Annie, of Sidney; John, also of Sidney; Mrs. Kemmis, who was born at Fort Gratiot, Michigan, August 21, 1868, and William, whose home is at Jocko, Montana. Mr. Will, the father, moved from Michigan to South Dakota in 1887, locating in Faulk County. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kemmis are: George W., of Sidney; Frank D., who is with the Montana Cadillac Company of Missoula; Louis, engaged with his father in the stock business; Oscar W., whose home is in Lincoln, California, and Earl W., a lad yet in school.

Mr. Kemmis has given of his time and funds to the promotion of a good moral community and the building of a spiritual atmosphere in his home locality. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church when a young man, and in 1892 was licensed to preach. A few years later, in 1902, he was ordained a deacon of the church at Bozeman, and his ministerial work has been rather as a supply preacher. He has always been actively identified with Sabbath School work. He was chairman of the board of trustees in the construction of the first church erected in the Sidney community, and was chairman of the finance committee when the Sidney Hospital was taken over and became a Deaconess Hospital, and still continues as one of the trustees of the institution, also a member of its executive committee. During two years Mr. Kemmis was chairman for Richland County of the War Savings Stamp campaign and in many other ways he aided in war relief work.

Mr. Kemmis was one of the original members of the company which built the telephone system of Sidney and its outlying lines, and was made the president of the corporation. Later he also served as president of the Farmers Elevator Company of Sidney. Thus through many years he has borne many of the burdens and responsibilities of his home community, has been active and influential in promoting its growth and upbuilding, and to him was given the honor of naming Richland County.

John G. Bair, who was one of the early newspaper men of Montana, and long prominent as a lawyer at Choteau, died in the latter city December 1, 1915.

Mr. Bair, who was a past grand master of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Montana, was born at Gerrardstown, West Virginia, Decembr 4, 1868. His paternal ancestors came out of Germany and settled in Pennsylvania in colonial days. John Griffith Bair was thirteen years old when his parents moved to Bedford, Indiana, where he grew up and spent most of his time until coming to Montana. By his own efforts he acquired a good literary education, and while teaching he studied law and was admitted to the Indiana bar in 1886. He practiced in his home town of Bedford, but in the fall of 1889 came to Great Falls, Montana. He was connected with the Great Falls Leader, and in the interest of that newspaper made a trip through Northern Montana and became greatly impressed with the opportunities of Choteau. While visiting in the town he was offered the position of teacher of the public schools by the local board, and was the pioneer educator of Choteau. He was the head of the local schools for three years. Upon the creation of Teton County in 1893 he was elected first county superintendent of schools. At the end of two years he resigned that office to take up the practice of law. He had a large and important clientage over Northern Montana. For four years he also served as collector of customs for the district of Montana and Idaho. For a number of years he was a member of the board of trustees of the Methodist Church at Choteau.

He was widely esteemed by his Masonic brethren and Masonry was a cardinal element of his character. He took his first degrees in the order at Bedford, Indiana, became a charter member of the lodge at Choteau and served as its first senior warden. He was worshipful master of the lodge three years, in 1897 was appointed junior grand deacon of the Grand Lodge, and in September, 1912, was chosen grand master, an office he filled during the following year. He was also affiliated with St. Paul Chapter No. 9 Royal Arch Masons; Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, and a few days before his death had achieved the Scottish Rite degrees in the Helena Consistory. In 1906 he served as grand patron of the Grand Chapter of the Montana Eastern Star, and he was also a Noble of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

In 1886 Mr. Bair married Miss Mary Ramsey. Her people were among the older settlers of Heltonville, Indiana. Mrs. Bair is still living at Choteau.

Jeremiah Sullivan. The Montana pioneers of the '60s are rapidly diminishing hosts and of those that remain very few regard themselves in the class of active business men. After but fifty-five years of residence in Montana, Jeremiah Sullivan, the veteran hotel man of Fort Benton, passed to the home beyond November 11, 1919. For over forty years he was proprietor of the Choteau House of that city. He was a factor in the great drama marking the development and opening of the great West and few men possessed such interesting recollections of the old life of the Mississippi Valley and the Northwestern country as Mr. Sullivan.

He was born at Mills Street, County Cork, Ireland, March 4, 1844, son of Jeremiah and Johanna (Clifford) Sullivan. While he came of an old Irish family, his parents were poor, and in order the better to provide for their large family they immigrated to America in 1849, establishing a new home in Ontario, Canada. Both parents attained to old age, the father dying at the age of eighty-six and the mother at eighty-seven. Jeremiah was the fourth among twelve children, only one of whom is now living.

Jeremiah Sullivan had limited opportunity to attend school in Canada, and the numerous household duties gave him a serious sense of his responsibilities at an early age. About the time he left school he went to work in a country store at $6 a month and board. Later his wages rose to $10 a month. At the age of seventeen he went to Buffalo, New York, and for a time was employed as assistant cook on a government lighthouse tender, and subsequently worked on a steamer flying between Buffalo and Chicago. Mr. Sullivan had an interesting experience on the Mississippi River when that waterway was a principal artery of traffic. He became cook of one of the Mississippi River steamboats in 1862, and made a number of journeys up and down the river between St. Louis and New Orleans. Later returning to Canada, the winter of 1865 found him in Omaha, and on the 11th of March he shipped as steward on the steamer Benton bound for the Upper Missouri. The boat landed him at Cow Island, Montana, and by ox team he journeyed on to Fort Benton, reaching that pioneer outpost on the 24th of April. Attracted to the mines of Helena, he journeyed on by ox team, and his first camp was at the head of the present Broad Street in the capital, then only known as Dry Gulch. He did the strenuous work and enjoyed the vicissitudes of fortune that came to the prospector and miner of that day. In the spring of 1866 he started with a party of about forty-five men for the Wind River country, riding his saddle horse and leading a pack horse. He went on to the Yellowstone River, passed the present site of Bozeman, prospected in the Big Horn range, and subsequently, with a friend, crossed at the head of Clear Water Gulch on the south side of the mountain bound for Idaho Territory. They struck the trail between Virginia City and Salt Lake. Later Mr. Sullivan returned to Helena and in the fall of 1874 moved to Fort Shaw. He had long had an ambition to own and operate a first class hotel, and he first engaged in that business at Fort Shaw. Then, in November, 1879, he moved to Fort Benton and bought the old Chouteau House, and for forty years maintained that as one of the best hotels in point of service in that section of Montana.

A more public spirited citizen than Jeremiah Sullivan it would have been difficult to find. He was naturally interested in politics, but even more in the welfare of his community. He served as the third mayor of Fort Benton, from 1886 to 1888. In 1889 he was appointed collector of customs at Fort Benton, filling that office for four years. He was county commissioner of Chouteau County eight years, for twelve years was justice of the peace at Fort Benton, and in 1891 President Harrison appointed him United States commissioner, and he filled the duties of that office for four years. He was a republican, and was an outstanding figure in his party in his section of the state. He served as county chairman of the Central Committee. He was a Catholic, and was active in the orders of the Elks and Ancient Order of United Workmen, serving as grand master of the latter for two years.

Above all the riches of his long and eventful experience Mr. Sullivan placed his family and home. He was twice married. At Fort Benton in 1880 he married Mary Agnes Hoffman, daughter of Jacob Hoffman, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The seven children of this union were named Jeremiah J., Earl D. B., Harry G., John F., Eugene A., Nora and Mary Agnes. In 1900, at St. Paul, Mr. Sullivan married Miss Sophia Schubert, daughter of Frances Schubert, of Minnesota. They had one daughter, Johanna Veronica. All these children have been liberally educated.

Howard W. Bateman, M. D. A physician and surgeon, Doctor Bateman has proved his value and skill in several Montana communities. Besides a large general practice at Choteau he is a partner in a well equipped hospital which furnishes facilities greatly appreciated in Teton County. Doctor Bateman was also a commissioned officer in the Medical Reserve Corps during the World war, and spent fully a year in France.

He was born on his grandfather's farm at Lexington, Minnesota, January 23, 1879. His father, George C. Bateman, was born in New York State, and at the age of six years accompanied his parents, Perry and Cornelia (Baker) Bateman, to Minnesota. Perry Bateman was a Minnesota pioneer, and served with a Minnesota regiment in the Union army during the Civil war. The rest of his life was devoted to farming. He and his wife had four children, two sons and two daughters. George C. Bateman was educated in the public schools of Minnesota, and for many years operated saw mills at Belle Plaine, Minnesota, and near Hayward, Wisconsin. He died in 1906, at the age of fifty-one. He was a republican in politics, a Methodist, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. George C. Bateman married Mary J. Moore, who was born in Minnesota and is still living in her sixty-fourth year. Doctor Bateman was the second in a family of five children, three sons and two daughters.

His early training in the public schools of Minnesota was supplemented by attendance at the State Normal at Mankato, and in 1907 he graduated from the Iowa University Medical College. In the same year Doctor Bateman began practice at August, Montana, and in April, 1909, moved to Choteau. He is a partner in the Rhoads & Bateman Hospital.

As a young man Doctor Bateman served a year in Company M of the Fifteenth Minnesota Regiment, during the Spanish-American war. The first six months he was a private and the last six months a corporal. On April 7, 1917, he volunteered his services to the American Government and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps. He was assigned to duty with the Second Montana Regiment of Infantry, which became the One Hundred and Sixty-third United States Infantry. He left this country December 14, 1917, landing in Liverpool on the 24th of December and arrived at La Havre, France, on the last day of the year. He was employed in general hospital work with the Forty-first Division, and was on duty until discharged on May 16, 1919. He was promoted to captain in March, 1918.

Doctor Bateman is a member of the Cascade County Medical Society, the Montana State and American Medical associations. He is affiliated with Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Choteau Chapter No. 25, Royal Arch Masons, and Bethany Commandery No. 19, Knights Templar. He is also an Odd Fellow and a member of the Methodist Church.

June 25, 1908, he married Miss Effie Helen Schultz, a native of Iowa. They have two children, Howard William, Jr., and Helen Lorene.

Henry A. Miller began an independent career in Montana in his youth, and from that early and formative period to the present time his interests have been associated with those of the growing commonwealth. He started his westward journey from Geneseo, Illinois, in March, 1884, his railroad ticket bearing the destination of Helena, and from there to Chestnut Valley he made the journey by stage and on foot. His financial condition at that time was at the lowest ebb, and for this reason he made the last stages of the journey on foot, and he arrived at Helena alone and friendless, a stranger in a strange country. Seeking work, he found it on a cattle ranch of the well known pioneer James Perkins, in whose employ he remained for six months. This was a new experience to the young lad, for back in his Illinois home he had been merely a farmer boy, but he continued on in the work at different places, practically in the same valley, and he spent fifteen years in that region, going into it at the age of fourteen and leaving it when twenty-nine. In that time he accumulated some cattle, and on leaving that region moved them to a spot further west.

When he came into Eastern Montana Mr. Miller located temporarily near Culbertson, where all was open country and he could chose his location at will. He leased Indian lands there that had been allotted to the Sioux, but a year later moved south of the Missouri River and settled on Charley Creek, the region in which he has since maintained his interests. He finally homesteaded there, and his permanent as well as his pioneer improvements were built on his claim there. His first permanent home was constructed of logs brought from the Missouri River, and constituted a room eighteen by eighteen feet, covered with a dirt roof, this primitive structure affording him shelter and a home for five years, until 1914, when it gave place to a modern bungalow of six rooms. There he kept bachelor's hall for a number of years, until he brought his bride to the home in 1918.

As a stockman Mr. Miller began running cattle under the brand (H-I) "Swinging H," and from this mark has designated both his cattle and horses from that early day until the present time. His early operations were confined to handling the common range cattle of Montana, but with the passing years he has improved with better breeding until his herd now constitutes a high grade of White Face animals. His herd in the early stages of his career as a stockman numbered perhaps 150 head, but in time his brand covered vast numbers of his own cattle, and he also handled cattle for others, his stock ranging for 125 miles west and southwest. His market was in Chicago.

In the development of his ranch Mr. Miller has acquired title to about 3,500 acres, all fenced and cross-fenced, and his grass has been depended upon to bring his stock to maturity. The few ranchmen, five in number, within a radius of seventy-five miles, which constituted his neighbors when he located on Charley Creek, are all Montana people at the present time.

Mr. Miller came west to seek the broader advantages which this open country presented. He had grown to immature youth in Henry County, Illinois, but was born in Geneseo of that state April 13, 1870, a son of Henry Miller, who was born in Saxony and came to the United States when a lad. His father settled in Henry County, Illinois, and he finally followed the tide of western migration and lived for many years near Ogalgala, Nebraska. He later took up his residence in Denver, Colorado, where his death occurred in 1905, when he had reached the age of sixty-seven years. His wife, Adelia Baumgartner Miller, also born in Saxony, died during the childhood of her son, Henry. Of the five children born to those parents those living at the present time number two, George and Henry, the former living at Littleton, Colorado.

Henry A. Miller was reared under republican influences, and his first presidential vote was cast for Benjamin Harrison. Throughout all the intervening years he has remained true to the "Grand Old Party," has always cast his vote when it was possible to reach the polls, and in the early days of the West he was wont to ride horseback many miles to exercise his right of franchise. In the November election of 1916 he was made a member of the Board of County Commissioners, succeeding in that office Commissioner E. O. Conkrite, and his colleagues on the board are Frank Hardy and Arthur White, of which board he is at this time chairman. Mr. Miller is also interested in Culbertson in a business way, for he is connected with the Citizens State Bank as a director, is a stockholder in the Farmers Store there, and also in the elevator and hotel. He became a member of the Masonic Order at Culbertson, still holding his Blue Lodge membership there, and he also belongs to the Consistory and Algeria Temple at Helena. He has membership in the Rainbow Lodge of Odd Fellows at Great Falls, and has also passed all the chairs in the subordinate lodge of Odd Fellowship. His membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks is at Glendive.

In Sidney, December 12, 1918, Mr. Miller was married to Miss Belle Saxton, who came to Montana in 1910, and has been a resident of this state almost continuously since that year. She was born in Pierce County, Wisconsin, November 25, 1884, a daughter of John and Mary N. (Hayes) Saxton, the father born in County Cork, Ireland, and the mother in County Tipperary. They moved from New York City to Wisconsin, where they engaged in farming, and Mr. Saxton died in that state in 1885 and his wife in 1893, leaving six sons and two daughters, of whom the following survive: John F., whose home is in Belleview, Idaho; Albert and Thomas R., both of whom reside in Tacoma, Washington; Herbert B., of Wallace, Idaho, and Mrs. Miller.

Mrs. Miller grew to womanhood in the home of her brother. She received a liberal educational training, for a time attending a convent, was next a high school student at Ellsworth, Wisconsin, and after her graduation there pursued a business course in Minneapolis and became a stenographer. She secured employment in a law office in Ellsworth, Wisconsin, and continued in this work practically until her marriage. At the time of her marriage she was in the employ of the county attorney of Sidney. One child, a daughter, Mary Helen Miller, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller January 27, 1920.

Hon. Thomas O. Larson, of Choteau, is known all over the State of Montana for his splendid services as state senator. Some of the most progressive legislation enacted in recent years bears the impress of his name and influence. Mr. Larson has long been a factor in Northern Montana and until recently was one of the most extensive cattle ranchers and grain growers in Teton County.

He was born in Norway November 27, 1874, but has been an American since he was six years of age. His parents were Ole and Annie Larson, who came to America with their family in 1880 and were among the first settlers of Benton County, Minnesota. Ole Larson bought railway land and developed a farm from the virgin soil. He died in Minnesota in 1917, at the age of seventy-three. He was a respected member of the community and always voted as a republican. His widow is still living at the age of seventy-five. They had nine children, three born in Norway and six in the United States. Thomas is the second in the family, and four of the children are still living.

Thomas O. Larson acquired his early education in the public schools of Benton County, Minnesota, and lived on his father's farm to the age of fourteen. He earned his first money by driving cows out of town for pasturage. His wages were $8 a month, but after six months he quit because he was unable to collect $20 owing him. The following winter he worked in a lumber camp at $10 a month, and thus as a young man he had the discipline and training in hard work which proved helpful in making his fortune in Montana. He spent several summers on his father's farm and also clerked in stores.

Mr. Larson came to Montana in the summer of 1895, locating on the Burton Bench, where he carried a stock of general merchandise for one year. He then bought and for two years operated the stage line between Collins and Choteau. Following this enterprise he began ranching, raising horses, cattle and sheep. He disposed of the bulk of his cattle interests in the spring of 1919. From 1909 until 1919 he also operated one of the best grain farms in Western Montana, raising every year between 10,000 and 32,000 bushels of wheat. He sold his farm in 1918.

Senator Larson has been active in local affairs for the past twenty years. He was elected assessor of Teton County in 1900 and re-elected in 1902. He has been a member of the State Senate for ten years, since his first election in 1910. Senator Larson introduced the bill providing for the creation of three counties from the old territory of Teton County. He also introduced into the Senate the Blue Sky law regulating the sale of stocks. He also sponsored the bill establishing the Nineteenth Judicial District, and in other ways has been one of the most influential members of the Senate. He served as president pro tem from 1917 to 1919, and for two weeks was acting governor of Montana.

Senator Larson is a prominent Mason, being affiliated with Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Choteau Chapter No. 25, Royal Arch Masons, Bethany Commandery No. 19, Knights Templar, Helena Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of Lodge No. 214 of the Elks at Great Falls.

December 25, 1902, he married Helen Stowe, a native of Moore County, Minnesota. They have two daughters, Elva Gertrude and Harriett Helen.

George M. Coffey, Sr., is a Montanan of thirty years' standing, and is one of the leading ranchers in the northern section of the state.

He was born on a farm near Lancaster, Missouri, in 1866, and was liberally educated, attending the Missouri State Normal and the University of Missouri. He engaged in teaching for two years, following which he accepted the post of cashier in the Bank of Scotland County in Memphis, Missouri. From Missouri he came to Montana in 1889 and began ranching north of Bynum in Chouteau County. His ranch is now in Teton County. He is senior partner in the firm of Coffey & Wellensten, a firm that owns between 6,000 and 7,000 acres in ranch and agricultural land. They run large numbers of sheep, cattle and horses, and in later years have been extensively engaged in diversified farming. Mr. Coffey was also one of the organizers of the Citizens State Bank of Choteau in 1909, and held the post of trustee for ten years, and since 1919 has been chairman of the board of directors. He has been a busy and successful man, has never cared for the honors of public office, though he served as sheep commissioner and on school boards. He is affiliated with Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Montana Chapter No. 25, Royal Arch Masons, Bethany Commandery No. 19, Knights Templar, Helena Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

Mr. Coffey married at Memphis, Missouri, Hattie May Cowell. She was born on a farm near Memphis in Scotland County. They have four children: George M., Jr., Mary Jane, who died at the age of four years, William Wallace and Clark Cowell.

George M. Coffey, Jr., is one of the leading members of the Chouteau County bar and is one of the best educated lawyers in the northern part of the state.

He was born in Memphis, Scotland County, Missouri, September 6, 1887, son of George M. Coffey, Sr., whose career precedes this sketch. Mr. Coffey has lived in Montana since early infancy, acquiring his primary education in the public schools of Choteau, then in the University of Montana, and graduated A. B. from the University of Missouri with the class of 1909. He studied law in Harvard University and Leland Stanford University of California and was admitted to the Montana bar April 20, 1916. He immediately engaged in practice for himself and on January 1, 1917, became associated with John J. Green. Mr. Coffey is a member of the Teton County and Montana State Bar associations. He is a member of several college fraternities, including the Sigma Chi, is a charter member of the Alpha Tau Delta oratorical fraternity, organized at Harvard University in 1911, and is also a member of the Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity at Stanford University. He is affiliated with Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Choteau Chapter No. 25, Royal Arch Masons, Helena Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Politically he is a republican.

September 22, 1917, Mr. Coffey married Marie Leon Brozek, a native of Wisconsin.

Alfred C. Warner, of Choteau, is one of the most widely known citizens of Northern Montana. Continuously for thirty years he has filled the post of United States commissioner. He first came to Montana more than forty years ago.

He was born at Brooklyn, New York, September 8, 1848, son of Charles H. and Charlotte (Walters) Warner. His parents were both natives of London, England. His father was born April 5, 1825, and died in July, 1899, while his mother was born March 19, 1825, and died March 20, 1899. They were married in London in September 1847. Of their nine children four are still living: Alfred C., Eleanor M., Edwin Fremont and Walter J. The son Walter in 1916 joined Battery A of the Missouri National Guard Artillery at St. Louis, was first lieutenant and with that rank served on the Mexican border. When this country entered the war with Germany he and his command became part of the First Missouri Artillery, and he was mustered into service with the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Field Artillery of the Thirty-fifth Division. He served as lieutenant colonel during the battle of the Argonne Forest, where he commanded his regiment, was later promoted to colonel of his regiment, and altogether made a brilliant military record for himself.

The parents of Alfred C. Warner came to this country by sailing ship in March, 1848. They were six weeks on the ocean. At Brooklyn Charles H. Warner was employed as an expert by the Brooklyn Flint Glass Company. In 1852 the company sent him back to London in charge of its exhibit of products. These products took the first prize at the great exposition in London. Afterwards Charles Warner was superintendent of the Planters Glass Company at St. Louis, and from 1865 to 1882 was superintendent of the Great Western Glass Company. For the last fifteen years or more of his life he lived retired. He was a republican, and cast his first vote for that party in 1856.

Alfred C. Warner spent his early boyhood on his father's farm on Long Island. He attended school there to the age of thirteen. In 1863 he found work in New York City as mailing clerk at wages of $1 a week for the publishing house of D. Appleton &

Company. In the spring of 1867, when he joined his family in St. Louis, his experience with Appleton qualified him for a position with the Woodward Book Store, an old St. Louis firm with which he remained until 1871. In that year he went back to New York and was chief clerk to J. B. Ford & Company, publishers of Henry Ward Beecher's paper, The Christian Union, and the other literary output of Mr. Beecher.

In 1876 Mr. Warner again rejoined his family in St. Louis, and in the summer of the following year came to Montana. For five years he was clerk at the Blackfoot Indian Agency. He made his pioneer trip to Montana by railroad as far as Bismarck and thence by steamboat up the Missouri River to Fort Benton. Going back to St. Louis, Mr. Warner lived in that city until 1885, when he established his permanent home at Choteau, Montana. Here for a time he was bookkeeper and clerk for Hamilton and Hazlett, the pioneer merchants of Choteau. He was also associated as a member of the firm Burnet & Warner, one of the earliest saw mill enterprises of Teton County. They operated a mill twenty-five miles above Choteau on Teton Creek. In 1887 Mr. Warner sold his interests in this business, and since 1889 has given his time to office business at Choteau. For many years he has also held a position as a notary public. He was appointed United States commissioner in 1889, and has filled that office now for thirty years. He was elected county clerk of Teton County in 1896, and by re-election held that post twelve years. Mr. Warner, who has never married, is an active republican and is a charter member of Chevalier Lodge No. 12, Knights of Pythias, and has held all the offices in the lodge. He is also a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Exzelia J. Pepin, former postmaster of Havre, has been a factor in the business and civic life of this city nearly thirty years. He is a nephew of that distinguished Montana pioneer, Simon Pepin, who was one of the founders of the City of Havre, being a partner with E. T. Broadwater in the first mercantile enterprise on the townsite. Simon Pepin reached Montana at Virginia City in the fall of 1863, and became prominent in trading, transportation, ranching and merchandising, until his interest covered an immense area of the northwestern country.

Exzelia J. Pepin was born in Canada, November 25, 1867, son of Alexander and Anastasia (Poirier) Pepin. His parents were both natives of Canada, while the grandfather, Samuel Pepin, father of Simon Pepin and grandfather of Exzelia Pepin, spent his life as a farmer. Alexander Pepin also followed farming in younger life, and became an expert in the handling of farm machinery and was a salesman for implement concerns. He also engaged in broom making. He died in 1896, at the age of sixty-seven, and his wife passed away at the same age. They were devout Catholics. Exzelia was the fourth in a family of eight children, five of whom are still living.

He spent most of his boyhood at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was educated in the public schools, but at the age of fourteen began work at the butcher's trade at $8 a month and board. At sixteen he left the butcher shop and became an employe of the wholesale dry goods house of Auerbach, Finch & Van Slyck, remaining in their service about two years. He then resumed work at his trade, and on July 5, 1889, at the age of twenty-two, reached Fort Assiniboine, where he was appointed chief butcher for the firm of Broadwater & McCulloch, the army and government contractors at that post. He remained with this firm, subsequently the Broadwater-Pepin Company, until 1898, and in the meantime located at Havre, where his uncle and Mr. Broadwater had established their business headquarters in 1891. Mr. Pepin served for about two years as an assistant postmaster in the early days of Havre, and then resumed the meat business independently for some three years. Much of his success has been due to ranching, and he still owns about 480 acres of land, though he sold his stock of cattle and horses in 1914. After serving as assistant postmaster for eight years Mr. Pepin was appointed postmaster of Havre May 16, 1914, and was reappointed by President Wilson in 1918. Mr. Pepin is affiliated with Havre Lodge No. 1201 of the Elks, and in politics is a democrat.

June 15, 1898, he married Miss Anna Nemetz, a native of Beaver Falls, Minnesota. They have one son, Exzelia J., Jr.

John A. Sweat, M. D. For many years actively engaged in the practice of his profession as a physician and surgeon at Great Falls, Doctor Sweat since 1915 has been retired from his professional labors and has been living at his homestead ranch at Dutton in Teton County. Doctor Sweat rendered some valuable service as a member of the exemption board at Great Falls during the World war.

He was born at Brownfield, Maine, October 23, 1856, of English Puritan ancestry. His parents, Jesse P. and Eliza (Spring) Sweat, were also natives of Maine. His father was a graduate of Bowdoin College both in the literary and medical course, and practiced medicine for fifty years in his native state. During the Civil war he was surgeon of the Twenty-third Maine Regiment. He spent his last days at Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Dr. John A. Sweat, only son of his parents, acquired his early education in Maine and was fourteen years of age when he went with the family to Minnesota. He graduated in 1876 from the University of Minnesota, and subsequently entered the Medical School of Bowdoin College, his father's alma mater, graduating in 1880. He also attended medical lectures at Columbia University in New York, and practiced at Minneapolis until 1883. In that year he became a surgeon of the Pacific Division of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in 1890 located and began his practice at Great Falls. He was formerly president of the Montana State Board of Medical Examiners, and also served as president of the North Montana Medical Association and is a member of the American Medical Association. In his native state he served as a member of the Legislature in 1880-81. Doctor Sweat is a democrat, and is affiliated with the Masons and Elks.

In 1888 Doctor Sweat married Miss Mary Towle, of Maine. Their first two children, Valarie and Robert, died in infancy. The three younger children are Ruth, Jack and Helen. These young people are highly educated and have already made names for themselves. Ruth received her Bachelor of Science degree from Montana State College at Bozeman in 1916. She did her first work as a teacher in Cascade County, was an instructor in the Teton County High School at Choteau, and in November, 1918, was elected county superintendent of the Teton County schools, beginning her official term on January 1, 1919.

The son Jack during his junior year at the University of Montana in 1917 left school to join the First Officers Training Camp at The Presidio in California, and was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was with the army camp at Camp Lewis,

E. J. Pepin

Washington, and went overseas as a member of Company F, Three Hundred and Sixty-first Regiment, Ninety-first Division. He was in the great battles of the Argonne and other phases of the fighting in the summer and early fall of 1918. He was mustered out with the rank of second lieutenant in May, 1919.

The younger daughter, Helen, graduated from the Great Falls High School in 1915, spent one year in the University of Montana, and is now assistant superintendent under her sister Ruth.

Otto Wagnild, present county assessor of Teton County, grew up on his father's ranch in Northern Montana, and is a practical grain farmer by his own experience.

Mr. Wagnild was born at Minneapolis, Minnesota, September 14, 1888, son of Ole and Margaret (Vang) Wagnild. His parents were both born in Norway, his father in 1851 and his mother in 1861. They were married in Norway, where Ole Wagnild was a railway employe. After coming to this country he was engaged with a lumber company and sash and door factory at Minneapolis for a number of years. In 1896 he moved to Teton County, Montana, and established a ranch on the Burton Bench. Here he has been extensively engaged in stock raising and farming. He is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His wife died in 1901. They had six children: Caroline, wife of Adolph Saterlee; Signe, who died in May, 1913, the wife of Peter Wold; Otto; Alf, who on November 4, 1917, entered the Government service and was with Company A of the Three Hundred and Forty-sixth Supply Train at the army headquarters at Chaumont, France; Olga, wife of Gordon E. Monkman; and Mayda.

Otto Wagnild acquired his early education at Farmington in Teton County. The first money he earned was herding sheep at $15 a month. He did that work when only eleven years of age. Between the ages of fifteen and nineteen he was a regular cowboy employed on the Flying U Ranch. He left the range to become an employe of the Collins Mercantile Company at Collins, and in 1909 engaged in business with the Choteau Mercantile Company, remaining with that firm seven years until 1916. During 1916-17-18 he was also engaged in farming, growing wheat on between 150 and 200 acres.

Mr. Wagnild became deputy assessor of Teton County in 1916, and was elected as chief of that office in November, 1918. He is a democrat in politics and is a past master of Choteau Lodge No. 44, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

June 3, 1914, Mr. Wagnild married Miss Hattie M. Gewald. She was born at Alpena, South Dakota.

Michael A. O'Neil, county clerk and recorder of Teton County, has had a great deal of business, agricultural and official experience. He was a public official back in his old home state of Iowa for several years. He began life a poor boy, and by self reliance and industry has made himself a factor in the affairs of every locality which he has called his home.

Mr. O'Neil was born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, July 31, 1853, son of Daniel and Mary (Donovan) O'Neil. His parents were both natives of Ireland. His father was born in County Cork in 1795, and lived to the venerable age of ninety-three, passing away in 1888. As a young man he was a British sailor and went to nearly all the ports of the world. In 1854, after his marriage, he took his family to the vicinity of Bellevue, Jackson County, Iowa, buying Government land at $1.25 an acre. He proved a sturdy and successful pioneer, developing his land, and, beginning with a log house, eventually had 200 acres in cultivation and supplied his family with all the substantial comforts. He finally retired and spent his last days at Green Island. He served as a notary public, was a Catholic, and a Jackson democrat. His wife was born in County Tipperary in 1825, and died in 1910, at the age of eighty-five. They were married in Pennsylvania, and of their six children three are still living.

Michael A. O'Neil, fifth among these children, was educated in the public schools of Iowa. He earned his first money dropping corn at 25 cents a day. As a young man he learned the stone mason's trade and followed that for several years. For about twenty years he was a contractor in building work in Iowa. He also owned a farm and did practical farming in that state. Mr. O'Neil sold his interests in Iowa in 1908 and came to the Flathead Valley of Montana. He farmed there until 1912, when he homesteaded in Teton County, and now has a complete section of land, well developed as a farm and ranch.

In 1888 he was elected assessor of Clinton County, Iowa, and held that office for eleven years, finally resigning when he came West. He also served as justice of the peace. He was deputy assessor of the north end of Teton County, and on November 5, 1918, was elected clerk and recorder, beginning his official duties at Choteau on January 6, 1919.

Mr. O'Neil is a skillful orator, and his ability in that field has made him a man of much influence in the democratic party in Northern Montana. He is a Catholic and is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus.

Probably his greatest pride and satisfaction are derived from his children and grandchildren. On November 9, 1875, he married Elizabeth Cain, a native of Michigan. Mrs. O'Neil died in October, 1911, the mother of three sons and seven daughters; Anna S., the oldest, is the wife of William Rutenbeck, and they have three children; Edward Daniel married Lillian Peeler; Josephine is the wife of George Smith; Lucy is the wife of Jay Scott and had one child; Cecilia, a nurse, died in 1916, at the age of twenty-seven; Mary is the wife of Dr. H. J. McGregor and is the mother of two sons; Frances is married, and the three younger children are Walter, Elinora and Mabel.

R. W. De Noielle is the founder and active head of the largest planing mill and wood working establishment in Lewis and Clark County. He was for many years a building contractor at Helena, and was a boy in Helena during the exciting epoch of the '60s and has many interesting recollections of pioneer events and personalities.

Mr. De Noielle was born in Tuolumne County, California, July 19, 1852. He is of French Huguenot stock, and his grandfather was the founder of the family in Massachusetts. His father, Arnold De Noielle was born about 1820 at Boston, Massachusetts, was reared and educated and married in that city, and followed the trade of stone mason. He was one of the real argonauts of the glorious golden period of California in the days of forty-nine. He left Boston in 1848, accompanied by his wife, traveled around the Horn, and was just a year to the day in making the voyage. He was one of the early arrivals in the gold regions, and spent the rest of his life in California, principally engaged in mining. He retired to San Francisco, and died in that city about 1880. All his children were born in California, and out of his success he reared and educated them for successful careers. He was a republican in politics. Arnold De Noielle married Sarah E. Fields. She was born April 10, 1828, and after the death of her first husband became the wife of Frank S. Getchell. Mr. Getchell was born at Benton, Maine, October 17, 1833, and died at Helena, Montana, July 7, 1915. Frank S. Getchell was one of the earliest pioneer Montanans, reaching Virginia City in 1862. He was both a miner and millwright. Mrs. Sarah Getchell was the mother of one son, Charles Getchell, a merchant at Bakersfield, California. Arnold De Noielle and wife had four children: George, who died young at Columbia, California; R. W.; Samuel P., who was born November 23, 1854, at Columbia, California, was brought to Helena in 1866, and spent his active life as a blacksmith, dying February 2, 1902; Sarah E., born May 6, 1861, is the wife of Eugene B. Braden, superintendent of the Selby Smelter at Oakland, California. The mother of these children died at Helena July 26, 1905.

R. W. De Noielle was brought to Virginia City, Montana, in 1865 and to Helena in 1866, and acquired part of his education in the public schools of Helena. Mr. De Noielle finished his education in one of the famous preparatory schools of the East, Phillips Academy at Andover, Massachusetts, where he graduated in the scientific course in 1872. He was a member of the Philomathian Society at the Academy. Mr. De Noielle in 1873 began learning the trade of carpenter at the historic City of Salem, Massachusetts, and for a number of years followed his trade in the East. He returned to Helena in 1881, and thenceforth was a carpenter and builder, and a large amount of construction work still standing attests his skill.

Mr. De Noielle in 1913 founded the firm of De Noielle, Gebauer & Mason, a partnership. They are manufacturers of mill work, including doors, sash, office and house finish and cabinet work, the planing mill and other plants being located at 1800 East Lynndale Avenue. The output of the factory is shipped all over Montana, and Mr. De Noielle as manager has the chief credit for giving this important institution to Helena.

Mr. De Noielle is an old line republican, but has never aspired to office. He is affiliated with the Congregational Church, is a past noble grand of Excelsior Lodge No. 5, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a representative to the Grand Lodge of the state. He is also affiliated with Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Garnet Camp No. 105, Woodmen of the World, and the Helena Commercial Club.

Mr. De Noielle owns a modern home at 823 Ninth Avenue. In 1876, at Salem, Massachusetts, he married Miss Hattie I. Grover, who was born in that city in 1851. She died at Helena in 1888. Mr. De Noielle's only child is by his first wife. This daughter, Grace E., was born at Helena in 1888, and is now the wife of Samuel Langhorne, a resident of East Helena, and foreman in the East Helena plant of the American Smelting & Refining Company. Mr. De Noielle also went back to Salem for his second wife, whom he married in 1892. She was Mrs. Annie E. (Watts) Webb, born at Salem in 1851.

Olaf G. Skylstead. Among the leading citizens of Havre, a prominent place has been filled for more than twenty-five years by Olaf G. Skylstead, insurance and real estate man, who has been a factor of importance in the commercial affairs of this city. His influence has been of still wider scope, for county and state have also been benefited through his official administration of sound business principles and his example of high-minded American citizenship.

Olaf G. Skylstead was born June 13, 1870, in the City of Bergen, Norway. His parents were Capt. Ole I. and Gurine (Thorkilsen) Skylstead, the former of whom was born in 1839, on a Norway farm, but during all his active life was a sailor and commanded vessels in the merchant marine service. When he left the sea he retired, and his death occurred in his native land in 1914. The mother of Mr. Skylstead was born in 1849 in Norway, and she still resides there. Of their six children three are living, Olaf G. being the eldest of the family. He was educated in the excellent schools of the City of Bergen and when graduated from the high school was well prepared educationally to make his own way in the world. His father did not oppose his coming to America, and on August 14, 1887, the young man landed in the harbor of New York City, and being of a practical turn of mind, lost but little time in the great metropolis before setting out for his proposed point of location, which was Minot City, North Dakota. There he became a clerk in a general store and was so well satisfied with his surroundings and prospects that he remained at Minot City for the next five years, preparing in the meanwhile to enter into business for himself.

In 1892 Mr. Skylstead came to Havre, Montana, and embarked in the general mercantile business, which he developed into a large enterprise and continued until 1904, when he went into the loan and real estate line, and was thus interested until 1911, additionally being president and manager of the Citizens National Bank of Havre. In the meanwhile he had taken an active part in politics, and on the republican ticket was elected in 1906 a county commissioner, in which office he served until 1912, being chairman of the board during 1911 and 1912. Additional approval was shown of Mr. Skylstead's integrity and business judgment afterward in his appointment by Governor Norris as a member of the Board of Appraisers of Chouteau, Hill and Blaine counties. During 1914 and 1915 he served ably as alderman from the First Ward, at all times looking carefully after the best interests of his constituents, while in close party councils he has been trusted and honored as chairman of the Republican County Central Committee in 1916, and as a member of the Republican State Committee in 1918 and 1919. During the continuance of the great war he was helpful in every possible way commensurate with loyal citizenship, giving one of his cherished sons to the service of the land of his adoption, the latter, after gallantry most remarkable, providentially surviving every terrible hazard of war.

On June 17, 1893, Mr. Skylstead was united in marriage to Miss Anna Troye, who was born at Bergen, Norway, and five children have been born to them, namely: Esther, who died in infancy; Ralph F., of whom mention will be made later; Anna, who completed one year in the University of California, then entered the University of Montana, a young lady of brilliant talent; Olaf G., who is a student in the Havre High School, and Esther, who is yet in the grade schools.

Returning to Mr. Skylstead's eldest son, Naval Lieut. Ralph F. Skylstead, a few words of tribute may be given to a very unusual young man, who is well known at Havre, where he received his early education. In 1913 he received his appointment to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, which he entered in his sixteenth year, on May 6, 1913, from which he was graduated March 30, 1917, immediately receiving a commission as ensign. As a midshipman he went on cruises on the battleships

O. G. Skylstead.

Illinois, Wisconsin and Missouri, and had the appreciated distinction of being on the Missouri when that battleship was the first of any to pass through the Panama Canal. He also served on the dreadnaught Texas. After three months as ensign he was promoted to junior lieutenant and transferred to the transport Finland, later became lieutenant-senior, and during the World war was chief gunnery officer and had made nine round trips across the ocean when the armistice with the enemy was signed. After that he was transferred to the cruiser New Orleans and ordered to the Asiatic squadron and is now attached to the Brooklyn, the flagship of the fleet. He was for some time the executive officer of the U. S. S. Helena, named after the state capital of Montana.

For many years prominent in Masonry, Mr. Skylstead is a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master; of Butte Consistory, thirty-second degree and Algeria Temple Shriners, and both he and wife are members of Havre Chapter No. 30, Order of the Eastern Star, of which he is past patron and she past matron. He belongs also to Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he is treasurer. He is also financial agent of the Masonic Temple at Havre.

CHARLES STIERLE, one of the old Indian fighters and ranchmen of the Northwest, came into this country on the 23d of August, 1875, as a soldier, a member of Company I, Sixth United States Infantry. As a recruit he had journeyed from Indianapolis, Indiana, to Newport, Kentucky, and thence to Standing Rock, South Dakota. His command left the latter place on the 22d of April, 1876, arriving at Fort Buford, North Dakota, where they remained until the 10th of May following, and then started on the Sitting Bull expedition. While at Standing Rock the troops had been engaged chiefly in distributing food to the Sioux Indians, Sitting Bull at their head, but during the winter he went on the "warpath," and the troops, with Mr. Stierle among them, gave chase in the following April, journeying up the Yellowstone and camping at the mouth of Powder River. There they met Generals Custer and Gibbons. After a conference of the troop commanders, with General Terry chief in command, it was decided to send General Custer and the Seventh Cavalry to find the Indians, while Terry took his troops by boat up the Yellowstone, but after hearing of the massacre of Custer's command they landed at the mouth of the Lower Rosebud, where they met General Miles and his command, and they marched up the Rosebud together. However, before reaching its head they were met by General Crooke and his command, the first evidence of his presence having been the firing of the Crow Scouts under General Terry into the Snake Scouts of General Crooke, and at first it was thought the Sioux had been encountered. Generals Terry and Miles had a transport train of 182 wagons, and with the consolidation of the three armies, about 2200 troops were together. Leaving General Miles on the Rosebud to take care of the wagon train, the two other generals followed the trail of the Indians up the Rosebud over into the Tongue and back to the mouth of Powder River, where an engagement took place in which a few Indians were killed and one white man was lost. Here the combined expedition dissolved, and Terry's command was ordered across to the Fort Peck country, where the Indians were forcibly removing supplies from the agency, but no fighting took place, and leaving a guard at the fort the command proceeded down the Missouri, camped at Porcupine and later entered camp at Wolf's Point, and continuing on to Fort Buford engaged in escorting wagon trains up and down the Yellowstone from that point.

The soldier of those days had a grievous burden to bear. His equipment were his gun, his knapsack and his haversack, two blankets, a part of a shelter tent and his load of ammunition. When on the march he carried two stocks of sixty rounds each over his shoulder besides fifty-four rounds in his belt, and this load frequently proved too much for him and he either had to discard a portion of it or drop out of the ranks exhausted. After the troops joined the command of General Miles on the Rosebud and crossed over to the Tongue River it is estimated that about 10,000 of these ammunition stocks were thrown away by the men to enable them to stay in the ranks, and the articles thus discarded were always picked up by the Indians.

In 1877 Mr. Stierle went with his command on the Nez Perce expedition against Chief Joseph and his band, which were depredating from Oregon to Canada. Joseph and his followers were civilized Indians, and treated the captives and wounded humanely. General Terry's command never participated in actual hostilities against Joseph, but the chief was finally taken prisoner by General Miles and brought to Fort Buford, where Mr. Stierle was stationed at that time. General Terry's troops had a supply depot at old Fort Peck, and they guarded steamboats from there to Cow Island, where another supply depot was stationed and which was burned by the Nez Perce Band, at which time enough hams, fine cut tobacco and beans were found scattered over the ground sufficient to supply a regiment.

At the time General Miles separated his command from that of General Terry, following this expedition, he organized a cantonment at the mouth of Tongue River, while a year later he established Fort Custer, and Mr. Stierle helped transport goods and escort trains between Fort Buford and those two forts during the remainder of his army career.

Receiving his discharge at Fort Buford July 22, 1880, after a long and arduous military experience, Mr. Stierle journeyed up the Yellowstone and engaged in trapping and operating a woodyard, supplying boats, etc. Beaver, otter and other fur bearing animals were plentiful at that time in this locality, and he disposed of his furs and buffalo hides to Mr. Baldwin, one of the early hide and pelt dealers of this region.

Following this experience Mr. Stierle located at Newlon as a ranchman. Sending for his family, which then consisted of his father, mother and sister, he entered his first claim there and engaged in the cattle business, buying his first stock from the capital he accumulated out of the sale of his hides and his fur business. In time he developed a ranch of 800 acres, and also owned a half interest in a section west of this ranch and had a lease of 1,000 acres a mile south. His first home was a log cabin containing one room 14 by 16 feet, with a dirt roof, but this was subsequently replaced by a more permanent home of five rooms, a frame building, and he also supplied himself with a good barn and ample underground sheds for the accommodation of his stock. He began ranching with the brand "Box S" on the left hip, and carried it throughout his career as a stockman. In 1918 he sold his ranch and stock and has since engaged in the breeding of thorough Holstein cattle, his ranch being located one mile south of Newlon.

Although so long and intimately identified with the United States, and more especially the northwest territory, Mr. Stierle was born in the Province of Baden, Germany, at Asen, May 5, 1857. He came to the United States in April, 1866, in company with his parents, who located at Indianapolis, Indiana, and there the son grew to years of maturity and received his educational training, finally enlisting in the army from that point. His father, Modestus Stierle, was a carpenter, and in later years he followed his son into Montana and both he and his wife now lie buried at Newlon. In his early youth he married Mary Rothweiler, who bore him seventeen children, of whom the son Charles was the sixteenth born, and the surviving ones are: Cecelia, wife of Chris Sieder, of Indianapolis; Charles; and Mrs. J. A. Pennington, of Brooklyn, New York.

At Newlon, Montana, on the 12th of May, 1886, Charles Stierle was married to Nora Sartin, whose father, William Sartin, was the bugler in Mr. Stierle's military company and who gave many years of faithful service to the army. Mrs. Stierle was the oldest of her parents' seven children and was born at Fort Hayes, Kansas. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Stierle have been born four children, namely: Charles R., of Newlon, who married Eda Wyman; Ileen, the wife of George Darling, of Lambert, Montana; Alice, wife of L. H. Turner of Sidney; and Annie, who married Neuwme Scott, of Scobe, Montana. Mr. Stierle has always cast his ballot with the democratic party. Living on his ranch home at Newlon, this intrepid Indian fighter, frontiersman and ranchman is at last spending his years in peace and quiet, having earned the true reward of valor and industry.

Jesse Conner. One of Richland County's largest and most successful ranchmen is Jesse Conner, who has been identified with this region since July, 1900. He was born in Dane County, Wisconsin, March 12, 1862, a son of Jesse Conner, Sr., who was born in Pennsylvania, and who remained in his native state until he had reached the age of twenty years, going then into Canada and settling at Toronto. The father was by trade a pump-maker, and he was engaged in that occupation for some years in Toronto, but finally returned to the United States and took up farming near Stoughton, Wisconsin. Subsequently he removed to Floyd County, Iowa, and after the death of his wife he made his home in Fayette but subsequently accompanied his son Jesse to Montana and spent his remaining days on the Crane Creek Ranch. He died at the age of ninety-three and his body was returned to Oswego, Iowa, and laid beside that of his wife. Although he lived a quiet and unostentatious life, he never missed casting his ballot and supported the republican party. Both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Conner, Sr., married Mary Pimlot, who was born in Leicestershire, England, and was ten years younger than her husband. A large family of children blessed their union, namely: Thomas, who resides in Oswego, Iowa; Annie, wife of Henry Rose, of Estaville, Iowa; William, who died in Sherbourne, Minnesota, leaving a wife and three children; John, a farmer near Noah Springs, Iowa; Belva, who married Frank Barton, of the State of Washington; Jesse, the Montana rancher; Mary, the wife of Douglas Bracken, of Floyd, Iowa; Hattie, wife of Lee Gruber, a time keeper for the Ford automobile factory at Detroit, Michigan; and Hank, who died in Washington, leaving a family of five children.

Jesse Conner, the son, was but two years old when his parents removed from Wisconsin to Iowa, and he was reared in Floyd County until sixteen years of age. His father then gave him his time and he rented one of the home farms until he reached the age of twenty, going then to South Dakota. It was in 1882 that he located in Sanborn County, South Dakota, taking with him $2,000 and leaving an equal value in property on the parental farm he had worked. He developed a farm in Sanborn County, and was its occupant and tiller for nine years and was also married while living there. Returning then to Fayette County, Iowa, he farmed, dealt in stock and followed the butcher business until he set out for the far Northwest, with Montana as his destination.

Thus Mr. Conner arrived in this state with a fair knowledge of farming and stock buying and dealing, and he brought with him from Iowa 100 head of cattle and two carloads of horses. He at once entered a homestead on Crane Creek, then in Dawson County, and purchased the relinquishment and improvements of a settler. This homestead became the nucleus of his present extensive ranch. He adopted the "lazy EX" for his cattle brand, and his horses ran under the brand "XO," having been thus branded when he acquired them. He adopted the name the Crane and Fox Creek Stock Ranch for his homestead and with the passing years he has extended the boundaries of his land until it extends three miles on Crane Creek and two miles on Fox Creek, comprising seven and a quarter sections. For a period of three years he went to and from the East to his ranch, and lived there alone while preparing it for the profitable enterprise which it has subsequently become. After the third year here he began shipping his beef to the Chicago and South St. Paul markets, beginning his shipments to Wood Brothers forty years ago, and in 1919 a consignment of hogs was again sent to them from his ranch. He grew gradually into the business of horse raising extensively, and early found a market for them in Canada and later supplied the home market for new settlers. He bred the heavy horses, going into the Percheron and Shire strains, and during the period of the World war there was a great demand for his class of horses.

During his three years experience in the sheep business Mr. Conner handled about 27,000 head, the wool and mutton showing a most favorable net result, and brought the ranch the "easiest money" of any stock handled by its owner. On account of the death of the younger Mr. Conner the manager, and also on account of advanced prices during the war period, the ranch began to curtail its output, and Mr. Conner is not now running his customary bunch of cattle.

The Conner Ranch has also developed into an extensive farm, at one time having 2100 acres under cultivation. The growing of flax, wheat, oats, barley and corn has been undertaken by the management, and at times record yields per acre have been harvested. A field of 500 acres of flax one year averaged eighteen bushels per acre, a field of seventy acres of wheat yielded thirty-nine bushels an acre, and the best yield in oats was sixty-two bushels to the acre, weighing thirty-four pounds to the bushel. Mr. Conner's experience with alfalfa has also been favorable, two cuttings a year having been taken from the land with a total yield of two tons to the acre. It has been his custom to feed his grain to his stock, with the exception of the wheat. For a period of sixteen years he sold horses on time payments, and never had an animal returned to him for lack of payments where the party remained in the country. But when the war came on and the boys began to leave for the army and could not pay him 160 head of his horses were brought back to him by the soldier purchasers.

Mr. Conner is interested in one of the live mining properties of Montana. With other men of Sidney he constitutes a part of the company owning the mine, the property comprising 203 acres within a mile of the Great Northern Railway and eighteen miles from Helena. It joins the old Alder mine, the rich silver property of former days, and was located by Thomas Paul of Jefferson City. Assays of the ore show the mine to be rich in silver and copper, and about 1600 feet of tunnel have been built and ninety feet of shaft. The corporation is known as the Moose Mountain Copper Mining Company and is capitalized at $600,000. Development on this mine was arrested during the war by an explosion which occurred as the result of a mine planted by a pro-German member of the company, but the property is now being cleaned up preparatory to active operation. Mr. Conner is president of the company, William Combs of Sidney is secretary-treasurer, and W. F. Winkelmann of Savage and Jack Turner and John Carey of Sidney are members of the board of directors.

At Mitchell, South Dakota, June 9, 1887, Mr. Conner married Miss Chloe Servoss, the marriage ceremony having been performed by Reverend Clark. Mrs. Conner is a daughter of John and Helen (Weager) Servoss, farming people of Fayette County, Iowa, where Mrs. Conner was born on the 29th of August, 1866, one in a family of seven children. The first born of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Conner, Glenn, became his father's assistant as ranch manager and died in Chicago November 25, 1918. He had married Dell Ogee, and they had one child, Glenn Jesse. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Conner is Miss Gladys.

Unlike his father in political affiliations Mr. Conner began voting as a democrat, casting his first presidential ballot for Mr. Cleveland, and the only time he has changed his political allegiance was when he supported Colonel Roosevelt in 1904. He joined the Masonic Order at Artesian, South Dakota, when he was twenty-one years of age, and is now a member of the Sidney Blue Lodge, and the Helena Consistory and Shrine, and is a member of Algeria Temple. He is connected with the Elks Lodge in Glendive.

The Conner home in Sidney was erected in 1913, and is a large modern bungalow of eight rooms, and the family maintain their home there and on the ranch. At times during the World war the ranch was the scene of hilarity and pleasure, dances having been held there for the purpose of raising funds for Red Cross work. One of these occasions proved an historic entertainment of that region, as the company attending numbered about 700, and 176 automobiles were used to bring them to the scene. The dance itself was held in the ranch machine shed, the floor space covering 96 by 32 feet, and gave room for nine sets on the floor at one time. The entertainment included a feast, which was served in the cafeteria style.

ALBERT E. KELCH. The name of Albert E. Kelch is recorded among the settlers of Montana of the early days. He was born in LaPeer County, Michigan, February 22, 1850. His father, John Kelch, who died in 1861, was a native of New York and was married there to Betsy Mills who died near Flint, Michigan, in 1901. They became the parents of the following children: Lydia, who married a Mr. Wilson and died in New York; Sylvester, who was a Civil war soldier from Michigan, and died in Sidney, Montana; William, whose home is in Sidney; Susan, who became the wife of Peter Lumeree, of Hawley, Michigan; Almyra, the wife of Caleb Matthews, of Genesee County, Michigan; Elizabeth, who died unmarried; John, of Genesee County, Michigan, and who served as a Union soldier during the War of the Rebellion; Truman, whose death occurred in Genesee County, Michigan; Horace, a farmer in that county; and Albert E., who is the youngest of this large family of children.

Albert E. Kelch during his youth received but meager educational advantages, attending school only until about fourteen, but as time has passed he has added to his knowledge in a practical way and has gained experience ample for a successful career. He made the journey into the northwest country by rail to Glendive, the destination of so many who have settled in this locality, and he came direct from Grand Rapids, Michigan. He had been variously employed before coming here, at farming, lumbering, driving logs down the rivers and as an employe in a furniture factory, so that when he located upon his western claim he practically began a new life amid new surroundings.

The first stopping place of Mr. Kelch in Montana was a mile north of where Sidney now stands, and there he took up a homestead and gradually worked himself into the stock business. Like many of those who are numbered among the pioneers of the region, he was without resources beyond what was required to bring him here. He found in this community as his predecessors and neighbors William Meadows, John O'Brien, the old time merchant and well known settler of Newlon, Thompson Kemmis and the Frenchman Ayott. William Kelch, a brother of Albert, was also among the early ones to locate here, and his claim eventually joined the townsite of Sidney, and he also established the first blacksmith shop in the community. There were also a few stockmen occupying the country, but none of those are here at the present time.

Without cash capital to work with, it was incumbent upon Albert E. Kelch to give his time to others as a means of paving the way for a more independent day. Shearing sheep every season during the earlier years proved an occupation which would carry him through to the time of haying. His pasture ground included the townsite of Sidney and other broad acres of this country, and he ran his stock under the "pothook" brand. As the nucleus of his stock raising industry he acquired three calves, and gradually his herd grew to number almost 100 head. He was a shipper in a small way, marketing both at Chicago and St. Paul, and horses also entered into his industry, but little profit came to him from those animals. His homestead was the northwest quarter of section 28, township 23, north of range 59 east, and there he erected a one-room log house containing a floor, door and windows and dirt roofed. He first bought the house, tore it down and moved it to his own claim. This was his first home in Montana, and he occupied it for a quarter of a century, and most of the time alone. There were few times in those early days when he was not to be found in the vicinity of his operations, intent upon the work of his ranch, and when duty actually required his absence, such as his services to the public as a juryman, he left some one to care for his affairs until his return.

Wild game constituted a large part of the sustenance at the Kelch cabin in those days. The buffalo had all disappeared with the exception of now and then a straggler coming through, but deer and antelope were yet plentiful, and the saddles from these animals which Mr. Kelch brought in and the beans which he prepared in his Dutch oven, made splendid provisions for his bachelor table.

ter improvements upon it. He gradually drifted into farming, raising oats successfully, they in fact proving his banner grain crop. When he first came into this country he settled in Dawson County, whose boundaries then extended to the Canadian border, and he later transferred his residence from Dawson to Richland County without changing his location. In the controversy for the establishment of a new county he naturally favored the project and supported the claims of Richland County. When the Town of Sidney was organized he purchased a few lots within the townsite and moved a house thereto, in which he still makes his home. This house served as the first hotel building in Sidney.

Mr. Kelch participated actively in the public affairs of the early days, and the few voters there were in the region then gathered at the Meadows schoolhouse. He began voting as a republican, casting his first presidential ballot for General Grant in 1872. From 1885 to 1892, when the first presidential election following Montana statehood was held, he could not participate in national elections, but since then he has been a republican voter. He took part in the erection of "Community Hall" in Sidney, which was long used as the meeting place for all sorts of gatherings, church, political and otherwise, and it proved the center of interest on many notable occasions during the formative stage of this community. The logs were cut by volunteers on the Yellowstone and volunteers also erected the hall. When it ceased to do duty as a place of public assembly it was converted into a stable, and this old log building still stands on the outskirts of the town. Mr. Kelch participated in the organization of the Odd Fellows order in Sidney, and served as treasurer of the lodge for many years.

He married at Williston, North Dakota, May 24, 1910, Mrs. Ella M. Daly, a daughter of Loren and Matilda (Clark) Lynn. The father was born and reared and spent much of his active life in Steuben County, New York, later moving to Kalamazoo, Michigan, where he finally passed away. He was by trade a stone cutter, and also followed carpentering, and his life covered a period of sixty-seven years. His widow still survives and is living in Kalamazoo County, Michigan. She has attained the good old age of eighty-five years. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Lynn were: Barney Paris, of Schoolcraft, Michigan; Castello R., whose death occurred in that county; Mrs. Kelch, who was born in Steuben County, New York, September 11, 1862; and Frederick Herbert, whose home is in Corning City, New York. Mrs. Kelch has been twice married. Her first husband, whom she married in Michigan, was Franklin H. Daly, a second cousin of Marcus A. Daly, the Montana copper king. She continued her residence in Michigan until 1908. when she came to Sidney to take the position of housekeeper for a Sidney resident, and the first house she entered in the town is the one in which she now lives. By her first husband Mrs. Kelch has a daughter, Floy Estelle (Daly) Hunt, of Vicksburg. Michigan. Mrs. Hunt is the mother of two sons, Earl Cecil and Lynn Everhart. Mrs. Kelch has exercised her right of franchise since the opportunity has been presented. She took an active and effective part in the preparation of the Red Cross supplies that were sent to the soldiers overseas, having knitted fifteen pairs of socks, fourteen pairs of tops for machines and toed twelve pairs of socks. She also identified herself actively with the prohibition and temperance movement, and was president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union when Richland County was voted dry. She is now the corresponding secretary of the district Women's Christian Temperance Union. She is a Methodist in her religious affiliations, and has several times served as president of the Ladies Aid Society of the church.

Alexander Wandell, a ranchman and farmer who became identified with Montana in the year 1889, brought with him to this community a good grade of draft horses and established his home and ranch at the mouth of Burns Creek. The country then was all open range and the settlers widely scattered, the nearest one to the Wandell Ranch being five miles away. Mr. Wandell made ready for his industry by erecting log headquarters and other buildings necessary for the proper conduct of his business, but at the close of three years at his location on Burns Creek he left there and moved to the head of Dunlap Creek, selling his improvements at the former location to his partner.

Mr. Wandell was the pioneer ranchman on Dunlap Creek above its mouth, and there he repeated the experiences of his Burns Creek ranching by erecting necessary improvements, his original home being the proverbial log one, a building 14 by 30 feet, and the logs were hauled from the Yellowstone River, a distance of fifteen miles. In time a "leanto" was added to the original structure, and still later a screened porch in front added greatly to the appearance and comfort of the home. This primitive dwelling served the Wandell family as their abode while they remained on the ranch, and in it their prosperities and adversities, their joys and sorrows, were borne for many years.

After reestablishing himself on Dunlap Creek Mr. Wandell engaged in the cattle business as well as that of breeding horses, and his stock brand was known as "A bar A." The horses from his ranch were first marketed in this western region of Montana and North Dakota, but later they were sent to the eastern markets, as were also his cattle, where he secured a ready market.

Mr. Wandell did not bring his family to Montana until the year 1896, and from that time until he abandoned the stock raising industry his land embraced all that he could fence, and when his fences were ordered down by the Government in 1912 he fenced railroad lands with a rental compensation. When he identified his interests with the community of Dunlap Creek it was not his intention to enter land and prove title to it, but the rapidity with which the country became settled in later years forced him in self defense to file, in consequence of which he proved up a quarter section and felt himself secure from the encroachment of the oncoming tide of settlers. His experiences as a farmer began in 1908, when he sowed a crop of oats and harvested about thirty-five bushels to the acre on sod. The seed was sown on the 17th of May, and with the exception of a snow fall of two feet three days after he had sowed the seed no other moisture came during the growth and development of the crop. In 1909 a more propitious season was experienced, and in that year his oats made a yield of eighty bushels to the acre.

The region of Dunlap Creek is now a settled community, with roads and lanes running in every direction, and the country is being rapidly converted from a stock country to a mixed stock and farming community. In the early days of his residence here Mr. Wandell felt deeply the lack of school facilities, for the nearest schoolhouse was twelve miles distant, the district running in another direction sixty miles and touching the Missouri River on the Northwest. But this difficulty was overcome in the Wandell home by placing a governess therein, while later their daughter was sent to the Glendive School and still later she attended the South Bend, Indiana, High School. She completed her educational training in the normal school at Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Mr. Wandell came to Montana from Delaware County, Iowa, his native state, his birth occurring in Clayton County April 21, 1857, and he grew up in that locality and received his educational training in its public schools. His father, Ephraim Wandell, had located in Iowa as early as 1854, securing a claim of the public lands in Clayton County, and there he passed the remainder of his life. In that time he accumulated and developed a large farm, and he followed both farming and stock raising. His political support was given to the republican party, and he was a Universalist in his religious affiliations. In Cattaraugus County, New York, Mr. Wandell was married to Miss Angeline Tracy, who was born in that locality, and she is now living in Delaware County, Iowa, at the age of eighty-seven years, surviving her husband, who passed away in 1909, when he had passed the age of eighty-four. Their children were seven in number, as follows: Phineas, of Edgewood, Iowa; Alexander, of Sidney; John, whose home is in Waterloo, Iowa; Will, of South Dakota; Timothy, whose home is in Portland, Oregon; Ephraim, who died in Harvard, Illinois, without issue; and George, who is engaged in farming at Frankfort, South Dakota.

When Alexander Wandell reached the age of nineteen years he left the parental roof and began life for himself as a farm hand at the princely wage of $20 a month. As his experience and strength increased he was able to earn as high as $75 a month at this labor, and he continued at this labor for five years, turning his attention then to the butter business. He was the butter maker for creameries in Iowa, Nebraska and Wisconsin, and it was after twelve years as a butter maker that he started for the far West and began a new career in Montana.

In Delaware County, Iowa, July 3, 1888, Mr. Wandell was married to Miss Harriet Wells, who was born in Berrien County, Michigan, October 5, 1864, a daughter of Lewis and Sarah VanDerhoff Wells and a granddaughter of Henry and Abigail (Williams) VanDerhoff, the former a native of Holland and the latter of Wales. Lewis Wells was born near Columbus, Ohio, in 1827, and his wife was born ten years later in Berrien County, Michigan, but they both died at Greeley, Iowa, to which state they had removed in 1866. They were farming people. In their family were eight children, and those surviving are: Jud, Will and Robert, all of whom live at Linton, South Dakota; Mrs. Wandell; Fannie, wife of Gay Miller, of Waterloo, Iowa; and a son, Frank, the oldest of the children, has been lost to the family for some time. It is believed he enlisted in the Spanish-American war, and his identity has been lost since that time. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Wandell is a daughter Helen, who is now employed as an accountant with a business firm in Sidney.

The Wandell family removed to Sidney in 1917 to retire and rest after so many years of strenuous life on the farm. But the country entered the World war in that spring, and Mrs. Wandell instead of putting aside heavy responsibilities and work entered actively into the work of the Red Cross and was a busy and efficient patriot in various departments of the work of Sidney Chapter.

Joseph Demars. It is not given to every man to see develop under his own eyes and on what was his own land a bustling, modern city, with its thousands of activities, where once were only wide distances, cold rocks and silence, but this has been the experience of Joseph Demars, the real pioneer of Havre, Montana, where he now lives in comfortable and honorable retirement. Almost sixty years have passed since he first came to Montana, and the changes he has witnessed have been the great developing agencies of modern times.

Joseph Demars was born in the French-Canadian Village of Trois Rivieres, Canada, August 24, 1847, the fourth child in a family of nine, five sons and four daughters, born to August and Mary Demars. Neither father nor mother lived into old age, the toil of developing a pioneer farm under conditions of much hardship being a burden the father laid down at the age of forty-five years, while the mother passed away at the age of thirty, leaving many little children. Joseph grew up sound and steady and gave his father assistance on the farm until he was nineteen years old, when he started out to seek his own fortune, which he believed would be best forwarded across the border in the United States. The great forests of Northern Wisconsin called for strong and willing workers, and it was in the lumber camps in Menominee and other settlements that he received his first start, from there going to the lumber regions of Minnesota in 1867-8.

In the spring of 1868 Mr. Demars returned to Canada for a visit with his people, but in the spring of 1869 returned to the United States and to Montana Territory. For the next three years he followed freighting as a business, working between Fort Benton, Deer Lodge, Butte and other points, transporting goods with ox teams, afterward for about two years being in the same line in the Sun River country, where he worked also on the range with cattle. In those days no work was too hard, no prospect too discouraging for Mr. Demars to undertake. Under contract he completed some ditching along Bell Creek, following which he entered the employ of the United States government at Fort Benton and engaged in teaming and hauling wood in the winter and cutting hay in the summer. In the meanwhile he secured unimproved government land, and during those early days, before he could make any improvements, many nights of cold and storm were spent by himself and wife wrapped in blankets on the ground.

Through hard work Mr. Demars managed to keep his land until the opportunity came to sell, and he first parted with forty-five acres to the Great Northern Railway, and the shops of this road now are located on this land in the City of Havre. He also was once the owner of the land that now belongs to the Agricultural Society, on which the county fairs are held. Mr. Demars was the pioneer in several lines of business at Havre. He operated the first dray here, and in partnership with Zill Pepin started the first butchering business and conducted it for about seven years. Since first locating in this county he has been in the cattle business and has been exceedingly successful. Before he consented to retire he had been able to give each of his sons a ranch, and they were all partners in the cattle business, owning 4,500 acres. In 1918 the partners sold all their cattle except 400 head, Mr. Demars himself having retired from active life in 1917.

In 1876 Mr. Demars was married to Mary Anne Sovia, who was born in Minnesota, and five children were born to them, namely: George, who is on the homestead after service overseas in the Great war, enlisting August 15, 1917, and receiving his honorable discharge in July, 1919; Laura, who resides with husband and children in Minnesota; and Henry, Albert and Fred, all of whom are on the homestead. Mr. Demars and his sons are republicans in their political life because they believe in the underlying principles of that party, but Mr. Demars has never accepted any political office whatsoever. His good citizenship has always been unquestioned, and in many ways he has been most useful in civil life. He has seen wonderful things come to pass and has helped to forward movements that have crystallized in great railroad building, irrigating canals and establishing happy homes where once was desolation.

Fred D. Sullivan. One of the first names to be enrolled in the annals of the history of Montana is that of Sullivan, and from that early and formative period to the present time the name has continued to figure prominently in the industrial and political life of the state. Fred D. Sullivan is a native son of the commonwealth, born in the Missouri River Valley, about thirty miles east of Helena, January 11, 1877. His father, Dan Sullivan, was brought to Montana by his parents when a youth. He was a son of Michael Sullivan, who was born in Ireland and for some years after coming to the United States was a laborer in Wisconsin. He married Nora Sullivan, also from Erin's Isle, and together they left Wisconsin and crossed the plains by bull train to Montana, establishing their home at Virginia City when the gold excitement there was in its prime. Michael Sullivan engaged in mining there, but subsequently went into the Missouri River Valley and engaged in ranching near Townsend. He remained in that locality during the best years of his later life, and achieved his main success there. His wife died in Townsend, and he passed away at the home of a daughter in Shelby. In the family of Michael and Nora Sullivan were five children: Mrs. Maggie Hughes, who died at Shelby; Dan, mentioned in later paragraphs; Michael, who died in Idaho; Mrs. John Murray, whose death occurred at Shelby; and Dennis, who died in Washington.

It was in the Missouri River Valley country that Dan Sullivan reached mature years and started out on his business career. He became a blacksmith, which he followed in connection with ranching, and he closed his active industrial career on a ranch. He entered land on the Marias River when that country was being settled, proved up a home, developed a farm and became one of the largest stockmen of the locality, shipping both cattle and horses extensively. His horses ran under the brand "DS" on the right thigh and the brand for his cows was "GL" on the left side. His ranch limits are extensive, aggregating perhaps 8,000 acres, and to the Sullivan Ranch this well known pioneer gave the best years of his life and his rewards came to him early enough to enable him to retire before overtaken by the shadows of life. He is now living at Shelby, Montana, where he owns the Sullivan Hotel. Mrs. Sullivan was the first white woman on the Marias River, where they took up their abode as early as 1883.

The marriage of Dan and Jane (Raney) Sullivan was blessed with a large family of children, including: Floury A., on a ranch in the Marias River country; Fred D., the Richland County sheriff; Annie, wife of Dick Crouch, of Conrad, Montana; John, who disappeared some twenty years ago after serving in the Philippines during the war with Spain; Mike, of Shelby, Montana; Edward, whose home is in Seattle, Washington; Mary, who married Charley Simms, of Havre, Montana; Frances, who married Luther Dobbin, now deceased, and she has remarried; Margarite, who married William Wilkins and died near Cutbank in February, 1920; and Bertha, who passed away in Portland, Oregon, without issue. Mrs. Sullivan, the mother of this family, was born in Wisconsin, a daughter of William Raney, a farmer and ranchman. Mrs. Sullivan came to Montana with her parents, making the journey by boat to Fort Benton, and en route she saw buffalo swimming the Missouri as the boat moved toward its head waters. She was one of a numerous household of children, the other surviving members being Charley, of Helena; Fred, a ranchman of the Missoula country, and Mrs. Ida Carl, of Canada.

In his political affiliations Dan Sullivan is a staunch democrat, but no personal ambition for office has ever possessed him, although at all times he gives a loyal support to home institutions and to his country. His church, as well as that of his wife, is the Catholic, in the faith of which they were reared.

Fred D. Sullivan spent the early years of his life on his father's ranch, and became proficient in riding and punching cows. The education which he received in his youth came from the country schools, and he remained with his father until he married, at the age of twenty-three. At that time he began ranching independently in his home community, and remained there until he left the region in 1902 and came to Poplar in Dawson County, here resuming his ranching pursuits. In time he gained a homestead of a half section, although his grazing region was unlimited in extent, and his ranch home was a four-room log cabin, typical of the homes of the early settlers. This cabin continued to shelter him while he followed ranching.

Being one of the earliest settlers on the Red River and active as a cattle man, both for himself and for the Big Fourteen outfit, Mr. Sullivan became widely known throughout the region, and it is perhaps due in some measure to this fact that he ultimately became the sheriff of Richland County. Contrary to the practice of his father, he began voting as a republican, casting a presidential ballot for William McKinley in 1900. He has the dictinction of serving as the second sheriff of Richland County. He won his first election in 1916, defeating his opponent by a large majority and leading the ticket, as he also did in his second election, having been returned to the office in 1918. He succeeded William Artel, and his administration has been marked by the handling of some very important affairs. The apprehension of Raney Menu and John Shear, who murdered Charley Menu, hauled off his grain and marketed it, and then set fire to the barn and burned the body, is noted among his achievements. Gordon Folkstead, a famous horse-thief in Montana, was sought and captured several times before he was finally sentenced for his crime. He escaped from an under sheriff while on the train, but was recaptured by Sheriff Sullivan, who was obliged to shoot and wound the criminal before being able to capture him. He is now serving his sentence in Deer Lodge.

At Great Falls, Montana, June 20, 1900, Mr. Sullivan was married to Miss Theresa Hilger, who was born in Minnesota, January 11, 1883, a daughter of Charles and Mary (Dietrich) Hilger, pioneer farmers of Minnesota, and in whose family were a son and six daughters. Four children have been born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan, Freddie C., George, Joseph and Clara. Mr. Sullivan is a Blue Lodge Mason and holds his membership at Poplar. By virtue of his office he was made chairman of the Selective Service Board during the reecnt war activities. Mr. Sullivan is a Mason and both he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star.

JOHN J. CAREY is perhaps one of the best known men throughout all this region, in his life time a rancher, stockman, farmer, banker, public official, and, above all, a patriotic and loyal Montana citizen. He was born in St. Lawrence County, New York, March 22, 1866. He was a farmer's son, and the district schools gave him his limited educational training. He was orphaned at the age of four years by the death of his father, and he left his mother's roof at the age of sixteen.

The parents of Mr. Carey, John and Margaret (Sullivan) Carey, were born in Ireland, the mother in County Cork. They were married in the State of New York. After coming to the United States they located at Brasher Falls, St. Lawrence County, New York. Four children were born of their union, namely: Dennis, who resides at New Butler, Wisconsin; James, who was last heard from at Watertown, New York; John J., of this review, and Daniel J., who occupies the old Carey farm in St. Lawrence County, New York. The father of this family died in 1870, but the wife and mother survived until 1909, passing away at the age of seventy-nine. The father was but fifty-eight when death claimed him.

John J. Carey became a wage earner when yet a boy, receiving from $8 to $20 a month, and he spent some time in the employ of the Northern Adirondack Railway Company, now a part of the New York Central system. This road passed through the Adirondack Mountains, and Mr. Carey was employed in its bridge and building department. He was employed at this line of work just before he started for the great Northwest, and therefore arrived in Montana with a working knowledge of carpenter's tools.

Mr. Carey was a young man of twenty-six when he started on this westward journey, Butte being his destination, and since that early year of 1892 Montana has been his home and the scene of his activities. He soon cast anchor at the embryo City of Lewistown, but after busying himself with house carpentering there for about a year, he decided to engage in other work which might eventually lead him into the stock business and ranching. Accordingly he sought out the Chinook country and became an employe on the sheep ranch of Ed Fogerty on the east side of the Bear Paw Mountains, the property being known as the Geyser Spring Ranch. After six years spent in that line of work, in the employ of different ranchmen of that region, Mr. Carey entered the sheep business for himself in 1899 on Peoples Creek in partnership with Paul McCann, and they remained together for two years. The region they covered was the one he knew while working for others, and they ranged along the Canadian border, sometimes also crossing it for a score of miles. After the partnership was dissolved Mr. Carey established a camp of his own, still remaining in the Chinook country. He took sheep on the shares and remained with his band throughout the entire year, winter and summer, until 1903, at which time his flock numbered 1,600, and he then sold it, pocketed the proceeds, and abandoned the region for the one in which he is now located. While in the Chinook country he also entered a homestead, and although he never utilized it after securing his patent it was there that he established his first permanent home in Montana, erecting there a log cabin. It was a single room, dirt roofed and floored, and it sheltered its owner for about three years.

Coming then into the old County of Dawson, as the Sidney region was then known, Mr. Carey entered the employ of the Maine-Montana Ranch Company in the capacity of foreman, but he subsequently became interested in the project as an owner, and when he sold his interests there in 1908 he abandoned the stock business.

After this for a time Mr. Carey worked as a journeyman carpenter in the locality of Sidney and in time drifted into politics as an office holder. He served Dawson County as deputy assessor under the pioneer in that office, Charles F. Bean, and in that capacity he became familiar with the region of Richland County, so that at the time of its organization it had a man already trained to assume its assessment work. Mr. Carey was elected to the position in the fall of 1914 as the successor of Marion Hofstott and as the democratic party candidate. He was returned to the office in 1916, and thus supervised the work of county assessment for four years, listing in that time all the property of the county, both personal and real, and placing it before the public in such a manner as to be readily available as an authentic record. In order to accomplish this work he kept among other books an "Ownership Book" of real estate, which proved one of the greatest helps in the office. The total taxable value of property during the first assessment he made of Richland County was $4,130,000, while the county valuation for taxes in the fourth assessment he made was $9,991,000. Mr. Carey also made the race for the third term in 1918 against an opponent who had the endorsement of the Non-Partisan League, an endorsement which he was offered but declined, and he was defeated by less than a dozen votes, while the non-partisan majority in the county ran several hundred.

Mr. Carey has identified himself with Sidney's development as an investor and as a modest builder. With the chartering of the First National Bank he became one of its stockholders, and also became a stockholder in the First National Bank of Ritchey when that institution was organized. He has also dealt in real estate in Sidney, and some of the property he secured while engaged in the real estate and locating business he afterward improved. He served two terms as a member of the town council, serving on the first town board, and subsequently he was returned to the council from a different ward and again served a term. During this latter period the water works and sewers were installed, regarded perhaps as the best investment the city has ever made. The board during his membership constituted a band of taxpayers and sound business men, and all the work performed was done from the standpoint of utility and efficiency.

Mr. Carey's political affiliations have been determined through the years by the question of economics. While he was engaged in the wool business he favored the tariff on wool and supported the party which carried a protective plank in its platform, but later, when other issues seemed to demand different action politically, he gave his support to the party whose principles coincided with his own views. Locally he has always put the man before the candidate, efficiency and competency before politics. His only fraternal connection is with the Elks Lodge, and he holds his membership at Glendive.

Mr. Carey has passed his life unmarried, and although without a companion to share his prosperity his has not been a lonely life, for during the years he has spent in the great Northwest he has made many close friends and business associates. And his love for literature has contributed to the making of his life a happy and contented one.

ROBERT WADROP HANDLEY, superintendent of the zinc concentrator of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is one of the skilled and experienced men of the corporation and a highly respected resident of Anaconda. He was born at Alamosa, Colorado, September 22, 1890, a son of M. L. Handley, and grandson of Charles W. Handley, who was born in what is now West Virginia in 1835, and died at Eaton, Ohio, in 1917. Until old age he lived at Ona, West Virginia, being profitably engaged in farming, but then, retiring, went to Eaton, Ohio. He was married to Sophia Love, who was born in Virginia, and died at Ona, West Virginia. The Handley family originated in the North of Ireland, being Scotch-Irish, and came to Virginia during the colonial epoch of the country's history.

M. L. Handley was born in West Virginia in 1858 and there reared, going to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in young manhood, where he lived for a short time, being there engaged in a banking business. Leaving that city, he went in 1888 to Alamosa, Colorado, and from then until 1891 was engaged in conducting a bank at that point. In the latter year he returned to Pittsburgh and was engaged in the manufacture of gas burners until his retirement in 1917, at which time he went to Eaton, Ohio, where he now resides, occupying his time in looking after his agricultural interests. Having been brought up on a farm, he has returned to the soil in his declining years. In politics he is a republican. Reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, Mr. Handley early connected himself with it and has been very active in his support of its work, for many years serving it as an elder, and both as a churchman and Mason he lives up to the highest ideals of manhood. While living in Pittsburgh Mr. Handley served as a member of Battery B, Pennsylvania Volunteers. M. L. Handley was married to Carrie Lange, born at Warsaw, Indiana, in 1861. She died at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in 1898, having borne her husband the following children: S. Frances, who is unmarried and lives with her sister at Carnegie, Pennsylvania; Robert W., whose name heads this review, and Mary L., who married F. B. McNulty, a dental surgeon and lives at Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

Robert W. Handley attended the public schools of Carnegie, Pennsylvania, and was graduated from the high school course in 1907, following which he worked for a year in a banking house of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. In 1908 he entered the Pennsylvania State College at State College, Pennsylvania, and was graduated therefrom with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and with a degree in mining engineering. He belongs to the Greek Letter fraternity Sigma Alpha Epsilon. In 1912 Mr. Handley was employed as resident mine engineer by the Shenango Furnace Company of Chisholm, Minnesota, where he remained until 1915, and then came West to Anaconda to become assistant testing engineer for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. Almost immediately he proved his worth and was promoted to be foreman of the zinc concentrator, later was made general concentrating engineer, and finally superintendent of the zinc concentrator, having now under his supervision sixty-eight men. His offices are in the Concentrator Building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Like his father, Mr. Handley is a republican and Presbyterian. He belongs to the Anaconda Club, the Anaconda Country Club, and the American Institute of Mining Engineers.

On June 11, 1918, Mr. Handley was married to Miss Mabel Marie Prisk at Ely, Minnesota. She is a daughter of Michael and Susan Elizabeth (Odgers) Prisk, of Ely, Minnesota, where Mr. Prisk is a master mechanic for a mining company. Mr. and Mrs. Handley have one son, Robert W., Jr., and he was born February 20, 1919. They reside in the Loraine Apartments. Mr. Handley is not only skilled in his calling, but he is a man who has won many friends among his business and social acquaintances, and he and Mrs. Handley are held in the highest regard by all who know them.

RAY CHURCH has lived in Montana since he was six years of age, for many years was in the newspaper business, but since 1899 has been a resident of Helena and for seven years was a general agent of the Montana Life Insurance Company. He is a member of the Legislature and his name has become prominent in business and political affairs of the state.

Mr. Church was born at Oswego, Kansas, July 17, 1875. He is of English ancestry, of American colonial stock, and one of his Church ancestors served as a major in the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Elihu C. Church, was born in New York State, and spent his life there as a farmer. His wife was Emily Makepeace, who also died in New York.

The founder of the family in Montana was William C. Church, father of Ray. He was born near Vernon, New York, in 1838, was reared and married in that locality, and at an early day removed to Wisconsin. While in that state the Civil war came on and he enlisted in the First Wisconsin Cavalry in 1861, and was with his command through the entire struggle. After the war he returned to New York and became a farmer in Oswego County. During the early '70s he moved to Kansas. He was honored with the office of sheriff while living in Kansas. From Kansas he came to Montana in 1881, locating at Wickes, and engaged in the freighting business between there and Helena. He died at Wickes in 1883. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and a republican in politics. William C. Church married Nettie E. Lampman, who was born in Vernon Center, New York, in 1848, and is still living at Alhambra, Montana. They had two sons, Arthur W. and Ray. The former is a stationary engineer living at Butte.

Ray Church acquired his education in the public schools of Jefferson and Lewis and Clark counties. He left school at the age of sixteen, clerked in a store at Helena one year, worked on a ranch in Chouteau County two years, and in 1893, at the age of eighteen became an employe of the Helena Independent. He was connected with the business and editorial department of that well known Montana institution of journalism for twenty years. He resigned in 1913 to become general agent of the Montana Life Insurance Company, with jurisdiction over Lewis and Clark, Jefferson and Powell counties, and his business energy has been the means of developing and maintaining a large and satisfactory volume of business for this Montana Company. His offices are in the Conrad Bank Building, where the company occupies two floors.

Mr. Church is secretary of the Helena Rotary Club, and in 1918 was elected on the democratic ticket to represent Lewis and Clark County in the Legislature. During the session of 1919 he was a member of the fish and game and insurance committees. He was also on the special joint investigating committee to examine the accounts and affairs of state offices and state officers. A bill associated with his name, which he introduced and which became a law, provided for compulsory commitment and appropriated money for improvements for the Montana School for the Deaf, Blind and Feeble-Minded at Boulder.

Mr. Church is a member of the Montana Club of

W. D. McFarlane and Family

Helena, is present exalted ruler of Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks, and is also affiliated with Helena Aerie No. 16, Fraternal Order of Eagles, Red Cross Lodge No. 32, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Veterans, and the Helena Commercial Club. He is president of the Helena Cemetery Association. During the war Mr. Church shared in the activities which made insurance men generally responsible for the success of the many local and state campaigns for raising funds for the government. He was a prominent member of the Lewis and Clark War Activities Association.

In 1902, at Helena, Mr. Church married Miss Estelle Flaherty, daughter of Edward L. and Ida (Runkle) Flaherty, the latter now deceased. His wife's father, a resident of Helena, came to that city during the '80s and for many years has been a funeral director. Mr. and Mrs. Church have one son, Edward, born June 11, 1904.

WILLIAM DANIEL MACFARLANE. In all that constitutes true manhood and good citizenship, William D. MacFarlane, one of the best known and most substantial farmers of Hill County, is a notable example and none stands higher than he in the esteem and confidence of the community honored by his citizenship. His career has been characterized by duty faithfully done, and by industry, thrift and wisely directed efforts he has acquired a liberal share of this world's goods, besides earning a reputation for a life unclouded by unworthy acts. He is a man of good judgment and pronounced views, has worked hard for that which he now possesses, and knows how to appreciate the true dignity of labor and to place a correct estimate on the value of money. Nevertheless he is liberal in his benefactions and stands ever ready to support with his influence and means all measures for the material and moral welfare of his community.

William D. MacFarlane was born in Bruce County, Ontario, Canada, on December 8, 1861, and is the son of William and Flora (Campbell) MacFarlane. Both of these parents were natives of Scotland, the former having been born at Johnson in 1832, and died in 1909, when seventy-seven years of age; the mother was born in Glasgow in 1835, and her death occurred in 1917, at the age of eighty-two years. They were married in Guelph, Ontario, and became the parents of nine children, five of whom are living. William MacFarlane accompanied his parents on their emigration to Canada in 1844, the slow-going sailing boat on which they made the passage requiring six weeks to make the trip. Mr. MacFarlane received his education in the schools of Scotland and Canada, and his early years were spent at home. When about twenty years of age he engaged in teaching school, continuing that vocation for a number of years, while at the same time he conducted a farm. However, he then began devoting his entire time to farming. In his boyhood he had learned from his father the art of weaving, and after his location in Canada he did considerable work along that line. But as a farmer he accomplished very definite results, having practically carved a farmstead out of the wilderness and ranked as one of the pioneer settlers of Bruce County. Therefore he was compelled to forego the conveniences and accommodations found in the older settlements, and it was not an uncommon thing for him to carry on his back a bushel of wheat to mill to be ground into flour. In 1875 Mr. MacFarlane sold his Bruce County farm and moved to Manitoba, where he developed another farm, which he devoted to wheat raising. He lived on that farm for twenty-three years, but in 1898 he disposed of his property and located in Auburn, Nebraska, where he quietly spent his last days, having retired from active labor. He was a member of the Baptist Church and was well liked and respected by all who knew him.

William D. MacFarlane spent his boyhood days on the paternal farmstead, securing his educational training in the public schools of Ontario and Manitoba, supplementing this by a course in Doctor Crawford's Business College at Rapid City, Manitoba. When sixteen years of age he learned the bricklaying and plastering trades in Winnipeg. He followed that line of work for thirty-four years, or until 1912. During this period from 1884 to 1889 he lived at St. Thomas, North Dakota, where he was engaged in contracting, then went to Vaucouver, British Columbia, and later to Regina, in both places being engaged in building and contracting. In 1891 Mr. MacFarlane located in Great Falls, Montana, where he was likewise engaged until 1898, in which year he located in Fort Benton, where among other jobs he erected the Stockmen's National Bank in 1900, and also the new addition to the Chouteau House and other important structures. In the fall of 1901 he located in Havre, where he remained until the following year, engaged in contracting, but he then located on a farm about three and a half miles south of Havre, to the operation of which he gave his attention, as well as his contracting work. He had a fine herd of Shorthorn cattle and carried on the dairy business to some extent up to 1918, when he relinquished his interest in everything except his farm and dairy interests, to which he is giving his entire time and attention. He milks regularly between twenty and thirty cows and expects in the course of a short time to have the best dairy in this section of Montana. He is fortunate in having a number of unusually fine springs on his farm, which is a very desirable feature on a dairy farm, and he has the place otherwise equipped for pursuing his work with a minimum of labor.

On April 6, 1886, Mr. MacFarlane was married to Agnes Kerr, who was a native of Ontario, Canada, and is of Scotch descent, her parents having been born in Dunnbarton, Scotland. To this union were born seven children, namely: Mary Agnes is the wife of Clarence Sargent, of Chinook, Montana, and they have eight children; Jeanie Florence is the wife of Charles L. Brown, of Havre, and they have one daughter; William James, who lives in Detroit, Michigan, was married to Marie Bell, and they have a daughter; Margaret Mildred is the wife of Magnus Nielson, of Rudard, Montana, and they have a son and daughter; Beulah Kerr is the wife of John E. Gentner, of Havre, and they have a son, Edgar E. remains at home and is the active manager of the farm; Flora Alice is also at home.

Politically Mr. MacFarlane is not bound by party ties, preferring to give his vote and support to the men and measures which he believes are for the best interests of the people. He is especially interested in educational matters and served as a member of the school board for ten years or more. Fraternally he is a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons. He first became a member of the Masonic Order at Fort Benton, but subsequently demitted to the Havre Lodge. He is a member and liberal supporter of the Baptist Church.

Mr. MacFarlane enjoys a splendid reputation throughout his section of the state, both as a contractor and farmer, for he has achieved definite success in both lines of effort. Among the good work done by him here was the interior finish of the Havre National Bank Building, generally acknowledged to be one of the finest bank buildings in Montana. He has been reliable in business matters, and has always enjoyed a most enviable standing as a business man and public spirited citizen. Genial and approachable, he has gained a large and representative acquaintance, by whom he is held in the highest esteem.

Arthur E. Chamberlain, M. D. To the distinction of being the first regular physician to locate at Belt, Doctor Chamberlain has added a quarter of a century of earnest and skillful work as a competent physician and surgeon and the performance of many duties, both professional and as a private citizen, which are responsible for the esteem in which he is held throughout that section.

Doctor Chamberlain was born at Twinsburg, Summit County, Ohio, July 23, 1860. His parents, William and Victoria (Southworth) Chamberlain, were natives of the same part of the Buckeye State. His father was a successful farmer and stock raiser, a breeder of Durham cattle and of good horses. Though a republican, he never cared for public office. He died in 1902, at the age of sixty, and his wife passed away in 1907, aged sixty-five. Doctor Chamberlain was the oldest of three children, two of whom are living.

Reared on a farm, Doctor Chamberlain had the average environment of an Ohio farm boy, and he early looked to himself as the principal reliance and support for his ambition to do a worthy work in the world. He attended district schools, spent two years in Oberlin College, and at the age of eighteen became a teacher. He taught for ten years in his native state and one year in Kansas. This work gave him a broad view of life, and from his earnings he accumulated most of the capital necessary to put him through medical school. Doctor Chamberlain is a graduate of the Homeopathic Hospital College of Cleveland, where he studied from 1887 until receiving his degree in 1891. The following year he remained with the college as demonstrator of anatomy and also took post-graduate studies. Doctor Chamberlain came to Montana in 1893, and after a few months at Great Falls located at Belt in 1894 and has given his best energies in all the succeeding years to his work as a physician. Since 1913 he has served as city health officer, being now in his third term. He is also registrar of births and deaths. Doctor Chamberlain is a republican, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World.

At Cleveland, April 20, 1892, he married Maude A. Cann, who was born at Toronto, Canada, daughter of George B. Cann and wife, natives of England. Mrs. Chamberlain was one of a family of three sons and four daughters. Doctor and Mrs. Chamberlain had three children: Arthur Cann, Mabel, who died at the age of four years, and Gladys M. The son, Arthur, enlisted November 5, 1917, at Great Falls, was assigned to the aviation department, and spent about thirteen months at Kelley Field in Texas, where he was one of the instructors. He was granted his honorable discharge January 23, 1919.

H. J. Menzemer. There is probably no public institution of Montana where there are greater possibilities for good and where better results are being achieved day after day and year after year than at Boulder in the combined institutions known as Montana Schools for Deaf, Blind and Backward Children. Provision was made by one of the early State Legislatures for this institution more than twenty-five years ago. The main grounds consist of about forty acres and there is also a ranch of several hundred acres.

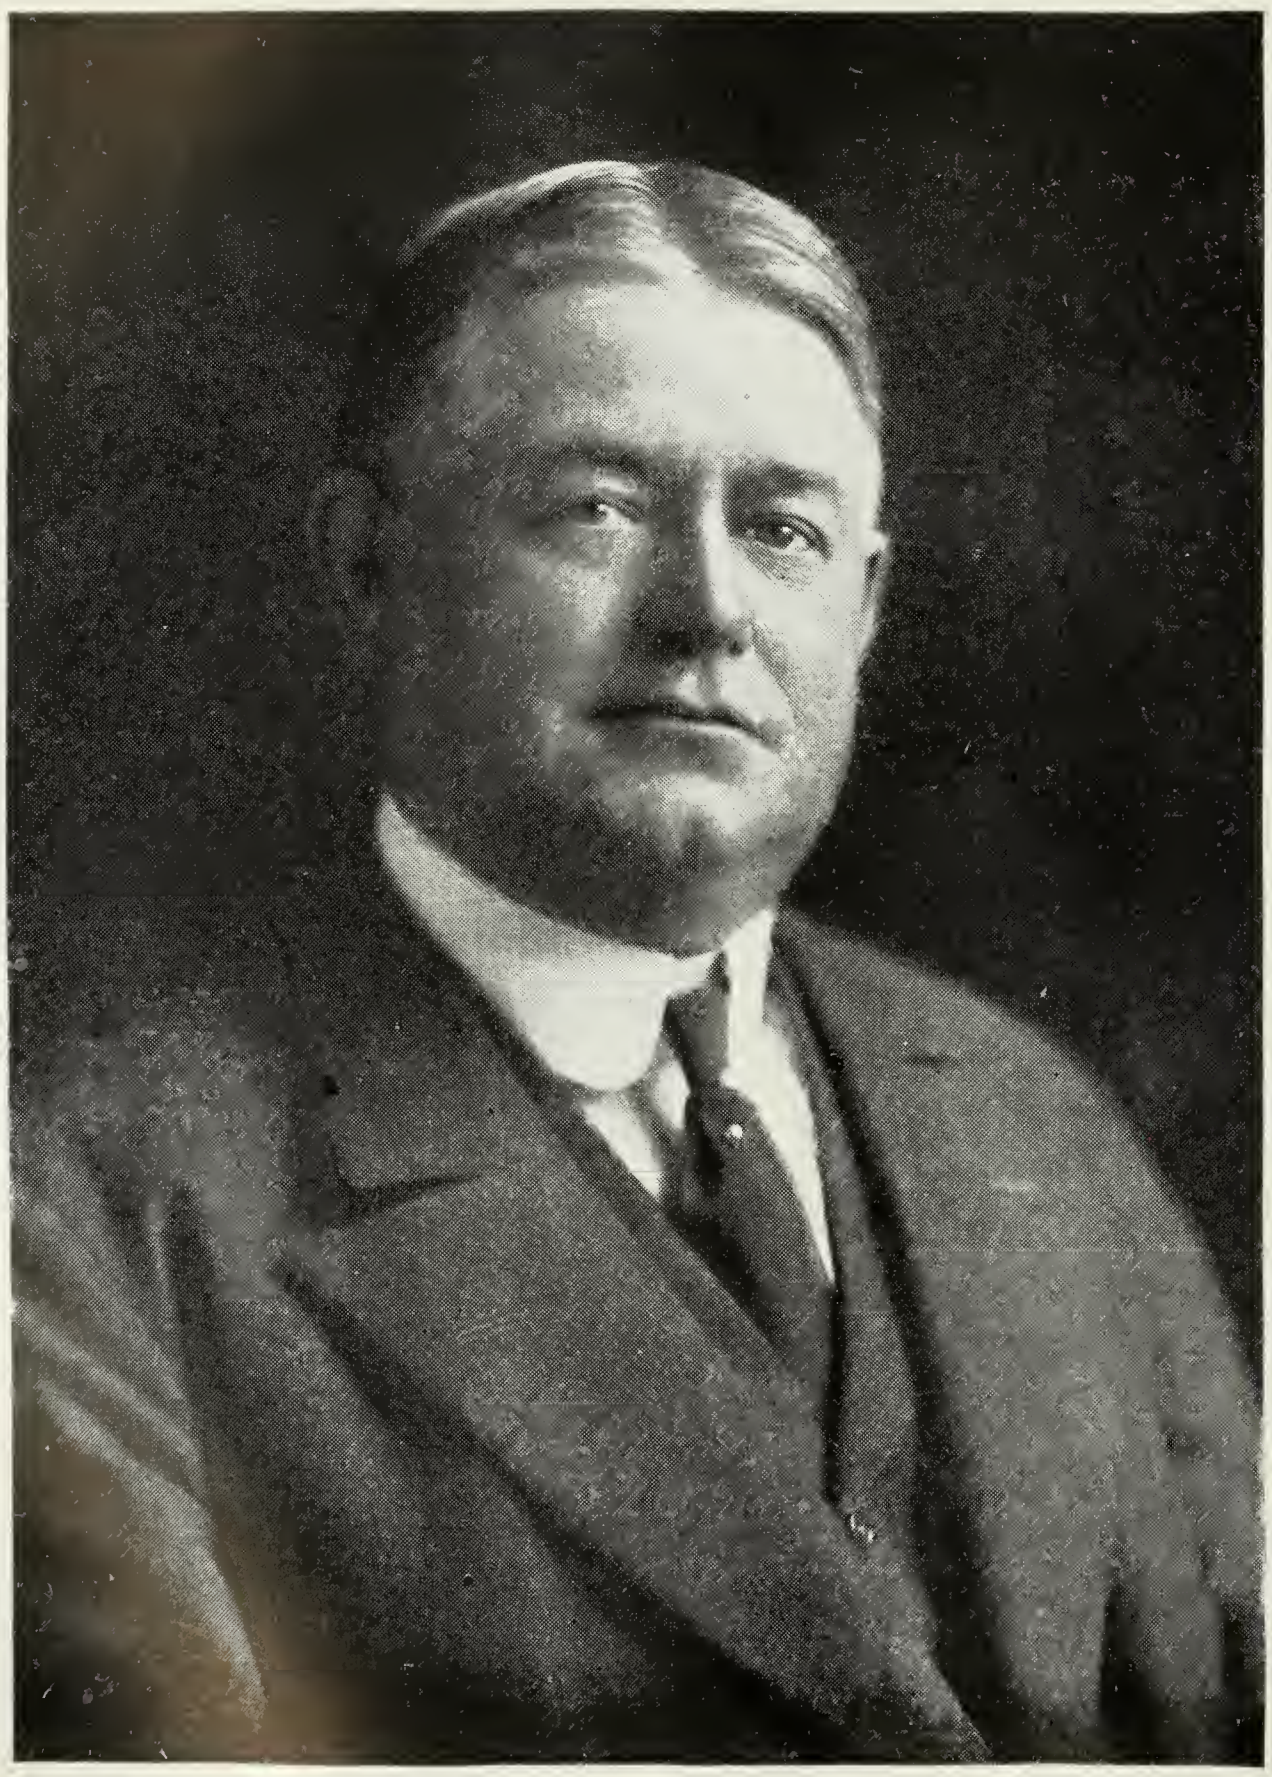
The administrative and acting head of this institution since 1912 has been H. J. Menzemer, M. A., a prominent teacher of the deaf, who has made that his life career and vocation. There is a complete staff of instructors for the deaf, for the blind and for the backward children, and every effort is made consistent with the available funds to furnish a well-rounded system of education that will train and equip the pupils for the serious responsibilities of life, and reduce to a minimum the handicaps imposed through birth or accident. There is a music department, domestic science school, a manual training department, where boys learn useful trades, and the ranch is one complete school in itself.

H. J. Menzemer was born at Galena, Illinois, July 9, 1879. His grandfather, Jacob Menzemer, was born in Alsace-Lorraine, France, in 1800, was reared and married in his native country, and was a blacksmith by trade. In 1854 he brought his family to America and settled two miles from Galena, Illinois. As he went through Chicago he was not attracted to the city, since it was a comparatively small town built practically in a swamp. Jacob Menzemer became a farmer in Illinois, and died on his farm in 1894. He married a Miss Schwab, of Alsace-Lorraine, and she also died on the Illinois farm. J. A. Menzemer, father of H. J. Menzemer, was born in Alsace-Lorraine in August, 1853, and was only an infant when brought to this country. He grew up on the farm near Galena, was married in Joe Daviess County, Illinois, and bought a farm near Warren in that county, where he lived for several years. In 1899 he removed to Beloit, Wisconsin, where he worked in the Gas Engine Works, and in the fall of 1916 settled at Boulder, Montana, where he is now practically retired. He is a republican and a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. J. A. Menzemer married Sarah M. Green, who was born in Illinois in May, 1855. They have two children: Edwin J., county clerk and recorder of Jo Daviess County, living in Galena, Illinois, and H. J.

H. J. Menzemer was educated in the rural schools of Northwestern Illinois, principally in Rush Township, Jo Daviess County. He attended the Warren Academy, finishing his freshman year, was graduated from Beloit Academy in the spring of 1901, and then took the regular college course at Beloit College, receiving his A. B. degree in 1905. Mr. Menzemer then entered Gallaudet College, the only institution of higher learning for the deaf in the world. It is at Washington, D. C., and he continued there specializing in instruction for the deaf and was awarded the degree Master of Arts in 1906.

Mr. Menzemer has done a great and splendid work as a teacher of the deaf. He was with the Iowa School for the Deaf at Council Bluffs one year, and was then senior teacher in the Colorado School for the Deaf at Colorado Springs until 1912, when he was called to his present duties and responsibilities as president of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind at Boulder.

Mr. Menzemer is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a member of the Superintendents and Principals of Schools for the Deaf, a national organization, and is second vice president of the Association of Superintendents and Principals of the Blind. Mr. Menzemer is a past master of Boulder Lodge No. 41, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; is affiliated with Butte Consistory



T. B. Miller

No. 2 of the Scottish Rite, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte. He is also a member of Helena Lodge No. 193 of the Elks. Mr. Menzemer and wife reside at the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind.

He married at Colorado Springs in May, 1910, Miss Jessie Dudley, daughter of David C. and Macaria Dudley. Her mother is now living at Los Angeles. The father, who died in California, was a widely known educator, being superintendent of the State School for the Deaf and Blind at Colorado Springs. Mrs. Menzemer is a graduate of Colorado College at Colorado Springs, holding the degree of A. B. from that institution.

Clyde Wilcox. The business experience of Mr. Wilcox has been largely in the field of banking. He has been connected with numerous banking organizations both in the middle West and in Montana, and is now vice president of the Cascade Bank of Great Falls.

Mr. Wilcox was born in Monterey County, California, March 4, 1884, son of Thomas W. and Lucia B. (Burdick) Wilcox, the former a native of Pottsdam, New York, and the latter of Wisconsin. His father is sixty-eight and his mother sixty-two years of age. Clyde is their only child. Thomas W. Wilcox in early life located in Northwest Iowa, in Lyons County, where he was a farmer and stockman until the early '80s. He lived in Monterey County, California, five years, operating a sawmill and manufacturing lumber on an extensive scale. He then returned to Iowa, locating at Hull in Sioux County, and was in the hardware business there for about twenty years. Since retiring from business he has come to Montana and is living at Broadview in Yellowstone County. He is an Odd Fellow, a republican, and a member of the Christian Science Church.

Clyde Wilcox attended public schools in Northwestern Iowa and also the Iowa Agricultural College at Ames. At the age of nineteen he was given a place as bookkeeper with the Frst National Bank at Doon, Iowa. Subsequently he was assistant cashier of the Bank of Alvord at Alvord, Iowa, until 1910, when he moved to Bushnell, South Dakota, and for six years served as cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank. Following that he spent two years traveling through the West and California. In 1914 Mr. Wilcox came to Montana and acquired a financial interest in the Merchants State Bank at Broadwater. He was president of that institution for about five years. In May, 1918, he moved his home to Great Falls and has since been vice president of the Cascade Bank, one of the strongest institutions in the financial affairs of the city.

Mr. Wilcox is affiliated with Euclid Lodge of Masons at Elkton, South Dakota, and with Great Falls Lodge of Perfection in the Scottish Rite. He is a republican voter. January 1, 1907, he married Louise M. Kastenholz, a native of Minneapolis. Their two sons are Clyde Emil and Donald William.

Thomas Burchinal Miller came to Montana in role of a school teacher, but soon left that work to take up insurance, and for the past thirty years has been state agent for the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California at Helena, and has one of the largest general insurance agencies in that city. Mr. Miller is a widely known Montana citizen, and has long been prominent as an official in the Masonic Order.

Mr. Miller was born at Rossville, Iowa, March 26, 1862. His people were colonial Americans, and in the different generations have exhibited the qualities of the pioneer, and have kept quite close to the advancing line of civilization in the west. The first ancestor came over at the time of Lord Baltimore, and established a home in Pennsylvania.

George R. Miller, father of Thomas B., was born in Pennsylvania January 21, 1831, was reared and married in his native state, and was about twenty-five years of age when in 1856 he located at Rossville, Allamakee County, Iowa. He was a tailor by trade, also studied law, but before getting settled down to the routine of his profession he enlisted in 1862 as a private in the Twenty-Seventh Iowa Infantry. He was rapidly promoted, becoming captain of his company, but after a year and a half of service was honorably discharged on account of disability in 1863. He then returned to Rossville, built up a good practice as a lawyer, served Allamakee County as a member of the Twelfth General Assembly of the State of Iowa, and in 1869 moved to Mason City, Iowa, where he followed his profession until his death in October, 1885. He was long prominent in the democratic party, the minority party in Iowa, and did much to maintain party strength. He was a delegate to various state and national conventions. He was one of the leading Baptists of Mason City and was affiliated with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and for several years was grand master workman of the State of Iowa in the last named order. He was also commander of the Mason City Post of the Grand Army of the Republic and was vice commander of the State Encampment of Iowa. George R. Miller married Mary E. Burchinal, who was born at Smithfield, Pennsylvania, December 5, 1835, and died at Los Angeles, June 21, 1920.

Thomas Burchinal Miller acquired a public school education at Mason City, graduating from high school in 1881. The following eight years his work was teaching. He taught one term in Cerro Gordo County, was principal for three years of the schools of Plymouth, Iowa, and for five years principal at Clear Lake. Mr. Miller came to Montana in 1889, the year the state was admitted, and for six months was principal of schools at Dillon.

He resigned his school work to engage in the real estate and insurance business at Butte with Senator Lee Mantle and Gen. Charles S. Warren. Then, in 1890, he bought out the general agency of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company for Montana, and in August of the same year moved his home and business headquarters to Helena. While still the general agent for the Pacific Mutual Company in Montana, he has developed a large organization covering the real estate, insurance and investment fields, and is dean of the fire insurance men at Helena, having the oldest agency that has not changed hands in the city. Mr. Miller's offices are at 37 West Sixth Avenue. He also has some other interests, being secretary of the Scratch Gravel Gold Mining Company and director of the Montana Life Insurance Company. He owns a ranch of 330 acres two miles north of Helena and his city home is at 802 Benton Avenue.

From 1896 to 1903, inclusive, Mr. Miller was secretary of the Republican State Central Committee and is now a member of the Republican County Central Committee. For eight years altogether he served as assayer in charge of the United States Assay Office at Helena, his first appointment being conferred by President Roosevelt. He served through Taft's administration and eight months under President Wilson.

His affiliations as a Mason are with Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, of which he is a past commander; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, which he served as potentate in 1906-07, and Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite. He is a past grand commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the state, and is a thirty-third degree honorary Scottish Rite Mason. When Helena Consistory No. 3 was organized he was deputy inspector general for all the Scottish Rite bodies in Helena. He is past sovereign of the Red Cross of Constantine and in 1918 was commander of the Council of Kadosh of the Scottish Rite bodies.

Mr. Miller is also a member of the Montana Club and the Country Club of Helena, is a former member of the Rocky Mountain Club of New York City, and of the Silver Bow Club of Butte, and is a member of the Helena Rotary Club and Commercial Club.

September 10, 1902, at Helena, he married Miss Maud Wall, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hand) Wall. Her parents are deceased. Her father was a farmer in Dakota and lived retired for several years at Helena. Mrs. Miller is a graduate of the Helena High School. They have two children: Thomas B., born June 17, 1904, a sophomore in the Helena High School, and George Ross, born February 17, 1908.

Hypolite Bessette. Old-time residents of Northern Montana came to know a great deal of the personalities and the activities of the noted Bessette Brothers, who at one time conducted the largest and most extensive freighting business through the northern counties.

An active member of this firm and later a prominent rancher and stockman was the late Hypolite Bessette, who was born at Louvre, France, in 1851. In 1878 he crossed the ocean to Eastern Canada, and during the same year with his six brothers set out for Montana, traveling by stage. The trip from Montreal to Helena took eighteen days. They then traveled on to Fort Benton, where they purchased ox teams and entered the freighting and transportation business. Their wagons ran to all parts of the Northwest and carried goods used in many important enterprises. It is a matter of history that practically all of the material used for the original Fort Assiniboine was hauled by the Bessette Brothers.

During the winter months when transportation was at a standstill the brothers lived in a log cabin on the banks of the Marias River. This cabin and its surrounding lands afterward became the ranch of Hypolite Bessette. These headquarters, though in an exposed outpost, were seldom molested by the Indians. The Bessette brothers continued in the freighting business for five or six years. Hypolite Bessette then withdrew from the firm and returned to his native land, where he married and where he lived until drawn again by the spell of Montana to this country.

In 1897 he brought his family to Montana and from that time forward lived on the ranch which had been his winter quarters during his freighting experience. He became extensively engaged in the stock business, and lived there until his death on December 23, 1901.

Hypolite Bessette married Miss Marie Lea Carreau. They were the parents of Adelia, Corona, Eglantine, Valmord and Ademord. The daughter, Adelia, married a Mr. Green and died December 3, 1910, leaving one daughter, Corinne. The daughter, Corona, died as Mrs. Sprinkle on May 1, 1917, leaving three sons, Roger, David and Robert Sprinkle. The other three children and their widowed mother are still living. Eglantine Bessette, now Mrs. Eglantine L. Roper, is one of the best educated women in Montana and is a practicing member of the bar. She was educated in the Sacred Heart Academy at Missoula and in the University of California, and was admitted to the Montana bar in 1919. She is now engaged in practice as a land attorney at Havre. Her husband, C. C. Roper, is a farmer. They have two children, Idale and Ronald. On July 19, 1919, Mrs. Roper bought the Northern Auto Company, general garage agents for the Studebaker cars, to which she gives her personal attention.

Rev. Frederick William Thompson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Polson, began his career as a minister on the plains of Western Canada in mission work.

He was born at Belfast, Ireland, a son of James Sinclair and Sarah J. (Stitt) Thompson. He was liberally educated in his native country, and at the age of twenty-four came to America and under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church did missionary work in Saskatchewan and Alberta. He was ordained a regular minister at Tisdale, Saskatchewan, in July, 1909, and in 1911 removed to North Dakota. For three years he was pastor of the church at Hunter and in 1915 was called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Mandan. He remained there three years and that ministry was distinguished by much constructive enterprise, including the building of a handsome new church edifice at a cost of $35,000. Mr. Thompson came to Deer Lodge, Montana, in January, 1918, as pastor of the local church, but resigned to accept the call to the First Presbyterian Church at Polson and has been an earnest worker in the church of that community since March, 1919.

In 1914 he married Miss Jeanne Elizabeth Pollock. Mrs. Thompson was born in Monaghan, Ireland, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Cobine) Pollock. She was well educated, and during several years of service in the British postal service made herself a valuable and responsible worker. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have three children: James Sinclair, John Reginald and Dorothy Jean.

Rev. Mr. Thompson is affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, both he and his wife are Rebekahs and Mrs. Thompson is a member of the Eastern Star. Politically he is a discriminating voter, but long before he acquired American citizenship was an admirer of the stalwart principles of the late Theodore Roosevelt. As a boy in school in Ireland he and his college mates enjoyed reading the books of Theodore Roosevelt and at that time he took to heart many of the fine ideas exemplified and emphasized by the great American progressive. Rev. Mr. Thompson is a faithful consecrated worker, an able speaker, his voice being raised in support of every good movement for the good of the community, and he and his good wife are making their influence count for good in Polson.

William R. Crum. This representative and honored citizen of Cascade County has been distinctively the architect of his own fortunes, has been true and loyal in all the relations of life and stands as a type of that sterling manhood which ever commands respect and honor. He is a man who would have won his way in any locality where fate might have placed him, for he has sound judgment, coupled with great energy and business tact, together with upright principles, all of which make for success wherever and whenever they are rightly and persistently applied. By reason of these principles he has won and retained a host of friends in whatever community he is known.

William R. Crum was born in Champaign County, Illinois, on December 9, 1870, and is the son of Ryal and Cassie (O'Brian) Crum. The father, who was a native of Kentucky died in 1876, when William R. of this sketch was but six years of age. His widow, who survived him many years, dying in 1907, when sixty years of age, was born in Vermilion County, Illinois. They were the parents of four children, two sons and two daughters, the subject being the second child in order of birth.

William R. Crum is practically a self-educated man, for owing to the loss of his father when he was yet but a small child, he was compelled at an early age to make his own living. His first money was earned by loading a wagon with corn cobs, for which he received 25 cents a day. Later he was employed as a farm hand until he was sixteen years of age, and in the meantime he managed to attend winter schools to some extent. Removing to Webster City, Iowa, he rented a farm and for about three years devoted himself to its operation on his own account. In the spring of 1891 Mr. Crum came to Cascade County, Montana, and during the following eight years was employed as foreman by H. L. Mortag. In the meantime he homesteaded 160 acres and took up a desert claim of the same area and in 1895 he bought the old Fred Frost ranch at the Sullivan Divide and engaged in the buying, raising and selling of cattle and horses, which has since commanded his attention. He has been fairly successful in his operations and now has an average of 150 head of cattle and forty horses, having sold quite a number of cattle on account of the drought. He is a good business manager and is conducting his affairs in a conservative yet progressive way that guarantees success. Mr. Crum is one of the directors of the Cascade Co-operative Association, which is engaged in the general merchandise business at Cascade and which is a wonderfully successful enterprise.

Politically Mr. Crum is a stanch supporter of the republican party and his religious membership is with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On January 4, 1912, Mr. Crum was married to Julia Lasuskey, a native of Minnesota, and they have become the parents of two children, Vivian and Wilmar.

By a straightforward and commendable course Mr. Crum has made his way from a somewhat humble environment to a respectable position in the business world, winning the hearty admiration of the people of his adopted county and earning a reputation as an enterprising, progressive man of affairs.

Lawrence K. Devlin came to Montana Territory forty years ago as an employe of the United States Army quartermaster, who was in charge of the construction of Fort Assiniboine. His interests have since remained identified with the northern section of the state. For many years Mr. Devlin was head of the Pioneer Meat Company, one of the largest firms of meat contributors in the state. He has played a notable part in public affairs, particularly at Havre. Mr. Devlin is one of the influential democrats of Montana.

He was born at East Rutland, Vermont, June 29, 1859, son of Patrick and Margaret (Kinsella) Devlin. His parents were both natives of Ireland and were brought to this country as children by their respective parents. Patrick Devlin crossed the ocean in a sailing vessel during the early '40s, and grew up in Vermont, where he was educated and where he spent his active career as a worker in marble quarries. He died in Vermont in January, 1859, at the age of twenty-eight. His widow is still living, now in her eighty-fifth year.

Lawrence K. Devlin was the youngest and is the only survivor of three children. He acquired a limited education in the public schools of Troy, New York, and most of his training has been a matter of contact with men and affairs. He earned his first money weeding onions at 30 cents a day. As an employe of the quartermaster's department, United States Army, he came to Montana in 1879 to assist in the construction of Fort Assiniboine. He made the journey from Bismarck to Coal Banks, now Virgelle, by steamer. At that time Coal Banks was the landing for Fort Assiniboine. Mr. Devlin brought eleven men, expert quarrymen, with him and was superintendent during the first work in laying the foundation walls of the old fort. He then entered the employ of C. A. Broadwater & Company, later the Broadwater McCulloh Company; became manager of the company in 1891 and closed out the business in 1894. After closing out the affairs of the business at Fort Assiniboine he located at Havre, and now, more than twenty-five years later, ranks as perhaps the oldest living citizen of that community. He acquired some interests in the Pioneer Meat Company, which was a part of the larger business of the Pt Cattle Company. He was manager of the business at Havre and afterward president of the company until June 1, 1919. The company was incorporated in 1906.

Mr. Devlin was elected and served as a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Chouteau County in 1897-98, and during that term did much to put the financial affairs of the county on a firm basis. In 1895 he was chosen a member of the Havre School Board, and was its president for nineteen years. He was also an alderman from 1902 to 1911. In 1909 Governor Norris appointed him a deputy of the State Bureau of Child and Animal Protection, a position he occupied until January 31, 1920, when he resigned to accept the position of Federal prohibition director for the State of Montana. Mr. Devlin is a Catholic and a member of the Knights of Columbus.

November 3, 1903, at Havre, he married Miss Laura Ames Lepper. Mrs. Devlin was born at Fort Benton Montana, a daughter of Frank and Luella (Ames) Lepper, both now deceased. Mrs. Devlin was the oldest of three children. Her parents were pioneers of Montana, her father being proprietor of a blacksmith establishment at Fort Benton. Mr. and Mrs. Devlin have two children: Lawrence K., Jr., born at Havre, February 2, 1905; and Margaret Mary, born February 20, 1907.

William B. Rhoades. Formerly judge of the Eighteenth Judicial District, William B. Rhoades has found his abilities well rewarded since coming to Montana. He has been prominent as a lawyer and in the public life of several communities, and for a number of years his home was at Kalispell. He is now a resident of Great Falls.

Judge Rhoades was born on his father's farm in Saline County, Missouri, April 5, 1878, son of John T. and Belle (Novell) Rhoades. His parents were also natives of Saline County, Missouri. His father was born in October, 1848, was educated in local public schools, and for many years was a leading farmer and stock raiser in Saline County one of the most progressive agricultural sections of that state. He was a breeder of Shorthorn cattle and Poland China hogs, and did an extensive business in feeding and shipping livestock. He also worked for the best interests of his home community, served on the school board many years, took an active part in democratic politics and is a member of the Baptist Church. He is now living retired at Slater in Saline County. His wife was born August 30, 1854, and died in 1907. Judge Rhoades is the second of their eight children, four of whom are still living.

Judge Rhoades attended the public schools of his native county, including the high school at Slater, where he graduated in 1895. He then entered William Jewell College at Liberty, Missouri, and graduated A. B. in 1899. He took his professional course in the Kansas City Law School, and also studied under a private preceptor. He was admitted to the Missouri bar in 1901 and in the same year came to Montana and after his admission to the bar began practice at Deer Lodge. In 1903 he removed to Kalispell and was a busy lawyer and effective citizen of the Flathead district until 1915. He not only acquired a leading position as a lawyer, but made his services and influences felt in other ways. For three years he was secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Kalispell, and in 1906-08 was city attorney. He was also a member of the Kalispell School Board. In 1915 Judge Rhoades located at Havre. He was appointed to serve two years as secretary of the Railway and Public Service Commission, and during that time his office was at Helena. Governor Stewart appointed him judge of the Eighteenth Judicial District in 1917, with chambers at Havre, and on November 5, 1918, he was regularly elected to that office. He resigned the office of District judge in 1920 to re-enter private practice with ex-Governor E. L. Norris and George E. Hurd, and located in Great Falls. In 1912 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives from Flathead County, serving one term.

Judge Rhoades is a democrat and is affiliated with Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Havre Lodge No. 1201 of the Elks.

July 18, 1905, at Everett, Washington, Judge Rhoades married Miss Josephine Force, a native of Beatrice, Nebraska. They have three children: Jane, born in 1907; Robert, born in 1910, and Ruth, born in 1911.

Mathew McLain, sheriff of Hill County, and one of the most fearless and efficient men in this office in Montana, has made his name a terror to lawbreakers, who recognize that when they come into his jurisdiction they strike a man who "means business" and will not abandon a hunt until he has captured "his man." He was born at Springfield, Illinois, July 27, 1887, a son of Hugh and Eliza (McBride) McLain, natives of County Down, Ireland, where he was born in 1865 and she in 1867. Hugh McLain came to the United States in young manhood and for some years was engaged in working for others as a stone and brick mason, but later went into business for himself, and after coming to this country lived principally in Illinois and Iowa. His death occurred at Chicago, April 20, 1894, and his wife died in 1887, they being only twenty-nine and twenty years old, respectively, at death. They left two children, namely: Ella Jane, who married C. B. Lineweaver, of Havre, Montana, and Sheriff McLain. In politics Hugh McLain was a republican.

After the death of his parents Mathew McLain was taken by his grandparents, Samuel and Mary (Jackson) McLain, and was reared in Iowa, where he attended the rural schools of his neighborhood and learned farming. In 1908 he started out traveling through North Dakota, Iowa and Minnesota, seeing the country and earning his living by work as he found it, and then in January, 1912, he located permanently in what is now Hill County, but was then Chouteau County, homesteading in the vicinity of Havre. Here he erected a house and lived until he was elected sheriff of Hill County, on November 5, 1918, which necessitated his removal to the county seat. His vigorous action with reference to the Anti-Horse Thief Association brought him before the people of his county in such a manner as to impress the law abiding element that he was the right man for the office of sheriff and he was elected by a gratifying majority.

On January 12, 1912, Mr. McLain was united in marriage with Jessie Peterson, born in Minnesota. They have three children, namely: Opal E., Orville Norman and Gladys. Mr. McLain is a man of independent means, and has made what he now possesses through his own efforts since coming to Hill County, for when he arrived here all of his earthly possessions consisted of $1.75 in money, or what he terms a "grubstake." There are few men who could rise so rapidly and steadily as he has done, and he fully deserves the confidence and respect he has won as well as his material prosperity.

John Miller Parsons. The newspaper profession in Northern Montana has an able and worthy representative in the person of John Miller Parsons, formerly one of the owners and editors of the Havre Promoter, whose success since locating there has won him a high place among his contemporaries and many admirers in the city and county for his straightforward and public-spirited policy. His influence has been for the general upbuilding of this locality in every way possible, for he evidently has unswerving faith in its future and its interests at heart.

J. Miller Parsons was born in Faribault, Minnesota, on October 7, 1878, and is the son of Frank P. and Genevieve (Shipley) Parsons, the father still living. He is a native of Connecticut and the mother was born in Iowa. Frank P. Parsons was educated in the public schools of Connecticut and Wisconsin. His first employment was in early youth with the old Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, now the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, at Madison, Wisconsin, where he learned the vocation of telegraph operator. Later he was appointed operator and station agent at Renville, Minnesota, with the same road, retaining that position for fifteen or twenty years. In 1900 he came to Montana as station agent for the Great Northern Railway at Dodson, holding the position for some time. He then engaged in farming in Old Valley, in what is now Sheridan County, Montana, to which he devoted himself until 1917, when he resumed his old vocation of telegraph operator with the Great Northern Railway at Enid, Montana, where he now remains. Politically he is a stanch republican, while fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Telegraphers' Union.

The subject of this sketch received his elemental education in the public schools of Faribault, Minnesota, supplementing this by a thorough course in Brown's Business College at Faribault. When fifteen years of age he entered the office of the Faribault Republican to learn the printing trade, and served an apprenticeship of four years, for which he received $3 a week, in addition to which he received a bounty on the completion of his apprenticeship. Then, at the age of nineteen years, he entered the employ of the Badger Herald at Matt In c Lain.

Badger, Minnesota, but at the end of a year he went to Wagner, Montana. In the spring of 1899 Mr. Parsons went to Malta, Montana, and was connected with the Enterprise there for about ten years as foreman. During this period he took an active part in the organization of Phillips County, of which Malta became the county seat. He then came to Havre as night foreman of the Havre Promoter, a daily paper, and eventually became impressed with the value of that paper as a desirable newspaper property. On June 15, 1919, in association with Gail Wilson, he bought the Promoter, which they conducted until January, 1920, when Mr. Parsons disposed of his interests in the Promoter and removed with his family to Whitefish, a new railroad town in Flathead County, where he became connected with the mechanical department of the Whitefish Pilot.

On June 15, 1912, Mr. Parsons was married to Bertha Neumann, who was born in Melrose, Minnesota, the daughter of John Neumann, a retired farmer of that place. To Mr. and Mrs. Parsons has been born one son, Easton John, now four years of age.

Politically Mr. Parsons gives his support to the republican party. Fraternally he is a member of Malta Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also a member of the Kalispell Typographical Union and is a past president of the Havre Union. He has consistently given his support at all times to every movement having for its object the advancement of the best interests of the community and is deservedly popular, enjoying the confidence and good will of the entire community.

Joseph Valentine Hawk has devoted the greater part of his active life to the service of humanity as a regularly ordained minister, but for the past few years has been the well qualified superintendent of the Montana Children's Home Society, an institution which under his guidance is doing great work in providing homes for dependent children. He is well known both at Helena, his home, and over the state at large.

Mr. Hawk was born at Garden Grove, Iowa, February 21, 1868. His paternal ancestors came from Holland in colonial times and established a home in Pennsylvania. His great-grandfather was one of the pioneer settlers of Jackson County, Ohio. His father, Valentine S. Hawk, was born in Jackson County, Ohio, in 1833, and was reared in that state. Later he moved to Galesburg, Illinois, where in 1859 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Cochran. He served in the Civil war, participating in many of the historic engagements of the struggle, such as Gettysburg, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. Shortly after his marriage he moved to Garden Grove, Iowa. Nine children were born to this union. In 1878 he went as a pioneer to Rooks County, Kansas, taking a homestead near Plainville. Mrs. Hawk died at Plainville in 1884. Mr. Hawk died at Codell, Kansas, in 1912.

In 1895 Joseph V. Hawk was united in marriage to Miss Emily Wallace, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wallace of Council Bluffs, Iowa. They have two daughters, Vava and Verna, both of whom are associated with their father and mother in the work of the Children's Home Society.

Mr. Hawk is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church and frequently officiates as minister in various churches over the state. He is active in Masonry, affiliated with Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Helena Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Helena Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of Montana Lodge No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

The Montana Children's Home Society was first incorporated in 1897, and for several years it accomplished a small but valuable work for the homeless children of the state. Like all new organizations its way must be paved and a foundation laid, and this was well done. The society now covers the entire state, with district agents at Butte, Billings, Great Falls, Missoula and Havre, beside the receiving home at Helena. The society has received and placed in permanent homes 1,417 children up to April 30, 1920, besides more than double this number of children received assistance over a difficult period so as to hold them in their natural homes. The society's first thought is holding homes together, but where this is not possible then the children are cared for in the receiving home at Helena until they can be permanently placed in family homes for adoption. The society is not sectarian or political and is cared for by voluntary contributions. All persons are urged to write Mr. Hawk if they know of a child needing attention or of a home needing a child. The slogan of the Children's Home is "Homeless Children for Childless Homes."

Elizabeth D. Milliken, county superintendent of schools for Chouteau County, began teaching when a young girl in Pennsylvania, and has been a factor in the Montana system of public education for over ten years.

Miss Milliken was born at Ayr, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, daughter of James B. and Elizabeth (Drysdale) Milliken. Her father was born at Wick on the north Coast of Scotland in 1849, while her mother was born near Glasgow in 1851 and died in 1892. James B. Milliken learned the cabinet making trade and in 1880 came to the United States, followed by his family in 1881. For a number of years he was in the contracting and building business at Pittsburgh, and since 1912 has been a resident of Montana. He was a rancher at Vergelle in Chouteau County for several years, and is now retired and living in Colorado. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, joined the Masonic fraternity in Scotland and all his three sons are Masons, while Miss Milliken is a past matron of Bethany Chapter No. 42 of the Eastern Star at Fort Benton.

Elizabeth D. Milliken was the third in a family of four sons and three daughters. She was educated in Bellevue, a suburb of Pittsburgh, and did her first work in the rural schools of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. She was a teacher there about seven years before she came west to Montana in 1909. For two years she taught at Hamilton, one year at Belt, and for four years was connected with the schools of Fort Benton. Miss Milliken was elected superintendent in November, 1916, and was re-elected for a second term in 1918. She has made her office a real factor in the improvement of school facilities throughout Chouteau County, is a hard and constant worker, and has done much to infuse a new spirit into the educational affairs in her jurisdiction. Miss Milliken is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Isaac N. Fleenor was one of the early settlers in Chouteau County, for many years was successfully identified with ranching, building up an important industry in high grade cattle and horses, but is now enjoying a well deserved retirement and comfort in his home at Big Sandy.

Mr. Fleenor was born on his father's farm in Des Moines County, Iowa, September 17, 1855, son of Hiram and Dicy (Linder) Fleenor. His father, who was born in Virginia October 26, 1818, went with his parents to Iowa Territory in 1836. At that time what is now the great State of Iowa had only a small fringe of settlers along the Mississippi River, and the real history of development had scarcely begun. The Fleenor family located in Des Moines County, where they put some of the virgin soil into cultivation. Hiram Fleenor was eighteen years of age when he went to Iowa, had been educated in his native State of Virginia, and he spent a long and active life as an Iowa farmer. He was, like many Virginians, a devoted lover of fine horses, and always kept good horses and other stock on the farm. He was an influential member of his community, served many years on the school board, was a whig and later a republican, and was affiliated with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He died January 21, 1890. His wife, Dicy Linder, was born in Iowa, where her people were also among the pioneers. Her father, George Linder, and her brother, Jasper Linder, also became connected with the early history of Montana. Leaving Iowa with an equipment of wagons and ox teams, they came overland to Alder Gulch, now Helena, during the gold excitement of 1864. The Linders subsequently became prominent cattlemen and ranchers in Beaverhead County, the Linder ranch being located between Dillon and Twin Bridges.

Isaac N. Fleenor, who was the second in a family of five daughters and four sons, six of whom are still living, acquired his education in the public schools of Iowa and spent his early youth attending school in winter and working in the fields in summer. He recalls the first money he ever earned, covering corn at 25 cents a day. He was then nine years of age. Mr. Fleenor came to Montana in 1889, the year the territory was admitted to the Union, and for a few months leased a ranch near Sheridan in Madison County. He began his career as a farmer and stock raiser there, but in the fall of the same year located a homestead in Chouteau County. Thereafter for nearly thirty years he was a factor in the development of the land and in promoting the livestock industry. His own holdings grew to eleven hundred acres, and his ranch became the home of much fine stock, including Hereford cattle and French Percheron horses. Every year he handled between 100 and 300 head of cattle and kept from twenty-five to forty head of horses. Mr. Fleenor sold out his ranch interests in 1917 and after a visit to his old home in Iowa, he returned in April, 1918, and built the fine home at Big Sandy, where he now takes life at ease. Mr. Fleenor is not a partisan in politics, casting his vote for the best man.

September 13, 1883, he married Alice Leavell. She was born in Lucas County, Iowa, oldest of the three children of Thomas and Mary D. Leavell. Her parents were also natives of Iowa.

PETER GOWRIE. Change is constant and general, generations rise and pass unmarked away, and it is the duty of posterity as well as a present gratification to place upon the printed page a true record of the lives of those who have preceded us on the stage of action and left to their descendants the memory of their struggles and achievements. The years of the honored subject of this memoir are a part of the indissoluble chain which links the annals of the past to those of the latter-day progress and prosperity, and the history of Northern Montana would not be complete without due reference to the long, useful and honorable life Mr. Gowrie lived and the success he achieved as an earnest, courageous laborer in one of the most important fields of endeavor.

Peter Gowrie was born in Dundee, Scotland, on October 31, 1849, and his death occurred at Havre, Montana, on May 5, 1905, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He was the son of John and Elizabeth Gowrie, of whose eight children he was the second in order of birth. He was educated in the public schools of his native land and learned the trade of a tailor. When nineteen years of age he immigrated to America, locating in Windsor, Canada, where he was married. They remained in Canada until they moved to Marquette, Michigan, some years later. On October 13, 1890, Mr. and Mrs. Gowrie came to Havre, Montana, that being in the embryo period of this place, at a time when living accommodations were almost unknown. At the time of their arrival here there was not a house which they could occupy and so Mr. Gowrie sent to Fort Benton for a tent, in which they lived for about a year. He then built a house of one room, covered with tar paper, which was their home until in the course of time they were able to erect the substantial and comfortable home at 608 First Street, where Mrs. Gowrie now lives.

Mr. Gowrie's first employment here was with the Great Northern Railroad as a fireman, then as a brakeman, later as yard master, and finally as conductor of freight trains. He then left the employ of the railroad and engaged in the tailoring business in Havre, which occupied his attention up to the time of his death. Mr. Gowrie was a faithful workman at everything to which he applied himself, so that when he engaged in business on his own account he gave to the work which he performed for others the same careful attention that he gave to the work he performed while a railroad employe. This careful and faithful attention to everything he did was one of his characteristics and was the main secret of his success. It not only meant material success, but what was of far more importance, it gained for him the confidence and esteem of the people with whom he mingled and was associated. For a number of years Mr. Gowrie rendered the city appreciated service as city marshal

On June 19, 1878, Mr. Gowrie was married to Elizabeth Foster, who was the second child in order of birth of the four children born to William and Mary (Fisher) Foster, her birth occurring in Glasgow, Scotland. When she was twelve years of age she was brought by her parents to Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, where she lived until her marriage to Mr. Gowrie. To them were born ten children, as follows: Mary Elizabeth is the wife of Alexander Miller; Gertrude died on May 25, 1906; Marjorie died on May 24, 1906; Isabel is the wife of Henry Snortoin, and they have a son; Barbara is the wife of Charles Luding, and they are the parents of four children; Ruth, who was the first white child born in Havre, is the wife of Earl Bemis, and they have two children; Pryyde became the wife of Alexander Skinner, who enlisted in the United States service during the recent World war and died while in the service in France on November 26, 1918; Minnella died in infancy; Stanley is living at home and John died in infancy.

Politically Mr. Gowrie was a stanch supporter of the democratic party and in religion the family are identified with the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he was a member of the American Order of Foresters, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, of which he was secretary at the time of his death, and of the Order of Railway Conductors, of which he was secretary for about ten years.

PETE GOWRIE AND FAMILY

Mrs. Gowrie relates many interesting reminiscences of the early days in Havre, for she has been a witness of practically the entire growth and development of this place. When she came here there were only two houses here, besides three rude log cabins, and there was but one other white woman here before her. She has not only been a witness of the growth of the city, but in a large measure Mr. and Mrs. Gowrie helped to make stable the body politic in the first days, when it was necessary that the law abiding people should hold things with a firm hand. Every movement for the advancement of the best interests of the people received their hearty endorsement and support and they were always arrayed in support of law and order and morality. Mr. Gowrie's personal relations with his fellow men were ever mutually pleasant and agreeable, and he was highly regarded by all, having been easily approached, obliging and straightforward in all the relations of life.

George Denison Prentice has been a Montana resident for about thirty years, has had an extensive business experience in Butte and Great Falls, and is now proprietor of the Prentice Automobile Company in the latter city.

He was born at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, April 21, 1877, son of Charles Mortimer and Cecilia A. (Bare) Prentice, the former born in Mystic, Connecticut, in 1846, and the latter in Pennsylvania in 1847. They were married in Wisconsin and are now living retired at San Diego, California. Of their three children one died in infancy, and the other two are George and Lulu May. Charles Mortimer Prentice acquired his education in the schools of Connecticut, and as a young man went to Wisconsin. He developed a high degree of skill as an architect and builder and followed that profession for a number of years at Chippewa Falls. In 1884 he went to Texas, moved to Arkansas in 1887, and in 1890 brought his family to Montana, locating at Butte. He was in the building and contracting business at Butte for over twenty years, and handled a number of important contracts both in that city and in Great Falls and other points in the state. Since 1912 he has been a resident of San Diego, and he also continued his business on the Pacific Coast, some of his substantial work being found in San Francisco and Los Angeles. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and is a republican voter.

George Denison Prentice acquired a public school education. The spirit of enterprise and self-reliance was early awakened in him. He recalls the fact that the first money he ever earned was made by picking up and selling old bottles and tin cans. For beer bottles he obtained 15 cents a dozen, whiskey flasks brought 2½ cents each, and demijohns 25 cents apiece. While in school he also ran a newspaper route, getting up in the morning at 4:30 to deliver papers. He was about thirteen when his parents located at Butte, and at the age of sixteen he took his place as a wage earner in a planing mill. Later he was running pumps and hoists in the mines at Butte and vicinity. Mr. Prentice came to Great Falls in 1906, and on Christmas Day of that year married Selma Adele Jensen. After his marriage he returned to Butte, but a year later located permanently at Great Falls and for about four years served as chief engineer at the Montana Brewing Company. While there he put his inventive genius to work and patented an automatic keg-washing machine for washing beer kegs. He went east and developed his machinery and for several years received considerable sums in royalties on their sale.

Mr. Prentice engaged in the automobile business in 1913 and has a large and well equipped garage, service station and salesrooms at 113-119 Second Avenue, North, conducted as the Prentice Automobile Company. Mr. Prentice is an independent voter, and is affiliated with Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Woodmen of the World and United Commercial Travelers. He and his wife have five children: Elizabeth, George, Dorothy, Harold and Jane.

The father of Mrs. Prentice is Stuard R. Jensen, a pioneer business man of Great Falls, now living at San Diego, California. Stuard R. Jensen was born in Denmark, August 25, 1851, was educated by his father, a school teacher, and at the age of twelve came with an uncle to America and located in Wisconsin, where he worked as a farm hand. Going to Minnesota, he learned the cooper's trade, and for a time also conducted a grocery store in that state. He arrived at Great Falls, Montana, in the spring of 1887, and homesteaded a claim north of the city in Cascade County. On August 29, 1875, he had married Miss Selma Johnson. Soon after coming to Great Falls Mr. Jensen wrote back to his wife's brother, Fred G. Johnson, urging him to join him, and in 1887, as partners, they opened the first steam laundry, known as the Cascade Laundry, at Great Falls. They gave to this business an enterprise which made it grow as rapidly as the young city itself, and soon had one of the largest establishments of its kind in the state. It is said that their plant was the second in the country to use electricity to heat the rolls and flatirons. In 1893 they bought a share in the Montana Brewing Company, and later sold the laundry business and gave all their attention to the brewing business. The first also became extensively interested in lands, ranching and other enterprises at Great Falls, and Mr. Jensen continued his active and public spirited career there until 1919, when he retired and moved to California. He now enjoys the comforts of a beautiful home on the Mission Hills. He served as city alderman of Great Falls and represented Cascade County in the Legislature two terms. He is affiliated with Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks. Mr. Jensen was a stanch friend of Paris Gibson and helped make Mr. Gibson a United States Senator. Mr. and Mrs. Jensen had two children, Mrs. Prentice and Walter H.

Vernon E. Lewis. The true measure of individual success is determined by what one has accomplished. An enumeration of the men who are successful in their special vocations and professions in Montana, and at the same time are making a lasting imprint of their personalities upon the community; men who have won honor and public recognition for themselves and at the same time have conferred honor on the locality in which they reside, would be incomplete were there failure to make specific mention of the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph. The splendid success which has come to him is the direct result of the salient points in his character. With a mind capable of laying judicious plans and a will strong enough to bring them into execution at the proper moment, his energy, foresight and perseverance have enabled him to achieve definite and far-reaching results. Professionally his record is one of which he has justifiable reason to be proud, for he has been successfully connected with much of the more important business in the courts of this and adjoining counties. His is the record of a well balanced mental and moral constitution, strongly influenced by those traits of character which are ever of especial value in a progressive state of society.

Vernon E. Lewis was born on the 19th day of September, 1886, and is the fourth child in order of birth of the five children who blessed the union of George F. and Clara F. (King) Lewis. These parents were born, respectively, in Kankakee, Illinois, and Iowa, the former on February 22, 1851, and the latter on April 21, 1857. They were married in Kansas and their children were, besides the subject of this sketch, Henry, Arthur, Lillie, wife of Rev. J. A. Martin of Great Falls, and Velma. George F. Lewis was educated in public and private schools and was reared on the paternal farmstead. When twenty years of age he removed to Kansas and with his father and brothers located a homestead, where they engaged in farming and stock raising. In 1890 he sold his interest in the farm and came to Fort Benton, Montana, where he was engaged in the livery and feed business until 1906, when he located on a farm about twenty miles southwest of Fort Benton, and there he has since been successfully engaged in cattle and horse raising. He has taken an active interest in public affairs, and for twelve years he served as a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Chouteau County, a part of that period as chairman of the board. Politically he is a supporter of the republican party, while his religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Vernon E. Lewis was brought to Montana in early childhood and has therefore been practically a lifelong resident of the Treasure State. He received his elementary education in the public schools of Fort Benton, graduating from the high school with the class of 1904. He then entered Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, where he spent seven years, specializing in literature and graduating with the class of 1910. Then, having determined to make the practice of law his life work, he entered the law department of that institution, graduating with the class of 1912. In December of that year he was admitted to the bar of Montana and at once entered upon the active practice of his profession at Great Falls. A year later, however, he moved to Fort Benton, where he has since remained and where he has achieved a notable success in the practice. And in all the important litigation with which he has been connected no one has ever charged him with anything calculated to bring discredit upon himself or cast a reflection upon his profession. He has taken an active interest in everything concerning the welfare of the community with which he has been identified and has been a forceful factor in many moves for the material, moral and educational advancement of his community. He was one of the organizers of the Chouteau County Bar Association, and was elected secretary of the association in 1918.

A republican in his political views, Mr. Lewis has long taken a live interest in public affairs and his abilities have not been without recognition by his fellow citizens. In November, 1916, he was elected a member of the Lower House of the State Legislature, serving one term, during which time he secured the passage of the well-known "Abatement Law." In November, 1918, he was elected to the State Senate. He was made chairman of the committee on labor and capital, and a member of the judiciary and highway committees. He introduced and secured the passage of an amendment to the State Hail Insurance Law, in which the intention is to put the department on a self-sustaining basis. In the special session of July, 1919, he introduced and secured passage of a bill known as the Closed Primary Law, cutting down the expenses of primary elections and otherwise simplifying the old law and forbidding a candidate from running on a ticket unless he is a member of the party on whose ticket he appears.

On November 27, 1913, Mr. Lewis was married to Eve Russell, who was born in Fargo, North Dakota, the daughter of E. R. and Hattie (Coon) Russell, both of whom are living at Fort Benton, where Mr. Russell has been serving as court reporter since 1901. They are the parents of six children, all of whom are living. To Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have been born two children, Verneva and Myrna. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Lewis has been especially active in work among young people, being a leader in the Epworth League organization of that church, and at the state convention of the league, held at Billings on July 19, 1919, he was elected president of the state organization. He possesses a social nature, and by his genial and kindly attitude to those with whom he comes in contact he has won the confidence and respect of all.

JOHN HUNSBERGER was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, in 1840, and his death occurred in 1899, in the fifty-ninth year of his age. His wife, who was born in Sioux City, Iowa, in 1840, is now living in Fort Benton. John Hunsberger was reared and educated in his boyhood home. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war, having taken part in many of the most important battles of that great conflict. After the conclusion of his military service he came West, locating at Fort Benton, Montana, where he entered the employ of the American Fur Company in a clerical capacity. He was later elected treasurer of Chouteau County and was several times re-elected to the office. He was a pioneer of that locality in the early '70s and bore his full share of the burdens of the new community. After leaving the office of county treasurer he became proprietor of the old Overland Hotel, which he conducted up to 1880, when he bought the Grand Union Hotel, which he ran for a number of years. For several years he was engaged in the saloon business at Great Falls and, later on, at Blackfoot, being also engaged in the hotel business at the latter place, where his death occurred. Politically he was a democrat.

HARRY A. SCHOENING. While a man of youthful years, just in the full tide of a successful law practice, Harry A. Schoening is the oldest practicing lawyer of Wolf Point, coming to the town not long after it took on new life as a railroad point seven years ago.

Mr. Schoening was born in Renville County, Minnesota, October 29, 1883, and is one of many native Minnesotans who have contributed their citizenship to Montana. His father, Emil A. Schoening, was born in the city of Berlin, Germany, came to the United States as a young man, and has spent his active life in Minnesota. From work as a farm hand he homesteaded in Renville County, and has made a substantial farm out of his claim and still owns it, though now a resident of Olivia. He is a stanch American citizen and has been identified with the republican party. Emil Schoening married Emily Dosdall, who was born in the Province of Brandenburg, Germany, and came to the United States as a girl. They have the following children: Max and Emil, of Appleton, Minnesota; Edward, a farmer in Renville County; Louis, of Rider, North Dakota; Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, of Minot, North Dakota; Miss Olga, of Olivia; Harry A.; and Benjamin, of Minneapolis.

Harry A. Schoening grew up in the country and his early experiences were those of a farm. From the district schools he entered high school at Olivia, Minnesota, graduating at the age of twenty. In 1911 he received the degree Bachelor of Philosophy from Hamline University, and took his law at the St. Paul College of Law, graduating in 1913.

In casting about for a field for his professional work Mr. Schoening came to Montana, was admitted to the bar before the Montana Supreme Court on motion October 27, 1913, and at once established his office at Wolf Point, having selected that village as his home in the preceding August. The new town of Wolf Point then had about 100 people. His first case at law was a civil suit involving a few hundred dollars, and was finally settled in the District Court, in favor of his client. During the past seven years he has been engaged in a general practice, and the majority of his cases have been settled in the local courts. Mr. Schoening has been city attorney of Wolf Point since its incorporation, is attorney for the First National Bank, and handled the legal matters connected with its incorporation as well as for several other business corporations of the town. He has an interest in the Wolf Point Oil & Gas Company, is a stockholder and president of the Herald Publishing Company, and has stock in the Eastern Montana Security Company.

Mr. Schoening was a local leader in war work at Wolf Point, was a four-minute man, was active in the several loan drives, and also in the Red Cross. Mrs. Schoening was identified with the local chapter of the Red Cross, is a member of the Eastern Star and is secretary of the Women's Civic League of Wolf Point. The family are church members, identified with the Methodist organization at Wolf Point. Mr. Schoening is a republican in national affairs, though he supported the opposing candidate in 1916. He is affiliated with Loyalty Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Wolf Point. The Schoening home is a nine-room comfortable house on Dawson Street.

At Wolf Point December 19, 1917, Mr. Schoening married Miss Elsie M. Hagen. She was born at Wolcott, North Dakota, August 14, 1891, one of the two daughters and three sons of Knute Hagen, who was a native of Norway. Mrs. Schoening was educated in the high school at Williston, North Dakota, and in the Normal School at Valley City, and for several years was a primary teacher. She was teaching at Wolf Point when she met her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Schoening have one daughter, Elizabeth Lucile.

OLE C. JOHNSON. Through practically the entire history of the new community of Wolf Point Ole C. Johnson has been one of the most important figures as a merchant, promoter of business enterprise, leader in public movements, and a man whose public spirit can always be relied upon as a source of benefit to the community.

Mr. Johnson was born in Chippewa County, Minnesota, April 26, 1883. His father, Knute Johnson, who was born near Christiania, Norway, immigrated alone to the United States at the age of seventeen, and first located in Goodhue County, Minnesota. His capital was his labor. He was an expert timber man, could swing an axe better and shove a saw livelier than most of his fellows, and for a number of years that skill gave him steady employment in the Minnesota woods. From his labor he accumulated the capital which enabled him to take up an eighty-acre homestead in Chippewa County. He was one of the early settlers there, made a home and farm, and still lives on his farm, now comprising 240 acres, substantially improved and profitably managed. As soon as possible he became an American citizen, has always been devoted to American principles and ideals, and is a democratic voter. His community has frequently honored him with such offices as road supervisor and school director. He was reared a Lutheran, and both he and his wife were factors in the building of a community church. In Minnesota Knute Johnson married Anna Kvan. She was born near Bergen, Norway, daughter of Jens H. Kvan, and came to the United States with her parents at the age of ten years. Her father was an early settler in Goodhue County, where she grew to womanhood. Knute Johnson and wife had the following children: James H., a merchant of Hitterdal, Minnesota; John K., a merchant of Hammer, South Dakota; Hannah, wife of David Bearbower, of Davenport, Iowa; Anna, wife of Albert Gjerset, of Fergus Falls, Minnesota; Caroline, who became the wife of O. H. Sconsing, of Paynesville, Minnesota; Ole C.; Amandus, with his brother at Wolf Point; Levi, a merchant at LeMars, North Dakota; Carolis, who farms at the old homestead; and Naomi, also at home.

Ole C. Johnson grew up in a rural district and supplemented his advantages in district schools with a course in Windom College at Montevideo. Before he became a merchant Mr. Johnson was a successful school teacher, and has carried his interest in education to his Montana community. For seven years he taught in Minnesota and North Dakota, going to the latter state in the summer of 1905. His last school work was done early in 1910, and in the summer of that year he found a place as clerk in a store at Ray, and after a year used his modest capital to open a small variety store.

In the spring of 1912 Mr. Johnson came to Montana and to Wolf Point, shipping his stock of goods and fixtures from Ray. His former partner and associate, A. J. Isachsen, came with him, and in May the firm of Johnson & Isachsen opened the first general merchandise store in the new town. Their store was on the site now occupied by the Champlin Implement Company. Their stock consisted of groceries, shoes and a few pieces of dry goods. In the spring of 1915 they moved to the McBurney Building, and with increased stock and increasing prestige as good business men they continued there until the fall of 1919, when they sold their stock and business to the Buttery-Swift Company.

In the meantime, in 1918, the men's clothing portion of the stock had been separated and an exclusive clothing and furnishing business for men was established, called "The Fad," of which O. C. Johnson, A. J. Isachsen and Amandus Johnson are owners and active managers today.

Mr. Johnson has been liberal of his time and means in promoting other business enterprises. He was one of the founders, stockholders and a director of the First National Bank, is a stockholder and president of the Wolf Point Electric Light & Power Company, a stockholder and director in the Wolf Point Herald Company, and was a member and president of the first council of Wolf Point. For three years he was a working member of the city government, and he also helped organize the Wolf Point Fire Department. During the World war he was a member of different committees to raise funds. Mr. Johnson voted in the first national election in 1904, supporting Colonel Roosevelt, and has been a republican in national elections except in 1916. He is affiliated with Loyalty Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, while Mrs. Johnson is a member of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Johnson has contributed two residences to Wolf Point. His present home is a house of eight rooms, with basement and hot water heat, and modern in all respects. Mr. Johnson married Miss Edith Worthy at Nashlin, Canada, July 16, 1918. She was born at Eureka, South Dakota, August 5, 1889, one of the family of three daughters and two sons of Joseph and Martha G. (Bonner) Worthy. Her father was a native of England and her mother of Stewartsville, Minnesota. She spent part of her girlhood at her native town and also at Ashley, North Dakota, was well educated, and deserves some credit for the part she took in the early school or educational history of Wolf Point. She was a teacher in the Indian Mission at the old town and later in the public schools of the new town. Mrs. Johnson is chairman of the Relief Committee of the Red Cross Chapter, being one of the leaders of that organization during the war, and is also active in the Presbyterian Church and Sunday School. Mr. Johnson has by a former marriage a son, Vincent Marion Johnson, who is now an important factor in the home of his grandmother, Mrs. Joseph Hickel, at Ray, North Dakota. A son, Donald Worth, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson August 2, 1920.

John Mathew Kay, coroner of Hill County, and one of the solid citizens of Havre, is engaged in the undertaking and art goods business. He was born in a tent on the trail southwest of Dillon, May 21, 1867, a son of James and Mary (Hope) Kay. James Kay was born in the south of Scotland and died in December, 1913, at the age of eighty-six years, while his wife, a native of England, died in 1909, aged seventy-nine years. They were married in England and after the birth of three children decided to come to the United States, so took passage on a sailing vessel. The six-weeks' voyage was a tragedy for them, as during it their dear little son and daughters died of scarlet fever and had to be buried at sea. The heart-broken parents landed at New York City and for a time lived at Schuylkill, Pennsylvania, where James Kay found plenty of employment, for he was a skilled carpenter and joiner and cabinetmaker. He preferred the West, however, and left Pennsylvania for Missouri, and formed connections with a bridge building company in the vicinity of St. Louis. During the war between the North and South James Kay served in a company of militia to protect Missouri. With the opening up of Western land through the exploration of Pike's Peak, the Kays traveled overland to Colorado and later to Utah. For some time he was engaged in teaming at Highland, near Red Mountains, eighteen miles southwest of Butte, and then James Kay went to the Gallatin Valley, where he took up a homestead, but later he went to Bozeman, Montana, and was engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, which he continued until his death. He was a Knight of Pythias fraternally and in politics a democrat. He and his wife had twelve children, three of whom are now living, namely: Joseph H., John Mathew, who is the seventh son of the seventh son, and Mary, who is the wife of James M. Robertson, of Bozeman, Montana. Mrs. Robertson was connected with the State Agricultural College in that city, being the college librarian for seventeen years.

John Mathew Kay has been carefully educated, as he was graduated from the Bozeman High School, also attended the Montana State Agricultural College, the Helena Business College and the Highland Park College at Des Moines, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1902. He learned the Eckels system of undertaking with his father, and uses it in his own business, which he established in Havre in 1913. However, Mr. Kay's chief work has been of an educational nature, he beginning his career as a school teacher when only seventeen years of age. After teaching in rural schools for some years he became principal of the East Side schools at Bozeman, which position he held for four years. Dur- eight years he was superintendent of the city schools of Red Lodge and in 1904 ran for the office of state ing 1892 and 1893 he served as superintendent of schools of Gallatin County. For the subsequent superintendent of schools on the democratic ticket, but was defeated, and accepted the principalship of the Broadwater County High School, and held it for eight years, thus giving twenty-eight years of the best part of his life to training the minds of the rising generation.

He was considered one of the leaders in educational thought in Montana. He was a member of the executive committee of the State Teachers' Association for a number of years and was honored by being elected president of the association. The subject for his annual address was "Educational Reminiscences of Montana." So important from an historical standpoint was this lecture considered that the association had one thousand copies printed. For a number of years he was the secretary-treasurer of the Montana State Athletic Association and also served as its president for one year. He did much to advance clean high school athletics in this state.

During the second session of the Montana State Assembly Mr. Kay was engrossing clerk, and he was assistant enrolling and engrossing clerk of the Constitutional Convention of Montana. In 1918 Mr. Kay was elected coroner of Hill County by a gratifying majority. He is a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Zona Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons, of Bozeman, and De Molny Commandery, of Havre; Havre Lodge No. 56, Independent Order of Foresters; and Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On July 26, 1891, Mr. Kay was married to Clara Lelia Murray, born in Missouri, when her parents were visiting the old home, a daughter of C. P. and Elizabeth (Ridgway) Murray, who had three children, two daughters and one son, of whom Mrs. Kay is the eldest. The Murrays were pioneers in Montana, coming here overland in 1864, and stopping first at old Diamond City, but later going to Hunter's Hot Springs. Mr. Murray was one of the pioneer ranchmen of the Yellowstone Valley and a prosperous man. The family is traced back to the colonial period of this country's history.

Mr. and Mrs. Kay became the parents of six children, as follows: Edna, who is the wife of Merle E. Smith; Vevah, who is the second in order of birth; John M., who is mentioned below; Perry M., who is mentioned below, and Kenneth L. and Dorothy L., both of whom are at home.

The service flag in the window of the Kay home during the great war bore two stars, for John M. and Perry M., were among the brave young men of this generation who voluntarily enlisted in defense of their country. John M. Kay volunteered January 28, 1918, at Havre in the Twenty-Sixth United States Engineers, and was sent to Fort Wright and thence to Camp Dix, New Jersey, being in training from February 17 to August 17, 1918, when he was sent overseas to France, where he arrived September 2, 1918, and was in the engagement at Saint Mihiel, the Argonne drive and continued at the front with the American forces until the signing of the armistice. He was severely gassed twice. He received his honorable discharge at Fort D. A. Russell on April 5, 1919.

"John M. Hay

Perry M. Kay volunteered at Great Falls, Montana, in March, 1918, in the quartermaster's department, and after being at Fort Wright was sent to Camp Joseph E. Johnston at Jacksonville, Florida, where he was assigned to the remount station, and suffered an injury from a horse. After his recovery he was sent to Newport News, Virginia, and started from there overseas, but when two days out was ordered back on account of the influenza. Later he was transferred to the hospital at Washington, District of Columbia, and was subsequently sent home on account of disability. He received his honorable discharge in April, 1919.

James L. Champlin, of Wolf Point, is one of the few surviving of the old plainsmen. For years he was a stage driver in some of the most hostile and dangerous sections of the Northwest. The deepest passion of his life has been the love of horses, and he is still in the business today at Wolf Point as a liveryman. Oddly enough, the title by which he is best known among his old associates is that of "Farmer Jim" Champlin.

Farmer Jim was born at Elmira, New York, July 4, 1853. His grandfather, Oliver Champlin, was for fifteen years captain of a whaling vessel, but left the sea and came inland and died at Berlin, Wisconsin, in 1867, when about sixty-six years of age. He married Elizabeth Wright, and their children included John, Henry, Ira, Carl, James O., and Mary who became the wife of Henry Clark. The son John died while the family was living in Kansas and is buried near Topeka.

James O. Champlin, father of Farmer Jim, moved out to Wisconsin with his family when his son James was four years of age. Soon afterward the Champlins were part of a colony that migrated from Berlin, Wisconsin, to Kansas. They spent two seasons in the territory, one at Topeka and the other at Fort Scott. Ague and fever, bad Indians and the border warfare were the discouragements that sent the Champlins back to Wisconsin. While on the Kansas frontier the Champlins came to know two conspicuous characters, John Brown and "Wild Bill," and the family were glad to regard both as their protectors. "Farmer Jim" has an indelible memory of John Brown, because the latter killed a little dog that was the chief companion and favorite of the boy. Wild Bill was a close friend of the family by reason of his brother marrying Harriet Baker, an aunt of James L. Champlin. James O. Champlin after his return to Wisconsin became a Union soldier in Company A of the 16th Wisconsin Infantry, and lost his life in the battle of Corinth, Mississippi, early in the war. He married Fanny Baker, a daughter of Benjamin B. Baker, who went to Wisconsin from Pennsylvania, and died in the former state as a farmer. Mrs. James O. Champlin died in 1859. Her children were: James L.; Florence L., wife of Eugene Metcalf, of Kerman, California; Orlando Morton, of Berkeley, California; and Frank, who died in Buffalo, New York, leaving two children.

James L. Champlin was ten years old when his father was killed, and he shifted around "from pillar to post" and got his education in the country, doing chores for his board and frequently walking as far as three miles to school. Most of his schooling was obtained at Berlin.

At the age of sixteen circumstances and his own desire made him master of his destiny and willing to take a man's part in life. Crossing the Mississippi, he started for the great West in the summer of 1869. For a time he was in the transfer and livery business at Faribault, Minnesota, and also was interested in race horses, following the circuit of country fairs and races during the season. In 1874 he moved to Fergus Falls, which was his headquarters for a number of years, while in the stage and plains service. For six years he was connected with the Minnesota Stage Company. From 1874 to 1877 he was in the Red River Valley, and drove the first stage coach into Crookston, Minnesota, when the only trail was a cowpath. He was a stage driver on the line between Moorhead and Winnipeg for 3½ years. As he drove the stage only here and there was a sign of civilization found in a cabin home and in a few stock owned by a Scandinavian or half-breed. In March, 1877, he moved to Bismarck and became driver of the stage line from there to Deadwood. He crossed the Missouri River on his first trip April 1st of that year, and for more than three years was stationed at different points along the way. Indians were then on the warpath, striving to oppose the entry of the white men into the coveted region of the Black Hills. Several times he was attacked, but never lost his scalp. On one occasion he was sent as driver of a coach containing Colonel Crooke and General Rosser from old Fort Lincoln to the crossing of the Big Heart River, where the general was making an inspection of the ground for a bridge for the Great Northern Railway. As soon as the two officers left Fort Lincoln the Indians broke out and killed the guards of the Government horses and ran the latter off and also threatened the safety of the distinguished party being driven by Mr. Champlin. Couriers and additional guards were hurried out to them, and they reached headquarters without encountering danger, although Mr. Champlin was practically exhausted by the responsibility of driving new horses in company with clanking of sabres and hurry and confusion incident to a cavalry party when danger is imminent.

After leaving the stage service Mr. Champlin engaged in the livery and transfer business for ten years at Fergus Falls and fifteen years at Osakis in the same state. Selling out in 1905, he began buying and shipping horses to the Minot market, handling both fancy drivers and work horses. For several years he was also a roadman for machinery companies, including the International Harvester Company.

After leaving the road Mr. Champlin came to Wolf Point in July, 1916, and built a mammoth barn and resumed his old business, livery, transfer and feed.

While this was the beginning of his permanent residence in Montana, Mr. Champlin knew the old territory as early as 1878. In that year a stage company employed him as a scout to search out some horses and mules that had been run away by the Indians in Dakota. He crossed the Yellowstone River where Glendive is now, and with a saddle horse and pack horse traveled alone through the region as far west as Fort Benton. Most of the journey was made under cover of night to escape the watchful Indians. He found his animals twenty miles south of Fort Benton, and took them back and delivered them safely at Fort Lincoln, now Bismarck, after an absence of seventeen days. In later years he made other incursions into the state as a stock shipper to Great Falls, and has known Montana and its people for a number of years.

It would not be possible in a brief sketch to describe all the interesting points of such a varied career and wide experience as that of Farmer Jim Champlin. For some years in his middle life he was a deputy United States marshal. In that capacity he came into contact with some important offenders and made them feel the weight of the law. He shook hands with many noted people visiting the West while he was driving stage to Deadwood. He knew "Calamity Jane" and other freaks in our national life. All the old timers knew his deadly accuracy with a firearm, and when he was in the enemy country his best friends on the box of the stage coach were his rifle and two big pistols. Time has drifted him far away from the rough scenes of the frontier of the '70s. He lives over the incidents of those days practically alone, since his pals have nearly all hit the long trail.

At Fergus Falls, Minnesota, November 25, 1880, Mr. Champlin married Miss Carrie E. Cooper, who was born at Winnebago City, Minnesota, in April, 1862, daughter of Joseph and Maria Cooper. Her father was a farmer in early life and later was a partner with Mr. Champlin at Fergus Falls. He died there in 1916, and the mother is now living in the Champlin home at Wolf Point. Mrs. Champlin is the younger of two children, her brother being Bert Cooper, of Halbright, Saskatchewan. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Champlin are: Earl, who married Catherine Daley and has a daughter, Aleen; Belle, wife of Ross E. Shaver, of Livingston, Montana; Myrtle, wife of Clifford Hoxie, steward of the Deaf and Dumb Hospital at Faribault, Minnesota; and Frank, assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Fairview, Montana. Earl Champlin is one of the live business men of Wolf Point, selling implements, is a member of the Wolf Point Council and also on the school board of the town.

JOHN H. COFFEY, of Wolf Point, is one of those rare business men with administrative faculties enabling them to touch and handle successfully many affairs. He was the first merchant of the new town of Wolf Point, and while looking after his individual business has aided in promoting and establishing many other factors that give Wolf Point character as a town of business and homes.

Mr. Coffey developed his business talents largely through experience, and even when he came to Montana possessed only such capital as he had been able to earn by a trade. He was born at Bay State, Massachusetts, March 31, 1879, son of John and Mary (Powers) Coffey, the former a native of County Waterford and the latter of County Tipperary, Ireland. The family lived in Massachusetts until April, 1892, when they moved to Grahamville, Iowa, and both parents died there a few months later. Their children were: Sister Mary Justitia, in St. Mary's Academy at Chicago; Simon, who died as a young man in Iowa; and John H.

John H. Coffey acquired his early education in the public schools of Bay State and from the age of thirteen grew to manhood in Iowa. He worked as a farm hand there, also clerked in a store at Granville, and learned the tinner's trade. He worked as a tinsmith at Eldorado, Kansas, and at Berthold, North Dakota, where he spent three years with J. W. Callan, a local hardware merchant. He possessed sound mechanical sense, probably inherited from his father, who had been a maker of cutlery in Massachusetts.

From North Dakota Mr. Coffey came to Montana and located at the new town of Wolf Point September 26, 1911. He brought in a stock of hardware, representing an investment of $600, all of which he had earned and saved from his work as a tinner and clerk. This stock he established in the first store at Wolf Point, in a house 24 by 50 feet, located near the site of the Sherman Hotel. His stock comprised shelf hardware, furniture and machinery. The winter of 1913 was an open one and in January he erected his second business house, but had occupied it only a few months when it was destroyed by fire July 3, 1913. He then replaced it with the building now known as the Coffey Block. Here he continued to expand his work as a merchant until August 1, 1919, when he sold his stock to the Wolf Point Cooperative Association, and since then has been occupied with his collections and the gathering up of the loose ends of his old business. When he sold out in 1919 his stock was valued at $15,000, showing the rapid progress he had made in his business career in less than ten years.

Mr. Coffey was a partner in the Traders Store at Wolf Point, built the first moving picture house in the town, was interested in a local meat market, in the automobile business, and was one of the original stockholders of the First State Bank and of the Sherman Hotel Company. He is also interested in a heating and plumbing business at Wolf Point, and in a meat market at Glasgow and is a stockholder in the Northwestern Hardware and Steel Company of Great Falls. All of these facts indicate the constructive character of his citizenship, and the sale of his mercantile business has released him from detailed responsibilities and afforded him leisure for other large affairs.

His service having been rendered as a business man, he has never aspired to official honors, though he has served as president of the Wolf Point Commercial Club. His father became a democrat, and the son has cast his ballot likewise. Mr. Coffey's parents were devout Catholics. Mr. Coffey is acquainted with Montana leaders of his party and gave his personal aid to the aspirations of Tom Stout for Congress in 1912 and for Senator Walsh more recently. He is affiliated with the Elks Lodge at Williston, North Dakota, and the Knights of Columbus.

He was one of the most generous of local citizens with his personal resources and with his influence toward the effective carrying on of the war. He was chairman of several of the committees for promoting bond sales and other war auxiliary drives, and personally he bought the limit in War Savings Stamps, and invested $1,000 in the Fourth Liberty Loan. He was on the Community Council of Defense.

One of his important contributions to Wolf Point is his modern home, an eight-room stucco bungalow, full basement and hot water heat. At Minot, North Dakota, May 11, 1909, Mr. Coffey married Miss Christine Driese, who was born at Granville, Iowa, in February, 1881, the youngest of the nine children of John Driese. Her father was a native of Germany and an Iowa farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Coffey have three children, Evelyn, Melbourne and Robert Emmet. Evelyn has the distinction of being the first white child born at Wolf Point.

CLARENCE J. SEVERSON. On the third day of July, 1915, a new face appeared on the streets of Wolf Point, and it was soon understood that the old Glacier Theater was to be operated under a new management through the newcomer, Mr. Clarence J. Severson. Wolf Point people feel a great debt of gratitude to Mr. Severson for what he has done in building up the entertainment interests of the town, giving them one of the highest class movie picture houses in the state.

Mr. Severson was born at Lisbon, North Dakota, December 31, 1889. His father, Andrew J. Severson, was born at Trondhjem, Norway, in 1860, and came to the United States with his father at the age of seventeen. For a time he worked in the lumber mills around Menominee, Wisconsin, and going west entered a homestead near Kathryn, North Dakota, where he has spent a very active and effective career as a grain and stock raiser. Through the prosperity acquired he has also become interested in merchandising at Kathryn and the bank at that point. He is now living practically retired. Andrew J. Severson married Louise Liverson, who was born at Menominee, Wisconsin, in 1865. She died at Kathryn, North Dakota, in 1913, and Clarence is their only child.

Clarence J. Severson, while reared on a farm, had instincts toward a commercial career and after completing his education in a business college at Fargo was given practical duties and opportunities to acquire experience in the Scandinavian-American Bank. He remained with that institution six years, being assistant cashier when he left. At Fargo Mr. Severson formed the acquaintance of George L. Onstad, and they have been partners in their theatrical ventures in Montana.

Mr. Severson during the past five years has directed the expenditure of much capital in the creation of a picture show and theater building at Wolf Point. The modern home of their theater is a story and a half fireproof building 50x140 feet, with amphitheater accommodation of 615 chairs. The electrical equipment is the latest to be had, and was installed at a cost of $3,000. The house has other modern appointments, including hot and cold water, and the total investment represents an outlay of $52,000.

Mr. Severson also has a half interest in the Tri-State Land & Loan Company at Westby, Montana. He and his father have always been republicans in politics, and the son cast his first presidential ballot for Mr. Taft in 1912 and supported Mr. Hughes in 1916. He took his early degrees in Masonry at Plentywood, Montana, is affiliated with Loyalty Lodge No. 121, at Wolf Point, and is affiliated with the Scottish Rite Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

At Grand Forks, North Dakota, January 15, 1917, Mr. Severson married Miss Hattie Grace Maltby. She was born at Park Rapids, Minnesota, February 25, 1895, fourth of the five children and only daughter of M. S. and Hattie (Smith) Maltby. She was educated in the Park Rapids School, in a business college at Seattle, and was a stenographer and office worker at Wolf Point when Mr. Severson met her. Mr. and Mrs. Severson have a daughter, Harriet Louise, born June 28, 1919.

Clyde Patton was an army man during the Philippine war, came to Montana a few years later, was an employe of the Government Indian Bureau, and for over ten years has been an active citizen and business man of Wolf Point, where he is proprietor of the Clyde Patton Independent Elevator.

Mr. Patton was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, June 2, 1881, only child of Charles and Susie (Johnson) Patton. His parents were natives of Ohio, and both died in Jackson County, Indiana. His father was a railroad engineer.

Clyde Patton from the age of four years lived in Jackson County, Indiana, and acquired most of his education in the public schools of Seymour. He was about seventeen years of age when the Spanish-American war broke out. At Louisville, Kentucky, he enlisted in the Twelfth Cavalry, a volunteer regiment, which was inducted into the service of the United States. He was a member of L troop, being its butcher, a trade he had picked up in earlier years. When the command left for the Orient it made the passage on a cattle boat from New York, going by way of England, through the Mediterranean Sea, stopped at Port Said on the Suez Canal, crossed the Indian Ocean, coaled at Hong Kong, and reached Manila after an uneventful voyage of several weeks. Mr. Patton had charge of the army butcher shop in Manila during the "embalmed beef" outcry, and remained there until the Filipino insurrection was ended. He returned home on the freight boat Kentucky, landed at San Francisco, proceeded to San Antonio, Texas, and was discharged at Fort Clark February 5, 1903. After a few months in Indiana Mr. Patton came out to Montana, reaching this state July 25, 1904. At Lame Deer he became agency butcher under Maj. J. C. Clifford, and was thus employed for about four years, and while on duty he married. On April 19, 1909, he and his wife established themselves on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, at first at Poplar, where he was additional farmer under Maj. C. B. Lohmiller. A year later he was promoted to charge of the sub-agency at Wolf Point, and continued in the government service in that capacity until September 1, 1915. He then resigned to take up business for himself, buying the John Listerud elevator at Wolf Point. During the greater part of the year he has had a busy time buying and shipping grain and handling flour and feed. The elevator has a capacity of 30,000 bushels. In the season of 1916 he shipped out 165,000 bushels of grain and seed, comprising 110 carloads. In each of the five seasons he has sent out a large part of the local production of the farms to market, though for the year 1919, as a result of the terrible drought, only 60,000 bushels went from his plant.

Mr. Patton took stock in the First State Bank when it was organized, and after selling it became a stockholder in the First National Bank and one of its directors. He has no banking interests at the present time.

Mr. Patton performed a notable service in this community as a county official. He served as deputy sheriff under Sheriff Bennett when Wolf Point was still a part of Sheridan County. The town at that time was infested with a bunch of gamblers, women of ill repute, and vice was generally rampant. It devolved upon Mr. Patton in his official capacity to "cleanup" the town. How well he did this is remembered by those who were present in the community. Arrests were made, trials and convictions followed, and the resolute qualities of Mr. Patton soon became apparent and the backbone of the situation was broken. He continued his vigilence against an occasional offender who returned with the hope that the ban had lifted, and for several years past Wolf Point has been a town in which citizens have been proud to live and rear their families. The "punch boards" suffered the same fate as other law violations, and were hidden away and finally disappeared. Mr. Patton served from January, 1917, and went out of office in March, 1919, when the new County of Roosevelt was created. That period of service also covered the time of the World war, and in his official capacity he also helped round up slackers and otherwise assumed responsibility for local patriotism. Mrs. Patton was also an active worker as chairman of the local Red Cross Chapter.

Mr. Patton married Miss Elsie Spencer on March 19, 1905, at Busby, the Northern Cheyenne Agency, where she was a government teacher. She was born in Adair County, Iowa, January 2, 1876, daughter of Orson R. and Susan (McConnell) Spencer. Her mother was a daughter of Thomas and Catherine (Buck) McConnell, of Lycoming County, Pennsylvania. Orson R. Spencer when Mrs. Patton was six years of age moved out to Dakota Territory, bought land at $3.00 an acre at Elk Point, now South Dakota, but after ten years took his family to Southern Illinois, and he and his wife are now living at Richview in that state. Their children were: Mrs. Mary A. George, of Centralia, Illinois; Mrs. Patton; Mrs. O. W. Wright, of Washington, District of Columbia; John, of Richview; and Mrs. A. D. Thompson, of Holder, Illinois. Mrs. Patton was educated in the public schools of Elk Point, South Dakota, and at Richview, Illinois, and completed her education in the Northern Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso. For eight years she was a teacher in the public schools at Richview, Illinois, and went from there into the Indian school service in Montana.

WINFIELD S. YOUNG. From every state of the Union have come vigorous, enterprising men to lend a hand in developing Montana's many industries. Among the substantial ranchmen of Blaine County may be found rather notable examples, and some whose selection of this section as a home came after travel and thorough investigation in many others. One who may be cited is Winfield S. Young, who is widely known and for thirty years has been in the cattle business in this part of the state.

Winfield S. Young was born on his father's farm in Morris County, New Jersey, September 23, 1854, the fourth in a family of six children born to Thomas and Lydia (Lawrence) Young, both parents being natives of Morris County. The father was born March 30, 1816, and lived to be eighty-one years old. The mother, born October 26, 1822, survived until 1906. The father was a farmer in Morris County in the neighborhood of Schooley Mountain, his farm adjoining Budd Lake, and for many seasons he conducted a summer resort there. He was a man of consequence in that section, for many years was a school trustee and held other offices with public efficiency. During early political life he was a whig, but later united with the republican party.

After completing the public school course in Morris County Winfield S. Young assisted his father in his various enterprises until he was twenty-two years of age, at which time he started out for himself. He came as far west as Princeton, Illinois, in which neighborhood he worked for two years as a farm hand. In the spring of 1878 he reached Denver, Colorado, and remained two years in that locality engaged in mining and prospecting.

In the interval between his mining and prospecting life in Colorado and his settlement as a citizen of Blaine County, Mr. Young had experiences that probably thoroughly satisfied his adventurous spirit. He was more or less successful in a financial way, but the time came when a quiet, well ordered home appealed to him, with its regular, everyday responsibilities, and a happy domestic circle where family affection would abide. Thus, on January 2, 1900, Mr. Young was united in marriage to Mrs. Emma Jane (Perrett) Whittier, who was born in West Meath, Ontario, Canada. She had two children, Gordon and Genevieve Whittier, both of whom are regarded as his own by Mr. Young.

In 1880 Mr. Young left Colorado and for two years was a miner and prospector in the Black Mountains in New Mexico. In the meantime he had chosen from his mining friends one who proved a congenial partner, a young man named Jack Rouse, who had come west from Columbus, Ohio. Up to this time they had owned horses and pack burros, but the animals, with the exception of one Texas burro, were stolen from them, and therefore when the partner prospectors decided to try their fortunes in the new mining field at Durango, La Plata County, Colorado, they had no choice but to walk the 400 miles. They spent about one year at Durango, then went to Salt Lake City, Utah, where Mr. Young remained during the winter of 1886. In the spring of 1887 he traveled over the country again prospecting and thus reached Butte, Montana. One year later he moved on to Dillon and during the next year worked on a cattle ranch in Beaver Head County. It was then he determined to locate permanentlty and go into the cattle business, and in pursuance of this plan drove his fine team to Bear Paw Mountain, Chouteau County, now Blaine, where he acquired squatter right land. To his original tract he has added and now has at least 1,600 acres. He immediately went into the cattle business and has prospered greatly. For six years he also handled sheep, but sold out in 1916.

Mr. Young is a most entertaining talker, having first hand knowledge of much that belongs to the history of this great state. He is a republican in his political views and occasionally has accepted a public office from a sense of duty to his neighborhood, having served on the local school board ever since his school district was organized. Away back in 1877 he was made a member of the Fraternal Order of Odd Fellows, at Victoria, Illinois, and has never failed to live up to the obligations he then assumed. He and family are well known at Havre, and their friends are often hospitably welcomed to their beautiful ranch located thirty-two miles south of that city.

JOHN B. RANDALL, who is United States commissioner of Wolf Point, has been in Montana throughout the period of statehood, coming here as a cowboy, followed the range for a number of years, developed a modest business of his own, and for a number of years has been doing the work of a livestock man and farmer in the Wolf Point vicinity.

Mr. Randall was born at Farmington, Maine, May 26, 1867, son of Dr. William and Elizabeth (Morrison) Randall. His parents were also natives of Maine. His mother's people were farmers, while his father was a graduate of the Massachusetts Medical School and spent his life in professional work at Farmington where he died in 1889, at the age of sixty-seven. His widow survived until 1913, dying at the age of seventy-two. Their children were: William M., a commercial salesman at Belfast, Maine, and John B. Mr. Randall by a previous wife had three daughters: Mrs. Jane Blethen, who died at Newark, New Jersey; Katie B., who became the wife of Samuel O. Tarbox, of Farmington; and Eunice H., Mrs. Fred P. Wilson, of Brockton, Massachusetts.

John B. Randall left his studies in the Farmington High School to join in the experiences and adventures of the southwestern country, leaving home in company with Carson M. Jacobs for the old Indian Territory. In what is now Oklahoma young Randall became an employe of the Comanche Pool Cattle Company, and there learned the business of riding the range and doing the other arduous work of a cowboy. From Oklahoma he crossed over into the Texas Panhandle with a herd, and there became an employe of the Phillips Cattle Company, known as the "LUBar" outfit. This company had established a Montana ranch in 1886, and in July, 1889, Mr. Randall helped bring 4,500 head of cattle up from the Panhandle country to the Montana headquarters. The cattle were shipped from Amarillo to Windover, Wyoming, and after being unloaded from the cars were driven overland a distance of 700 or 800 miles to the LUBar ranch on the Little Dry, between the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers.

In the spring of 1890 Mr. Randall came north to the Prairie Elk, joining the Home Land & Cattle Company, known as the "Nbar N" outfit. This was the largest cattle company in the state at the time, handling about eighty thousand head through the year. The owners were the Niederinghous brothers of St. Louis. Mr. Randall remained in their service for seven years as a range man and part of the time as commissary manager. Another period of seven years he was foreman for S. T. Cogswell's outfit. This employment brought him into the region of his present residence. The Cogswell ranch was just across the Missouri River from Wolf Point. It was one of the smaller ranch concerns, with about 200 or 300 head of horses and 5,000 head of sheep. The market during Mr. Randall's management was Chicago and the shipping point Oswego.

When he left Mr. Cogswell Mr. Randall took up a homestead south of the Missouri River, and in contrast to many of the early settlers not only occupied it during the period of proving up but has made it a permanent home. The substantial and commodious log house of eleven rooms which he built there is still doing duty as a place of comfort for his numerous family. Mr. Randall handles horses and cattle in sufficient number to utilize the resources of his land, and has also had a profitable experience with alfalfa, a crop that has proven its adaptability to the soil and climate. In seasonable years it cuts three crops. His is a valley farm four miles southeast of Wolf Point. The surrounding community is still undeveloped with such modern conveniences as telephones, railroad delivery and the like. Largely through his influence the Randall School District has been established, first in what is now McCone County, and he was district trustee for ten years.

He was appointed United States commissioner in 1904, being the first officer to represent the Federal Government in the district. He instituted the office before land entries had begun in earnest, and has performed the court work for the proving of title to nearly all the lands entered here. His office also makes him the local court to try violators of the liquor law of the United States, and numerous cases have already passed in review before him.

Mr. Randall has always been a republican in political sympathies. In early years he was out on the frontier and out of touch with election campaigns, but has voted in practically all the presidential elections since Montana became a state. He joined the Masonic fraternity at Wolf Point, being affiliated with Loyalty Lodge No. 121, and his son John is also a member of that order.

At Glasgow, Montana, October 3, 1896, Mr. Randall married Miss Margaret Clark. Her father was George Clark, who died at Ogalalla, Nebraska, as a farmer. The Clarks were pioneers in Kansas, where Mrs. Randall was born in 1870. Three of her brothers are living in Montana, George, Claud and Warren, all in McCone County. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Randall are John C., William, Elizabeth, Kate, Donald, Bruce, Margaret and Una. John during the war was attached to the Medical Corps of the United States Cavalry, in training at Fort Wright, Monterey, California, where he received his honorable discharge. He is now a member of the American Legion Post at Wolf Point.

Samuel S. Stewart is well known as an early settler of Tailor Creek, a tributary of Otter Creek, and is a resident of Powder River County, having dated the month of his coming March, 1880, and spending his first residence in the locality of Deer Lodge as a hand. April of the next year saw him at Miles City viewing the metropolis of Eastern Montana for the first time. However, he remained there but a short period and then went up the Tongue River to cut cordwood that summer, above the mouth of Otter Creek, following which he went to work for the old ranchman, Captain Howes, at the mouth of Tailor Creek. Mr. Stewart spent three years with the Captain as a hand and at the end of that time selected his homestead where he is now located, entering a quarter section of land and erecting upon it his first home in Montana. This was a log cabin of one room, covered with dirt, and was occupied as a home by its bachelor tenant and owner for fifteen years, being then succeeded by Mr. Stewart's new combined log and weatherboard home of three rooms. Other and numerous buildings have risen by his hand to make the farm conveniently improved and substantially as well, and he has continued permanently to make his residence here.

Speaking of his financial condition, when Mr. Stewart began working for Captain Howes he had but 10 cents in his pocket and was $60 in debt. He had accumulated personal property to the extent of fourteen head of mares, and when he left the Captain's employ began the stock business with horses and ran them for twenty years. He experienced, finally, a gradual decline in prices, and eventually closed out his horses in the spring of 1898 and entered the cattle business, in which he has continued to be engaged to the present time. His recorded horse brand was the "SS" (the Lazy S and the Standing S), but his cow brand is the "Y-Bar-K" on the left side. His are stock cattle for food purposes and he finds his market for them as a shipper to Omaha, loading at Kendrick and Arvada, Wyoming. Samuel Stewart's place is remembered as the site of his sawmill for several years, and the lumber he cut there went to the settlers who came in and improved the locality by the building of homes.

Mr. Stewart came into Montana from Utah, where at Ogden he had been working in the coal mines for a few months, and his journey was completed by stage from the end of the narrow-gauge railroad running from Ogden to Butte. He spent several years in different states of the West before coming to Montana, doing any kind of labor that he could find that was honorable. He is a native of Ireland and was but ten months old when his parents immigrated to America, settling and making their first home in West Virginia. Ten years later they removed to Pennsylvania, and at Noblestown, that state, Samuel Stewart grew up. His father, Samuel Stewart, Sr., was a laboring man and died at Noblestown when past ninety years of age, while Mrs. Stewart passed away during the infancy of her son Samuel, to whom her maiden name is unknown. Of her six children to grow up Samuel is the only survivor. A brother, Robert Stewart, died at Chicago, leaving twelve children, two of whom, Robert and Hugh, are with their uncle Samuel, their mother having been Mary A. (Hoskins) Stewart. Hugh worked in the shipyard at San Francisco during the World war. Samuel Stewart's brother John, an engineer on the "Panhandle" Railway, left a daughter, Ellen, of Columbus, Ohio, at which city he died; and Sarah Stewart, a sister of Samuel, married Hugh Wilson and died in Pennsylvania, leaving a daughter, Mrs. Mary Barzee, of McDonald, that state. The above named constitute the posterity of Samuel Stewart, Sr.

Samuel Stewart was born in July, 1854, and has never married. His schooling was somewhat limited, being confined to the ability of reading and writing, and whatever other knowledge he possesses has been acquired through his own efforts. All of his life has been given to toil with his hands, the monument to which is found in his valuable and attractive ranch on Tailor Creek.

Odin T. Stennes was one of the early merchants at Wolf Point, has been one of the substantial business men and equally substantial citizens of that locality for six years, and his record is one of commendable exertions both in his own behalf and in behalf of enterprises in which the entire community is interested.

Mr. Stennes was born at Halstead, Minnesota, November 19, 1883. His father, Theodore Stennes, was a native of Norway, came to the United States when a young man, and in Minnesota married Miss Anna Serum. Their children were: Ed T., who is farming the land near Halstead which his father homesteaded; Clara, a milliner at Halstead; Odin T.; and Theodore, associated with his brother at Wolf Point.

Odin T. Stennes was a boy when he lost his parents. He grew up in the country, in the home of his stepmother and brother to the age of nineteen. Beyond the industrious habits acquired on the farm he had only the opportunities of country schools. After leaving home he was a student for two terms at Concordia College, Moorhead, Minnesota, and subsequently prepared for a business career by studying stenography and bookkeeping at Minneapolis. On leaving the commercial school he served the firm of Wyman, Patridge & Company at Minneapolis as bill clerk for six months, at a dollar a day wage. The following year he was an office man with the Landing-Ronning Company at Minneapolis. His first experience as an all around merchant and office man was gained during the next year, which he spent in the St. Paul office of Fairbanks, Morse & Company.

This house then sent him on the road as a commercial salesman, and he sold the products of that great concern over northwestern territory for eight years. During that time his headquarters were at Minot, North Dakota. On leaving the road Mr. Stennes came to Montana, locating at Mondak in 1911, and for three years was engaged in the hardware and lumber business. From Mondak he came to Wolf Point, reaching the townsite May 13, 1914. Here he opened a new business as a hardware merchant, and the Stennes-McConnon Company has been the chief concern selling hardware and furniture retail in this locality.

Mr. Stennes was in Wolf Point before its incorporation and had something to do with the movement to make it a municipality. He was elected an alderman of the first city government, beginning in September, 1915, was reelected for another term, and then, in June, 1919, was appointed mayor to succeed John Listerud, resigned. When the first city administration took hold of Wolf Point the townsite was little more than an open prairie. Mr. Stennes gave his counsel and study to the various problems presented not only for immediate settlement but involved in the future of the growing town. Street grades were established, streets were graded, more than seven miles of sidewalks were constructed, a water system and sewers installed, and Mr. Stennes has been associated with all this work. He was also on the school board in the primitive days of public education in West Point.

Mr. Stennes has always been affiliated as a republican in politics, casting his first presidential vote for Mr. Taft in 1908. He is a charter member of Loyalty Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Wolf Point, and is affiliated with the Helena Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Elks Lodge at Minot.

During the war he was a local committeeman in the various campaigns for raising war funds, while Mrs. Stennes was a member of the Red Cross Chapter. Their home is of their own planning and construction, a comfortable four-room cottage with fur nace heat.

The business house of the Stennes-McConnon Company is another contribution by Mr. Stennes to the substantial upbuilding of Wolf Point, and through his capital and enterprise a number of homes have been constructed for working people.

At Minot, North Dakota, October 23, 1911, Mr. Stennes married Miss Alice Bergen. She was born in Norway February 23, 1887, and the following year her parents, Peter and Mary Bergen, came to the United States. Her father was a farmer at Churches Ferry in North Dakota for a number of years, also lived for a time in Saskatchewan, and spent his last days at Fergus Falls, Minnesota. Mrs. Bergen now lives at Wolf Point. Mrs. Stennes was educated in public schools, is one of a family of two sons and five daughters, and all the others are in Saskatchewan, Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Stennes have a son, Leo Odin, born in April, 1918.

Alfred W. Huxsol, who came to Montana thirteen years ago with qualifications as a pharmacist and with practically no capital, has made a splendid use of his time and opportunities, has had several independent business enterprises, and has achieved prosperity and prominence. For the past several years his home and business interests have been at Wolf Point.

Mr. Huxsol was born in Floyd County, Iowa, November 11, 1881. His father, August Huxsol, is a native of Germany, came to the United States when a young man, and began his career as a laborer in Floyd County, Iowa. Eventually he bought a farm, and he is still living in the country, though practically retired from the responsibilities of farming. He is about seventy years of age, and his life has been one of prolonged industry. He is a republican voter, and his household is identified with the Methodist Church. August Huxsol married Elizabeth Keller, who was born in Ohio about 1852, daughter of Jacob Keller, a native of Germany and a farmer. The children of August Huxsol and wife are: Hertha, wife of August Rantz, of LaPorte, Indiana; Miss Emma, of Charles City, Iowa; Alfred W.; Amelia, wife of Gordon Newcity, of California; Ida, wife of Horace Clayton, of Phoenix, Arizona; Eddie, of Floyd County, Iowa; Miss Lucy, with her brother at Wolf Point; Miss Viola, employed in the First National Bank of Wolf Point; Julius, a Floyd County farmer; Miss Nellie, a teacher in the schools of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Elmer, a farmer in his home state; and Emil, a drug clerk at Charles City.

Alfred W. Huxsol was a farmer's son, grew up and acquired a country school education, and also graduated in a commercial course at Charles City, Iowa. When he left the home farm he gained his first business experience as delivery boy in a grocery store at Rockford, Iowa. He next went into a drug store at Charles City, where he gained a practical knowledge of pharmacy. He completed his education as a pharmacist in Northwestern University at Chicago. He passed the examination before the Iowa Board for a license, and soon afterward went with a drug firm in Cedar Rapids. It was while there that he established connection with a new opportunity in Montana, and in September, 1907, came out to Culbertson.

At Culbertson he began with the Valley Drug

Joseph Gussenhoven
and Family

Company as their pharmacist, subsequently became a half owner in the business with C. S. Stafford, and in 1909 became sole proprietor. He managed the business successfully and in time was able to branch out and extend his affairs to other points. In his store at Culbertson a jeweler, Clint J. Poe, occupied a small space in the drug store for his jewelry stock, and frequently relieved Mr. Huxsol at noon and other times, thereby gaining a thorough familiarity with the drug stock as well as his own establishment. They became good friends and thoroughly in each other's confidence. Eventually they formed a partnership and opened a new business at Medicine Lake in 1910, with Mr. Poe as manager and half owner and Mr. Huxsol as a partner. In 1915 Mr. Huxsol sold his interest in the Medicine Lake enterprise to Mr. Poe, and in the same year bought the interest of the late Doctor Johnston in his drug business at Poplar. Thus he became a partner with Maj. C. B. Lohmiller. Mr. Huxsol sold out his business at Poplar in 1918 to R. E. Patch. He had already established himself as a druggist at Wolf Point, and after disposing of his Poplar interests and his business at Culbertson a year later concentrated all his affairs at Wolf Point. He is a member of the Montana State Pharmaceutical Association.

Some other substantial affairs have gained his participation at Wolf Point. He was one of the promoters of the Citizens National Bank, associated with H. B. Tyson, O. C. Johnson, Ole Erickson and A. J. Isaacson. They chartered a bank in 1917 and opened it with a capital of $25,000, with Mr. Huxsol as president, H. B. Tyson, vice president, and F. W. Bleck, cashier. The institution merged in 1919 with the First National Bank, under the latter title, and at that time the capital was increased to $50,000. Of the consolidated bank Mr. Huxsol is president, H. B. Tyson, vice president, C. L. Cleave, vice president, F. W. Bleck, cashier, and other directors are M. J. Winton, of Minneapolis, Mr. Keith, of North Dakota, Ole Erickson, O. C. Johnson and W. H. Hogan.

Mr. Huxsol is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge at Culbertson, where he took his first degrees, and is a member of the Scottish Rite Consistory at Helena and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. At Red Wing, Minnesota, November 25, 1908, he married Miss Elizabeth Matthews, who was born in Floyd County, Iowa, May 25, 1880. Her parents, Christ and Elizabeth (Jung) Matthews, are natives of Germany, and Mrs. Huxsol was one of their six children, four of whom are daughters. Mr. Huxsol had the misfortune to lose his wife by death at Culbertson November 10, 1918. She is survived by two sons, Russell and Robert.

JOSEPH GUSSENHOVEN. It sometimes comes to pass that a certain individual through his business enterprise and high character is able to impress his personality on almost everything of importance in the upbuilding of a community. His talents, in a business way, come close to genius. Such a man is Joseph Gussenhoven, who for about thirty years has been a vital factor in the business affairs of Havre, Montana, one whose association with any enterprise has been beneficial.

Joseph Gussenhoven was born at Steven's Point, Wisconsin, May 10, 1869. His parents were Walter J. and Alyda Mary (Doormoolen) Gussenhoven. Both parents were born near the River Rhine in Holland, in 1840, and were reared, educated and married there. They became parents of ten children, two of whom were born in Holland, six survive, and Joseph was the third in order of birth. The father was a man of talent and education, a civil engineer by profession and conversant with seven different languages. In the late '60s, because of better business opportunities in the United States, he came to America. The first family home was in the City of Steven's Point, Wisconsin, where Walter J. Gussenhoven was a very acceptable school teacher for some time. He removed afterward to Green Bay and engaged in the manufacture of brick until 1872, when he went to Omaha, Nebraska, where he was employed in the engineering department of the government in making surveys for the building of the Union Pacific Railroad. Still later he was in the service of the government as guide and scout, with headquarters at Fort Saunders, Wyoming, during the Indian outbreaks. It was in this way he became acquainted with the western country and in 1873 he became interested in the cattle business not far from Laramie City, Wyoming, remaining in the territory until 1880, when he sold out.

In large measure by this time Mr. Gussenhoven had learned to highly estimate his adopted home, but not to the extent of feeling justified in educating his children in any other country than Holland. Therefore he accompanied his family back to his native land and settled them comfortably there with the children in school. He came back to the United States alone and soon afterward embarked in the crockery business in New York and New Jersey, where the family later joined him, but in 1885 return was made to Holland and the children continued their studies there. During these years the solicitous father often visited them, but continued his business in New York City for a number of years. Finally, however, his love of his native land led him back to make his permanent home in Holland and he died there in 1914. The mother of Mr. Gussenhoven still survives, a devoted member of the Roman Catholic Church, as was his father.

Joseph Gussenhoven attended the public schools of Laramie, Wyoming. Environment had, as usual, much to do with his boyhood amuesments and tasks and he remembers when he herded cows and sheep in the City of Laramie. He then sold soda water to the soldiers of Fort Saunders, Wyoming, and later engaged in freighting from Laramie to North Park. When he was only twelve years old he took 1,200 head of sheep on shares to Shallow Basin, near Medicine Bow, Wyoming, running the sheep alone, and saved 90 per cent of the lambs. This undertaking has subjected him to much exposure, however, from which illness resulted, and his father sold his western interests and took the family to Holland, where Joseph came under the care of a noted physician at Almalon. After rcovering his health he attended a business college and also was instructed by private tutors.

In 1883 Mr. Gussenhoven returned to the United States and embarked in an express and commission business at Hackensack, New Jersey, which he continued until 1886, returning then to Holland, where he completed his education. In 1889 he once more found himself in the United States, his destination being Minot, North Dakota, where he became bookkeeper in the First National Bank and later cashier in the Bank of Minot. In the banking field he proved thoroughly efficient and later became identified in the same field of activity on a larger scale.

In the spring of 1891 Mr. Gussenhoven came to Havre, Montana, and entered into the general mercantile business, which he continued until 1904, in the meanwhile becoming interested in numerous other important business enterprises. In 1893 he was the leader in the movement for open drilled wells. In 1897 he established the first steam laundry at Havre which later was burned. In 1902, in addition to his other business interests, he engaged in dealing in lumber and brick, continuing this line together until 1910, when he disposed of the brick feature, but continues his lumber business. Since away back in 1892 he has given attention to the development of coal, being the first man in this locality to foresee the coal wealth here. His mines are situated just outside the City of Havre, on the south bank of the Milk River, and the industry is one of vast importance. Mr. Gussenhoven also established a sawmill in what is now Lincoln County and operated it from 1904 to 1907. In 1912 he bought the Citizens National Bank of Havre, and served as its president until the press of business caused him to sell in 1913. Journalism has also claimed his attention and interest, and in 1914 he became the owner and publisher of the Hill County Beacon, the leading weekly newspaper of this section.

Mr. Gussenhoven was also one of the pioneers in the natural gas development of Havre, having been instrumental in putting down two wells. He secured a franchise from the City of Havre and piped the city at his personal expense.

On January 30, 1893, Mr. Gussenhoven was united in marriage to Miss Susan Munger, who was born at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. They have had the following children: Joseph J., Lloyd L., John A., Susan Pauline, Charles H., Adolph and Marguerite, twins, Marguerite, Helena and Eugene William. All survive with the exception of Marguerite (1) and Helena, both of whom died in infancy. The eldest son, Joseph J., married Ella Nelson. Lloyd L., who went to France as a member of the Eighty-Ninth Division Signal Corps, enlisting in the spring of 1918 with the American Expeditionary Force, was honorably discharged at Fort Douglas, Utah, after his return, but is still suffering from shell shock and gas exposure; a brave and gallant soldier who responded wherever duty called. John A., the second soldier son of Mr. Gussenhoven, entered the National Army at Havre, Montana, in the Coast Artillery service, was sent from Camp Lewis to Fort Stevens, then to Camp Houston and from there to Camp Dodge, Iowa, where, the armistice having been signed, he received his honorable discharge, with the rank of corporal. Susan Pauline, the oldest daughter, attended school at Havre until the age of fifteen years, then went to Holland and became a student in the Jerusalem Convent at Venray, five years later being graduated in the class of 1918. She is a young lady of solid education as well as many accomplishments, speaking four languages. She is bookkeeper and stenographer for her father. Charles H., the fourth son, attended school at Havre and from there went to Holland and spent five years in a famous school at Duivan, the Genbbels Institute, where he was graduated in 1918. He speaks four languages and is now a law student at Gonzaga University, Spokane, Washington. Adolph, the fifth son, was also a student in the above institution of learning in Holland. He speaks four languages. After five years of study he is now a student in Saint Anthony's Seminary at Santa Barbara, California, preparing for the priesthood. Marguerite, the second surviving daughter, attended school at Havre, then spent five years in the Jerusalem Convent at Venray, Holland, reaching home in August, 1918. She speaks four languages. Joseph J. Gussenhoven, Lloyd L. Gussenhoven and John Gussenhoven attended St. Joseph Academy at Cascade, Montana, and Lloyd L. also went to Columbia University, Portland, Oregon, for two years. Mr. Gussenhoven and his family are faithful Catholics and largely through his efforts the Jesuits succeeded in retaining the Havre diocese. In his political affiliation Mr. Gussenhoven has always been a democrat, as was his honored father. Fraternally he is identified with Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Catholic Order of Foresters and the Knights of Columbus. For over a quarter of a century Mr. Gussenhoven has been foremost in championing movements for the general welfare and has materially aided in the advancement of social, educational and moral interests.

Mr. Gussenhoven was also one of the pioneers in the natural gas development of Hovne, having been instrumental in putting down two wells. He secured a franchise from the City of Hovne and piped the city at his personal expense.

Howard M. Cosier. In 1881 a young man of twenty, with about a year's experience in a country store back in New Jersey, arrived at the "Poplar Creek Agency" of Fort Peck Indian Reservation and began work at the trading post. It was a complete transition from the settled and humdrum routine of the Atlantic coast to the typical Far West pictured in romance and story, among Indians more or less wild, in a rude community where soldiers and Government employes were practically the only white men.

Of the white men who were in that locality in that year Howard M. Cosier is one of the few left, and might assert a strong claim to being one of the oldest residents. He is certainly a pioneer citizen of Poplar, and through all the years has been one of its most active citizens in business and civic affairs.

Mr. Cosier was born in Cumberland County, New Jersey, March 21, 1861. His great-grandfather, Benjamin Cosier, came from England and founded his family in New Jersey, and later was in the American army during the Revolutionary war. He was a gunsmith and blacksmith and died in Down Township at the age of 106. His sons were Jonathan and Benjamin. Jonathan Cosier, grandfather of the Poplar business man, was born in New Jersey and spent his life there as a farmer and blacksmith. He married Mary Cantrell. Their children to reach mature years were: Valentine, Phenix, William, Mary, who became the wife of Thomas Bell, and George. George was a Union soldier in the Civil war and was made first corporal of his company because he was the tallest man of the company.

Phenix Cosier, father of Howard M., was born in New Jersey, was a carpenter by trade, and served for some years as a freeholder in Cumberland County. He was affiliated with the Odd Fellows and was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in August, 1912. He married in Cumberland County Phebe Gandy, who was born at Philadelphia March 11, 1835, and is still living at Cedarville, New Jersey, at the age of eighty-five. She was one of the ten children of her parents, Enos S. and Abigail (Ogden) Gandy, both of old families of the Atlantic Coast states. She attended school in Philadelphia to the age of thirteen, when her parents moved to New Jersey, and she grew up at Cedarville.

Howard M. Cosier was the only child of his parents and spent his early life in the country town of Cedarville, attending public schools there and a boarding school at Bridgeton. He graduated in 1880, and the following year worked in a country store and gained a training that was of value to him when he came West.

In 1881 the superintendent of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation was Maj. N. S. Porter. The few buildings on the site comprised the agent's residence, the Government offices, a few log cabins occupied by Government employes, the store of the Indian trader, all built of Missouri logs except the residence of the agent and the Government offices. The military post comprised a full quota of log buildings, and when the post was abandoned the site was occupied by the Indian schools, which still stand there.

Mr. Cosier went to work in the Indian trading store of G. H. Fairchild & Company, and continued with them and their successors and eventually became Indian trader, and thus from one thing to another his interests and residence have become permanent. He continued business under his individual name until in April, 1914, when he consolidated his store with that of Mr. Patch, making the present Cosier-Patch Company one of the largest general mercantile organizations in this section of Montana. Mr. Cosier is president of the company.

There have been few business or civic enterprises put on foot at Poplar with which his name has not been associated in some way. With his associates he established the Traders State Bank at Poplar in 1909, and has been its president from the beginning. The bank was chartered with a capital of $25,000, and while the capital has remained the same a surplus of $10,000 has accrued. After the first two years the bank began paying dividends, and missed only the year 1918. Its deposits have reached $227,000, notwithstanding several adverse years. The first officers were: Mr. Cosier; R. E. Patch, vice president, and J. C. Gregory, cashier, and the only change in the personnel of management is in the office of cashier.

Mr. Cosier is secretary and a director of the Poplar Lumber & Implement Company, is secretary of the Pioneer Auto Company, and a director in the Walker Opera House Company and the Gateway Hotel Company. He has been Poplar's only mayor, serving since the town was incorporated in 1916. During his administration a water and sewer system has been installed, sidewalks ordered, and other municipal matters carefully handled. Mr. Cosier served as postmaster of Poplar for almost twenty-six years, beginning in December, 1889. His encouragement has also been given to the Commercial Club of Poplar. As a young man he was a democrat, and continued with that party until the Cleveland administration made the wool industry in Montana unpopular. As he was then interested in the sheep business he turned to the party of protection and has since been a republican. He has frequently served as a delegate to conventions, including two state conventions. Mr. Cosier is a charter member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Poplar, also a charter member of Northern Light Lodge No. 75, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and served as its second master. He is also a Royal Arch Mason, a member of Livingston Consistory of the Scottish Rite and of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. During the World war he was chairman of the four-minute men of the locality, also a committee man on the bond drives. His family are believers in church work, and Mrs. Cosier and the daughters are Presbyterians.

Howard M. Cosier and Miss Gertrude Cobb were married at Cedarville, New Jersey, December 27, 1893. They had grown up as children in that community. Mrs. Cosier was born at Camden, New Jersey, March 1, 1863, daughter of Josiah M. and Harriet S. (Corson) Cobb, also natives of New Jersey. Her father, Captain Cobb, went to sea early and sailed the first three-masted schooner across the Atlantic. He followed the sea for about a quarter of a century and was a typical "old salt." When he left the water he became a farmer at Cedarville, and died there in 1893, when about eighty years of age, being survived several years by his widow. The Cobb children to grow to mature years were: Laura, wife of Larrison Sutts, of Bradley Beach, New Jersey; Mary, who became the wife of Thomas Miller and died at Cedarville; Harry, a member of the Senate police force in the Capitol at Washington; Mrs. Cosier; Frank, of Cedarville; and Sarah, wife of William D. Moore, of Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. Cosier have two daughters: Phebe, named for her grandmother, is the wife of Wade J. Hubbell, postmaster of Poplar; and Dorothy is a member of the class of 1921 in the Ward-Belmont Seminary at Nashville, Tennessee.

Ralph E. Patch is one of the very early settlers of Poplar, having come here in 1889, before the townsite was set off from the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. He was in the Government service, later invested the capital he had earned by his work in merchandising, and is one of the oldest of local business men and an active factor in the well known general mercantile house of Cosier-Patch Company.

Mr. Patch was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, October 8, 1869. The Patch family were colonial settlers in New York State, and some of the family were soldiers in the Revolutionary war. Elijah Patch, grandfather of the Poplar business man, was a native of New York and a very early pioneer in the Territory of Wisconsin. He located in Grant County when Cassville was the territorial capital. His children were: Louisa, who became the wife of Judge Murdock and lives at Watertown, South Dakota; Edward, father of Ralph E.; Walter, who spent his last years in Galveston, Texas; Lewis, who died in Colorado; Gibson, of Los Angeles; Marian, who became the wife of R. P. Russell and died in Minneapolis.

Edward Patch, father of Ralph E., was born near Niagara Falls, New York, in 1826, and was a boy when he went with the family to Wisconsin. Later the Patch family moved to Minneapolis when the locality of that city was known only as St. Anthony's Falls. Not a house had yet been built in Minneapolis. Miss Marian Patch, sister of Edward, was the first white woman married in Minneapolis, and her child was the second white child born in the city. After the Civil war Edward Patch returned to Grant County, Wisconsin, and married there Miss Harriet Patch, daughter of Henry Patch, but not related unless remotely. Patch's Grove in Wisconsin was named in honor of Henry Patch. Edward Patch again moved to Minneapolis in 1875 and spent another term of years there, but passed his last days in Vancouver, Washington, where he died in June, 1914. His wife had died in 1871.

Edward Patch was in Minnesota during the Civil war period. He entered the volunteer forces under General Sibley, participated in the war against the Sioux Indians, and was captain of a company under Sibley in the expedition into the Dakota country. Edward Patch followed a mechanical trade for a number of years, until appointed postmaster at Patch Grove. He had had a postoffice experience before that as the second postmaster of Minneapolis. He was a democrat, and was appointed postmaster of Patch Grove when Mr. Cleveland was first elected president. He and his wife had the following children: Harry, of Grant County, Wisconsin; Emily, wife of William Morse, of Vancouver, Washington; Ion, of Minneapolis; Marion, of Patch Grove; Roswell, of Vancouver; Frances, wife of Oscar Ludlum, of Vancouver; Minnesota, who became the wife of John Sinclair and died at Los Angeles; James, who died off the Cape of Good Hope while sailing from England to San Francisco; Jessie, a teacher in the public schools of Red Wing, Minnesota; Walter, who died at Culbertson, Montana; and Ralph Ernest. For his second wife Edward Patch married Mrs. Louise (Dunbar) Patch, widow of his first father-in-law.

Ralph E. Patch was about six years of age when his parents moved from Patch Grove to Minneapolis and he finished his education in the city schools there. With his brother he learned the carpenter's trade, and on coming west found his first work at Fort Keogh, Miles City, in 1886. Later he helped his brother finish the contract on the Laurel and Red Lodge branch of railroad, constructing water tanks, depots and stations.

Then, in 1889, in the month of November, he identified himself with the Poplar locality, being then a young man of twenty. He became a carpenter on the reservation and served about eight years, helping put up the reservation buildings. Leaving the bench and discarding the saw and hammer, with what he had been able to save from his trade he established himself in general merchandising as an Indian trader and successor of James McDonald. Mr. Patch sold goods at Poplar as an individual for seventeen years, and supplied not only the local demands of the reservation but many of the ranch outfits then located in that section of eastern Montana. In 1915 he consolidated his business with that of Howard M. Cosier, organizing the Cosier-Patch Company, which is one of the chief firms of general merchants in eastern Montana, dealing in general merchandise, furniture, an undertaking department and a stock of hardware. Mr. Cosier is president of the company, Mr. Patch vice president, and Mr. Walker is secretary.

Mr. Patch is also a partner in the Poplar Lumber and Implement Company and is vice president of the Traders State Bank of Poplar, is president of the Pioneer Auto Company of Poplar, and vice president of the Gateway Hotel Company.

Mr. Patch has exercised a dependable independence in politics. His first presidential vote went to Grover Cleveland. He never supported Mr. Bryan in any of his campaigns, nor did he ever give a vote to Colonel Roosevelt. Both he and his wife supported Mr. Wilson. His first official service was as an alderman of Poplar. He was named one of the first Board of County Commissioners in the bill which created Roosevelt County, and is filling that office with Commissioners Frank Weinrich and J. H. Anderson. The board has handled the routine matters involved in instituting the Government of the new county and also called an election for a two hundred thousand dollar bond issue for the purpose of building modern highways. Mr. Patch is an Odd Fellow, joined the Masons at Glasgow, and is affiliated with Livinston Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, while Mrs. Patch is a member of Aurora Chapter of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Patch was chairman of the local branch of the Red Cross, chairman of the ladies committees in all the loan drives, and Mr. Patch was chairman of the Thrift Stamp campaign. Even Mr. Patch helped with some of the knitting carried on in the Patch home during the war.

At Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, March 4, 1899, Mr. Patch married Miss Edna E. Hicklin. She was born at Patch Grove January 8, 1874. Her father, James Hicklin, was born at Cassville, the old Wisconsin capital, of Kentucky parentage, and spent his life as a farmer and died at Prairie du Chien in 1916, at the age of eighty-seven. He was a democrat. Mrs. Patch's mother was Abigail Beers, who was born near Mount Hope, Wisconsin, and was drowned at Lake Travis in that state in September, 1885. Mrs. Patch is the second of three children, the oldest, Ethaline, dying unmarried and her brother, Moses, is a resident of Prairie du Chien. Mrs. Patch finished her education in Patch Grove and when she married she came to Poplar to preside over the modest establishment of her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Patch have a son and daughter. The son is James Edward, connected with the Cosier-Patch Company. The daughter, "Pete," has just entered the high school at Poplar.

CHRIS JENSEN. The entire career of Chris Jensen at Poplar has been in the nature of a personal service rendered to the entire community. He is known to everyone personally or through his work and product, and any community might congratulate itself on the presence of such a citizen as he.

He was born at Winona, Minnesota, October 4, 1882. His father, Thorn Jensen, was a native of Denmark, came to the United States as a young man and spent his brief life as a farmer in Minnesota and Iowa. He died at Humboldt in the latter state before he was forty years of age. His wife was Annie Nelson, a native of Denmark, who is now Mrs. Suffler of Sanish, North Dakota. Thorn Jensen and wife had four children: Carrie, wife of Fred Turner, of Poplar, Montana; Peter, who died unmarried at Humboldt, Iowa; Chris; and Eddie, who died in young manhood at St. Paul.

Chris Jensen grew up at St. Paul, Minnesota, acquired his education in the graded schools there, and as a boy went to work in a local hotel. That gave him a valuable training in a business that he has largely followed ever since. He was employed by J. B. Herman, proprietor of the Minnesota Home, until he left St. Paul at the age of twenty-three. Just before leaving the city he had himself acquired the proprietorship of the Minnesota Home, but after a single day accepted an opportunity to sell out his equity for $2,300, and at once took the money and gave possession. With the capital he thus acquired he engaged in business for himself as a retail liquor man at White Bear Lake, Minnesota, and remained there until he came to Poplar in February, 1910.

On coming to Montana Mr. Jensen combined a restaurant and bakery business, a line with which he was thoroughly familiar from his business experience. His bakery was the first established on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. The superintendent of the reservation came to him and said that "he had a lot of nerve to come here and engage in a business after having spent years in the liquor business." But he persevered in spite of efforts to discourage him and has never been disappointed as to the popularity of his establishment. He founded and opened the Poplar Restaurant and Bakery, and for ten years has made that one of the best appreciated of local establishments. At the present time his bakery supplies most of the local population with the staff of life, and turns out a varied product of bread, cakes, pies, doughnuts and other baked goods. For a time his products were shipped to outlying points, but in recent years the home demand consumes the entire output.

The phrase "cleanliness is next to godliness" is peculiarly applicable to Chris Jensen. He is a man of system and order as well as the personification of neatness. His business house reflects the man himself in these attributes, and this quality alone is a sound reason for the steady patronage that has rewarded Mr. Jensen's efforts in every line. It has advertised his business and has also served as an invaluable asset of the town.

Other business matters have commanded his time and attention. He recognized an opening for a movie theater, and built at Poplar a house with a seating capacity of 315, dedicating it as the Glacier Theater, which he opened in 1914. The public showed its appreciation of the enterprise, and the venture has well rewarded it and the investment of the owner. The house is on the "high circuit" and gets all the popular reels, with a show every night. Mr. Jensen is always present to welcome the patrons of the show. He also bought and remodeled a building and operated another picture show at Wolf Point, along the same lines as his house at Poplar. That was the first moving picture show or theater in that town. After three years he sold the Wolf Point Theater.

When the First National Bank was organized at Poplar Mr. Jensen took some of the stock and is a director. He is president of the Roosevelt County Fair Association, the fair grounds being located at Poplar where the Sheridan County fairs were held before the creation of Roosevelt County. These annual fairs are largely of an agricultural character and have done much to inspire and stimulate better agriculture. Mr. Jensen is also a member of the Poplar City Council, and has represented the First Ward since the time it was incorporated. He is a member of the Commercial Club.

Chris Jensen and Elda Quitmeyer were married at St. Paul, April 9, 1904. She was born in Minnesota. Her father, Otto Quitmeyer, is a native of Germany and is now a farmer at Parker's Prairie, Minnesota. Mrs. Jensen is one of a family of five sons and three daughters, and received a substantial education in public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Jensen lost their only child, Otto, at the age of three weeks.

CAPT. JAMES J. GRANT, who died December 2, 1919, was one of the venerable pioneers who could tell the story of the wolf and other wild animals and the Indians and the far-flung wildernesses of Montana. Captain Grant was a man whom to know was to honor and accord the highest esteem, for his life was exemplary and resulted in good to those with whom he had been associated. The history of Montana and that of his own career are pretty much one and the same, being intertwined indissolubly, for he came here many years ago and during the subsequent period of development he played an important part. When he cast his lot here he found a wide-stretching wilderness, still the domain of savage and blood-thirsty Indians. But, being a man of courage and resource, he never swerved aside from tasks, no matter how arduous or dangerous, if he believed it in the line of duty.

James J. Grant was born in Ireland, from which country has come so much of the bone and sinew of this republic, and was educated in the schools of his home neighborhood. At the age of sixteen years he came to the United States, his ambition out-reaching the limited opportunities of his home country. From the time he set foot on American soil he was heart and soul an American. During the dark and troublous days of the Civil war he stood courageously in defense of the Union and offered his life, if need be, that the country's integrity might be preserved. Captain Grant was interested in military matters and a prized possession was his commission as captain of Company C, First Regiment of Montana National Guard, the commission being dated August 18, 1886, and signed by Governor Samuel T. Hauser. From the time Captain Grant came to Montana until the weight of years compelled his retirement from the more active duties of life, he was known as one of the most public-spirited and active men in the state. In his younger days, before the state was organized and the Territorial Government was not as stern in its control of internal affairs as it might have been, it was such men as Captain Grant who bravely took a stand for law and order and enforced it too. In the days when the white settlements were widely scattered, and Indian scares were frequent, it required courage of a high order for the few men who were here to set out in pursuit of the red men and chastise them for their misdeeds. The first Indian raid after Captain Grant came to Montana was one in which Lalla Sac and Perry Paul, two noted Indian desperadoes who had killed and robbed three prospectors, were caught and brought to justice, their execution by hanging occurring at Missoula, which at that time was the county seat of Missoula County, which reached to the Canadian line. But it was just such men as these who eventually made Montana a safe place for a man to settle in. Captain Grant occupied many important official positions during those early days, including game warden, deputy sheriff and deputy United States marshal, as well as captain of police court in Butte, these official positions covering a number of the most active years of his life—years filled with more "thrills" than one finds in the up-to-date western drama or movie today. He was an inveterate hater of a bad Indian and when reports came in of an Indian raid he was generally the first to organize a party for pursuit. At one time after one of these incursions, a public meeting was held at Egan, at which the speaker said, "every man having a good horse and gun should go; those who have not remain and care for the women and children." Mrs. Grant turned to her husband and said, "you can't go, for you have neither good horse nor gun." He replied, "never mind; you go home with Preston and get a good night's rest." She did so, and next morning was startled to see a neighbor come in leading her white pony. Mrs. Grant asked about her husband, when the neighbor replied, "O, he borrowed my horse and stole a better gun than his from a friend and has gone after Indians." She afterwards said to him, "I believe you would go after Indians if you had only a cow to ride," to which he replied, "Sure, I would go just the same."

Most of Captain Grant's active business life in Montana was spent as a hotel keeper, in which capacity he was at different times a resident of Butte, Anaconda and other places, and wherever he was located he was liberally patronized, for the true western spirit of hospitality always characterized his hotels. His persistent industry, good management and courteous treatment was the secret of the success which attended his efforts.

Capt. James J. Grant was married to Mary Sullivan, who also was a native of Ireland, the daughter of Michael and Nellie Sullivan. She was brought to the United States by an aunt when only six years of age, she having been orphaned by the death of her mother when she was four years old. She met Mr. Grant at Pioche, Nevada, where he was employed as superintendent of a mine, and there they were married, afterwards moving to Butte, Montana. To their union were born five children, namely: James, who completed his education in All Hollows College at Salt Lake, and who is now an electrician in Butte, married Julia O'Neil and they have a son, Raymond. William, who is a graduate of a college in Dubuque, Iowa, and operates a ranch in Flathead County, married Ethel Spillman, and they have two children, Harold and Mary Margaret. Charles, who is a graduate of the University of Montana, at Missoula, is engaged in the real estate business at Whitefish and is also serving as judge of the police court there; married Geraldine O'Hara, a native of Hamilton, Montana, and a graduate of the University of Montana. Fred, who is an electrician at Butte, volunteered in the service of his country at the age of eighteen years, going into the navy. He was assigned to the United States steamship Huntington on which he crossed the Atlantic twenty-four times in convoy service. May, who is a student in the Montana State University, at Missoula, is at the present time teaching in a Sisters' school at Kalispell.

Politically Captain Grant gave his active support to the democratic party. The captain and his wife were devout members of the Roman Catholic Church, to which they gave generously of their means. The captain enjoyed a large and varied acquaintance during his years of residence in the West, and one friend of whom he was particularly fond and whom he remembers with the kindest of feelings was General Custer, with whom he made several personal scouts after the troublesome red men.

In early days Captain Grant pre-empted a tract of land in Flathead Valley, and it is now one of the choice farms of that section. Mrs. Grant is living in Kalispell, where Captain Grant quietly enjoyed the rest which his years of activity and toil richly entitled him to.

Charles R. Trinder came into Eastern Montana twenty years ago with a horse outfit, had an active part as a range man and independent rancher for a number of years, but is now engaged in business as the C. R. Trinder Company, real estate, loans and mortgages at Poplar.

Mr. Trinder was born at LeBeau, South Dakota, May 18, 1884, son of Thomas and Hattie (Locke) Trinder, both natives of Onondaga County, New York. His father was born in 1860, was married there, and was an early settler around LeBeau, South Dakota, where he homesteaded, took a tree claim and preemption, and developed a large ranch by the purchase of other lands. While he went back to New York, he was more or less actively identified with that region for nearly twenty years. He is now living retired at Steele, North Dakota. His wife died near Syracuse, New York, in 1890. There were two children, Charles R. and Ida, wife of Isaac Crouse of Jamestown, North Dakota.

Charles R. Trinder finished his schooling in a high school at Syracuse, New York, having grown up in that city from the age of five years. At thirteen he returned to South Dakota, lived at LeBeau, and at the age of sixteen went to work as a cowboy with the "Flying V" outfit near Sturgis, South Dakota. After two years he went to Fort Yates and formed a connection with Al Honstain, who in 1900 commissioned him to drive a bunch of horses from Fort Yates, South Dakota, to the mouth of the Yellowstone River. The following winter he held the band on the range at Dorr. After leaving the Honstain outfit he worked as a range hand for eight years with the Diamond outfit of Culbertson, the Charley Creek Pool and the "CK" outfit of Oswego. This was the wage earning period of his life, and he then engaged in ranching for himself south of Poplar, where he homesteaded, making his homestead the nucleus of a ranch. He established a Road Ranch, founded the hamlet of Arthur, laying off a townsite, and was both a dealer and grazer of cattle and horses on the range. His brand was "TY" on the jaw. He acquired title to a section of land which has now been developed as a farming proposition. Mr. Trinder has had some successful experience in the growing of alfalfa in the bottom lands of his locality.

He gave up his personal supervision of the ranch and farm in 1914 and moving to Poplar engaged in the real estate and loan business as the C. R. Trinder Company. He is also a stockholder in the First National Bank of Poplar, is president of the First National Bank of Brockton, and is a dealer in the Hupmobile, Maxwell and Chalmers cars, with territory from Culbertson to Wolf Point on the west and from Scobey to Richey on the south.

In 1915 Mr. Trinder erected a substantial modern home, a story and a half house of bungalow outlines. He also built the office for his business, a stucco and concrete structure with basement, four rooms, and upper and lower vaults. Mr. Trinder has been a republican voter since he attained his majority and is a charter member of Poplar Lodge No. 125, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a working citizen at Poplar for raising funds for the prosecution of the war and supporting other war auxiliary work. At Poplar in April, 1909, he married Miss Josephine Proctor, who was born in Edmonton, Canada, in November, 1892, one of the thirteen children of Peter and Anna (Knoir) Proctor. Her father was a native of Indiana and her mother of Montana. Her parents returned to Montana when she was a child and she grew up and received her education at Poplar. Mr. and Mrs. Trinder have four children, Thomas, Alice, Claude and Howard.

Alexander Ross. Those who have never had the experience cannot in any measurable way understand what it means to develop a farm out of a wilderness. Many have taken a long chance in attempting it, and that some have succeeded even beyond their earliest hopes gives proof that courage, perseverance and thrift are the factors that eventually bring prosperity. One who has proved the possession of these sturdy qualities is Alexander Ross, who came many years ago to Blaine County and today is not only a man of substantial fortune, but one of the representative, prominent and useful citizens.

Alexander Ross was born at St. Peter in Nova Scotia, December 22, 1861, the oldest of seven children born to Finley and Isabella (McLennan) Ross. Both parents of Mr. Ross were born in Nova Scotia, the father in 1825 and the mother on August 20, 1837. They were married in Nova Scotia on December 20, 1860, and the father died there in 1907, having been a farmer all his life. He was a man of upright life and from youth belonged to the Presbyterian Church.

In the public schools Alexander Ross acquired educational training and made himself useful to his father on the home farm until about twenty years old, then came to the United States and learned the carpenter's trade in the City of Boston, Massachusetts. From there he journeyed westward to Sioux City, Iowa, where he worked at his trade for two years, in the spring of 1884 coming to Butte, Montana, the rush of settlers in that year offering him fine opportunity in his trade, as people had to be housed. He continued there as a carpenter until in the summer of 1889, when he located on Government land in Chouteau, now Blaine, County. He had already been interested in the cattle business, buying his first bunch in the fall of 1886, but lost on that venture on account of the unprecedented cold that prevailed in the winter of 1886-7, during which period many range cattle died and stock loss was general. Since locating on his homestead Mr. Ross has made the raising of cattle his main business, although for five years he also raised sheep, selling his sheep in 1916. He now owns 4,000 acres of land and keeps from 300 to 500 head of cattle. In 1890 he built his comfortable farmhouse, covering it with the first shingled roof in the Bear Paw Mountain neighborhood, and it was an object of interest for many miles around.

On April 23, 1902, Alexander Ross was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Ross, who was born at Alexandria, Ontario, Canada, and died in Montana November 17, 1917. Her loss to family and friends cannot be estimated. Their four children survive, namely: Finley G., who resides on the home ranch, married Rosella Faber; Thomas A., who enlisted in an artillery regiment in August, 1918, for service in the great war, received training at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, was commissioned second lieutenant and after the signing of the armistice was honorably discharged; Isabella, who is attending school at Los Angeles, California; and William D., who is at home. Another member of the household is the beloved mother of Mr. Ross, who came to Montana in 1908. Time has touched her kindly, and genuine hospitality, friendly interest and unusual competency mark her manner and speech.

During his long residence in the county Mr. Ross, as a public-spirited citizen, has taken part in worthy enterprises looking to its development and at times has served faithfully in public office. In November, 1906, he was elected a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Chouteau County, and had much to do with important county measures at that time. He has always been deeply concerned in the public schools and has been clerk of the school board in his district since its organization. In political sentiment he has always been an outspoken republican. His fraternal connections are with Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and the Modern Woodmen.

GUSTAV A. LUNDEEN, head of the Lundeen Mercantile Company of Poplar, has made a vigorous use of the time and opportunities of his brief career, and has rapidly forged to the front since coming to Montana six years ago.

He was born at Fergus Falls, Minnesota, November 2, 1885. His father, Anton Lundeen, was a native of Sweden, born in 1860, and came to Minnesota in 1881, accompanied by his brother Magnus. The two located near Fergus Falls on wild and new land, the brother entering a homestead and Anton purchasing railroad land. These properties were developed into farms and Anton is still a resident on the old homestead. He had no resources but his labor when he came here, and his original home was a log house of liberal dimensions. In it he began housekeeping and his children were born there. Later as he made money from the soil he removed the old landmark and erected a convenient and modern residence, more in keeping with the times. His business has been stock and grain raising, and his prosperity has enabled him to increase his holdings to 240 acres. He has been an active and effective factor in community affairs, did good work for the local schools and for years was a road commissioner. He took out citizenship papers at an early date and has been a republican. A Lutheran Church member, he early sold a part of his land for church purposes.

Anton Lundeen married Annie Lystrom, who was born in Sweden in 1863, a daughter of Fred Lystrom, a Swedish farmer, and was brought to the United States and to Minnesota when a girl of eight years. Anton Lundeen and wife had the following children: Gustav and Helmer, twin brothers, the latter a farmer at Fergus Falls; Hulda, wife of Christian Borgus, a farmer at Fergus Falls; Alfred, a farmer in the same locality; Alvida, wife of John Peterson, at Fergus Falls; and Leonard, who is the only one of the children still at home.

Gustav A. Lundeen acquired a district school education at Fergus Falls, and also took an academic and commercial school course there. At Superior, Wisconsin, he pursued the study of banking and commercial law, and when that was completed he came west to Bainville, Montana, in 1914. At Bainville he entered the service of John Lundquist, head of the Lundquist Mercantile Company. He was with that firm until 1917 as head of the credit department and in charge of office details. He left Bainville and went to Poplar to take charge of the firm's business in the latter town, and at that time was a stockholder in the company. In the spring of 1917 Mr. Lundeen established a business of his own under the name of the Lundeen Mercantile Company, and in three years has been able to see his affairs grow and prosper to a notable extent.

He is also a stockholder and director of the First National Bank of Poplar. He has served three years as a member of the council, is independent in local politics, and is a republican in national affairs. At Poplar he has been affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows, and during the World war did his part as a private citizen in behalf of patriotic movements. Mr. Lundeen has built at Poplar a modern eight-room stucco home.

At Bainville he married Miss Mabel Toll. She was born at Winthrop, Minnesota, August 30, 1887, daughter of John and Emma (Lundquist) Toll, who were Swedish people. Her mother was a daughter of Peter Lundquist. Mrs. Toll had a number of brothers and sisters, one of them being John Lundquist, the Bainville merchant and business man. Mrs. Lundeen has two sisters: Effie and Myrtle, the former a teacher at Portland, Oregon, and the latter a sales clerk with the Lundeen Mercantile Company. Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lundeen, Margaret, born in 1915, and Janet, born in 1919.

MRS. ELIZABETH CARTER, who is the fine arts teacher in the Butte City schools, is a real teacher, a cultured woman who since the loss of her husband has devoted heart and hand to training and educating the artistic instincts.

She was born at Treves, Germany, daughter of Johann and Catherine (Lorscheter) Habermann, being fifth in their family of eight children. She was only one year old when her parents came to America and settled at Sioux City, Iowa, where she was reared and educated in the public schools. She later graduated from the schools of Cassville, Grant County, Wisconsin. In 1907 she became the wife of James Edward Carter, a native of Cartersville, Kentucky, the old family home, and a son of Rev. Alonzo Carter. James E. Carter was an employe of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with headquarters at LaCrosse, Wisconsin. November 24, 1908, while on duty, he met his death in a railroad collision. Thus the happy romance of a little more than a year was ended and Mrs. Carter returned to her father's home in Cassville. Soon afterward she entered the Normal School at LaCrosse, graduating in June, 1911, and in June, 1912, entered the Chicago Art School, where she specialized in art and music and subsequently earned also a post-graduate diploma.

Mrs. Carter has filled in a most satisfactory manner the following responsible positions: Music and art supervisor at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin; music and art supervisor at Mandan, North Dakota; music and art teacher in the Flathead County High School at Kalispell; and fine arts teacher of the Butte City schools. One comment on her work is the following written by the superintendent of Mandan: "Mrs. Carter has rare tact and conducts her work without friction or complaint. She is the possessor of the finest kind of character and is a good and useful member of any community. She possesses that peculiar faculty of getting things done and on time."

A lecturer at Farmers Short Course after visiting Kalispell wrote the following for the Portland Oregonian: "The art department in charge of Mrs. Carter was a busy place from two to five-thirty. The interest manifested in basket weaving was far in excess of the expectation of the management. Mothers are learning the art in order to be able to teach their children; teachers are learning in order to be able to give it to their pupils; and men are learning it in order to become convinced that some of the beautiful baskets on display at the high school art room were actually made by the students and not by Indians on the reservation. Even the lecturers are using their spare time making baskets to take home to their families."

Mrs. Carter enjoys a large circle of friends, among whom she is best known as Betty Carter. Her mother died in 1912 and her father in 1917.

Recently, when Col. A. A. White of Kalispell donated sixteen acres of land on the shore of Flathead Lake for "The Mary Grove Summer Home of the Y. W. C. A. of America," he appointed Betty Carter secretary and treasurer of the Home, with Mary Grove as president.

C. W. Jerome is editor and proprietor of the Poplar Standard, and has been a resident of Montana since 1915. He is also interested in two other weekly papers in Roosevelt County, the Fort Peck Farmer and the Roosevelt County Review. He is secretary of the Roosevelt County Republican Committee.

Hugh C. Walker has helped to make practically all the history of the Town of Poplar. He was one of the earliest of its permanent residents, and has been there as a business man and civic leader for over thirty years.

Mr. Walker is a Virginian by birth and ancestry. He was born in the City of Richmond September 28, 1860. His grandfather, Samuel Walker, was also a native Virginian, and spent his life as a planter in Appomattox County. He had numerous slaves, but lost them all during the war. He married a Miss Walton. Their children were: Walton, Mrs. Bettie Jones, Mrs. H. D. LeGrand, Edmund, Mrs. Jennie Babcock, Harrison, Isaac W., Nannie, Samuel, Mrs. Fannie Withers and Harvey, who lost his life while a Confederate soldier. All the sons except Samuel were in the Confederate army.

The father of the Poplar business man was Isaac W. Walker, who was born in Appomattox County on his father's plantation, acquired his education in the field schools of his home locality, and as a young man removed to Richmond, was trained in a broker's office, and engaged in that business for himself. During the war he entered the Confederate army as a member of the Ambulance Corps, and he also served as deputy sheriff of Enrico County. After the war he was a commercial traveler for a Baltimore house for several years, and died while still on the road. He was a democrat, a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason, and late in life became affiliated with the Episcopal Church. He married Mrs. Catherine Taliaferro. Her father was Maj. Thomas W. Doswell, of a noted racing family of Virginia. She was born at Whitehall, Virginia, and surviving her husband thirty-five years died at Poplar in 1918 at the age of ninety. Her children were: Doswell, who died at Poplar, Montana, leaving a family in Greenville, Mississippi; Dudley L., deceased; and Hugh C.

Hugh C. Walker was reared in a period when all the South was depressed by poverty. He attended private schools, the Bethel Military Academy, and finished his education in the Virginia Military Institute. The first work he did after leaving school was as waterboy for Col. C. E. Cutshaw, city engineer and contractor of having work done for the city by convict labor from the penitentiary. For a time he also worked in the city engineer's office at Richmond. The last service he did in Virginia was as station agent at Walker's Ford for the Richmond and Allegheny Railway Company. That company ordered him to new duties as agent at Lynchburg, but about that time he was induced by Minston Brothers, railway construction contractors, to come west.

This firm was J. S. Winston & Company, which deserves some particular notice at this point because of its pioneer interests in Montana. J. S. Winston, the head of the company, was a Virginian and became identified with railroad building in company with General Rosser, chief engineer of the Northern Pacific Railway. Hugh C. Walker joined the Winston Company while it was handling a construction contract for the Canadian Pacific in Canada. He went to Western Canada in 1883, working as a team driver, and for four years was timekeeper and did office work in Minnesota, North Dakota and Canada.

While Mr. Winston was doing construction work for the Great Northern he also established stores along the line of the road. In that he was associated with W. B. Shaw, a native of Delaware, and a St. Paul business man. Mr. Shaw was suttler through the Montana country with General Miles' army and opened the first store at Bismarck, North Dakota. Shaw & Winston had the mail contract from Fort Buford to Bismarck, a pony express, and both were interested in a store at Poplar.

When Hugh C. Walker came into Montana he was an office man and timekeeper for J. S. Winston & Company. On reaching Poplar his duties were shifted from Construction Company timekeeper to a part in the local mercantile house. In 1888 Winston & Shaw bought the post store of Leighton, Jordan & Henderson at Poplar, whose manager at that time was P. W. Lewis. Mr. Walker became a clerk in the trading store, Mr. Shaw being Indian trader. Since the year 1888, therefore, Mr. Walker has been closely identified with Poplar and has had a great deal to do with the development of the town and locality.

At the incorporation of the firm of Cosier-Patch Mr. Walker became a stockholder, and is still office head of the business. However, he has found a number of other business, official and civic interests that are features of local history. He is manager and president of the Walker Opera House Company, also operates the Strand moving picture house in Poplar and is a stockholder of the Traders State Bank.

Governor Toole commissioned him the first notary public for this locality. The entire region was then in Dawson County, and without changing his residence Mr. Walker has lived successively in Dawson, Valley, Sheridan and Roosevelt counties. He was the first justice of the peace of Poplar, the first school clerk, and filled that office for fifteen years.

The first effort at education in Poplar was supported by the residents of the community through private subscription. The first schoolhouse was a small frame building, now used as a residence, and served until the educational needs brought forth an ample building standing upon a block of ground patented to the district by the Government, this being the first public school to be erected upon an Indian Reservation in the United States. In bringing this about Mr. Walker's service was a dominating factor.

Ole Lawit

The right to use a site on the reservation was secured through the efforts of Senator Carter, who put through a bill in Congress confirming a portion of the reservation to use for public school purposes. The senator's interest was secured through the appeal of his friend and supporter, Mr. Walker. After the site, 300 feet square, was acquired the district voted $10,000 for a two-story building. The upper floor has been used as a community center hall for local entertainments. Mr. Walker was made manager of the hall. The bonds were issued for twenty years, but the income from the hall after paying all expenses paid off the bonds in five years and left a surplus in the treasury.

Mr. Walker was the first state senator from Sheridan County, elected in 1913, but there being some confusion over the election he declined to present his credentials. He is a republican, has taken an active interest in convention work in the state, attending both state and local conventions, and through this association came to know personally the old leaders of both parties. Mr. Walker is now serving his sixth term as secretary of Northern Light Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

At Poplar May 10, 1890, he married Mrs. Annie (Aherns) Early, who was born at Ellendale, New York, in 1863. Mr. and Mrs. Walker were the parents of three children. Harry is embalmer and undertaker of the Cosier-Patch Company at Poplar. William Shaw, also with the Cosier-Patch Company, was a member of Company K of the 163rd Infantry, part of the old Second Montana Regiment, and saw service overseas in France. James died in October, 1918, when almost twenty-three years of age.

Ole Sanvik. The chief characteristics of Ole Sanvik, well known citizen of Havre, Hill County, who is now rendering efficient service as county assessor, are keenness of perception, an unflagging energy, honesty of purpose and motive and everyday common sense, which have enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also largely contribute to the moral and material advancement of the locality. He worked his way from a modest beginning, having landed from a foreign strand on our shores many years ago, "a youth to fortune and to fame unknown," step by step to a position of no mean importance. His individual efforts have been practically unaided, which fact renders him the more worthy of praise, for his life has been one of unceasing activity and the honorable and systematic methods he has employed have earned for him the commendation of all who know him.

Ole Sanvik was born on the twenty-ninth day of August, 1879, in Norway, the son of Ole and Katie (Haldoreson) Sanvik, both of whom were also natives of the Scandinavian Peninsula. The father was born in 1857 and is still living; the mother was born in 1856 and her death occurred in 1909. The subject of this sketch is the first born of their six children, four of whom are now living. Ole Sanvik, Sr., who was a stone mason by trade, came to the United States in 1883, locating in Juneau County, Wisconsin, where for about two years he worked at his trade. In 1892 he homesteaded a farm in Edmunds County, South Dakota, but afterwards moved to Ottertail County, Minnesota, where he bought a farm, to the operation of which he devoted himself until 1909, when his wife died. He then came to Montana and made his home with his son, Ole, for about a year, at the end of which period he returned to his home in Minnesota for about two years. He then sold that farm and returned to his old home in Norway, where he now lives. While in this country he gave his political support to the republican party.

Ole Sanvik was but four years of age when brought to the United States by his parents, and was reared on his father's farm. In South Dakota, he was permitted to attend school a total of forty-three days, and to reach this school the lad was compelled to walk seven miles each way, a total of fourteen miles a day. Besides this he got two terms of schooling in Minnesota. His first money was earned in herding cattle in South Dakota, for which the first year he received $4 a month and board, and the second year, $6 a month and board and shoes. In Minnesota he worked at clearing land and cutting logs and railway ties up to 1899, when he engaged in the mercantile business at Weggeland, a small inland town in Ottertail County, Minnesota, under the firm name of Weggeland & Sanvik. In 1909 Mr. Sanvik sold his mercantile interests and traveled as invoice taker for a Minneapolis firm who had stores in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota and South Dakota, following this work for about a year. He then came to Chouteau County, Montana, and homesteaded land in what is now Hill County, to the operation and improvement of which he devoted himself indefatigably, meeting with a gratifying degree of success as the legitimate result of his earnest efforts. In January, 1919, he entered the office of county assessor, which office he is still filling. Mr. Sanvik is progressive and up-to-date in his agricultural methods, the general appearance of his place indicating him to be a man of good taste and sound judgment. He raises all the crops common to this locality and is counted among the successful farmers of the county.

On March 29, 1907, Mr. Sanvik was married to Lena Berge, who was born in Ottertail County, Minnesota, and their union has been blessed in the birth of five children, Selmar, Orris, Agnes, Obert and Liejan.

Politically a nonpartisan, Mr. Sanvik has given close and intelligent attention to the public affairs of his adopted country and uses wise discrimination in his support of candidates for local offices. On November 5, 1918, he was elected to the office of county assessor, being the present incumbent of the office, and discharging the important duties of the position to the satisfaction of the citizens of the county. At the convention in Great Falls of the Nonpartisan League that was held on the 23d of June, 1920, Mr. Sanvik was indorsed for state auditor. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and religiously he is a member and liberal supporter of the Lutheran Church. Personally Mr. Sanvik is a man of fine qualities of character, genial and companionable, and enjoys a marked popularity among his acquaintances.

Senator Henry P. Lowe. While he has rendered distinguished service as the first state senator from Roosevelt County, Mr. Lowe is best known for the constructive work he has done in the development of the noted Mar Car Ranch, now famous all over the Northwest as a breeding center for registered Shorthorn cattle.

Senator Lowe, who was one of the early settlers of Northeastern Montana, and has been identified with the Culbertson locality since August, 1903, was born at Stordahl, near Trondjem, Norway, June 13, 1877, son of Peter and Carrie Lowe. When he was five years of age his parents came to the United States and settled at Canton, South Dakota. His father became a section foreman on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and finally moved his family to Sanborn, Iowa, where he was a yard crew foreman on the same road. He is still at Sanborn and is still in the employ of the Milwaukee Company.

His first wife died at Canton in 1885, the mother of: Eric, of Seattle; Henry P.; and Martin, of Hemmet, California. Peter Lowe married for his second wife Helen Jordahl, and has six children by that union.

Henry P. Lowe was educated in the common schools at Canton, South Dakota, and at Sanborn, Iowa. Most of his training from boyhood has been acquired on farms and livestock ranches. One of his early experiences was working on a stock farm in South Dakota where blooded horses were raised. In 1900 he went out to Washington, was a wage worker for a farmer near Davenport, spent the following year on two large ranches in the Harney Valley of Oregon, and was next at Sumter, Oregon, as stage driver to the mining camps in that vicinity.

When Mr. Lowe left Oregon and came to Montana he had no capital except the energy of his body and the dexterity of his hands. All the region around Culbertson in 1903 was a great livestock range, and only here and there did some improvement indicate the beginning of a change from nature's age-long sway. He came to this region primarily to get a home from the public lands as soon as they should be opened for settlement. However, his first work was as a hand on the ranch of the late S. P. Mitchell north of Bainville, where he spent two years. He filed on a homestead in the locality of Culbertson, and while proving it up spent his spare time working for Mr. Mitchell.

For the past fifteen years Mr. Lowe has been diligently doing the work of development that makes the Mar Car Ranch a notable achievement. He began farming at an early date and was encouraged by the good crops and bountiful harvests of the early years. The ranch embraces 1,000 acres in a single body. It is improved and adorned with permanent and substantial fixtures, including a group of barns, silos, residence of six rooms, laundry, bunkhouse, and other conveniences found on an ideal country place.

During the early years Mr. Lowe was satisfied with the fruits of the land itself. He began developing improved livestock in 1913, buying some registered males to run with his ordinary cattle breeds. By 1916 the ranch was cleared of all the mixed breeds and since then only pedigreed dams and males have been kept as the nucleus of the present numerous herd. A productive stage of the business was reached and the first advertised sale held at Williston, North Dakota, in 1918. Williston is the headquarters of the Missouri-Yellowstone Pure Bred Association, where all breeders of pure bred stock of whatever kind take their products for auction sale. The territory included in the association comprises the four northwest counties of North Dakota and the four northeast counties of Montana. At the initial sale in 1918 the Mar Car cattle averaged around $300 a head. The sale average of 1919 was $612.50 a head and the average price at the March sale in 1920 was $755 a head.

The Mar Car Ranch has placed exhibits of its cattle at the North Dakota State Fair at Grand Forks, the Interstate Fair at Fargo, the Montana State Fair at Helena, the Midland Empire Fair at Billings, and at numerous minor stock shows and fairs. These exhibits have called increasing attention to the new and growing breeding farm in Roosevelt County. Reporting the exhibits at the Montana State Fair the Breeders Gazette commented upon the Mar Car Ranch cattle as among the best shown and bred in the Northwest.

Senator Lowe was one of the incorporators of the second farmers elevator built in Montana, its location being at the way-station of Lanark in Roosevelt County. For eight years he was chairman of its Board of Directors. In other ways he has been deeply interested in solving the problems of direct marketing for farm and livestock products. In 1915 he organized the Farmers Mercantile Company of Culbertson, a corporation in which more than 100 farmers are stockholders. He served as its president until 1919, and is still on the board of directors. This is one of the highly successful co-operative concerns in Montana, and has fully met the expectations of the stockholders. The same could be said of the farmers elevator experiment, which has repaid more than ten times the original investment of its stockholders. Mr. Lowe is also a vice president and director of the First National Bank of Bainville, and has other financial interests at different points in Northeastern Montana.

Senator Lowe is a republican by profession as well as by early training. He cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley. The demands of practical business kept him out of politics so far as office holding was concerned until he was chosen a member of the Montana Senate in November, 1918. He succeeded Senator Fishbeck and became a member of the Sixteenth General Assembly. In the Senate he was chairman of the immigration committee, a member of the dairy, the agriculture, public buildings, mileage and per diem committees. He was also on the commission appointed to investigate the high cost of living, was author of the bill which created the Twentieth Judicial District, over which Judge Comer presides, and also author of the bill changing the methods of selecting juries in the new county, and was joint author of the grain grading and warehouse law. His name appeared in the bill creating Roosevelt County as its first state senator.

Like other leading citizens Senator Lowe gave much of his time to war work, and served as chairman of the seven in one drive for Sheridan County. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

December 27, 1909, at Minneapolis, he married Miss Edna Baer. She was born at Franklin, Illinois, a daughter of Daniel and Margaret (Breugh) Baer, both of German ancestry. Her father has spent his life as a farmer and is living at Robins, Iowa. Mrs. Lowe was born March 27, 1886, was educated in public schools in Iowa and Kansas, and as a young woman followed the profession of seamstress and dressmaker. She was third in a family of four daughters and one son. Her brother Frank Baer is cashier of the First National Bank of Bainville, Montana. Senator and Mrs. Lowe have three daughters, Marjorie, Caroline and Corinne.

HARRY M. SMITH came to Montana in 1909 and at once took an active and interested part in the mercantile affairs of Culbertson, where for several years past he has been manager of the Farmers Mercantile Company. Mr. Smith has spent his active lifetime, thirty-five years, in merchandising.

He was born near Bono in Lawrence County, Indiana, November 19, 1864, and is the only one of a large family of children to leave that state, where this branch of the Smith family has lived nearly a century. His grandfather, Christopher Smith, was a native of New York State, and went out to Indiana soon after it became a state, locating in the wooded region of Southern Indiana. He was a contractor and builder, and put up most of the early brick buildings of the locality. He also acquired Government land at the price of $1.25 an acre. Christopher Smith married Emily Fitzpatrick, and both were laid to rest in the Tolbert Cemetery in their old home locality.

Benjamin F. Smith, father of the Culbertson merchant, was born in Lawrence County in 1822, about six years after Indiana was admitted to the Union. He received his education in a pioneer Indiana school, a log cabin building with split logs for benches, heated by a fireplace, and wrote his copy with a goosequill pen. He spent his life within sound of the old school bell, and developed and farmed part of the tract of land which his father had taken up from the Government. He lived to be nearly ninety years of age, passing away in 1911. In the old community where he grew up he married Jane Patterson, who was born near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, January 16, 1830, and died in 1909. They reared the following children: Laura, who became the wife of Calvin Hayes and lives at Saltillo, Indiana; Charles C. and Augustus F., of Saltillo; George R., who died at Mitchell, Indiana; Harry M.; Jennie G., wife of William McKnight, of Bedford, Indiana; Kate C., Mrs. Samuel Mills, of Linton, Indiana; Della, wife of Alva Wesner, of Campbellsburg, Indiana; Edward E., of Saltillo; Emma, who is married and lives at Claysville, Indiana; Homer D., of Mitchell; and William T., of Rivervale, Indiana.

Harry M. Smith spent his childhood and youth on his father's farm, which was an extensive one. His father had cleared the timber from many of its acres, and the son participated in its varied work, plowing, cultivating, handling the grain crops and livestock. After the country schools he attended the Southern Indiana Normal School at Mitchell, taking a business course at the age of twenty. He then left the farm, and in 1886 became salesman and bookkeeper in the store of A. Guthrie & Company at Orleans, Indiana. He has always left a record of good service behind him and has a collection of letters commending his faithfulness and good service, beginning even with one from his teacher while he was in school. Mr. Smith came to Montana from Cando, North Dakota, where for five years he was clerk in the store of C. H. Olson.

On coming to Culbertson in 1909 he went to work for the old time firm of Tanner & Best Company, and was with that firm for five years. For the first few months he had charge of the books, after which Mrs. Smith became bookkeeper while her husband went on the floor as a salesman.

After five years he resigned and with others organized the Farmers Mercantile Company, and has been manager from the beginning of that successful business. The company was incorporated, its first officers besides Mr. Smith being Henry P. Lowe, president, J. R. Buckley, vice president, and C. Carisch, who still continues as secretary and treasurer. Jacob Bauer is now president of the company and C. C. May, vice president.

While an able business man and thoroughly devoted to his private affairs, Mr. Smith has always had a keen sense of his responsibility as a citizen and factor in the various communities where he has lived. For the past ten years he has served Culbertson as town clerk. He is one of the directors of the Culbertson Commercial Club, is treasurer of the Tri-County Stock Association and a stockholder in the New Evans Hotel Company. He grew up in a republican home, cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1888 at Bedford, Indiana, and the only lapse in his regularity as a republican came in 1916, when he supported Mr. Wilson. He was reared a Methodist, united with the church after his marriage, and is a trustee and treasurer of the church at Culbertson. He is also a past noble grand of the Lodge of Odd Fellows. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had two sons in the great war and were diligent in the home activities, raising funds, while Mrs. Smith was chairman of the first Red Cross Chapter organized in Eastern Montana.

At Bedford, Indiana, June 21, 1893, Mr. Smith married Olla Huston. She was born at Clarence, Missouri, July 31, 1872, only child of Samuel and Mrs. (Johnson) Huston, both of whom are now deceased. She had a public school education, took kindergarten training at LaPorte, Indiana, and was a primary teacher and doing duty in that capacity at Bedford when she met her husband. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Smith are: Franklin H., Richard D., Dorothy, a member of the class of 1920 in the Culbertson High School, and Paul, who died at the age of five years.

The son Franklin H. was a student in Oberlin College in Ohio when the war came on, and volunteered the day following the declaration of war against Germany. He became a sergeant in Battery A of the 135th Field Artillery, went to France with the American Expeditionary Forces, and saw some of the terrific fighting of the summer of 1918. He was in the reduction of the St. Mihiel salient, and continued on duty until the signing of the armistice. Though not wounded, he suffered injury from overexertion while helping to move the artillery, the horses of the battery having been killed, so that the men had to do the work of moving the heavy gun trucks. He was discharged from the hospital at Newport News, Virginia, and reached home in June, 1919. He is now associated with his father in business. Richard D., the other son, was a student in the University of Michigan when the war began, enlisted in the navy, was trained at Camp Upton, New York, later transferred to Portland, Oregon, and sailed through the Isthmus to New York, whence he went with a consignment of flour for Trieste, Austria. He was commissioned a lieutenant, and was on the ship Finland engaged in transport work during the rest of the war. He is still retained on reserve, and is now finishing his education, taking the electrical engineering course at the University of Michigan.

JOHN W. STAHL. One of the two firms that sold goods in the trading post days of Culbertson is the Tanner & Best Company, which began business there in 1903. One of the young clerks in the establishment at that time was John W. Stahl, a boy of sixteen. Mr. Stahl has been more or less continuously and actively identified with the enterprise ever since, and is now its manager.

He was born at Minneapolis July 23, 1887. His father, John William Stahl, was born in Lockport, New York, of an old family of Stahls in the United States. He was a cooper by trade, was connected with the cooperage plant at Buffalo, New York, and as a young man removed to Minnesota. For a number of years he was associated in business with the old commission house of B. Presley Company. He married Anna Kauffman, a native of Toronto, Canada. Her father, Frederick William Kauffman, was for many years, until his death, a Government architect at Ottawa, Canada, and built practically all the old part of that city. He was a native of Germany. Anna Kauffman, one of the younger of five children, came to the United States when a young woman, was married in Minneapolis and subsequently became the wife of George W. Tanner, one of the firm of Tanner & Best. She is now living at Culbertson.

John William Stahl attended school in Minneapolis, living there until he came to Culbertson in 1903. While working in the store he also attended high school, and after 1906 became a permanent factor in the Tanner & Best Company. Later he left the business to join the army, but for about five years has been the active manager.

December 7, 1917, he entered the army as a volunteer, was trained at Camp Meade, Maryland, and in September, 1918, was promoted to second lieutenant. He was assigned to duty at the Raritan Arsenal, and was ordered overseas but was stopped at port just before the armistice was signed. After that he was on duty at Washington, and was discharged there January 3, 1919. He then resumed his civil and business duties at Culbertson, and has been active in all patriotic movements, and especially in the formation of a post of the American Legion at Culbertson. He is a stockholder and director in the State Bank of Culbertson, and is also a partner with N. V. Wilson in the Wilson Drug Company.

Mr. Stahl, who is unmarried, is a republican, but in local affairs supports the man rather than the party. He is a past master of Trowel Lodge No. 67, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

Frank S. Reed could make a very strong claim to the veteran honors in the newspaper business of Eastern Montana. He is founder and proprietor of the Searchlight at Culbertson. Eighteen years ago he began casting the beams of the Searchlight over the sparsely settled region around Culbertson, which then was a mere hamlet, though the chief trading center of an immense area of public domain. That Mr. Reed had a great deal of courage and hardihood in establishing this pioneer paper is indicated by the fact that it was the only place of publication between Williston and Glasgow and between Glendive and the Canadian line.

Mr. Reed was born at Decorah, Winneshiek County, Iowa, June 7, 1859. His father, Henry Reed, whose people were Virginians and early settlers of Southern Iowa, died at Decorah in 1868, when about thirty-four years of age. He followed the trade of barber. Henry Reed married Delilah Wertz, who was born in Ohio and died at Culbertson, Montana, in 1912, at the age of eighty-two. They were the parents of the following children: William, who was a merchant and died at Culbertson; Frank S.; Mrs. Lydia Eastwood, wife of the editor and proprietor of the Herald at Watertown, South Dakota; and Luella, a member of the Tingley Theosophical Society at Point Loma, California.

Frank S. Reed attended the public schools of Decorah, also an academy, and beginning at the age of seventeen taught a country school for two years. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Decorah Journal. He has been identified with the northwestern country for nearly forty years. In 1882 he went to St. Paul, and for eight years was employed in the job office of the Pioneer Press. The following five years he worked for the Minneapolis Journal as one of the force in the ad room. On leaving the printing industry Mr. Reed took up portrait work for a few years, his wife being a pastel artist. He abandoned this to resume his trade as manager of the News and Times at Grafton, North Dakota, and subsequently moved to Lisbon, North Dakota, where the Searchlight was born by his enterprise. The Searchlight is in its twenty-first year in 1920. After three years at Lisbon it was moved to Culbertson, and there continued under the same name but with a new volume number. It was the third paper in old Valley County, and was the only republican paper in the county in 1902. The Searchlight began at Culbertson as a five column quarto, and is now issued as a seven-column quarto. Its politics has always been republican, and it is a paper devoted to the interests of Culbertson and Eastern Montana.

Mr. Reed is himself a sincere republican and has done his duty in the party since casting his first vote for James A. Garfield. He was a delegate at large to the Republican State Convention in Missoula. In the matter of county division he represented the interests of Culbertson for a county seat, favoring the division of Valley County when Sheridan was set off, and was equally an advocate of the creation of Roosevelt County out of Sheridan.

Mr. Reed is one of the public spirited men upon whom the community rely for the successive movements affecting the general welfare. He took part in the Culbertson ferry when it was promoted, was a stockholder in the New Evans Hotel and in the old Culbertson Creamery Company. He is an honorary member of the International Typographical Union, a member of the Montana Press Association and is affiliated with the Elks Lodge at Williston.

When Mr. Reed came to Culbertson only 100 people lived on the townsite, though the importance of the town was not to be measured by its population since it was the only trading point of importance in what is now Roosevelt and Sheridan counties. It was a stockman's town, all the surrounding lands being unsurveyed cattle range. It was under such conditions that the Searchlight began its existence. Some of the first important services rendered by the Searchlight was in a campaign of advertising, financed by the Culbertson and Big Muddy Immigration Association, Mr. Reed being author of the literature, and the circulars were printed in the Searchlight office. Through the Great Northern Railway Company these circulars were broadcasted over the east and south, asking for new settlers and describing the advantages of the region. A direct result of the work was the settlement at Dagmar and that of Dane Valley achieved in 1906, and since that date settlers have poured into the country until practically all the public lands have been entered and patents issued on a large part of it.

During the World war the Searchlight also carried the burden of advertising for patriotic causes, a service expected of all papers, and that was invaluable to the Government, though no payment was received by publishers. The Red Cross work was similarly benefited through the columns of the Searchlight, and Mr. Reed had an active membership in that order.

In 1881, at Decorah, Iowa, Mr. Reed married Miss Mary E. Ball. Of their two children the only one now living is Isidora, wife of Sam J. Yager, of Tower City, North Dakota, and the mother of Philip and Priscilla Yager. At Culbertson November 15, 1908, Mr. Reed married Gertrude Westergard. She is of Danish ancestry and a native of Schleswig-Holstein. To their marriage were born two children, Thomas Frank and Gertrude Marguerite.

John Thompson. For many years of a very busy life John Thompson, extensive farmer and ranchman on Little Box Elder Creek, twenty-five miles south of Havre, followed railroading, and in that and other lines of activity became well acquainted with people and communities throughout his native Canada and also the northwest of the United States. Mr. Thompson is a self-made man, educated in the school of experience, and in following his interesting career one may somewhat understand the wide tolerance and broad view that have made him so highly esteemed and so useful a citizen to his county.

John Thompson was born at Belleville, Ontario, Canada, April 3, 1866. He was the fifth born in a family of eight children, six of whom are living. His parents were Henry and Annie (Dasey) Thompson, the latter of whom was born in Ontario and died in 1875. Henry Thompson's second marriage was to Mary O'Connor, and eight children were born to this union, six of whom are living. Henry Thompson was born at Castleblayney, County Monaghan, Ireland, and when sixteen years old he came to Canada, being landed from a sailing vessel at Quebec. From there he went to Montreal, where he learned the bakery trade and became expert in culinary matters, working afterward as a master baker and at one time was cook for a lumber camp in Michigan. He retired finally to West Toronto, and died there in 1812, when aged seventy-eight years. He belonged to the conservative party in politics, and was a faithful member of the Church of England.

Before the death of his mother John Thompson went to school at Belleville, where the family then lived, but there were many children in the home to be looked after and by the time he was twelve years old he left home without much protest and started to earn his own living. At that time and in that locality there were not many opportunities for a boy of twelve to find, unassisted, any very profitable work, but he knew that if he could gather enough bark along the Moira River he could sell it, and to that industry he applied himself. Before he had made much of a test as to the value of bark his uncle, David Andrews, came upon the scene and questioned John as to why he was not at school, and on learning that it was because the boy had determined to make his own living, offered him a job in his sawmill, by which he was certain to receive a wage of 50 cents a week and his board. Common sense has always been a factor in Mr. Thompson's makeup, and he accepted the offer until he made a better bargain with a local gardener, for whom he worked for some time. About this time he started to learn the tailor's trade, and when seventeen years old went to Toronto and completed his apprenticeship and became a journeyman tailor by the time he was eighteen years old.

Mr. Thompson then became a member of the Second Battalion in the Queens Own Rifles, commanded by Colonel Miller. In July, 1885, after returning to Toronto, he went into the shops of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, then was a fireman on passenger trains until 1888, during the following year was in training with the Twelfth York Rangers, enlisting then with the Canadian Mounted Police and was stationed at several military points.

In 1889 Mr. Thompson came to Dupuyer, Montana, where his first business was herding sheep, afterward for a time being employed at Great Falls in the waterworks in the old silver smelter, from there going back to railroading. He worked at first in the roundhouse of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Montana Railroad, then fired on engines between Great Falls and Minot, North Dakota, in 1891 transferring to Sand Point, becoming fireman on the railway construction work at first but later was switching engineer in the yards at Spokane, Washington. In 1892 he was transferred to Glasgow, Montana, and continued a fireman on that line, and continued on engines in various capacities up to 1898. In the meanwhile, in 1893, he had embarked in the cattle business under the firm name of Redwing Thompson & Rehberg, in which he continued to be interested until 1898, when the company was dissolved. In 1896 he filed on 160 acres in Chouteau County, Montana, on Little Box Elder Creek, in the Bear Paw Mountains. To his original filing he has added large tracts of land and now owns 2,500 acres, about 1,100 of which are cleared. He has been a heavy raiser of Hereford and Durham cattle for many years, and now averages 470 head annually, with 50 head of horses. It has been a long and often a hard path that has brought him to his present state of financial independence, but he has found great reward, and is now numbered with the representative men of his county as to business stability and personal integrity.

On September 14, 1918, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage to Miss Rosie Putro, who was born in the Bear Paw Mountain region in Chouteau County. They have one little daughter, whom they have named Elizabeth, in honor of the noted artist Elizabeth Thompson, a member of Mr. Thompson's branch of the family. In his political attachment Mr. Thompson was formerly a socialist, but now leans towards the republican party, finding in its fundamental principles the sentiments most in accord with his ideas of right and justice to all men.

CARL C. LEVERENZ, who has been in Montana for four years as cashier of the Citizens State Bank of Culbertson, received his training and experience in his profession with one of the metropolitan banks of the Twin Cities, where he grew up and lived until coming to Montana.

Mr. Leverenz was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, January 2, 1884. His father, Christian F. Leverenz, was a native of Grimm, Pommern, Germany, and came to the United States in 1874, equipped with a knowledge of the trades of leather worker, saddler and upholsterer. While at Litchfield, Minnesota, he married Miss Hannah Lang, who was born at Dundee, Illinois, a daughter of John Lang. She went to Minnesota as a child. Christian Leverenz and wife have been residents of St. Paul since 1881. Their children are: Carl C.; Walter and Mary, of St. Paul; Henry, of Brockton, Montana; Elsie, of St. Paul; and Lulu, who became the wife of Owen Watkins and died at Peoria, Illinois, in February, 1920.

Carl C. Leverenz finished his education in the Humboldt High School at St. Paul, and then went to work as an office boy with Noyes Brothers & Cutler. His bank training was acquired with the Merchants National Bank of St. Paul, an institution with which he was identified for eight years. He resigned the position of teller in that institution, and after one year with the First National Bank of Ada, Minnesota, came to Culbertson, reaching this Montana town June 10, 1916. He at once began his duties as cashier of the Citizens State Bank, and besides handling the technical affairs of the bank has also contributed something substantial toward the general success of the institution.

The Citizens State Bank was organized in 1914, being promoted by local ranch and stock men, headed by C. A. Wittmeier. It was capitalized at $25,000. The present management took over the bank the same year. The officers are: Frank G. Arnette, president; J. S. Day, vice president; Carl C. Leverenz, cashier; and Chester A. Rude and Harry J. Anderson, assistant cashiers. The bank now has surplus and undivided profits of $18,000 and average deposits of $300,000. The deposits have more than doubled during the last three years.

Mr. Leverenz has also been president of the Culbertson Commercial Club for three years, did service as treasurer of the local Red Cross a similar length of time, and was active in the various campaigns to raise funds for the Red Cross and to distribute war securities in this locality. He is secretary and treasurer of the Culbertson Land and Loan Company.

Mr. Leverenz is affiliated with Trowel Lodge No. 67, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with Culbertson Lodge No. 107, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He grew up in a home which took little interest in practical politics. His father is a republican voter, and the son has followed his example, casting his first presidential ballot for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904.

At St. Paul, October 30, 1907, Mr. Leverenz married Miss Bertha Kisch, daughter of Michael and Theresa Kisch. Her parents were natives of Germany, and her father is now a wool inspector with Bergman Company of St. Paul. Mrs. Leverenz, the only daughter in a family of six children, finished her education in the St. Paul High School. She is the mother of two daughters, Dorothy Jane, born in 1912, and Margaret Ann, born in 1918.

N. L. Nelson. The popularity and esteem paid N. L. Nelson are largely a measure of the good service that a capable banker can render a community in its development and substantial improvement. From the very beginning of his residence Mr. Nelson has regarded himself as a fellow pioneer with the other early settlers of Plentywood, has worked for and with the people of that locality, and has made his position as a banker a source of constant helpfulness and encouragement to local business and agriculture.

Mr. Nelson was born at Veile, Denmark, November 19, 1882. He makes the humorous claim that "when six months old he urged his parents to come to the United States." He is a son of O. P. and Dorothy Nelson, who it appears for his sake and for other interests and causes involved did in the spring of 1883 immigrate and settle at Hutchinson, Minnesota, where both are still living. The father has been a prosperous farmer for many years. The children of the family are: Bertle, of Flaxton, North Dakota; N. L.; Marie, who died as a young woman; Minnie, of Plentywood; Theodore, of Chicago; and Olive and Harlow, of Plentywood, Montana. O. P. Nelson early became an American citizen, has been a republican voter, and he and his wife are members of the Danish Lutheran Church.

N. L. Nelson grew up in the family home near Hutchinson, acquired a public school education, including the high school course at Hutchinson and a year in the academic department of the University of Minnesota. He early showed an inclination for a mechanical trade, became proficient with the saw and hammer, and worked as a carpenter during vacations.

However, after completing his education he went to North Dakota and began his career as a banker with the Citizens State Bank of Flaxton. A year later he was put in charge of the Pioneer State Bank of Kermit, North Dakota, and remained its active head for three years. He then disposed of his banking interests in North Dakota, and in August, 1909, identified himself with the community of Plentywood.

Associated with F. N. Huff and H. W. Barner he organized the private bank known as the Security Bank of Plentywood, operating on a capital of $10,000. In April, 1911, it was incorporated as the State Bank of Plentywood, other stockholders at the time being Peter Marron and Andrew Fadness. In the organization the first president was D. N. Tallman of Willmar, Minnesota, who had had some interests in the private bank. He was soon succeeded as president by Mr. Marron, while Andrew Fadness became vice president, N. L. Nelson, cashier, and F. N. Huff, assistant cashier. The capital at that time was raised to $20,000 and a year later became $25,000, as it continues to the present. The bank has a surplus of $10,000, average deposits of $325,000, and has paid an annual dividend since organization. No one has more friends in the Plentywood community than Mr. Nelson, and all his friends are likewise friends of the bank. The institution has met the needs of a rapidly growing and developing section, and has gained an enviable reputation as a sound institution with a safe and conservative management.

Mr. Nelson has been a worker with his fellow citizens in projects for general advancement and improvement. For several years he has been a member of the town Board of Education. He is a stanch republican, casting his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904. He is a member of the Masonic Lodge. Recently Mr. Nelson established a home in a suburb of Plentywood, erecting a modern six-room bungalow, and thus adding attractiveness to one of the natural beauty spots on the Plentywood-Culbertson highway.

In Sheridan County, Montana, June 22, 1912, Mr. Nelson married Miss Cora Sandvig. She was born at Ada, Minnesota, September 4, 1885, only daughter of K. J. and Lena (Helland) Sandvig. Her father was born in Norway and came to Montana in 1906 from Fertile, Minnesota. Mrs. Nelson had four brothers. One of them, James Acton Sandvig, lost his life in France while an American soldier. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have three children: Marjorie H., Howard S. and James Acton.

Arthur Larrivee is not only one of the most progressive and successful ranchers and stockmen of the Flathead Valley, but is member of a family around whom gather many of the important historical associations of Northern Montana.

He was born in Missoula County, a son of Henry and Emily (Brown) Larrivee. Emily Brown's father was Louie Brown, a French-Canadian who came from Quebec. He was well educated, and came to Montana to assist the priest in building the mission at Stevensville. He spent two years in the Flathead country among the Kootenai tribe of Indians, being a religious teacher under the Catholic Church. He was sent there by Father Ravalli. Father Ravalli, one of the historic characters of Montana, frequently stayed a month at a time at the Brown home. Louie Brown was a real pioneer, and endured many hardships and frequently went hungry in order to carry out his duties as a teacher. He married Emily, a daughter of Goshea, a noted chief of the Kalispell Tribe. In 1849 he joined in the rush to the California gold fields, taking his family, and after two years there returned north to Washington, and in later years, in order to please his wife, moved back to Montana so that she might enjoy the companionship of her own people. They settled eighteen miles below Missoula, at a point afterward known as Frenchtown. Louie Brown at this locality built a grist mill, operated by the water of Frenchtown Creek. His burrs or mill stones were fashioned from the boulders found in that vicinity. Many years after the old mill had decayed the boulders were still left on the ground.

Henry Larrivee was also a French-Canadian from Montreal, and met his death in Montana in 1885, when a tree fell on him. His widow, who was born while the Brown family were living in Washington, was left with two children, Emerance and Arthur. The daughter was married, and died leaving two daughters, Josephine and Emma. Mrs. Henry Larrivee in her widowhood proved true to her trust, and in order to support her family was employed as a cook in Charlie Allard's stage station along the Flathead Lake. That station entertained hundreds of the travelers, trappers and hunters and also homesteaders coming into the country. One of the early visitors was Charles Conrad, who came from Fort Benton and was an associate of Col. A. A. White in locating a townsite for James H. Hill. One night at the station Conrad requested that Mrs. Larrivee call over some of the local Indian names, saying "you can have the honor of naming our new town." She expressed a preference for Kalispell, and thus the name of that chief city of the Flathead vicinity is accounted for. Later in life Mrs. Larrivee became the wife of William Irvine, a prominent and wealthy stockman. After many years they left their ranch and moved to a fine modern home in Polson.

Arthur Larrivee married Miss Lena Mae Ainsworth, who was born near Hazelhurst, Mississippi, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Ainsworth. She was educated in the public schools of Mississippi, and is a pleasant, sociable, cultured woman.

Arthur Larrivee took charge of Mr. Irvine's home ranch, one of the finest in improvement, equipment and productiveness in the Flathead Valley. The ranch is located on White Earth Creek. As a young man Mr. Larrivee frequently drove a six-horse coach from Ravalli to Demersville, and hauled hundreds of explorers and homeseekers across the reservation. At that time there was no bridge over the Pend d'Oreille River, and his stage and its load of passengers were carried over on a ferryboat.

Mr. Larrivee is affiliated with the Elks, is a Catholic, and is a stalwart republican. He has one son, Joe Irvine, named in honor of his grandfather, in whose home he spent his early life. Joe Irvine distinguished himself during the World war in the aviation corps. He received his early education in Nebraska and became a member of the One Hundred and Thirtieth Aerial Squadron, being trained at Kelley Field in Texas and later was an instructor in the use of machine guns and other aviation equipment at the field at Rantoul, Illinois. He received an honorable discharge and is now an employe of the First National Bank of Polson. He was married to Miss Ruth Loveland at Missoula, Montana. She was born in Colorado, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Loveland. She was educated in Polson, Montana.

W. A. Gregg. The residence of W. A. Gregg at Polson antedates the founding and formal history of the town itself. He was doing business as a merchant on land that had not been opened to settlement, and was therefore on hand to welcome the town at its birth. While Polson does not maintain an official publicity service, that service is voluntarily performed by Mr. Gregg, and no one has a better understanding of the virtues and advantages of the town and the surrounding district and no one is better able to present these advantages to the outside world.

Mr. Gregg was born in Lenawee County, Michigan, a son of William and Margaret (Stewart) Gregg. He was educated in the public schools of his native state, also attended a business college, and at Detroit he married Miss Elizabeth Anderson. She was born and educated at Glasgow, Scotland, a daughter of James Anderson.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gregg determined to make a trial of fortune in Montana. Mr. Gregg had entertained a flattering opinion of Montana as a result of a previous visit. He and his wife on coming to the state first located at Havre, where for several years he was employed by E. V. Hauser and the Havre Commercial Company. He left the latter organization and with some partners opened a grocery business, but sold out and came to Polson in 1908. Here he bought the local business of the Gates Mercantile Company and conducted it for three years, since which time he has given his attention to buying and selling real estate. Mr. Gregg on coming to Polson homesteaded his lots by erecting buildings, though the land had not yet been appraised by the Government, and he had to secure a permit from the Indian agent to stay on the reservation. Mr. Gregg as a real estate man knows his subject, and his entire heart and faith are in his work, and it is an incorrigible doubter who could not be convinced by him.

Mr. Gregg is especially enthusiastic about the climate and the agricultural resources of the Flathead district. The climate around Polson is that of the Pacific Coast rather than the climate of Eastern Montana, which more nearly resembles the Dakotas. In Mr. Gregg's office on Main Street are attractive examples of what the soil and climate of this district will produce. The several wonderful new types of everbearing berries, raspberries and strawberries, thrive with a special luxuriance in this locality. Mr. Gregg several years ago sold a man a tract of land averaging $50 an acre. This man sold in one season $500 of strawberries off of one acre. In his office are three beautiful silver cups, awarded at the State Fair of Helena for the best displays of vegetables, grain and potatoes. These displays were gathered from farms and truck gardens of Indians on the Indian Reservation. Mr. Gregg handles real estate and also rentals and insurance. In his office is also located the Government farmer and timber man in charge of the Indian work in this vicinity.

But of all his displays Mr. Gregg is personally proudest of his exhibit of four sons and one daughter bearing the family name of Gregg. Their Christian names are William A., Mildred L., T. Stewart, Robert Kenneth and Harold A. They are all attending the public schools of Polson, the two oldest in high school. Mr. Gregg has given some of his time to service as a member of the Polson School Board, and takes a great deal of pride in the fine public school system that has been developed in spite of adverse circumstances. The first citizens at Polson had no school, no taxable property that could support such an institution, and by co-operative and volunteer work they hired a teacher and secured a building to provide for the needs of the first children. Mr. Gregg is an active member of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder. In the establishment of this church likewise the public spirit of the community came into evidence. Several buildings were donated for use in worship, and at the present time the congregation has the finest Presbyterian Church in the county. Mr. Gregg is a liberal republican in politics.

John Davey. Enjoying the hospitality of one of Hill County's foremost citizens, John Davey, and listening to his intelligent, thoughtful discussion of the world's greatest events, the visitor may well believe that no early handicap in the way of lack of educational advantages or early opportunity could have ever discouraged or faded his spirit of energy. He came to Montana in boyhood, although already a miner of experience, for years was identified with the mining industry, took advantage of business opportunities as they offered, and for many years has been contented and prosperous on his extensive ranch. When he located on Little Box Elder Creek the site of his ranch and his beautiful modern home were a lonely wilderness, and the change that has been brought about by Mr. Davey's practical industry is something to marvel at.

John Davey was born in Cornwall, England, March 15, 1867. His parents were Joseph and Louisa (Martin) Davey, lifelong residents of Cornwall and devoted members of the Baptist Church. The mother survived until 1909, passing away at the age of seventy-five years, but the father died in 1887, aged sixty-one years. He was a miner in the ore and tin mines of Cornwall. Of their seven children there are five yet living, John Davey being the youngest of the family. Two of his brothers, James and Albert, came to this western country and both are well remembered. James Davey had a reputation for physical strength before he left Cornwall, where he had won championship as a wrestler, and after coming to the United States became well known in mining regions in Arizona, Montana and Idaho, winning the blue ribbon in contests as an expert driller. Later he went to Western Australia and for a time was foreman in the celebrated Fingal mine there, then returned to England and in 1910 died in his old home in Cornwall.

Until he was thirteen years old John Davey of this record attended the local schools. At that age he was considered far enough advanced in his studies and old enough in years to become self-supporting, and he began work in the Cornwall mining district, beginning with easy tasks but advancing to more dangerous ones, and by the time he was eighteen years old was an expert miner. He sailed then for the United States and was landed in the port of New York City. He reached Helena, Montana, in June, 1885, and went from there by stage to his first work, in the Gloster mine, where he remained for three years. Between then and 1894, when he located on his present ranch, he worked in many of the leading mines of this section, including: The Jay Gould, Hubbard, Stample, Enterprise and others in Grant and Butte counties and doing much prospecting. Mr. Davey paid his first visit to Little Box Elder Creek in 1889, his brother Albert having located on Milk River and gone into the cattle business, and the brothers became associated in the business. But in 1894, when Mr. Davey came here with his wife, he changed his filing for a more advantageous place for a permanent home. On his property he built a log house 16 by 20 feet in dimension, and this continued the family home for years.

Mr. Davey started into the cattle business with one cow and some calves, and from that beginning developed a great agricultural industry covering general farming and raising of cattle and horses. He raises Hereford and Shorthorn cattle and breeds Percheron horses, being reputed the owner of some of the finest Percherons in the state. He owns 1,200 acres of fine land and controls the operation of 2,000 acres and has other property.

On November 9, 1892, Mr. Davey was united in marriage at Helena, Montana, to Miss Catherine Arthur, who was born in Cornwall, England, a daughter of Thomas and Jemima (Hatherley) Arthur. She has one living sister, Mary Elizabeth. Her people came to Helena, Montana, when she was young, there being but one log cabin standing then in what is now the bustling city. Her father followed mining there during the rest of his life. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Davey, two of whom died in infancy, the others being as follows: Martin H., who lives at Spokane, Washington; Arthur J., who married Barbara Null; and James W. and Woodrow A., who are at home.

In 1908 Mr. Davey and wife with one child went on a visit to England and remained in the neighborhood of their birthplace for four months. After returning to Montana Mr. Davey erected his present handsome ranch residence, a most attractive building of modern comfort and convenience, with beautiful trees shading its wide verandas. It is equipped with a hot water heating plant and is one of the fine rural homes that may be found near Havre, Montana. In 1919 and previously Mr. Davey did considerable building in Havre, in that year putting up a handsome apartment building on the corner of Second and Fifth Avenue, before this having built two houses on either side of the new structure. All these are fine renting properties.

Mr. Davey makes no claim to being a politician and reserves the right to cast an independent vote, but he has always been willing to co-operate with his fellow citizens to further the county's welfare and has been particularly interested in the matter of the public schools. When the school district in which he lives was organized he was electel a member of the school board and has served as its chairman ever since. He and Mrs. Davey attend the Methodist Episcopal Church. In commenting on the present easy transportation facilities Mr. Davey recalls many round trips of 400 miles he has made on horseback in order to do business at Helena.

W. W. Gabb, a merchant at Polson, is an old time westerner, fought Indians in Western Kansas and Montana forty years ago, and before locating in the Flathead Valley was an expert technical man with several mining industries.

He was born at Cleveland, Ohio, youngest of the five children of William W. Gabb and wife. When he was a boy his parents moved to Allegheny City, now part of greater Pittsburgh, and he received his education in the public schools there. At the age of sixteen he went to New York City, and for three years was employed by the Guion Steamship Company. Returning to Pittsburgh, he worked in the steel mills a year, and since then has lived almost altogether in the West. For seven years he rode the range in Colorado in the employ of the Rochester Stock & Pool Company. In April, 1879, Mr. Gabb was one of the seventeen young men who stood off 300 Indians in the fight known as the Eldorado Massacre on the line between Kansas and Colorado. This was a party of Cheyenne and Sioux Indians, and seven of Mr. Gabb's companions were killed and he sustained two scalp wounds, two arrows were driven into his right arm, and a knife thrust entirely through his left hand. He was severely injured, and was seventy-two hours en route to the Denver Hospital. Three years later, in 1882, he had some further experiences with hostile Indians in the Big Horn Basin of Montana. He and two companions were sent from the ranch after some cattle, were surprised by Indians and in a running fight one of his assailants used a big war club and broke Mr. Gabb's leg. There were no doctors available, and he rode sixty-two miles across the rough country to what is known as the Bridle Bit Ranch, and there set his own leg and rested three weeks until it was healed. From Montana he returned to Kansas, and rode the range on the Smoky Hill Ranch, alternately engaging in mining in Colorado. He studied mineralogy under George O. Smith, at present director of the United States Geological Survey at Washington. For several years Mr. Gabb was assayer for the Colorado Smelting Company at Pueblo.

He married Miss Mary E. Gray, of Monroe County, Iowa. They have four children: Leslie, John W., Vera and Irene. Leslie finished his education in the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. Both sons were in the United States service during the war, Leslie in the Signal Corps and John in the mechanical department of the Aviation Corps, most of the time being spent at Kelley Field in Texas. Leslie was overseas in France, and subsequently with the Army of Occupation at Coblenz, Germany. Leslie married a Missouri girl and has two children. The daughter Vera is a student in the Montana Wesleyan College at Helena, and Irene is in the Polson High School.

Mr. and Mrs. Gabb attend the Methodist Episcopal Church at Polson. He has been affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for forty years. His home has been in the Flathead Valley for fourteen years, and by hard work and good management he has made a success of his affairs and is esteemed as a good business man and a citizen whose support can be counted upon for every progressive movement. He has exhibited a high degree of physical and moral courage, and he deserves to rank among the trail blazers of the West.

JOHN WEIGHTMAN is one of the best known pioneers of the Flathead country of Montana. A veteran liveryman, former stage driver, his interests through a long period of years have been in transportation, and he had handled a large volume of the traffic in and out of the Flathead country. Hundreds of prominent men have been numbered among his patrons, and have taken pleasure in expressing for him the esteem and friendship he deserves. Mr. Weightman has traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to the Yukon, and it is his substantial verdict that no region he has visited contains so many qualities of charm as the Flathead country.

Mr. Weightman was born May 24, 1855, at Pottsville, Pennsylvania, of English parents, a son of William S. and Anne (Salmon) Weightman. His parents moved to Boston, Massachusetts, and lived in that eastern city until 1865. John Weightman acquired his early education at Bunker Hill. As a boy in Boston one day he saw some of the great celebrities of the world, including the Prince of Wales, Abraham Lincoln, Tom Thumb and Commodore Nutt. In 1865 the Weightman family moved to Illinois, locating on the Buena Vista farm in McHenry County.

It was in 1877 that John Weightman started for the Northwest, having heard much of the country of Montana. He came to Beaverhead Valley, locating where the City of Dillon now stands. That was his home until 1890, when he moved to Demersville and engaged in the livery business. For ten years he operated a stage between Ravalli and Flathead Lake to the point now known as Polson. When the Town of Demersville was moved to Kalispell Mr. Weightman went along and established and operated the first livery in Kalispell. Part of his old barn at Demersville was moved to Kalispell. He has been in the business in the Flathead country for over thirty years.

At Dillon he married Miss Katie Barnard, a native of Box Elder County, Utah. Three daughters were born to their marriage: Mabel, wife of W. W. Bond, of New York, and mother of two children, Lucile and Evalon; Ida May, who is Mrs. F. W. Worden, of Ravalli, Montana, their family consisting of four children, Louise, Jane, Joe Dixon and Ruth; and Nina, Mrs. M. J. Salzman, of Ravalli, who has three children, Kathleen, Jack and Robert. The daughters were carefully educated at Kalispell, all being graduates of the high school and all were christened and reared in the Episcopal faith.

For thirty years Mr. Weightman has been operating the Star Route mail line, carrying the mails by special contract with the Government from Dillon to Bannock, from Demersville to Columbia Falls, and had the first mail contract between these points. He also operated a line between Galispell and Big Forks for eight years, between Belton and Lake McDonald eight years, and has handled most of the mail since the National Glacier Park opened. He was the first licensed concessionaire to do business in the Glacier National Park.

Mr. Weightman is a charter member of the Elks, and a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, the Maccabees and the Masonic lodges. Politically he is a stanch republican, is a strenuous admirer of the career of Theodore Roosevelt, and among present day statesmen of the country entertains the highest opinion of Franklin K. Lane former secretary of the interior.

Mr. Weightman came to Montana without wealth or settled business position, and has found here all the opportunities his energy or enterprise craved. He has endeavored to do his part as a good citizen, and through his opportunities to meet personally thousands of travelers in the state has never neglected to present the resources and wonderful advantages of Montana. The Weightman home has always been noted for its hospitality, and Mr. and Mrs. Weightman have exemplified all the generosity associated with the typical old time Montana citizens. While a resident of Dillon Mr. Weightman was appointed postmaster by President Garfield, his commission being signed by Garfield's successor, Chester A. Arthur. He cast his first vote for Hayes and Wheeler while at Elgin, Illinois, and his first vote in the territory of Montana was given to Maj. Martin Maginnis. His last vote was cast for Hon. T. J. Walsh. Mr. Weightman served as a member of the school board of Kalispell, and has supported every movement that he thought would contribute to the development and prosperity of the community. While he was postmaster at Dillon a fire caused the total loss of his business, though he managed to save the mail. Before a regular express agent was appointed at Kalispell Mr. Weightman was the only man empowered to open the safes on the express cars of the Great Northern at that point. In the course of years he estimates that he has transported in and out of the district between Belton and Lake McDonald more than 35,000 people.

In 1898 Mr. Weightman went to Alaska, taking 1,000 head of cattle to the Klondike. The stock, with 150 tons of baled hay and some material for building a railway, were loaded on the barge Skookem at Seattle, and the tug Tacoma drew the barge to Pyramid Harbor. Mr. Weightman then herded his stock overland by the Dawson trail to the Upper Yukon, a distance of 610 miles. He left Seattle June 1, 1898. On the way in he and a friend, Billy Lynch, floated down in a birch bark canoe from Fort Selkirk to Dawson, a distance of 200 miles, in two days. On this trip Mr. Weightman had a jersey cow, and sold her product in beer bottles for $5 a bottle to the Dawson Hospital. The steamer Klondike on Flathead Lake was named in honor of Mr. Weightman's Alaska experience by his friend Mr. Hodge, the owner.

H. D. APGAR was one of the early homesteaders in Northern Flathead County, and has been a man of enterprise in developing the beautiful region around the National Glacier Park and Lake McDonald, where his home is a dream of beauty.

Mr. Apgar, whose name is found in the postoffice guide as representing Apgar Postoffice on Lake McDonald, was born at Shakopee, Minnesota, a son of Milo B. and D. Jeanette Apgar. He was educated in the public schools of Minnesota, took up the drug business, and for a number of years followed it in Birmingham, Alabama. He came to the Glacier Park in Montana November 1, 1895. His father had located a homestead on Lake McDonald in what is now Glacier Park in the spring of 1892, and H. D. Apgar proved upon it for his father's heirs, the father passing away in 1896.

In the early days all supplies were brought from Demersville by boat, constituting a trip of two weeks or more over forty or fifty miles.

October 1, 1901, at Kalispell, Mr. Apgar married Miss Jessie Cunningham. She was born in Arkansas, a daughter of H. J. and Atlanta Cunningham. They have three children: Helen, Jeanette and Milo D.

Mr. Apgar is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Sons of Veterans, his father having been a brave and honored soldier of the Civil war. In politics he votes for the man and the principles rather than the party. Mr. Apgar is a member of the Apgar ancestry that has been in America since Revolutionary times, and a number of his family have been soldiers.

Mrs. Apgar is the postmistress of Apgar Postoffice at Lake McDonald. Their beautiful home is on the shores of that lake and they maintain some attractive accommodations for the annual flood of visitors to the National Park, having a number of log cabins which they rent to tourists. Mrs. Apgar as a young lady lived at Columbia Falls. She is a refined, Christian woman of pleasing personality.

Harold Flower, proprietor of the beautiful Fairview Ranch at Hot Springs, is one of the typical ranchers of Montana and a man widely and favorably known. He was born in Derby, England, and is fifty-five years of age, a son of Capt. Joseph Daniel Flower, a Civil war veteran, and Elizabeth (Walker) Flower. But he left his native land when sixteen years of age and came to the United States, settling at Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. Flower is a graduate of the Royal College of Preceptors, London, is an architect and civil engineer by profession, practicing in Chicago until 1910, when he moved with his family into the Flathead Indian Reservation in Sanders County, homesteading 160 acres of land three miles from Hot Springs, later adding by purchase until they now have a very valuable and extensive ranch, forty acres of which is under irrigation. An attractive six-room bungalow, with its big porches, and other commodious buildings have been erected, good improvements have been made and there are no ranch homes in the valley more beautiful than theirs. The location of the ranch overlooking as it does the Little Bitter Root Valley and mountain peaks, naturally suggested the name it bears, "Fairview."

Mr. Flower was married to Elizabeth Konklin, who was born in Kankakee, Illinois, a daughter of Henry Clay and Elizabeth Konklin, of Kentucky, the former an editor. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Flower, namely: Walter, Virginia, June and Adrian, the three youngest of whom are students in the schools of Kalispell or Hot Springs.

A friend of education, Mr. Flower has done much to raise the standard of the schools and the school system in this neighborhood. For a number of years he has been a member of the school board of his district, three successive terms serving as chairman of the Board of Trustees. The beautiful school buildings at Lone Pine and Hot Springs were erected through his instrumentality. He was the architect, and he also planned and built the bath houses at Hot Springs. He is a staunch believer in progress and improvement, especially good roads, and, most important, the proper education of the children, and that no investment can be made which will return better results. A man of education, high ideals and broad vision, he is able to look ahead and see the possibilities of this region, and works hard to awaken his neighbors to the importance of community building and development. He is a democrat, but a believer in principle and good men before politics or party. In all of his work he is seconded by his wife, a most highly educated and cultivated lady, who is very popular in the county, and is especially prominent in church and Christian service work. During the late war Mr. Flower was chairman of the Sanders County Liberty Loan Committee and Council of Defense, which were accredited with honor and success through his efforts. He has been active in all matters of interest for the welfare of the county and its people, a business man, farmer and true American.

Scott Marques. At present the country is exercised over the problem of providing proper employment for the soldiers who have returned to this country from their service overseas during the great war or who have been discharged from the training camps where they were preparing to meet the enemy. Over fifty years ago the Government faced the same problem, and solved it by interesting the veterans of the war between the North and the South in agricultural pursuits. The man who passed through the necessary training, whether in camp or actual service required to develop him into a soldier, does not take kindly to a restricted indoor life upon his return from the front. He needs the outdoor life of the farmer or ranchman, and if the advice of the veterans of the other great war of the country is heeded the present problem will be solved as it was before. Some of the most prosperous of these veterans are those who have "made good" on western land, among them being Scott Marques of Camas.

Scott Marques was born in Switzerland, Indiana, a son of Sidney and Lydia Marques. Sidney Marques was also a veteran of the war of the '60s, in which he was a brave and gallant soldier. Scott Marques enlisted from Cincinnati, Ohio, and was detailed after being mustered into the service to ambulance duty, in which he continued until the close of the war. After his discharge Mr. Marques went back to Ohio, and then to Illinois, where he met and was married to Mary Clark, born in Illinois, a daughter of John and Nancy Clark. Mr. and Mrs. Marques lived in Mason County, Illinois, for thirty years after their marriage, successfully engaged in farming, but in 1908, attracted by the opening up of land in Montana, came to the state and now own and operate a valuable ranch in the vicinity of Camas.

The ten children born to Mr. and Mrs. Marques are as follows: Annetta, who is Mrs. Frank Wade, of Bloomington, Illinois, has five sons and one daughter, namely, Grace, Clare, Francis, Sidney, Eugene and a young son; Robert, who married, is a cook and lives at Portland, Oregon; Sidney, who married Lettie Cox, is an undertaker and hardware merchant of Edgewood, Illinois; Ruth, who married Rollo Hoffman, a dairyman of Whitefish, Montana, has three children, Carlyn, Percy and Anna; Oscar, who is now at home with his parents, was in the service of his country for two years during the World war, and overseas for eighteen months; Eugene, who is also a veteran of the World war, served for eighteen months in France, and was discharged on May 19, 1919, at Fort Russell, Wyoming, and is now in the State of Washington; John, who lives at Elmo, Montana, married Ada Sparling and has five children, Evalyn, Leona, Gladys, Alton and a baby; Evalyn, who married Andrew Shultz, has two children, Harvey and Carrie; Andrew, who is married, lives at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and has spent eight years in the marine service, and during the World war was in France and Germany; and Harvey, who married Emma Wilson, lives at Denver, Colorado, and was in the marine service for four years.

DR. AND MRS. E. E. JAMES

In politics Mr. Marques is a strong republican. Out of the Marques family four sons enlisted under the flag their father fought to keep waving above a free people, and through her tears Mrs. Marques used to proudly view her service flag with its four stars, and she feels that she cannot be grateful enough that none of them turned to gold during that terrific combat.

Edwin Evens James. One of the leading citizens and representative men of Cascade County for many years was the late Edwin E. James, whose fine ranch home is located about six miles southwest of Cascade, and where he died in 1916. His was an eminently active and useful life, but the limited space at the disposal of the biographer forbids more than a casual mention of the leading events in his career, which will suffice to show that earnest endeavor and honesty of purpose rightly applied and persistently followed will lead to unqualified success. He was a man of influence in local affairs, and was looked upon as a man thoroughly in sympathy with any movement looking toward the betterment or advancement of the community.

Edwin Evens James was a native son of the old Keystone State, having been born in the City of Philadelphia, on April 9, 1851, and was the son of Charles S. and Mary (Evens) James, both of whom were also natives of Philadelphia. Of the seven children born to these parents, he was the third in order of birth. Charles S. James was an educator of acknowledged ability, having been a professor of mathematics in Bucknell University for many years. His wife dying in 1892, he then came West to visit his son, the subject of this sketch, and again in 1900 he came here to visit, and his death occurred here in June, 1901.

Edwin E. James secured his elementary education in the common schools of his native city, and then became a student in Bucknell University at Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Subsequently his alma mater conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. He then matriculated in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated with the class of 1875. He first located for the active practice of his profession at Montandon in Central Pennsylvania, but later settled at Clinton, New Jersey, where he remained until 1880, when he went to Michigan. In the fall of 1882 Doctor James came to Chestnut Valley, Montana, and here was actively and successfully engaged in the practice until 1905, when he retired from the professional field. With a wise foresight Doctor James in 1882, on first coming to this valley, had pre-empted 120 acres of land, later, in 1885, took up a homestead, and here he engaged with considerable success in farming and stock raising for many years.

Doctor James passed through years of arduous toil and hardship during the early years after his location here. A western man in the broad sense of the term, although a native of the East, he realized the wants of the people, and with a strong hand and an active brain supplied the demand generously and unsparingly. His life was an open book, known and read by his many friends, who found therein no blank or soiled pages and nothing to offend, for Doctor James always endeavored to measure his life by strict principles of rectitude. He ranked high among the medical men of his day and was in every respect a most commendable example of the successful, self-made man and unselfish, virile and helpful pioneer. Doctor James died at his home in Chestnut Valley on the 1st day of April, 1916, Mrs. James died April 9, 1920.

Edwin E. James was married on December 29, 1875, to Mary Frances Ingham, the daughter of Thomas and Martha Ann (Smith) Ingham. The father was born in Hartford, Connecticut, in 1818, and died in 1906, while his wife was born in Williamstown, Massachusetts, in 1817, and died in 1891. Thomas Ingham was a carpenter by trade, but later became a manufacturer of hay rakes at Sandisfield, Massachusetts. Eventually he became a building contractor, which line he followed until seventy years old, when he retired. He was a member of the Baptist Church, was a strong abolitionist and was aligned with the republican party.

To Doctor and Mrs. James were born six children, namely: Charles S. who married Lulu Wyatt, and they live in San Francisco, California; Thomas James married Eva Nolan, and they have four children; Anna Belle, who completed her education in the School of Domestic Science at Boston, Massachusetts, enlisted in the active service of the Red Cross in the spring of 1917 and in October of that year she was sent to Camp Sherman at Chillicothe, Ohio, where she spent one year, was then transferred to Brest, France, and later to Kirknon Hospital, where she remained as dietitian until August 3, 1919; John Sexton, who graduated in 1909 from the civil engineering department of the Montana State College at Bozeman, lives in Cascade, and married Edith Burke, and they have two children; Lucius died at the age of eight years; George M., who had completed his studies in the Great Falls High School, enlisted in December, 1917, at Great Falls in the Field Artillery. He was trained in the camp at Douglas, Arizona, and was assigned to the Tenth Regiment of Artillery, Third Division. He was ordered oversea and landed at Bordeaux, France. He participated in the skirmishes and battles incident to the great Argonne drive, and was also in the San Mihiel drive and at Soissons, the second battle of the Marne, and other engagements. Because of sickness he was finally sent to a hospital, and from there was sent home, arriving at New York on December 10, 1918. After remaining in a hospital there for a time he was transferred to a hospital at Lakewood, New Jersey, where he remained until his recovery, and was finally discharged in February, 1919.

Doctor James took a deep interest in the community life about him and was a generous supporter of all good works. Along the line of professional interest he was one of the earliest local members of the Montana State Medical Society. Fraternally he was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a Baptist in religious belief, while his political relations were with the republican party, though in local elections he invariably voted for the best men for office regardless of party lines. Such, in brief, is the record of a man who honestly labored not only for his own individual advancement, but also for the improvement of the entire community, whose interests he ever had at heart.

J. P. Hinchilwood. No student of history or one who had the honor of knowing a veteran of the great war of our own country was at all surprised at the wonderful army of gallant young men America was able to send to France during the World war. Bravery, gallantry and patriotism is the heritage of Americans. This country has never asked for a demonstration of these virtues in either war or peace that it has not met with a prompt and ready response. The "boys in blue" set the standard aloft, and it was not allowed to fall, but was upheld by the "boys in khaki," who were proud to feel that they were following in the footsteps of their grandfathers. One of the men of Sanders County who enjoys the distinction of having served in the Union army during the war between the North and South, and later having been equally useful as a civil engineer connected with western surveys, is J. P. Hinchilwood.

The birth of J. P. Hinchilwood occurred in Mahoning County, Ohio, September 16, 1840, and he is a son of Archibald and Margaret (O'Keefe) Hinchilwood, the latter of whom died when J. P. Hinchilwood was a child. He grew to maturity in his native county, where he attended the public schools. The war clouds which had been gathering over his beloved country burst upon the land in 1861, and when just twenty-one J. P. Hinchilwood enlisted in the Union army as a member of Company D, Ninety-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Courvoisier, being at that time a resident of Indiana. At first his regiment was attached to the Thirteenth Corps, but was later transferred to the Sixteenth, and was sent to Memphis and thence down the Mississippi River to Vicksburg. Mr. Hinchilwood took part in the Red River expedition, and was at Alexandria when the famous dam was built which floated the war ships that had grounded and saved them for the Government. Returning to Memphis, his regiment met General Forest and was victorious. Once more the command returned to Memphis, and from there went out against General Price, after which a return was made as far north as St. Louis. On this last expedition Mr. Hinchilwood, to his regret, was not present, as he was confined in a hospital. The command then went to Nashville and met General Hood at Franklin, being commanded by General Thomas, and later engaged in the battle at Nashville, where Mr. Hinchilwood rejoined his regiment. General Hood was followed up the Tennessee River, until he escaped, and the Union troops returned to Eastport. As this was in the middle of winter no further operations were carried on by this division until spring, when the troops were ordered to Mobile, Alabama. Mr. Hinchilwood received his discharge at Memphis, Tennessee, August 12, 1865, and returned home. The veterans of that war endured hardships unknown to modern warfare. It is a recognized fact that many more died on account of lack of proper care and of disease than did on the battlefield. In those days prevention of disease was only in its infancy. Modern surgery was unknown. Operations were made without either antiseptic or remedial agent, and few wounds healed without a period of infection. The great swamps of the southland were teaming with malarial germs, and it is a wonder that any of the men sent from a bracing northern climate into them escaped death. It is safe to say that not one of the veterans of this war came out of the conflict untouched. Each one has carried with him in one form or another remembrances of the days when he put all thought of self aside to offer upon the altar of his country a free-will sacrifice.

After returning to Indiana at the close of the war Mr. Hinchilwood decided to seek a broader field of endeavor, and came as far west as Minnesota, where for twenty-one years he was engaged as a civil and surveying engineer, principally in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as a member of its engineering corps, and as such came to Montana. Finding an opening that suited him at Plains, Mr. Hinchilwood left the railroad and became a resident of Sanders County, and for over twenty years was engaged in surveying. He then practically retired, and building a beautiful residence at Hot Springs has since made this his home, amid delightful surroundings, the great mountains, like sentinals of the eternal army standing guard over the valley below. A niece of Mr. Hinchilwood, Miss Bertha Morrison, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of Benjamin and Jeanette (Owen) Morrison, has charge of the household affairs and gives the excellent gentleman a daughter's affection and care. Mr. Hinchilwood has been very much interested in the work of the Grand Army of the Republic, and has enjoyed attending its re-unions, and was a delegate to the Twenty-first Annual Encampment from the Department of Montana; to the encampment held at Dillon, Montana, in 1905; to the one at Helena, Montana, in 1907; to the one at Bozeman, Montana, in 1906; and to the one at Butte in 1908. In 1907 and 1912 he was on the staff of the Montana state commander. Mr. Hinchilwood has in his possessions a number of badges bestowed upon him at different times.

In his own words, Mr. Hinchilwood is a "republican dyed in the wool," and will continue to give his hearty support to the principles and candidates of that party, for he is convinced that under its administration the best interests of the country have been, and will be, conserved. In every relation of life he measures up to the highest conception of American manhood, and is recognized as a true patriot, honorable citizen, kind neighbor and generous friend, and it would be almost impossible to find anyone who does not accord to him due respect and place in him implicit confidence.

W. A. Davis, junior member of the mercantile firm of Peeso, Davis & Company of Camas, is a worthy associate of F. E. Peeso, and one of the alert business men of his community. He was born at Danbury, Connecticut, a son of Allan J. and Caroline (Buckley) Davis.

After attending the schools of his native city and being graduated from its high school, Mr. Davis in 1902 came West to Great Falls, Montana, as a traveling salesman, representing a large eastern manufacturer in teas, coffees and spices in Washington, Idaho, Arizona and Montana. In August, 1916, he severed these connections, and buying the interest of Mr. Zeh in the firm of Peeso & Zeh, formed his present associations as a member of the firm of Peeso, Davis & Company.

Mr. Davis was married at Waltham, Montana, to Miss Mary Oberlin, a daughter of Peter Oberlin. Mrs. Davis was educated in Michigan, where her father still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have a son, Frederick Allan. Mr. Davis votes for the man he deems best fitted for the office in question, preferring not to tie himself down to party issues. Both Mr. Davis and his partner are numbered among the progressive young men of the county, and are strong boosters for this section of the state. They have expressed their faith in its future by investing here, and are anxious to prove the wisdom of their selection. In addition to the large general store at Camas the firm maintains a branch establishment five miles from Camas, at Lone Pine. The new irrigation project is opening up the country around Camas, and the branch store is a great convenience to the number of new settlers as well as the old ones, who can there secure the same goods as are handled at the main store. It is only a matter of a few years before all of this region will be well populated, and Messrs. Peeso and Davis will be given the honor of being pioneers in the mercantile field, and far-sighted men who realized the possibilities here and worked hard to develop them into realities. Having learned the mercantile business on the road, Mr. Davis understands the salesmanship end thoroughly, and can bring to bear his experience in the present undertaking with profitable results. As a man he stands well in the community, and he and Mrs. Davis are popular in the social circle the partners and their wives have gathered about them.

F. E. Peeso, senior member of the mercantile firm of Peeso, Davis & Company of Camas, is one of the sound and reliable business men of this region. He was born at Syracuse, New York, a son of Fred A. and Jennie (Priest) Peeso, and one in a family of three sons and one daughter born to his parents, he being the eldest of the children.

F. E. Peeso was educated in the public schools of New York and Pennsylvania, and when he was twenty years of age came West to Montana and for a period was engaged in mining. About 1907 he settled at Camas, where the celebrated hot springs of Montana are located, and embarked in a mercantile business, later being joined by a partner, a Mr. Zeh, with a small stock, increasing it as the demand increased until today he and his partner, W. A. Davis, who bought out the interest of Mr. Zeh, are the leading merchants of this part of the county. The firm handles groceries and dry goods and does a very large business, especially with the Indians, not only from the Reservation, but also those in Idaho, Washington and other parts of Montana, who send to them for goods to be delivered through the mails. In return they handle the valuable furs, robes and all kinds of articles made by the Indians, which are highly prized by eastern tourists. These goods they not only keep in stock, but sell for the Indians in the San Francisco and Oklahoma markets. The tourists to Glacier Park depend on this firm to supply them with genuine Indian goods. During his residence in Montana Mr. Peeso has become familiar with the Indians, and they look upon him as their friend and trust him implicitly. Not only is he the one through whom they transact their business, but whenever an Indian gets into trouble with the authorities Mr. Peeso is sent for to give bail or explain matters for the trusting Red Man, and never does one of them appeal to him in vain. He speaks several Indian dialects, including the Kootenai and Flathead languages. Having done business with them for so many years Mr. Peeso is an authority and can be depended upon as knowing what he is talking about when he says that they are the best kind of customers, measuring up very favorably with the whites and are just as honest and dependable as those of the lighter skin.

Mr. Peeso was married to Miss Lillian Plint, of Butte, Montana, a daughter of John A. and Louise Plint. Mrs. Peeso was educated in the schools of Butte. Mr. and Mrs. Peeso have one daughter, Elsa Jeanette. In his fraternal affiliations Mr. Peeso belongs to the Masons and Elks. In politics he is a republican, having always supported the principles of that party, and he intends to continue to do so for he appreciates the fact that the best interests of the country are conserved under a republican administration.

George B. Perham. That the plentitude of satiety is seldom attained in the affair of life is to be considered a most beneficial deprivation, for when ambition is satisfied and every ultimate aim is realized, if such be possible, individual apathy must follow. The men who have pushed forward the wheels of progress have been those to whom satisfaction lies ever in the future, who have labored continuously, always finding in each transition stage an incentive to further effort. George B. Perham, a well known farmer of Hill County, is one whose well directed efforts have gained for him a position of desirable prominence in the locality honored by his residence, and it is with a feeling of satisfaction that the writer essays the task of touching briefly upon the salient points in his career, which has been such as to be well worth considering by the youth standing at the parting of the ways, for it shows that success may be achieved by perseverance, fidelity and sound judgment, even in the face of adverse conditions.

George B. Perham was born on his father's farm in Middlesex County, Massachusetts, on September 15, 1870, and is the son of George O. and Frances E. (Bennett) Perham. Both of these parents also were born in Middlesex County, the father in 1842 and the mother in 1849. They are both deceased, the father dying in 1905 and the mother in 1910. The subject of this sketch is the second in order of birth of the four children born to these parents, and all of whom are living, namely: Nellie, George B., Mary and Belle, the latter the wife of Fred Higgins, of Tyngsboro, Massachusetts. The daughter Mary after completing the public school course attended Radcliff Academy at Cambridge, Massachusetts. Having specialized in languages, she then pursued her studies in the University of Berlin, Germany and the University of Paris, France. At the breaking out of the war with Germany, she became associated with the Young Men's Christian Association work in France, particularly in Paris, and at the present time she is acting as interpreter in the latter city. George O. Perham was educated in the schools of Tyngsboro, Massachusetts. He was reared to the life of a farmer and never forsook that vocation. Politically he was an earnest supporter of the republican party and occupied a prominent place in his community, having served as a member of the school board for many years and as one of the selectmen of his township for several terms. He was a Unitarian in his religious faith, and was a man of many fine qualities of character.

George B. Perham was reared on the paternal farmstead in Tyngsboro, Massachusetts and attended its excellent public schools. Subsequently he took a course in the Bryant & Stratton Business College in Boston. He earned his first money by picking blueberries and potatoes, for which he received twenty-five cents a day, but after he completed his business course he went to work for the New England Telephone Company, doing office or clerical work at various places in New England. Later he was assigned to offices at New York City; Cleveland, Ohio; Detroit, Michigan; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Minneapolis, Minnesota; Fargo, North Dakota; San Antonio and Dallas, Texas. On May 15, 1912, Mr. Perham came to what is now Hill County, Montana, and filed on a homestead of 160 acres, thirty miles west of Havre. His wife filed on the adjoining homestead, so that they thus obtained a farm of 320 acres, in addition to which they have leased a half section of school land, so they have 640 acres under their control. They have devoted the major part of their land to the raising of wheat, in which they have been very successful, the crop in 1916 running from fifteen and fifty bushels to the acre. Mr. Perham has also about thirty head of cattle and horses. His home farm is well improved, the buildings and general appearance of the place indicating the owner to be a man of excellent taste and sound judgment.

On November 14, 1914, Mr. Perham was married to Mabel Mackerracher, a native of Perth, Ontario, Canada. She is the second in order of birth of the three children born to her parents, both of whom are deceased. Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Perham attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which they are liberal supporters. Politically Mr. Perham is independent, preferring to cast his vote for the men and measures of his choice, regardless of political lines. His career presents a notable example of those qualities of mind and character which are sure to win success. He is deeply interested in his adopted state and proud of its progress and prosperity. He is in every respect worthy of the high esteem in which he is held, for he is a man of public spirit, energetic habits and intellectual attainments.

W. H. George. The talent of success is nothing more than what we can do well, or in the words of the poet Longfellow "doing well whatever we do without any thought of fame." That has been the working attitude and purpose of Mr. W. H. George of Great Falls, who has lived and labored for good ends with a capacity for determination and conservative endeavor that merits and generally achieves success.

Occupying a prominent place among the progressive and enterprising business and professional men not only of Great Falls and Cascade County but of the entire northern part of the state, Mr. George has devoted his entire life to his chosen profession as a funeral director, throwing into his work his entire zeal and energy, and with it has added that courtesy and personality that has won esteem for him in the hearts of all those with whom he has come in contact. Undoubtedly he has a genius for friendship, and there is hardly a man, woman or child in Cascade County but can claim a personal acquaintance with Mr. George.

Wade H. George was born at Arcola, Louisiana, June 29, 1877, and at the age of four years moved to Denver, Colorado, with his parents. He was reared in that western city, receiving his early education there, and although a native of the South the West can justly claim him as its product. At the early age of seventeen he obtained employment with Farmer & Hale, funeral directors of Denver, and thus began learning the undertaking business in a practical way. With an ambition to go further than a practical skill, he later took a course in the Champion School of Embalming and Sanitary Science in Chicago, after the completion of which he came before and successfully passed the Colorado State Board of Embalmers. Having finished his training in his chosen profession in Denver, in 1900 he was offered and accepted the managership of Hermann & Company, funeral directors of Helena, Montana, where he remained two years.

Enterprising and progressive, he soon resolved to launch out for himself, and accordingly came to Great Falls and bought out George Berthold on Central Avenue, a location where he remained about twelve years. His chief aim has been to give the people who had occasion to need his services the best that was to be had, and in order to equip himself and keep abreast of the times he made an extended tour of investigation among the leading funeral directors and undertaking parlors over the United States. As a result, upon his return he decided to build an establishment second to none in the whole Northwest, and in doing so he added to the City of Great Falls one of its most beautiful and substantial buildings, a source of pride to this section of the country. The lower floor he uses for his business, while the upper two stories are converted into a modern apartment house.

Since coming to Great Falls Mr. George has kept the welfare of the people of Cascade County uppermost in his mind. He was the first to realize that an automobile-ambulance was badly needed in the city, and placed at the disposal of the doctors and hospitals of Great Falls in Cascade County the first one to be brought to the State of Montana and one of the first in the Northwest. He also was the first funeral director in Montana to use automobile equipment in connection with his business. He is now rated among the leaders of his profession in the West, his ideas and counsel are constantly sought by his colleagues, and it may be said without hesitation that he has done more to elevate the standard of ethics and professional integrity of the undertaking business than any other one man in this section of the country.

This biography would be incomplete without reference to the many sided interests Mr. George has taken in community and state affairs. He is a prominent exponent of good roads and one of the most earnest boosters for the transcontinental highways, and at the present time and for several years has been chairman of the Good Roads Committee of the Commercial Club. It is a common saying in Cascade County that when a group of farmers wish a piece of road put in shape they usually call on Mr. George to present their case before the commissioners. His name is as frequently spoken with esteem among the farming population as among the residents of the cities. At different times he has been president of the Cascade County Good Roads Association, being one of the founders of the organization, and always holding an executive position in its management. His public spirit has caused him constantly to give his whole-hearted support to every movement for the betterment and advancement of the community, and he has frequently been among the first to originate and father any movement that had as its object the best interests of the boys and girls of Great Falls and Cascade County. It was this kindly motive that led him to make an annual event of Mothers' Day, when he places his fleet of automobiles, under his personal supervision, at the disposal of all the motherless boys and girls of Great Falls free of charge so that they may spend a few leisure hours at the graves of their mothers who have been so dear to them in life.

During the war period Mr. George was ready in response to the extent of his ability at every call, whether to do something for the young men who had gone to fight for his and their flag, or to promote the comfort of the mothers, wives and children left behind. He was especially interested in the Red Cross, and placed his ambulance and automobile equipment at their disposal free of charge.

Besides being one of the oldest members of the Montana Funeral Directors Association, Mr. George is an active member of the following: Great Falls Rotary Club, Meadow Lark Country Club, Great Falls Shrine Club, Great Falls Commercial Club, Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons, Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, Great Falls Consistory No. 6 of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, a life member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks, member of Cataract Lodge No. 18, Knights of Pythias, Rainbow Lodge No. 28, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Great Falls Aerie No. 14,

W. W. George

Fraternal Order of Eagles, and the Modern Woodmen of America and Woodmen of the World. July 28, 1903, Mr. George was united in marriage in Helena with Susan K. Kline, a native of Bloomington, Illinois.

Michael R. Wentz, who is associated with the Northern Pacific Railroad in the capacity of roundhouse foreman at Whitehall, is descended from an old and well known family of West Virginia. His paternal grandfather was a timber merchant in Cabell County of that state, and while engaged in that work he met with an accident which caused his death. His son, John Thomas Wentz, the father of Michael R., still resides at Barboursville in Cabell County, West Virginia. He was born near that city in 1852, and there he has rounded out a long and useful life, still residing in the vicinity of his birth. He has been a life-long farmer, and success has rewarded his efforts. John T. Wentz married Josephine Dolan, who was also born at Barboursville, in 1853, and to them were born the following children: Michael R., of Whitehall, Montana; George J., who resides at Belfry, Montana, where he is master mechanic for the M. W. & S. Railway Company, and he has resided in this state since the 5th of August, 1901; William Bailey, superintendent for a large railroad contracting firm in Kentucky; Robert M., who is employed by his brother William; Hal E., also in the employ of his brother William; Mollie F., who graduated from Marshall College at Huntington, West Virginia, became the wife of a Mr. Carey, a locomotive engineer; Myrtle, who attended Marshall College at Huntington, married a Mr. Adams, and they reside on their farm near Barboursville, West Virginia.

Michael R. Wentz was born at Barboursville in Cabell County, West Virginia, January 24, 1872, and the rural schools in the vicinity of his boyhood's home furnished him with his early educational training. He was early taught the work of the farm, and until he was seventeen years of age he assisted his father on the homestead in Cabell County. He then became a machinist's apprentice with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Huntington, where he spent a period of four years, for the following three years was a journeyman mechanic at the same place, and then going to Salisbury, North Carolina, he worked as a machinist there until 1901.

That year marks the advent of Mr. Wentz into Montana, and locating in Missoula he secured employment as a machinist with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and in 1910 he came from there to Whitehall as roundhouse foreman for the Northern Pacific, a position which he has ever since continued to fill faithfully and well, true to his duties and his opportunities. His offices are located near the roundhouse. Aside from his work which has engrossed the attention of Mr. Wentz throughout his business career and in which he has gained success, he is also a land holder, the owner of a ranch in Granite County, Montana, in partnership with his brother George J. Wentz.

Michael R. Wentz was married at Huntington, West Virginia, April 27, 1897, to Miss Erma V. Hayslip, a daughter of Carey B. and Mattie (Burke) Hayslip, both of whom are now deceased. The father was for many years a painter and decorator in Huntington. A son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wentz, Carey Frederick. He was born at Huntington, West Virginia, October 8, 1898, and is now a student in the Montana State University at Missoula. The republican party receives the support and co-operation of Mr. Wentz, and fraternally he is a member of Mystic Tie Lodge No. 17, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Whitehall.

Paul Babcock. The bar of Plentywood enrolls among its members Paul Babcock, who has resided here and followed the practice of law since 1913. He was born and spent the years of his boyhood at Spring Valley, Minnesota, and farm labor claimed his time and attention until he reached the age of twenty, receiving in the interim a high school and a business college training.

Born on the 9th of December, 1876, Paul Babcock is a son of Seth C. Babcock and a grandson of George Babcock, of English extraction. George Babcock spent the final years of his life in Wisconsin, and he lies buried in Waterloo of that state. He became the father of two sons, Seth C. and William, and the younger, William Babcock, gave his life as a sacrifice to the Union cause during the war between the states.

Seth C. Babcock was born in the State of New York February 24, 1840. From Wisconsin he migrated to Minnesota and bought land near Owatonna, but after residing there for two years he moved to Spring Valley community, where he has since resided. His life has been modestly passed as a citizen, a participant in community affairs, an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic and always a republican. During the Civil war he served as a member of Company A, 29th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and his brother was a member of the same regiment. They served in General Grant's army, and Seth C. Babcock continued his military service until the surrender of General Lee and the restoration of the Union. He escaped without wounds or capture.

Seth C. Babcock married Sarah C. Cole, a daughter of Mrs. Melissa Cole. Mrs. Babcock was born in the State of New York, and she lived to celebrate her golden wedding anniversary before she passed away in June, 1900. The children born of this marriage are: Howard, a leading lawyer of Sisseton, South Dakota; George, a Methodist minister of Windom, Minnesota; Paul, of Plentywood; and Julia, the wife of Daniel Hall, of Albert Lea, Minnesota.

Paul Babcock began reading law in the office of his brother in South Dakota, and he remained under his guidance and instruction until admitted to the bar before the Supreme Court in 1900, and he tried his first lawsuit at Sisseton. He continued his law work in South Dakota until his removal to Culbertson, Montana, in 1907, and six years afterward, in 1913 he became a resident of Plentywood. On the 1st of January, 1915, he formed his present law partnership, that of Babcock & Ellery, his associate being Climo R. Ellery, and this has come to be known as one of the leading law firms in this section of Montana.

Mr. Babcock has pursued the same line of work in Sheridan County as he pursued in the old County of Valley, trying cases in the courts of Glasgow. He has the honor of being elected the first county attorney of Sheridan County, the election occurring March 11, 1913, and he was reelected in November, 1914. He instituted the work of that office and advised with his colleagues in office as to the law and procedure in inaugurating the business of their respective positions, and the first act of the new county attorney in the matter of issuing a warrant of arrest was against a negro charged with the murdering of the newly elected sheriff and his deputy. The events and results of this tragedy are still fresh in the minds of those who were here at the time. The first bond issue of Sheridan county was made during Mr. Babcock's administration, and was for the amount necessary to take up the indebtedness to Valley county, the bonds to run for a period of twenty years, with an option of earlier payment.

The well remembered battle for the county seat at Plentywood was begun in the courts while Mr. Babcock was filling the office of county attorney. The controversy continued in the courts over an extended period, until December 1, 1919, when a decision by the District Court was declared in favor of Plentywood as against Medicine Lake. In the meantime, in December, 1916, Mr. Babcock had retired from the office of county attorney, and he has since been engaged in the private practice of law.

He perhaps inherited his political convictions from a republican father, and he cast his first presidential vote in 1900 for Major McKinley, and with each succeeding presidential election he has cast a republican ballot. In the line of his profession he has the honor of having been made the first president of the Sheridan County Bar Association. He is a past master in Masonry, having been initiated into the order at Culbertson, and he now has membership in both the Blue lodge and Chapter in Plentywood. He also has membership relations with the Elks lodge at Watertown, South Dakota. During the recent World war he was a member of the local Selective Service Board, which handled more than 7,000 registration cards and before which some 1,500 soldiers were inducted into the service of the United States.

At Froid, Montana, on the 28th of April, 1915, Mr. Babcock was united in marriage with Miss Naomi Kendall, who was born in Glenford, Ohio, but when a young girl she came with her parents to North Dakota, and completed her education at White Earth in the latter state. Her professional training as a nurse was received at Valley City, North Dakota, and she continued to follow that profession until her marriage. In her parents' family were three daughters, her sisters being Mrs. William Meredith, of Scobey, Montana, and Mrs. Guss Grote, of Battleville, North Dakota. A daughter, Pauline, was born of Mr. and Mrs. Babcock on the 25th of December, 1916.

Richard Grayson, of Antelope, is a member of the firm of Grayson Brothers, merchants, and among the leading business men of Sheridan County. He was born at Mount Forest, Ontario, September 16, 1869, a son of William and Mary (Ramsey) Grayson, and the oldest of their three children. William Grayson was a son of John Grayson, who spent his last years in Canada, and was a farmer throughout his life. He was a native of Herefordshire, England, where the family church records show the Graysons to have lived 300 years ago.

Richard Grayson spent his boyhood on the parental farm. His educational advantages were limited to the country schools, and while yet a boy he was a prominent factor in the work of the farm. In time he began farming for himself in Walsh County, North Dakota, to which point the family had migrated in 1882, and he obtained the remainder of his schooling there, and in this same school his daughter began her educational training some twelve years later.

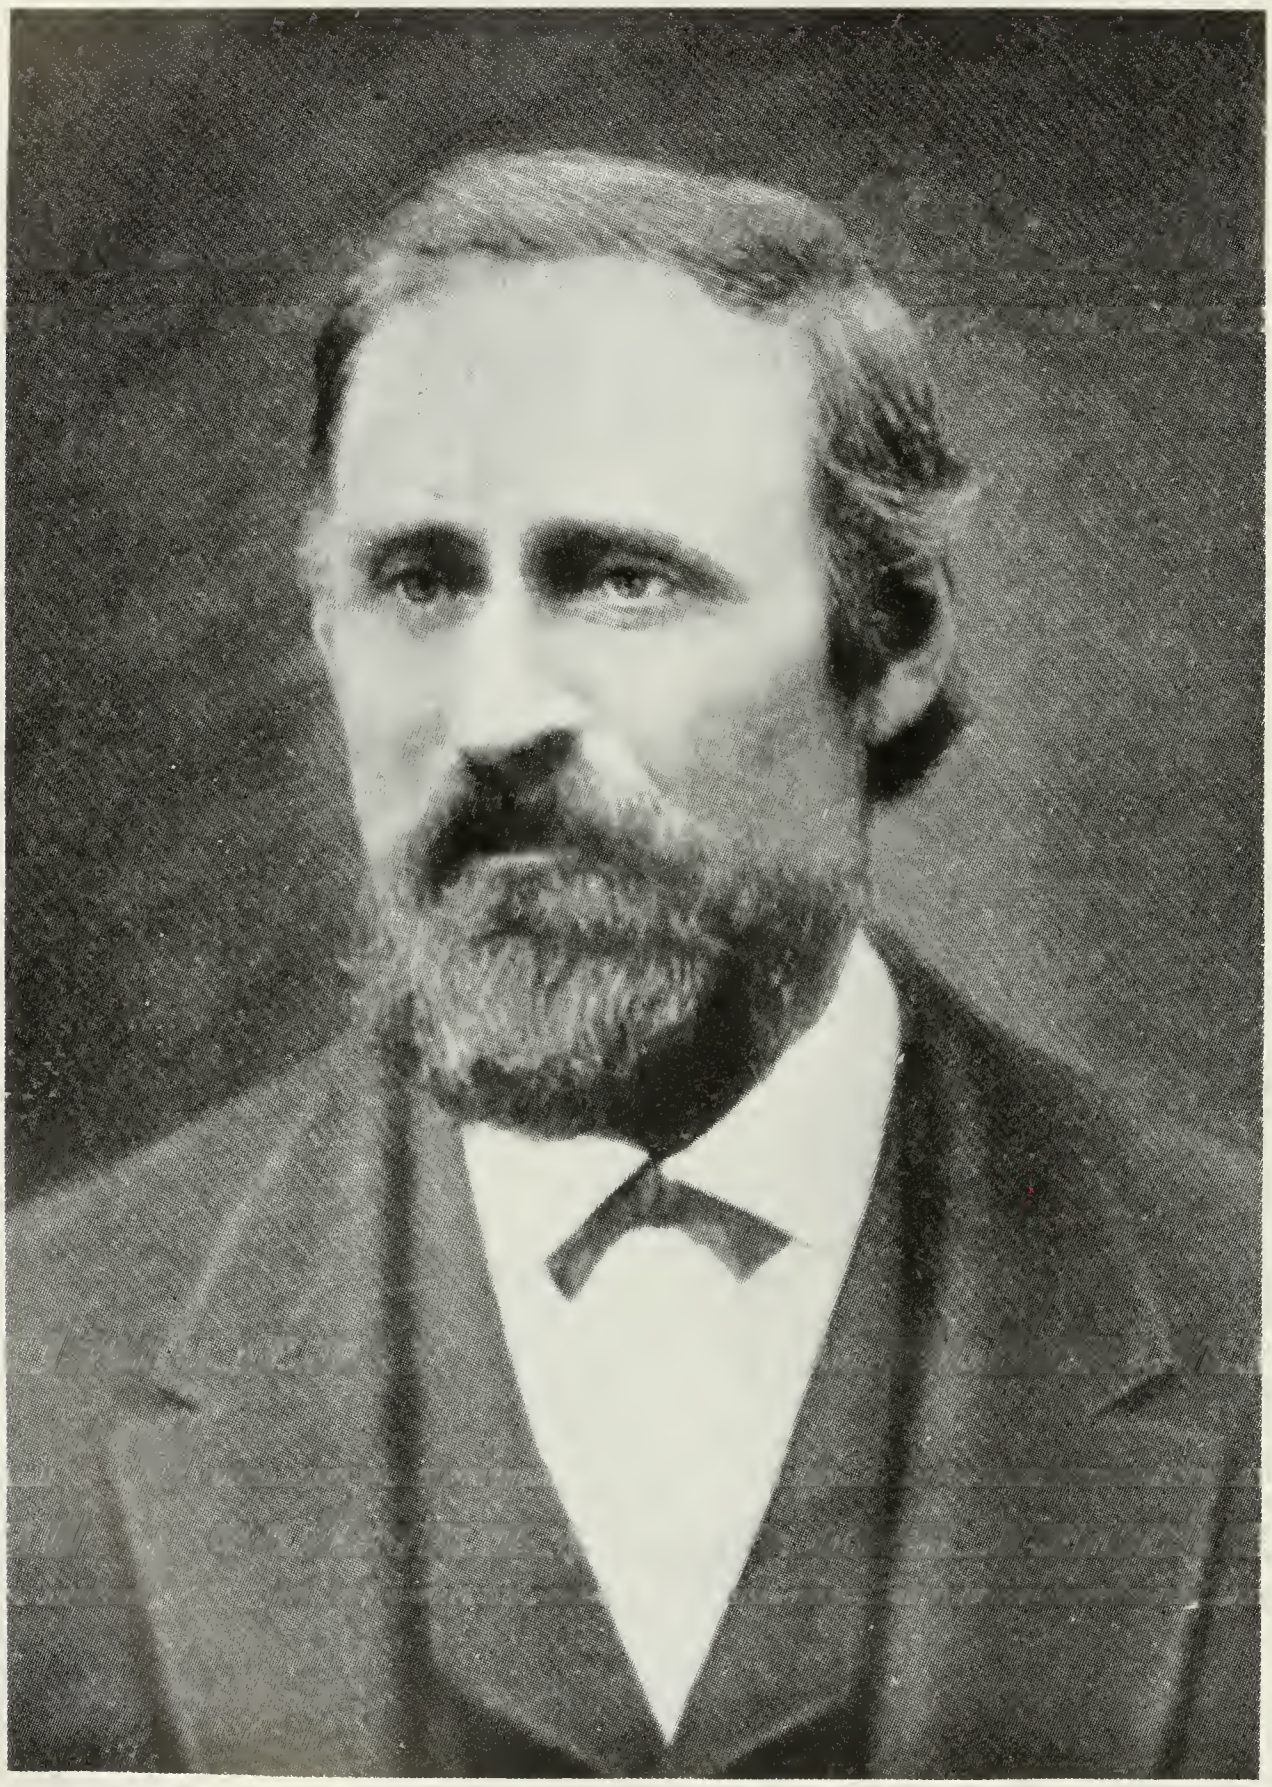
Mr. Grayson continued his farming operations near Lankin for seventeen years, and he then came to Montana and established himself among the few settlers or squatters about the site of Antelope, although the town was then in embryo, projected but unnamed. Here Mr. Grayson began his mercantile career in association with his brother John. The firm started their small business a mile south of the present site of the town with a car load of hardware which had been shipped into Culbertson and hauled the forty-five miles to this point. It had been arranged among the early settlers that one firm should establish a general merchandise store, the Graysons a stock of hardware, and a third party should put in a different line of goods. But after about a year in business the Grayson Brothers found that the first firm had failed to materialize and they therefore added a stock of general merchandise to their shelves in addition to their hardware, and thus became the proprietors of a general department store, carrying drugs, harness, implements, clothing and numerous other articles which were housed in a building twenty-eight by eighty feet, with a leanto 26 by 60 feet, and their implements were housed in a building 24 by 60 feet. Grayson Brothers continued as general merchants until a fire destroyed their store on June 6, 1918, and they have since carried only implements.

Grayson Brothers have became extensive farmers as well as merchants. The mercantile feature of the business is under the supervision of John Grayson, while the agricultural interests are carried on by Richard. The brothers are also stockholders in the First National Bank of Antelope, and they joined two other citizens in the erection of the first elevator in Antelope.

Richard Grayson was reared under republican influences and cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1892. In 1896 he cast his ballot for Mr. Bryan, but supported Major McKinley in 1900 and afterward all republican presidential candidates until 1912, when he voted for Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Grayson was married near Lankin, North Dakota, October 5, 1898, to Miss Emma J. Wooldridge, who was born near Toronto, Canada, May 14, 1878, a daughter of John and Mary (Millman) Wooldridge, both of whom were born in Devonshire, England. They were married there and came to America in 1872, locating first in Canada and afterward in North Dakota, where they were farming people. They subsequently removed to Oregon and spent several years in Albany before coming to Montana and establishing their home in Antelope. Here Mr. Wooldridge passed away in April, 1917, at the age of seventy years, and his widow returned to Albany, Oregon, where she is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Wooldridge's children were: Lizzie Ann, wife of Arthur Bolton, of Lacome, Alberta, Canada; William, who met an accidental death at Albany, Oregon; James, a farmer near Albany; John, whose home is also near Albany; Fred, who was the first of the children born in America and now resides at Lawton, North Dakota; George, of Lackie, Alberta, Canada; Emma, who became the wife of Mr. Grayson; Mabel, also at Langdon, North Dakota; the wife of Fern Christian; Eveline, the wife of Ervin Christian, of Lawton, North Dakota; and Ida, the wife of Jesse Davis, of Albany, Oregon. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Grayson: Mary Louise, who has finished her studies in the Antelope High School; Ernest C., who holds diplomas from both the Sheridan County School and the Detroit Automobile School, graduating from the latter in 1920; and George W., Arthur I., Milton J., Lillian E., Miles W., Leonard and Edward Franklin.

Mr. Grayson built the first home on the townsite of Antelope. It is a nine-room bungalow with basement, is equipped with hot water heat, lighted with electricity and is modern in every detail.



JAMES GREEN

HENRY S. BELGUM. The pioneer banking institution of Antelope is the Citizens State Bank, of which Henry S. Belgum is the cashier. His connection with this region of Montana dates from September, 1915, when he established his home here and entered the banking business. The Citizens State Bank had been founded three years previously by O. P. Waller, of Antelope, who became its first cashier, and in its organization he was associated with Mr. M. E. Wilson, of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

When the Citizens State entered the banking field the population of the locality comprised only a few early settlers, and its capital stock proved ample to care for the demands made upon it for some time and was fixed in accordance with the laws of Montana. But the original capital of $20,000 has since been increased, and each year during the past five years $5,000 have been added thereto. When Mr. Belgum came to the bank and became its directing head its deposits were in round numbers $24,000, and in the five years succeeding his connection with the institution it has increased its deposits to $200,000. The president has retained his office since the organization of the bank. During the past five years the institution has paid a twenty-five per cent dividend, thus indicating the care with which its affairs have been managed and directed.

Mr. Belgum came to the Citizens State Bank from Alexander, North Dakota, from a Wilson line of banks under the same heading. He joined this chain of financial institutions at that point about ten years ago, beginning his service with them as cashier of the McKenzie County State Bank, and had previously been employed in the Bank of Wheaton at Wheaton, Minnesota, where he spent about six years as a bookkeeper. Mr. Belgum was reared on a farm in Minnesota, in Pope County, where his birth occurred July 25, 1878. His boyhood and youth were devoted to the work of the farm and to the task of obtaining an education in the country schools. He also had two years of business training in a Minnesota commercial college, and from that institution entered upon his career as a banker.

Mr. Belgum's father is Syver Belgum, who pioneered into Minnesota after the Civil war and purchased school land near Glenwood. He is a native son of Norway, born at Nordre, Aurdahl. He was liberally educated and became a leader in the political and social life of his native community. He was married there to Miss Marie Dahl, and they have since spent the active years of their life on their farm near Glenwood, Minnesota. They have prospered in their efforts, and the home they have built is contributing to their comfort and satisfaction in their declining years. They have lived to celebrate their sixtieth wedding anniversary, which occurred July 27, 1918, and all of their children and grandchildren were present, numbering thirty-seven in all. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Syver Belgum who grew to mature years are as follows: Tore S., of Glenwood, Minnesota; Rose, wife of Andrew Peterson, of Wheaton, Minnesota; Emma, who married Anton Braaton, of Kensington, Minnesota; Henry S., whose home is in Antelope, Montana; Eric S., a minister in the Lutheran church at Appleton, Minnesota, and Ole, whose home is in Kensington, Minnesota.

Henry S. Belgum has not confined his interests entirely to his banking house. He has seen to it that institutions needing funds with which to develop something worth while in Antelope have been adequately provided, and among these institutions which he has assisted is the Antelope Milling Company, which the Citizens Bank financed. The bank also financed the building of the much needed $18,000 school building in Antelope, and throughout the period of his residence here Mr. Belgum has assisted in the general upbuilding of the village and its surrounding community, and much credit is due to his personal efforts in the healthy growth of the region. He has avoided political entanglements or activity in favor of any candidate, but he always casts his ballot and nationally has been voting as a republican.

The Belgum home in Antelope is a seven-room bungalow of modern conveniences, and was built by Mr. Belgum in 1917. He was married in Wheaton, Minnesota, December 27, 1915, to Miss Catherine Bauer, who was born in Marengo, Iowa, April 1, 1879, a daughter of Louis and Ricka (Raffensburger) Bauer, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. Mrs. Belgum holds a life certificate as a teacher in Minnesota, and was engaged in graded school work for nine years before her marriage. They have one daughter, Marie.

Mr. Belgum was chairman of the five Liberty Loan drives in Antelope, all of which were oversubscribed, and in the work of the Red Cross he was vice chairman of the locality.

JAMES GREEN. In the life story of the late James Green, who for almost fifty years was a man of substantial importance in Gallatin County, may be found much that is interesting and available as a part of the true history of the development of this section. Orphaned in early life and robbed of his guardian by death before he was grown, he had a large portion of discouragement to cloud his early life, but this made only more notable his subsequent attainment of financial independence and high place among those whose esteem he valued.

James Green was born in Worcestershire, England, May 1, 1830. He was a son of William and Sarah (Foley) Green, natives of England. His father, at that time a prosperous farmer, died when his son was an infant, and he was placed in the care of his grandfather, Joseph Green. The latter, having been converted to the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, immigrated to the United States in 1843, the grandson accompanying. Early in May they landed in the City of New Orleans, and from there came up the Mississippi River to Nauvoo, Illinois, where a large body of Mormons had established themselves. Like many other great movements now, as then, these people and their religious tenets met with opposition, and in 1846 the entire body left the State of Illinois. While removing to a point in Iowa, some ninety miles west of the Mississippi River, the grandfather of James Green died and his burial was at Farmington, Iowa. The youth then went under the guardianship of a Scotchman named Miller, with whom he remained in the neighborhood in which they had stopped until 1851, in which year they started west to the Missouri River.

In the following spring the party to which Mr. Miller and his charge belonged fitted out for a long journey across the plains, constructing their own boats for crossing streams. It was the custom of the Mormons to travel in parties of fifty and subdividing into companies of ten. During 1852 there were fifty-two parties of colonists of fifty members each that made the trip to the chosen haven in Utah. They met with many hardships, and during the cholera epidemic lost a large number, ten of Mr. Green's associates dying from this dread disease, one of this number being Mr. Miller, his guardian. The survivors finally reached Salt Lake City, and there Mr. Green remained a short time, moving then to Provo City, Utah, where he engaged in farming until he came to Montana on May 22, 1864. He arrived at Alder Gulch on July 10th following, and some weeks later settled on the Jefferson River, and remained in that neighborhood during the rest of a busy and useful life. He homesteaded 400 acres of land, and in company with his sons acquired several sections of fine grazing land on Madison River. He made his homestead one of the best in the county and was considered a capable and progressive farmer. He owned great herds of cattle, at times having 500 head of Herefords.

Mr. Green was married July 27, 1851, to Miss Margaret Wellwood, who was born in Canada and died January 18, 1869. This marriage was solemnized while the colonists were on their way from Iowa to Utah. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Green, as follows: Mary Jane, James William, Eliza, Melissa, Joseph A., Andrew J. and Charles. Mary Jane, who died at Bozeman, Montana, November 19, 1915, was the wife of Thomas Reese. James William, who was an extensive stockman at Sixteen-Mile, Montana, and later at Fort Collins, Colorado, died at the latter place December 26, 1913. Eliza, who is the widow of E. Eukes, resides on her fine ranch situated about nine miles northeast of Belgrade. Joseph A., of the above family, who died at Billings, Montana, August 8, 1917, was a commission merchant. Andrew J., who was born in Utah January 13, 1863, is now a banker at Independence, Missouri. Charles, who was born at Willow Creek, Montana, February 19, 1865, in association with his father and next older brother became interested in extensive farm and stock undertakings. They remained on the homestead until 1884, when they acquired nearly 1,000 acres, and with their father had an additional 1,000 acres of grazing land. They raised great herds of high grade cattle. In 1908 Charles moved to Seattle, on account of failing health, and died there October 14, 1914. On December 6, 1893, he was married to Miss Teria Tinsley, a daughter of William Tinsley, of Willow Creek.

James Green was a member of the Mormon Church, belonging to the branch known as the Josephites. He was esteemed throughout the entire region in which he was known, both for the uprightness of his life and the advanced and intelligent methods he pursued in all business relations. His death occurred on November 1, 1902.

Miss Melissa Green resides on the old homestead near Willow Creek. The farm produces abundantly of grain and hay and its upkeep is a matter of general comment. She has one of the most beautiful homes in Gallatin County. Her niece, Miss Ann Green, daughter of the late Joseph A. Green, resides with her.

Otto Hendrickson, of Antelope, is a merchant and farmer of this community of Sheridan County and has been identified with the interests of this region since 1909. It was in May of that year that he obtained a homestead two miles north of Antelope. He was among the first permanent settlers of the county, and with the passing years he has witnessed the development of the region from an almost unbroken wilderness to its present state of cultivation, and there are few who can claim priority of residence here.

Mr. Hendrickson was almost fresh from his native land of Norway when he arrived in Montana. He had immigrated from his native land in the fall of 1908, spending the first winter here in Bisbee, North Dakota, where his brother had preceded him. While there Otto Hendrickson gathered together a few effects preparatory to his journey to Montana. He was born at Eissvold, Norway, near the capital city of the country, Christiania, December 27, 1867. The first seventeen years of his life were spent on a farm, and during the following three years he was a student in a military school in Christiania. He next matriculated in the government agricultural school at Aas, where for two years he studied scientific farming, and then obtained a position in the largest railroad office in Christiania, spending sixteen years of his life there, and during a portion of that time was in charge of men engaged in specific work. On leaving the railroad office he prepared to immigrate to the United States, where his brothers had preceded him and made themselves useful and valuable citizens in their respective homes.

Mr. Hendrickson sailed from Christiania on the steamship Heliola bound for New York, passed through the famous immigrant station Ellis Island and reached his destination at Bisbee, North Dakota. He brought with him his family and his mother, then eighty years of age, and who died on her homestead near Antelope, Montana, six years later, in March, 1915.

Otto Hendrickson is a son of Martin Hendrick and Wilhelmina (Reis) Isaacson, born in Nanstad, Norway. His maternal grandfather was a member of a German family in that country. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Isaacson are: Isaac, a merchant and farmer at Bisbee, North Dakota; Mrs. Petro Couradine Hansen, a farmer in North Dakota; Marie, wife of Michael Wiflin, of Christiania, Norway; Arnt, whose home is in Chicago; Willie, also a resident of the Illinois metropolis, and Otto, who is the youngest of the children. Martin Hendrick Isaacson died in 1908, when past seventy-four years of age.

When Otto Hendrickson started the work of improvement on his Montana homestead he built a shack eighteen by fourteen feet, with a kitchen twelve by twelve feet, and this served the family as a home until 1914, when it was replaced by a more commodious residence, a two-story, seven-room dwelling with basement. The homestead is located in section 1, township 34, range 55, and there the improvements are located. His first efforts toward Montana farming was to clear the land of several thousand loads of rock so that he could break and cultivate the soil, and he was assisted in this heavy work by his wife. His first crop, flax sown on the sod, proved a good one, and in the following year he harvested a fair wheat crop. He was thus encouraged to enlarge his farming operations, and during the nine years he has farmed in Montana only once has he experienced a crop failure, that of 1919, when he realized only enough for seed for his next season's planting. Mr. Hendrickson is also engaged in merchandising in the town of Antelope. He entered upon his mercantile career on the 4th of August, 1919, in association with L. J. Onstad, and he has the management of their general store.

Mr. Hendrickson and his mother became citizens of the United States on the same day. His first presidential vote was cast for Mr. Wilson in 1912, but in the following presidential election he declined to vote. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, the church in which he was reared.

In October, 1897, Mr. Hendrickson was united in marriage with Miss Hilga Olson, a daughter of Ole Olson, who was engaged in the timber business in Norway. She is the oldest in a family of six sons and four daughters, and she was born January 15, 1876. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hendrickson are: Hendrick, who is a clerk for his father, Margaret, Hilga and Knute. The children have been given good educational advantages in the public schools and business colleges, and are on the road to useful citizenship.

RASMUS R. UELAND. One of the most prominent names in the locality of Antelope is that borne by Rasmus R. Ueland, one of the early settlers of the community and an extensive stock raiser and farmer. He arrived in the vicinity of Antelope on the 16th of April, 1907, and at once became identified with the life and interests of Sheridan County, although it was then included within the boundaries of Valley County, and the present site of the town of Antelope was almost unclaimed wilderness.

Mr. Ueland is a native son of Norway, born at Varhoug, Stavanger, September 3, 1875, a son of Rasmus and Mollie Ueland, both of these families being from the gaard called "Ueland," a little hamlet where the tillers of the surrounding locality lived. The following children were born to Rasmus and Mollie Ueland: Ingar, wife of August Schroeder, of Marshall, Minnesota; Mary, who married August Johnson, also of Marshall, Minnesota; Lars, who died at Antelope, Montana; and Rasmus R.

Rasmus Ueland, Sr., brought his family to the United States in the spring of 1882 and located in Yellow Medicine County, Minnesota. He bought land a few years later in Lyon County of that state, and is now a resident of Cottonwood, that state. He had served his time in the army of his native Norway, and after coming to the United States he took out citizens papers and became actively identified with the public affairs of his community. He is a republican voter and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife died in 1908, and he now maintains his home in the town of Cottonwood.

Rasmus R. Ueland obtained three months of schooling in English, but the greater part of his education was received in the Norwegian tongue in Minnesota under an efficient and capable teacher. He remained at home until the age of twenty-four years, and then started out in life for himself as a tenant farmer. On coming to Montana he brought with him a capital of about four hundred dollars, and his accumulations since that time have been the result of his own efforts on Montana soil.

In 1907 Mr. Ueland brought his emigrant car into Montana and unloaded it at Culbertson. In the car were two horses, four cows, two pigs and a breaking plow, these constituting a prominent part of his load. His first team was an old pair of horses which he bought for the express purpose of bringing into this new country where horse thieves were plentiful, feeling that if he were a victim of these night-prowlers he would not be a great loser. On reaching his destination he purchased a pair of steers, broke them to work, and with the aid of both the horses and steers he began the work of breaking sod, also adding one of his cows to the team. He was not disappointed in his first crop, for everything he planted seemed to grow and mature. But he farmed lightly until the World war, when farm produce became so much needed, and he has since centered more of his attention upon agriculture.

Mr. Ueland filed on his homestead in section 24, township 34, range 55, a quarter section, but before he acquired title to the land the railroad sought the west eighty acres of the tract for the townsite of Antelope, and he exchanged for eighty acres east of his quarter, the tract upon which his buildings and improvements are now located. His pioneer home was of the "shack" variety, a frame structure 14 by 18 feet and containing one room, and into this he moved his family, which consisted of his wife and three children. He hauled the lumber for this home on one load from Culbertson and erected the structure himself. This was his first home in Montana, and it continued to shelter the family until their present home was built four years later, a splendid frame dwelling two stories high, containing ten rooms and equipped with hot water heat. The barns have kept pace with the house in modern equipment and have developed from a small shed to their present extensive proportions.

Almost from the beginning of his identification with Montana's life Mr. Ueland has been engaged in the grain business, as a raiser and a buyer and shipper. This resulted in association with his neighbors, in his erecting the first elevator in Antelope. After continuing the business for about six years he abandoned it for the more intensive and extensive farming which he has since carried on. He has come to be recognized as one of the leading agriculturists of the county, having now about five hundred acres under cultivation and owning in all about 880 acres of land. His best success has come from the raising of wheat as a grain proposition, and in 1915 he threshed twenty-eight bushels to the acre. He has received some returns in wheat every year, but in 1919 he had his poorest yield, obtaining little more than his seed.

In addition to his farming interests Mr. Ueland has also contributed toward the upbuilding of the Town of Antelope. He was one of the original stockholders of the Citizens State Bank, and when the First National Bank of Antelope was organized he became a stockholder in that institution and still continues a member of its Board of Directors. He became interested in the movement to organize a farmers insurance company in this locality, and the organization is now known as the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company. This movement was launched by Nels Christenson of Dagmar, Montana, who is the secretary of the company, and Mr. Ueland is one of its agents for writing insurance policies.

Mr. Ueland was one of the delegates from Sheridan County to participate in the division of Valley County and the creation of Sheridan County, and in the later strife over the location of the county seat he was an active partisan of Plentywood for the honor. He has served as a member of the Antelope School Board for a period of nine years, and during his incumbency the new schoolhouse was built.

On December 22, 1898, in Lyon County, Minnesota, Mr. Ueland was married to Miss Mollie Thone, a daughter of Svend and Toron Thone, both of whom were born in Norway. The father was a soldier with the Danish army in 1864, fighting the battles against German aggression. When the family came to the United States they located in Dane County, Wisconsin, where Mrs. Ueland was born in 1874. They later continued their westward journey to Minnesota, making the trip in an ox wagon, and Mrs. Ueland grew to mature years in Lyon County of that state. She was the sixth born of her parents' seven children, and six of the children are still living. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Ueland are: Richard Sylvester, a high school student in Cottonwood, Minnesota, and Theodore Kermit, Rudolph and Mabel.

Ole B. Hoven, who came into the Antelope community of Montana in March, 1911, has done a work that ranks him as a leader in the modern era of progress. Perhaps to him more than to any other local citizen has been due the rising popularity of the tractor as an implement to subdue the virgin soil of this immense country. He was a practical demonstrator of the efficiency of the tractor for several years, though later his interests have grown until they require a general supervision on his part.

Mr. Hoven, who is one of the managers of the Hoven Grain and Elevator Company at Antelope, was born in Guldbrandsdalen, Norway, January 7, 1882, son of Borre and Anna (Wange) Hoven. In 1883, the year following his birth, his parents came to America and established their home in Norman County, Minnesota. They took up a homestead near Ada, that state, and are still living there. Their family is a large one, comprising seven sons and six daughters, as follows: Ole B.; Bennie, who died in Minnesota, unmarried; Mary, Mrs. Tom Thompson, of Northwood, North Dakota; Gilbert, of Norman County, Minnesota; Alfred, business associate with his brother Ole at Antelope; Gena, wife of Fred Scherf, of Downer, Minnesota; Sylvester, who paid the supreme sacrifice with his life in the great battle of the Argonne October 5, 1918; while the younger children are named Anna, Otto, Tina, Edwin, Ella and Olga. Borre Hoven acquired American citizenship in Minnesota, and has been a republican voter.

Ole Hoven was educated in the country schools of Norman County, Minnesota, and by the time he had attained manhood possessed a rather wide experience and familiarity with agricultural conditions in the Northwest. On leaving home he spent four years at Tolna, North Dakota, as manager of the Farmers Elevator Company. He was also agent for the sale of heavy farm machinery, including tractors. Mr. Hoven has a natural mechanical ability, and he became one of the early friends and experts in the handling of tractors for farm work.

When he came to Montana in March, 1911, it was direct from North Dakota. He shipped two carloads of machinery and horses, including a tractor. During the past eight or nine years Mr. Hoven has used the tractor to break up on the average 800 acres annually of the virgin soil of Montana and eventually he became a land owner. Today he owns 160 acres a half mile from Antelope and another quarter section near Coalridge. His faith in farming is undiminished as a result of nearly a decade of practical experience. The smallest crop area he has ever had since coming to Montana has been 600 acres. He has had a crop every year and every year has given him something of a harvest. His banner crop was in 1915, when his acre yield of wheat was more than twenty bushels. His big flax yield occurred in 1916, with twelve bushels to the acre. The first effort he made with corn was in 1919, when he grew a successful crop of fodder. His farming operations have placed him much beyond the plane upon which he started, and has served to convince him that this region has a reliable agricultural future.

Besides his conspicuous service in breaking up the sod for others and raising crops on his own account Mr. Hoven for seven years has been actively identified with the business life of Antelope. In the fall of 1913 he and his brother Alfred bought the Antelope Grain Company, including an elevator, and this has been a prominent feature of his business since then. In the spring of 1914, as part of the Hoven Grain Company's business, an oil station was also established. The individual contribution of Mr. Hoven to the improvement of Antelope was built in the fall of 1913, the electric light plant, which supplies the village and its inhabitants with electric current.

Mr. Hoven is now mayor of Antelope, being the second citizen honored with that office in the history of the corporation. His administration has been responsible for the building of all the sidewalks in the town. In matters of politics Mr. Hoven has regulated his ballot according to the dictates of his independent judgment. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, and is a past grand of the Lodge at Tolna, North Dakota, and has also sat in Grand Lodge.

At Lakota, North Dakota, August 12, 1908, he married Miss Ellnora Andersen, who was born at Minneapolis, but grew up in Nelson County, North Dakota, and had a common school education. She was the older of two daughters, her sister being Mrs. O. A. Steen, of Albany, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Hoven have two children: Vernon and Gordon.

Joseph C. Hunter, M. D. While the community of Antelope has known and appreciated his services as a physician and surgeon only a short time, Doctor Hunter is in fact one of the veteran members of the profession in Montana, having first come to the Northwest in territorial times. At Helena and elsewhere in the state he achieved a high reputation by his ability and by the influence he exerted on community affairs.

Doctor Hunter, who began the study of medicine nearly fifty years ago, was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, July 8, 1850. His grandfather, John Hunter, came out of Ireland when a young married man, and spent an active life as a farmer in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. Robert Hunter, one of his several sons and father of Doctor Hunter, was born in 1819, in Pennsylvania, and also spent his active life as a farmer. In 1858 he took his family west to Iowa, and for many years was a farmer and useful citizen in his community. He died at Princeton, Iowa, at the age of eighty-seven. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and a republican in politics. Robert Hunter married Elizabeth Jane Coe, whose father was a native of Scotland and a farmer at Trentum, Pennsylvania. She survived her husband several years and also died at Princeton, Iowa. Dr. Joseph C. is the oldest of several children, the others being: Loretta, wife of Gus Culbertson, in California; Mary, wife of Harvey Robertson, a resident of the State of Washington; Sarah, wife of James White, of Washington; John, of Mapleton, Iowa; and Robert E., Jr., of Iowa City, Iowa.

Doctor Hunter was eight years of age when his parents moved to Iowa, and while in that state he attended country schools, had the advantages of an academy at Princeton, and acquired his higher education in Monmouth College, Illinois, from which he graduated in the scientific course. Early in the year 1871 Doctor Hunter entered Rush Medical College at Chicago. He resumed his studies there in the fall and continued until the work of the college was interrupted by the great Chicago fire of October 9th. After that he went to Philadelphia, and was a student of medicine in the Uinversity of Pennsylvania until graduating in March, 1873. With the exception of a few years Doctor Hunter has been a diligent worker in his profession ever since.

He practiced in and around Dubuque, Iowa, for about ten years, and in 1884 came to Montana, beginning his professional career at Boulder as physician at the Boulder Hot Springs. He was at that point when the Great Northern built through the region, and had the contract for the medical work of a section of the railroad until the contract expired in 1887. In that year he removed to Helena, and continued his professional work until 1889. He was also interested in the drug business as a member of the Triangle drug store in the Depot Addition to the capital city. In 1889 Doctor Hunter removed to Neihart, having charge of the Miners' Union Hospital until 1893. On his return to Helena he resumed practice as a specialist in chronic, nervous and other diseases. During the fall of that year he took a special course in the Chicago Post-Graduate School of Medicine, and on his return remained in Helena until 1895. In that year he moved to Butte and was in practice in that city during the epidemic of lagrippe. He contracted that disease himself, was bedridden for several months and lost his health completely. A change of climate being advisable, entailing temporary abandonment of his profession, Doctor Hunter spent three years in Oklahoma and for a time was at his old homestead of Iowa. On returning to Montana he resumed practice at Fairfield, where he remained until America entered the war. He went out to Outlook and took charge of the practice left by Doctor Mangan, who had entered the army. Doctor Hunter covered the field around Redstone until the fall of 1919, when he located at Antelope, his present home.

During his early years at Boulder, Montana, Doctor Hunter held the office of county coroner and also did the work of county physician. He is a republican in national elections, a member of the Montana State Medical Association and the American Medical Association, and has filled all the chairs in Dubuque Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has taken the uniformed rank degrees of that order.

While in Iowa he married as his first wife Mary Garber. She was the mother of two children, Robert R., of Spokane, Washington, and Pearl, who is married and also lives at Washington. At Outlook, Montana, Doctor Hunter married for his present wife Miss Grace B. Coburn, of St. Paul, daughter of John Coburn. She was born in Wisconsin, is a graduate of the Durand High School, and was a successful teacher in Minnesota and Montana.

Mrs. Ruphema J. (Van Camp) Sappington. Closely associated with the development of this part of Montana, Mrs. Ruphema J. (Van Camp) Sappington is the widow of one and daughter of another of the early settlers of this state, and enjoys the distinction of being a well known resident of Sappington. She was born in Calhoun, Harrison County, Iowa, September 9, 1859, a daughter of Isaac Van Camp. He was born in New Jersey in 1822, and died at Dillon, Montana, in August, 1900. Although reared in his native state, Isaac Van Camp went to Ohio in young manhood and was engaged in farming, but later went to Indiana, and still later to Harrison County, Iowa. In 1864 he came to Montana and was a pioneer of Bannock City. Two years later he bought a ranch on the Beaverhead, near the present site of Dillon, and resided upon it until within a few years of his death, when he sold this property and retired to Dillon. All of his mature years he was connected with agricultural matters, and after coming to Montana specialized in stock raising, being noted for the fine horses he produced. From the time the republican party was organized he gave it an intelligent support. The Methodist Episcopal Church was the medium through which he gave expression to his religious views, and he was active in its work. The maiden name of his wife was Martha Stocden, and she was born and married in Ohio and died at Dillon, Montana, in 1892. The children of Isaac Van Camp and his wife were as follows: Charles, who was a farmer, was born December 16, 1856, and went to Idaho two years ago; and Mrs. Sappington.

Ruphema J. Van Camp attended the rural schools of Beaverhead County, Montana, being a pupil in the first school established in the territory of Montana. It was located at Bannock City and was a typical pioneer educational establishment, both teacher and pupils contending with lack of what are now regarded as essentials, but nevertheless succeeding in the imparting and acquiring of considerable knowledge of the fundamentals.

In 1875 Ruphema J. Van Camp was united in marriage at Dillon, Montana, to Henry H. Sappington, who passed away at Butte, Montana, in 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Sappington became the parents of the following children: Tyrie I., who resides at Great Falls, Montana, is a member of the police force of that city; Charles H., who is a farmer and stockraiser, lives at Sappington; Mattie E., who married Fred Dawson, a farmer, resides at Stevensville, Montana; Fannie P., who married Emerson Ruegamer, died at Three Forks, Montana, in 1917, but he survives and lives on the Madison Bench, near Three Forks, where he is engaged in farming; Ruphema, who married Floyd McCall, car inspector for the Northern Pacific Railroad at Butte, Montana; Henrietta Helen, who died at the age of eleven years; Harold H., who is on the home ranch of his father; and Harvy A., who is also on the home ranch. Harvy A. Sappington enlisted for service in the great war in August, 1917, and was sent overseas in July, 1918. He was in the Saint Mihiel, the Argonne Forest and Lys Scheldt drives. Although gassed he was only incapacitated for a short period. He was in the medical detachment, Three Hundred and Sixteenth Field Signal Battalion, Ninety-first Division, and was returned to this country on April 16, 1919, and mustered out on May 1, 1919. On account of his bravery this gallant young soldier was cited twice, once for his action in the Argonne Forest, and again for similar conduct in the Lys Scheldt drive in Belgium.

Mrs. Sappington traces her family ancestry back through several generations in this country to a Holland forebear who came to America in colonial days.

Henry H. Sappington, husband of Mrs. Sappington, was born at St. Louis, Missouri, January 21, 1846, and remained there until, in spite of his youth, he enlisted in the Second Missouri State Militia, under Colonel Stafford, and served in the state during the fall of 1864, at the time the North and the South were at war. After the close of hostilities he returned to his family homestead, and remained until 1869, then coming to Montana. After spending a short period at Dillon, Mr. Sappington went to Idaho, and after a somewhat unsuccessful experiment in mining returned to Montana and secured work on the ranch owned by Poindexter & Orr, where he remained until 1871. Going then to Oregon, he bought a small band of stock, brought it to Montana and took up a location on the Butte belt, nineteen miles from Logan, where he secured a ranch of 4,000 acres, of which a couple of hundred acres had been irrigated. This ranch was well protected and supplied with water, and on it he soon had a fine herd of Shorthorn and Hereford cattle. During the summer of 1874 Mr. Sappington drove 500 head of cattle to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and this small herd was the first bunch of cattle sent to Chicago from Montana by way of Cheyenne.

In addition to his success as a stockraiser, which was pronounced, Mr. Sappington soon became a forceful factor in public affairs, and was elected in 1893 to the State Assembly on the democratic ticket and took part in some very important legislation while a member of that body. He erected an elegant residence in a beautiful valley, surrounded by undulating mountains, and traversed by the Jefferson River, which enters the valley through one canyon and leaves it through another one 3½ miles beyond.

The history of the Sappington family is an interesting one and is traced back to the great-great-grandfather of Mr. Sappington, John Sappington, who, although a man of considerable importance in England, chose to leave his native land and come to the American colonies, accompanied by his brother James. This was at the same time that Lord Baltimore came to the colonies. They settled in Maryland, where John Sappington's son, John Sappington, Jr., was born. The latter was a soldier of the American Revolution, in which he served under General Greene, and he gained distinction on account of his conspicuous bravery at the battle of the Brandywine. The third Sappington to bear the name of John was born in Madison County, Kentucky, May 28, 1790, the family having been transferred to that state, but after he reached maturity he, too, felt the urge of the migrating impulse and moved on westward into Missouri, becoming one of the leading men of his time, and serving as a presidential elector. In addition to acquiring 2,000 acres of land, he was very successful in several other lines of endeavor, and in 1815 branched out into tanning, which he carried on until 1845. During all of this period he superintended the operation of his large rural property, and in 1857 received from the St. Louis Agricultural and Mechanical Association a premium for having a model farm. During the War of 1812 he volunteered for service and was commanded by Col. Nathan Boone, a son of Daniel Boone, who, like his illustrious father, was noted for his valor and gallantry. For three terms John Sappington was a member of the Missouri State Assembly, and never lost his interest in the advancement of the state. He was the father of seventeen children, and all of them located in Missouri.

Tyrie Sappington, a son of John Sappington III, was the father of Henry H. Sappington, and he was married to Miss Frances Sale, of Caroline County, Virginia. He and his wife settled on a farm adjoining the old homestead, and there they rounded out their useful lives, he passing away in 1883. Like his father, Tyrie Sappington was a public-spirited man, and never let pass an opportunity to advance the interests of his community. His seven children were worthy of him.

With such an ancestral record behind him, there is little wonder that Henry H. Sappington played so important a part in the expansion of the new state into which his good judgment led him. Although his earthly career has terminated, he has passed the torch of life to the next generation, and is well and honorably represented in the fine family of children he and his wife have given to their country.

Judson D. Matkin, a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Sheridan County, became a resident of Montana when a boy of eight years, coming with his parents and locating at Stanford in the Judith Basin country. He was born at Bismarck, Missouri, May 4, 1875, a son of Houston Dallas Matkin, who for many years farmed the old homestead in St. Francis County, Missouri, where his father had settled as a pioneer. Houston D. Matkin was born, reared and married in that community, lived a quiet and uneventful life, gave his political allegiance to the democratic party and affiliated with the Baptist Church. From his native state of Missouri he started West with his family, spending two years at Ogden, Utah, and Malad City, Idaho, at which place he died in 1883. He had married Mary Ellen Dent, whose people were also pioneers in St. Francis County, Missouri, and were farmers there. Her death occurred at Plentywood, Montana, January 6, 1918. Their children numbered the following: Mrs. Henry Keeton, of Great Falls, Montana; Judson D., of Plentywood; and Mrs. Forest Goodman, also of Plentywood. The mother married for her second husband Samuel W. Barnes, and their children were Asa F., of Redstone, Montana, and Coleman W., of Great Falls, this state.

Judson D. Matkin was reared in a community where educational advantages were limited, he having often ridden eight or nine miles to attend school. He remained with his mother until reaching his majority, his last years at home being passed in the Judith Basin country, and at the age of twenty-five he came into Eastern Montana and settled on the unsurveyed public domain of Sheridan County, intending to enter a tract when it opened for settlement. He at first sheared sheep for a living and also put up hay, and he subsequently located his claim near Redstone, filing and proving up in 1909. The logs for his pioneer home there he hauled from the Missouri River, seventy-five miles distant, and it contained one room, dirt-roofed, but floored and had two windows and a door. The little pioneer home, the first he ever owned, still stands as a landmark and is now doing service as a chicken house. In time this cabin was replaced by a story and a half, nine-room frame dwelling, and a good barn was also built to accommodate his thirty head of horses.

Mr. Matkin began his enterprise here as a stockman, but gradually drifted into grain growing, and while drouth has been a great obstacle to success in this line, good crops have been harvested on his place, equalling any yield ever grown by him in other locations. His best flax yield per acre was seventeen bushels, his best wheat yield twenty-eight bushels of spring wheat and enormous crops of oats have been grown. With the passing years Mr. Matkin has added to his land until he has acquired five quarter sections, all fenced, and 500 acres of the tract are under the plow. He also leases land, of which a part is devoted to agricultural purposes.

Mr. Matkin located in Sheridan County before municipal and civil enterprises had been established. His school district at first was No. 5 and the school house was at Culbertson, seventy-five miles from his ranch. The region was at that time all included in Valley County, and when the Culbertson people separated from the district all of what is now Sheridan County became one school district and Mr. Matkin was made a member of the district board. He went to Froid, fifty miles distant, to attend school meetings, but finally the old Redstone School was built, three miles from the Matkin Ranch, and this placed the family what was considered at that time close to educational facilities.

Mr. Matkin shaped his politics according to the Missouri plan and cast his first presidential vote for W. J. Bryan in 1896. He afterward supported Mr. Bryan in all his aspirations for the presidency, voted for Judge Parker in 1904, and supported Mr. Wilson in both his elections. He was a candidate for the Lower House of the Montana Assembly in 1912, but was unsuccessful, and in 1916 was elected a member of the Board of County Commissioners for a six year term, succeeding Commissioner P. J.

Erie. Mr. Matkin's colleagues on the board were Frank Weinrich and J. C. Timmons, John Anderson later becoming a member, and still later, when Roosevelt County was separated, R. G. Tyler was appointed to membership on the board. These commissioners have encouraged road work and have performed a considerable amount of this public improvement, but the chief matter to come before the board has been the drouth relief measure. In 1917 a bond election was called and carried for $245,000 for the purchase of seed for the farmers, but the continued drouth prevented the growing of a crop and necessitated the calling of another election for a like purpose, which was held January 2, 1920, but the measure was defeated.

Mr. Matkin maintains his permanent home on the ranch, but the family spend the winter months in Plentywood in order to afford the children good school facilities. He met the lady who afterward became his wife at Judith Basin, where she was visiting a sister, and they were married at Glasgow, Montana. She was then Miss Edie M. Hall, and her home was at Edison, Washington. She was born in Marathon County, Wisconsin, June 4, 1883, a daughter of Hugh P. and Georgianna (Olsen) Hall. The father, who was born in Wisconsin, spent his industrial life as a farmer, and he is now living at Bow, Washington. Mrs. Hall was born in Norway. She was eleven years of age when she came to the United States, and she grew to mature years and was married in Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Hall became the parents of children as follows: Alfred J., of Bow, Washington; Martha H., wife of William Davis, of Sedro Woolley, Washington; Mamie L., the wife of G. C. Hopley, of Thomas, Washington; Mrs. Matkin; and Thelma J., the youngest child and a resident of Bow, Washington. Five children have also been born to Mr. and Mrs. Matkin, namely: Judson D., Jr., Hugh Merrit, Forrest Hall, Gwendolyn Ellen and Edie Martha. The second son, Hugh Merrit, died of the influenza in 1918.

During the recent World war period Mr. Matkin was a member of the Sheridan County Council of Defense, and he was also active and a generous contributor in all other war relief funds and especially to Red Cross work. Mrs. Matkin was a member of the Plentywood Chapter of the Red Cross, and made her influence felt in promoting the interests of the organization. Mr. Matkin took his initial degrees in Masonry in Culbertson and became a charter member of the Plentywood Lodge of Masons, of which he is a past master, and also a member of the Plentywood Chapter. He took the Shrine work in Helena, and belongs to Algeria Temple and to the Helena Consistory. In 1916 he attended the Grand Lodge of Masons. Mr. Matkin is a member and the vice president of the Farmers Grain and Mercantile Company of Plentywood.

JACK BENNETT. Among the Montana residents of the old regime, when cattle raising and ranching formed the chief industry of the commonwealth, is enrolled the name of Jack Bennett, the present sheriff of Sheridan County. He came into the region in 1900 as a stockman, as one of the well remembered Bennett Brothers, who established themselves at Redstone and were connected with the cattle industry in this region for several years.

Bennett Brothers identified themselves with Montana first as stock shippers into the western part of the state for food purposes, obtaining their stock in Minnesota and Dakota and bringing them into this region in car load lots. They also brought in hogs from the East and slaughtered them in the mining regions of the state, and this industry was carried on until 1902.

Jack Bennett first saw Montana as early as 1886, when but a lad of sixteen he came to this northwestern region from Ontario, Canada, and stopped at Big Timber to work on the sheep ranch of Doctor Parberry, one of the landmarks of the locality of Lavina. The young lad spent one year in the Musselshell country, running cattle and shearing sheep, and then dropped back to the Bearpaw Mountains and became a wage worker on sheep ranches. He sheared sheep in the community surrounding Helena, near Silver City and that vicinity, and while in that region he also spent two winters in school in Haun's Business College, which completed his school days. Leaving that region, Mr. Bennett made his way out to Ogden, Utah, where he secured work as a bookkeeper and remained for a year, returning then to Butte, Montana, and discovering the demand for hogs in that community, he joined his three brothers in the stock business, they establishing their headquarters at St. Paul.

When he gave up the business of shipping stock into Montana Mr. Bennett went to Duluth, Minnesota, where he spent about five years as a wage worker, then again took up the business of dealing in hogs, shipping from Kansas and Missouri to the Pacific Coast towns of Seattle, Portland, Sacramento, San Francisco and Los Angeles. He remained in that industry until 1902, although he and his brothers had previously established themselves near Redstone, Montana, and engaged in ranching. Mr. Bennett thereafter not only ranched and bred stock, but proved up a homestead at Redstone and developed a farm there. While thus engaged he was appointed sheriff of the Sheridan County, to succeed Tom Courtney, the first sheriff of the county, who lost his life while attempting to arrest a fugitive colored man. After serving out Mr. Courtney's term, Mr. Bennett was a candidate for the office, but met defeat at the polls, although since then he has been twice elected the sheriff of Sheridan County, succeeding Jack Dugan. His service as chairman of the Draft Board during the early period of the participation of this country in the World war made him an exceedingly busy man, about sixteen men having been mobilized into the service. His work was chiefly administrative.

Mr. Bennett was born in Cornwall, England, August 2, 1870, but was brought by his parents to Ontario, Canada, in 1883, the family locating in Durham County, where they engaged in farming. His father, William Bennett, was a landholder in Cornwall, England. His last years were spent in Ontario, Canada, and he lies buried at Blackstone. He married Kezia Salmon, and they were the parents of the following children: John F., whose home is in St. Paul; Mrs. Catherine Feetham, also of St. Paul; Annie, wife of W. T. Towner, of the City of New York; Jack, the Sheridan County sheriff; Kezia, of St. Paul; and Sid, who is the mayor of Scobey, Montana. The mother of this family after the death of her husband followed her children into the United States and spent her last years in St. Paul, Minnesota, where she lies buried at Oakland Cemetery.

After locating in Sheridan County Jack Bennett was married to Miss Anna Davis, who was born in Abercrombie, North Dakota, a daughter of John A. Davis, who came into the region of Sheridan County about 1901 from Kalispell, Montana. Mrs. Bennett was liberally educated and taught school in Sheridan County. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett were married December 24, 1904, and she passed away in February, 1907, leaving one daughter, Catherine. In 1910 Mr. Bennett was married to Nina L. Bogert, a daughter of N. S. and Lucinda (Styles) Bogert. The father was born in Vermont, and on his migration from the East to Montana he lived in the states of Iowa and North Dakota. He devoted the active years of his life to agricultural pursuits. To this union have been born four children, Jack, Jr., Charlotte, Bill and Sidney.

Mr. Bennett became a republican voter and cast his first presidential ballot for Benjamin Harrison in 1892 in Duluth. He has continued along with the party since, voting for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904, for Mr. Taft in 1908, in 1912 espoused the progressive wing of the party and in 1916 supported the republican presidential candidate. He became a member of the Masonic order at Redstone, Montana, and has taken the Blue Lodge work and is also a Shriner. He is a member of the fraternal society the Modern Samaritans and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

CHARLES E. CORYELL. The present county surveyor of Sheridan County is Charles E. Coryell, and to him also belongs the honor of being the first to fill that office in Sheridan County, to which he was elected in April, 1913. He has been identified with the State of Montana during the past thirteen years, locating here for the purpose of acquiring a homestead, which he entered near Froid, now in Roosevelt County, and he remained thereon and improved his claim until he had complied with the Government requirements and secured title, leaving it only to assume the duties of the surveyor of the county.

Mr. Coryell brought with him to Montana the mental equipment as a civil engineer ample to enable him to perform efficient work in his capacity as a county surveyor, for he spent many years in railroad engineering work before his advent into the Northwest. His chief work in his present capacity lies in the development and construction of highway systems for the county, and he originated the first road plan and started the first real road work of the county. More than 3,000 miles of established and opened highways have been given to the public use under his regime, about 250 miles of which is permanent work, one main line crossing the county from east to west, with connecting roads between the towns on the railroad lines. Sheridan County as originally created has also been mapped by Mr. Coryell, and another map, clearly showing its boundaries since it was divided from Roosevelt County, is under construction.

Mr. Coryell was born in Kent County, Michigan, August 19, 1876, but when he was only ten years of age, in 1886, his parents established their home at Carlton, Minnesota, near Duluth, and there he spent the remaining days of his youth, attending the Duluth High School, and serving in different salaried capacities, including a short time as a bank clerk, a cruiser on the iron range and a teacher in the public schools of Minnesota, all this occurring before he began preparation for his real life's work. He is a son of Charles E. Coryell, and this name has gone through five generations of the family. The grandfather, also named Charles E., was born in Lockport, New York, was a life-long farmer and was the son of a Mexican war soldier. The first of the Coryell family in this country came from England early in 1700, and establishing his home in the State of New York he became a captain in the Colonial army, although a brother served in a like office in the British army during the Revolutionary war.

Charles E. Coryell, the father of the Montana citizen, was born in New York, and spent the greater part of his industrial life in the lumber business. He was a New York soldier in the Civil war, spending more than two years as a member of the New York Mounted Rifles in Sheridan's Cavalry and taking part in all the battles in which his command participated during the last eighteen months of the war, including the engagement of Winchester. He was a captain's orderly, and completed his military service on police duty in Virginia after the peace terms were signed. He was twice wounded, once with a bayonet in a hand-to-hand conflict with the Confederates and again in the leg from a bullet. Mr. Coryell continued a resident of Minnesota until after the death of his wife, when he joined his son in Sheridan County, Montana. He has always been actively identified with the work of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is one of the few soldiers left to wear the patriotic button of the order.

Charles E. Coryell, Sr., married Elizabeth Pitts, who was born in Jackson County, Michigan, and died in December, 1916, after becoming the mother of five children, namely: Zella, who died at Knox, Indiana, after becoming the wife of Henry C. Conrad; Ella, the wife of Lewis Habhegger, of Wrenshall, Minnesota; Charles E., of Plentywood; Ernest, a resident of Browns Valley, Minnesota; and Roy, who entered the navy in the United States service early in the present century and has never been heard from since.

Charles E. Coryell began his preparation for engineering work in the Northern Indiana University at Valparaiso, graduating in civil engineering there in 1900. He had previously completed the scientific course and received the degree of B. S. in that institution, entering the university first in 1898, leaving at that time a clerkship in the Clark & Jewell wholesale grocery house in Grand Rapids, Michigan, he having become acquainted with Mr. Clark while cruising timber lands for him in Northern Minnesota. In 1901 Mr. Coryell became connected with the Soo Line Railroad, performing his first work for the company as a transit man on location in Minnesota. His first large piece of work was the location of the line from Thief River Falls to Kenmare, North Dakota, he having charge of the topography work of that survey. During the following summer he was engaged in construction work for the company at Russell, North Dakota, later was connected with the Drake-Garrison Cutoff of the Soo Line, also in North Dakota, and prior to this work he was engaged in smaller capacities with the company, and completed his services with that road in the construction of the Brooten-Duluth line, also platting for the company 160 acres at Mille Lac as a summer resort. During the seven years he was connected with the company his headquarters were in Minneapolis, but in season he had temporary offices in the field where the projects of the company were carried on. After severing his connection with the Soo Line Railroad Company he came direct to Montana.

Mr. Coryell was married at Russell, North Dakota, March 20, 1907, to Miss Minnie Bahn. She was born in North Dakota, as was also her mother, but her father was born in Germany. She is a daughter of H. F. and Celia (Commons) Bahn, and was the first born of their children, three daughters and two sons. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Coryell, the eldest of whom also bears the name of Charles E., the four others being Harry, Sidney, and Deone and Ione, twin sisters. Mr. Coryell gave his first presidential vote to Major McKinley, and he has given his allegiance to the party from that time to the present. He is now serving his third term in the office of county surveyor. Since reaching the age of maturity he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, attaining the Royal Arch degree. He is also identified with the Odd Fellows order, and has his membership in both orders at Plentywood.

ADOLPH A. MAJOR, who is now serving Sheridan County as its clerk and recorder, has been prominently identified with the business and civic interests of Plentywood and its community since October, 1910. He was born in LaCrosse, Wisconsin, June 30, 1885, and he spent the early years of his life there, gaining his elementary education in its Second Ward school and subsequently entering high school. But before completing the high school course he matriculated in a business college in LaCrosse, and there gained a knowledge of shorthand and typewriting as well as bookkeeping and commercial law.

Mr. Major is a member of an early pioneer family of LaCrosse, Wisconsin, one which took up its abode within its borders during its formative period. The founder of the family in the United States was his grandfather, who was by trade a tailor, and he established the family in LaCrosse and now lies buried there. In his family were four sons and four daughters, five of whom survive: Rudolph, Albert, Mrs. William Cooper, Miss Matilda Major and Mrs. Helen Madden.

Rudolph H. Major, who still maintains his home in LaCrosse, was born in New York City November 5, 1860, but when a young lad was taken by his parents to LaCrosse, Wisconsin, and there he has ever since resided. He learned and followed for a number of years the cigar makers' trade, and then left his trade to accept the federal position of deputy stamp collector, while later he was made clerk of the Board of Public Works for the City of La Crosse, and for some years he filled that position. His next employment was in a clerical capacity for the Heilemann Brewing Company, later became the health officer of the city, but finally returning to the Heilemann Brewing Company he is now serving as the manager of the traffic department of that corporation.

Rudolph H. Major married Johanna Bach, whose mother was born in Germany, but Mrs. Major was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Her father, Adam Bach, was for a number of years a stone mason at LaCrosse. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Bach comprised three daughters, Mrs. Minnie Burkhardt, Mrs. Elizabeth Bernd and Mrs. Major. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Major: Adolph Alexander, whose home is in Plentywood; Lilah, wife of A. H. Voss, of LaCrosse; and Isabel, the wife of A. B. Hickisch, also of LaCrosse.

Adolph A. Major had completed his educational training and was ready to enter upon a business life at the early age of seventeen, and on April 11, 1902, he accepted the position of stenographer and clerk with the Southern Minnesota Division of the C. M. & St. P. Railroad Company at LaCrosse, continuing in that capacity until the fall of 1906, when he accepted the office of stenographer and general clerk with the division freight and passenger agent of the same road there. In the fall of 1907 he went to Wheaton, Minnesota, to become the stenographer and office man for F. W. Murphy, the leading lawyer of that city, and while thus engaged Mr. Major had occasion to report testimony at coroner's inquests, in justice courts, and for almost a term he was reporter in the District Court at Breckenridge, Minnesota.

With the hope of finding a wider and more remunerative field in the Northwest for the exercise of his professional qualifications Mr. Major came to Montana, arriving at Culbertson in March, 1910, and near that place he exercised his homestead right and proved up his claim. He soon, however, became associated with the Valley Land Company at Culbertson as secretary and stenographer to its owners, Messrs. Brown and Matthews, and in the course of his work with the corporation he reported testimony in contest cases coming before one of its members, who was a United States land commissioner. Mr. Major also reported other contest cases in Valley and Sheridan counties tried before various United States commissioners.

He maintained his home in Culbertson until acquiring title to his claim and then located in Plentywood. His first work here was as clerk in the assessor's office, was next a deptuy in the clerk and recorder's office, and in February, 1918, took up abstract work in partnership with Miss Funk under the name of the Abstract and Title Company. Mr. Major continued with that line of work until he was made the recorder and clerk of Sheridan County. His connection with this community has been that of a public spirited citizen interested in its civic welfare and upbuilding, and he proved his worth to Plentywood in its contest with Medicine Lake for county seat honors, his ability and work at reporting public meetings proving a valuable asset to his home town. In creating sympathy and interest in this county seat contest he also took an active part as a member of the Plentywood band, a service which his community lost no opportunity to commend.

When a boy Mr. Major studied instrumental music, becoming an efficient young pianist, and he gradually drifted into band work and became a trombone player. In Plentywood he became well known in musical circles, was made a member of the town orchestra and recently he organized the Major Orchestra, which provides excellent music for community dances, for moving picture shows and various other social functions. Mr. Major is the manager of the orchestra, in which he also plays the trombone.

Mr. Major's early political tendencies were shaped in harmony with those advocated by his father, who was an adherent of the democratic party, and the son gave his first presidential vote to William J. Bryan, but later, following his own convictions, he gave allegiance to republican principles and as a republican was elected to his present office.

At Wheaton, Minnesota, December 23, 1908, Adolph A. Major was married to Miss L. Pearl Warner, who was born near that city, a daughter of William A. and Edna (Tubbs) Warner, the father a native of one of the Canadian provinces and the mother was born in Wisconsin. They were the parents of four children, the three surviving being Mrs. Major, Mrs. Ellis J. Hutton, of Butte, Montana, and Miss Gladys Warner, of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Major, Beatrice and Marian Gene.

An interesting story is told of the origination of the name Major. It is related that it was given to members of one of the early generations of the family by a teacher who had the children of this Polish family in his school room. While making a record of the pupils of his classes he came to some who spelled their name "Mazurkiewicz." Regarding this as a burden which ought not to be borne through life by the little folks the teacher, with an air of disdain, said "Call it Major," and thus wrote the name which endowed future members of this Slavic family with a new designation.

CHARLES WILLIAM CHOWNING. Indomitable determination, persistent effort and wise investments have all aided in the production of the present prosperity of Charles William Chowning, postmaster of Ennis, and proprietor of the leading mercantile establishment of this part of Madison County. He is one of the old settlers of Montana, has passed through many of its periods of development, and can take justifiable pride in what he has himself aided in bringing about. Mr. Chowning was born at Louisville, Kentucky, June 29, 1860, a son of Charles W. Chowning and grandson of John Chowning, the latter a native of Virginia. Early in life he migrated to Kentucky, and after many years of profitable effort as a farmer he died in that state in 1864, when well along in years. The Chowning family is of English origin, and was established in Virginia prior to the American Revolution. On the maternal side of the house, Charles William Chowning's grandfather was Robert Wooden, of Virginia, who married Lucy Southey, brought in pioneer fashion by her parents to Kentucky when thirteen years of age. On this trip overland she and her brother drove thirteen head of cattle behind the three wagons which made up the outfit, and walked the entire way. After their marriage Robert Wooden and his bride settled at Peewee, Kentucky, where they were pioneers, and after enduring the hardships unavoidable in a new and undeveloped country, spent some years in comfort before they died, both passing away in Kentucky. Like the Chownings, the Wooden family was an English one, its representatives also settling in Virginia during colonial times.

Charles W. Chowning, son of John Chowning and father of Charles William Chowning, whose name heads this review, was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, in 1821, and died at Paris, Missouri, in 1889. He was reared in his native county, and after his marriage located near Louisville, Kentucky, where he was engaged in farming until the early '60s, when he went to Paris, Missouri, continuing that industry the rest of his life. While never holding any public office, he exerted his right of suffrage and voted the democratic ticket. A consistent member of the Christian Church, he was an elder in that denomination for many years. His wife was Isabelle Wooden prior to her marriage, which took place at Beard's Station, now Peewee, Kentucky, where she was born in 1826. Her death occurred at Paris, Missouri, in 1914. Their children were as follows: James T., who died at Paris, Missouri, when twenty years of age; Marietta, who died near Paris, Missouri, in 1886, was the wife of John E. Murphy, a farmer, who survives her and lives near Paris; John L., who died on the home farm in 1897; and Charles William, who was the youngest in the family.

After completing the courses of the rural schools of Monroe County, Missouri, Charles William Chowning became a student at the Strother Institute, a preparatory school near Paris, Missouri, and after he was graduated therefrom he entered the University of Missouri at Columbia and completed the junior year, but was then obliged to leave on account of ill health. Hoping to regain his normal strength, Mr. Chowning then spent two years in Texas, leaving that state for Montana in 1882. After a short stay at Helena he went to work for the Northern Pacific Railroad, being employed in its land department as a reporter on lands. In this capacity he had charge of a crew during 1882, 1883, 1884 and 1885, covering Jefferson, Madison, Gallatin, Meagher and Yellowstone counties. So satisfactory was his work in this connection that he was made land inspector of this road for the State of Montana, with headquarters at Helena, and held this position until 1888. In that year he severed his connection with the railroad to become manager for the Montana Cattle Company, with headquarters at Helena, his work being principally in Meagher, Yellowstone, Dawson and Fergus counties. John T. Murphy was president of this company. Mr. Chowning remained with the company until the close of 1894, and in the spring of 1895 embarked in a mining enterprise, and from then on has been interested in this line, but has not confined himself to it. Having married a daughter of William Ennis, founder of the Town of Ennis, Mr. Chowning was induced to locate here in 1898, and upon the death of his father-in-law entered the mercantile field formerly occupied by the elder man, and the establishment is conducted under the name of J. W. Chowning. With his entrance into the business new blood was infused, and he expanded every department, bringing the store up to the highest standards and making it the leader in this line in a wide area. The store is located on Main Street, and customers come to it from all over this and adjoining counties, as they realize that his stock is always complete and timely and that his prices are reasonable. Being a loyal democrat he has been honored by his party, and served as county commissioner of Madison County for six years. At present he is President Wilson's appointee as postmaster of Ennis. While he was on the school board of Ennis the modern schoolhouse was erected and also the high school building for Ora and Platta townships, which is conceded to be the best in Madison County. In addition to his other interests Mr. Chowning is a stockholder in the Southern Montana Bank of Ennis and owner of a 1,440 acre ranch of irrigated land at Moore's Creek, on which he raises grain and hay. His residence on Main Street, Ennis, is also owned by him. Mr. Chowning belongs to Virginia City Lodge No. 390, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

In 1893 Mr. Chowning was married at Ennis to Miss Jennie Winifred Ennis, a daughter of William Ennis, one of the distinctive men of this region. William Ennis was born in Ireland in 1828 and died at Ennis, Montana, in 1898. When he was fourteen years old he came to the United States and was in the railroad shops of Detroit, Michigan. Later he became roadmaster on the construction work of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, receiving for his services $125 per month. In those days that was considered a very large salary, and he was envied because he could command it. His entry into Montana occurred in June, 1863, and after a brief period at Bannock he came to the present site of Ennis, and on August 13 of that year took up the Ennis homestead, a portion of which is now occupied by the flourishing town of Ennis, named in his honor. Later he bought more land, owning at one time more than 2,000 acres, but the estate is now not much over 400 acres, and is owned by his widow, whose maiden name was Katherine Shriver. She was born in Ohio during 1837. The elegant residence, the finest in the territory of Montana at the time of its completion by Mr. Ennis in 1882, was destroyed by fire in September, 1917. Mr. and Mrs. Chowning have one child, Winifred, who married Fayette B. Jeffers. They reside on their ranch of 640 acres six miles east of Ennis. It is located on Jack Creek, and is a valuable, well improved property. Mrs. Jeffers was graduated from All Saints School at Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

Mr. Chowning is thorough in everything he undertakes and is a tireless worker. While he has been eminently successful in greatly extending the trade of his establishment, he has been keenly watchful of the welfare of his community, and is justly held to be one of the substantial men of Montana worthy of being accorded a place among those who have worked to develop this section of the country.

Hon. Frank G. Fishbeck, of Plentywood, president of the Fishbeck-Jarvis Realty Company, has the honor of being the first man elected to the State Senate from Sheridan County. He has been identified prominently with Montana's political and civic interests during the past twelve years, and in this time has contributed in no small degree to the substantial growth and upbuilding of this region.

Senator Fishbeck arrived in Plentywood on November 28, 1908, and first identified himself with the infant village as a merchant. He came to this locality with his future business partner, and they purchased the pioneer store of the town, which had been established by George E. Bolster. During almost a year the new firm continued as the only merchants of the place, and their location was in the old townsite, along the banks of Box Elder Creek, a locality at that time almost in its primitive wildness but now a site covered with residences and business houses of the townspeople. With the advent of the Great Northern Railroad in 1910 the firm transferred its location to the new townsite, and a few years later terminated their career as Plentywood merchants, although partnership relations have since been maintained in the firm of the Fishbeck-Jarvis Realty Company, formed for the purpose of dealing in real estate, farming and ranching. The company's ranch lies twenty-five miles west of Scobey on the West Fork of Poplar Creek, and comprises leased and deeded lands to the amount of seven sections. A large area of this property has been improved and cultivated, some 1,500 acres being devoted to grain, and the work of cultivation has been carried to the point where the success of the firm as agriculturists has been fully demonstrated.

Independent of partnership relations Mr. Fishbeck engaged in the electric light business in Plentywood in 1912, installing at first a light motor and a direct current plant, but in July, 1916, a 300-horsepower steam plant for the generation of an alternating current was installed at the coal mines two miles from Plentywood. Following this improvement a high tension line has been strung over the city, transformers installed, and "secondaries" give service to almost every business house and residence in the town. Fifteen motors of from one to fifteen horsepower are supplied with current for industrial purposes, and the plant itself is regarded as the best equipped and the most efficiently managed light plant in Eastern Montana, its patrons being never without current day or night. In the fall of 1919 a transmission line two miles into the country was built and serves the Peter Marron ranch with light and power. Mr. Fishbeck is also the head of the Sheridan Electric Construction Company, which erected the moving picture theatre of Plentywood and which also serves as the opera house of the town.

Senator Fishbeck although so intimately connected with the life and interests of Montana is a native son of Wisconsin and traces descent to a remote Fishbeck ancestor who came from Holland to the United States and landed on the shores of New York. The grandfather of the Montana senator was Ephraim Fishbeck, a descendant of Anika Jans-Weber, whose estate has been the bone of contention of her posterity for more than a century and comprises among other rich properties in New York City the Trinity Church property at the head of Wall Street. Ephraim Fishbeck married a Miss Hurd and had the following children: Frank, who served in the Union army during the Civil war; Levi, who also gave patriotic service to the North during that struggle; Charles, another Civil war soldier; Freeman, who became the father of the Hon. Frank G. Fishbeck, and who was rejected from military service on account of defective eyesight; Thomas, who served in a Wisconsin regiment; Ira, also a member of a Wisconsin regiment, and all these five brothers fought valiantly throughout the war and returned home after its close. A daughter, Mary, married Frank Adams, and the youngest child of the family was Edward. Thomas is now the only survivor of this large family of patriots, and he resides at Eureka, Wisconsin.

Freeman Fishbeck was a stave manufacturer, and he passed away December 9, 1919, at Pittsville, Wisconsin, where he had spent thirty-eight years of his life. He was born at Ogdensburg, New York, but was taken by his parents to Wisconsin when a boy, and he grew to manhood's estate in Eureka. He was married there to Almyra Rollins, a daughter of Charles Rollins, who migrated from Essex County, New York, to Wisconsin, and was a farmer there. Mrs. Fishbeck was a school teacher before her marriage. She survives her husband and resides at Pittsville, Wisconsin, the mother of two sons, Frank G. and Ashley, the younger also residing at Pittsville.

Frank G. Fishbeck was born at Eureka, Winnebago County, Wisconsin, December 31, 1867, and he spent the days of his boyhood in the timber country of that state, completing the work of the grades and one year of high school work before he called his educational training finished. He began his industrial career as a merchant's clerk, and a few years later entered the retail lumber business. He was but a young man when he left his home in Pittsville, Wisconsin, for Chicago, where he spent twelve years of his early life, engaged for a time in the retail lumber business and the remainder of his stay in that city was spent in the hotel and restaurant business. From Chicago young Fishbeck returned to Wisconsin, and at Berlin in the latter state he spent four years as a leather manufacturer.

It was at the expiration of this latter period that Frank G. Fishbeck entered upon his life in the Far West. The first few months of his Montana career were spent at Culbertson in the meat business, and from there he came to Plentywood and entered upon his active identification with the growth and upbuilding of this region.

He had been reared in the atmosphere of an intensely partisan republican home, no Fishbeck ever having been known to identify himself with other than the republican party so it was but the natural course of events that the young westerner should give his allegiance to those principles when he reached the voting age. His first presidential ballot was cast for Benjamin Harrison in 1892, and from that day to the present he has never missed voting at the polls and has always supported the republican candidates. He was initiated into political work in Chicago when he was made tax collector for the Township of Bloom in Cook County, serving in that position from 1898 to 1900. His next active political work began in the fall of 1914, when he was elected to the State Senate from Sheridan County, serving in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth General assemblies, securing the office over two opponents, a Bull Moose candidate and a democratic candidate, the district comprising the field of old Sheridan County.

Mr. Fishbeck, as noted at the beginning of this article, entered the Senate as the first man to be seated in that body from Sheridan County, and he served under Lieutenant-Governor McDowell. He was made chairman of the Committee on Elections and Privileges, and was also a member of the Committee on Public Buildings, Insurance and Banks and Banking. He was the author of the Herd Law measure which passed that session, introduced first in the House, and was also the author of the Seed and Threshermen's Lien measures, and he was instrumental in their passage through the Senate. His Herd Law measure was the first of its kind provided for by the legislative enactment of the state. His term as a state senator expired with the close of 1918, and he was not again a candidate for that office.

Senator Fishbeck was married in Maryland, Wisconsin, October 5, 1889, to Miss Nellie Jarvis, a daughter of Willett R. and Anna Hiles Jarvis. The father was a native of Norwalk, Connecticut. For many years he was a teacher, and was head of the school at Watertown, New York, when Roswell P. Flower, later governor of New York, was a student there, Mr. Jarvis having also secured for the future governor his first position in the postoffice. Mr. Jarvis moved out to Wisconsin in 1859, when about forty-six years of age, and he spent many of his later years as a merchant. He was also connected with the lumber business, and for many years was a hotel proprietor at Dexterville, Wisconsin. He died at Milwaukee in 1896, and his widow survived him until 1914, passing away at Culbertson, Montana, but she lies buried by the side of her husband in Milwaukee. The Jarvis children comprised the following: Mrs. Fishbeck; Charley, of Culbertson, Montana; Frank, who is engaged in ranching in Valley County; Catherine, the wife of F. L. Durfey, of Hermuston, Oregon; Harriet, wife of F. Newman, also of Hermuston; and Willett R., Jr., whose home is at Glentana, Montana.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Fishbeck: Charles R., who died of influenza in Plentywood, married Mabel Christopherson, but died without issue. Frank J., the only surviving son is associated with his father in business. He trained for service in the aviation department during the recent war, and was later transferred to the infantry at Camp Lewis, Washington.

Mr. Fishbeck is a member of the Masonic Order, receiving his first Masonic degree in Berlin, Wisconsin. He now belongs to the Plentywood Blue Lodge and Chapter and to the Commandery in Berlin. At Helena, Montana, he is a member of the Consistory and of the Shrine.

Guy Edward Campbell, M. D. Montana has known and claimed Dr. Guy Campbell among her citizens since April, 1915, when he arrived in Plentywood and entered upon the practice of medicine. He was the third physician to locate in this northern town, and as the years have passed and he has demonstrated his worth and ability he has made for himself a name and place in Montana's professional life and citizenship.

Dr. Campbell came to this northwestern state from his native commonwealth of Minnesota, where he was born at Melrose, March 15, 1886, and where his father, Dr. Joseph E. Campbell, is still actively engaged in the practice of medicine. Dr. Campbell, the elder, located in Melrose in 1875, when it was the terminus of the railroad and when he was a young man just entering upon his professional career. He was born in Brooklyn, New York, June 16, 1852, a son of Scotch parents, his birth occurring shortly after the landing of his father and mother on American shores. This native Scotchman became a Union soldier during the war between the states, and he also gave three of his sons to Illinois regiments to fight with the northern armies, one son rising to the high rank of colonel, another to a captaincy, and a third became a lieutenant. This patriot ancestor passed away at Aurora, Illinois, after having spent his industrial life as a cabinet-maker.

Dr. Joseph E. Campbell received his medical training at Ann Arbor, Michigan, being a graduate of the medical department of the University of Michigan, but it was at Melrose, Minnesota, that he entered upon his active professional career, and to that locality he has given the best of his life's work. His influence has always been exerted along political and fraternal lines, and he is an active Mason, a past master of his lodge, and in the higher degrees of the order he belongs to Osman Temple in St. Paul.

The senior Dr. Campbell married Alice Stuart, a daughter of George Stuart, who migrated from his native state of Vermont to Wisconsin, and finally located in Minnesota, where he devoted his energies to farming. Mrs. Campbell was born in Wisconsin and died in Melrose, Minnesota, in 1906, leaving the following children: Maude M., the wife of William A. Angus, of Hannaford, North Dakota; Lois I., who married William Kay, of Melrose; Belva L., wife of Charles J. Powell, of Chicago; Dr. Claude M., who died of disease while serving as a physician in the late war; Edith B., the wife of Ernest Henderson, of Fargo, North Dakota; Guy E., of Plentywood, Montana; Lucile, who died at Melrose in young womanhood; and Keen S., whose home is in Oregon.

Dr. Guy E. Campbell was reared in Melrose and is a graduate of its high school. Choosing as his life work the profession in which his father had gained success and prestige, the lad began his preparation in the Northwestern University of Chicago, where he spent four years, and then entered Tulane University at New Orleans and graduated from its medical department in 1914. Seeking a location for the protection of his health, the young medical student came to Plentywood, Montana, and at once opened an office for practice. His labors in the interim have covered a wide range of territory, and the name of Doctor Campbell is now a familiar one in the professional circles of his town and county. He was made the examining physician for the Selective Service Board of Sheridan County, and is the physician for the county poor.

Doctor Campbell is purely a medical man, and his right to a homestead has yet to be exercised, while his connection with political matters here has been merely as a layman and a voter. He was reared under republican influence and has always given allegiance to that party, casting his first presidential vote for Mr. Taft. Doctor Campbell was made a Mason in Plentywood, and has taken the three degrees of the Blue Lodge. He also has membership in the Elks fraternity in St. Cloud, Minnesota.

At Barnesville, Minnesota, the Doctor was married on the 10th of November, 1915, to Miss Helen M. Collins. She was born in the City of Barnesville, where her father, Thomas F. Collins, was a prominent business man, and she is a graduate of the high school there. She subsequently began training for a nurse at St. Marys in Fargo, North Dakota, and followed her profession for three years. Two children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Campbell, Guy Edward, Jr., who is now three years of age, and Claude Thomas, the younger, one year old.

Alfred T. Vollum maintains one of the largest law clienteles in Sheridan County, and in his practice he has two offices, one at Plentywood, his main office, and one at Medicine Lake. In his practice at Medicine Lake he is associated with Arthur C. Erickson, who was also for a time formerly his law partner at Plentywood.

Mr. Vollum was born at Albert Lee, Minnesota, May 22, 1887, and his childhood and youth were spent on his father's farm there. His father, Thore G. Vollum, located in that region before the era of a railroad through that section of the country, immediately following the period of the Civil war, and he married into a family who were the real pioneers of that part of Minnesota. Thore G. Vollum was a native son of Norway, born at Throndhjem. He began his industrial life with but a common school training gained in his native Norway, and he reached the lumber woods of Wisconsin direct from Trondhjem, where he arrived with but twenty dollars in money, but at once secured work in the lumber camps. From there he made his way to Southern Minnesota, walking from Rochester, the terminus of the railroad, to the locality of Albert Lee, although the birth of that town did not occur until many years later. His first work in this location was as a farm laborer, and among his employers was Nels Simonson, who later became his father-in-law and from whom he later bought eighty acres of land, paying $7.00 an acre, and from that small tract as a foundation he in time built his modest fortune. Mr. Vollum followed mixed farming, stock and grain constituting his principal activities, and he was responsible for the many and substantial improvements which were placed on his land. He became numbered among the most successful agriculturists of his community, and by his own unaided efforts rose from a state of comparative poverty to a place of independence. The land which he purchased so many years ago continued his home for thirty-five years, and he was sixty-one years of age when death claimed him in 1910.

Thore G. Vollum was an earnest, progressive and honored citizen, was a staunch supporter of republican principles, never failing to attend elections, and frequently serving as a member of the election board, and he was a zealous supporter of the Lutheran Church. Both he and his wife proved their true worth in the support of the church of their locality. Mr. Vollum married a native daughter of Norway, Uni Simonson, her birthplace being Sogen, and she is a daughter of Nels and Mary Simonson, who came to the United States in 1864, arriving here in time for the husband and father to take part in the Civil war as a Union soldier. Mrs. Simonson's brother had been taken prisoner by the Confederates and had also been wounded, and Mr. Simonson came to avenge this deed, enlisting in a Wisconsin regiment, but he never reached the front, and after the close of the war he wandered about from place to place for about a year. Finally settling in Freeborn County, Minnesota, he spent the remaining years of his life on the claim which he secured there and passed away at the age of seventy-four. He is survived by his widow, who has reached the age of ninety-four. They were the parents of two daughters, the older being Mrs. Vollum, who also survives her husband and is living at Albert Lee, Minnesota, at the age of sixty-two. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Vollum: Minnie, the wife of Edward Frethein, of Albert Lee; Dr. Edward O. Vollum, who is engaged in practice at Albert Lee; Nels, a traveling salesman and farmer at Albert Lee; Martin, who is a farmer on the old homestead there; Alfred T., of Plentywood, Montana; Ida, who has not married and lives with her mother; and Gilbert, also with his mother at Albert Lee. This youngest son has just recently completed his services in the World war. He was a machinist in charge of aviation in a southern field.

Alfred T. Vollum after graduating from high school entered the University of Minnesota and graduated in the academic course in 1911, with the degree A. B. By attending summer schools he shortened his university course two years, doing the regular seven years work in five, and then entering the St. Paul College of Law he completed the law course there and graduated in 1913. But before completing the course Mr. Vollum was admitted to the bar on examination. He had performed practical work in the law office of David F. Peebles of St. Paul and in the office of the county attorney, Alfred P. Stolberg, at Center City, Minnesota, and tried the examination largely as an experiment.

Mr. Vollum was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of Minnesota, March 28, 1913, and in the spring of the same year was admitted to the Federal District Court. He spent the following fall and winter in the office of Harris Richardson in St. Paul, and in June sought a location further west, first exploring the northern part of his native state, stopping at various towns in North Dakota, and finally arriving in Plentywood, the then terminus of the Great Northern Railroad.

It was in September, 1913, that Mr. Vollum arrived in this locality, and a few months later, in December, 1913, he filed on a homestead a mile southwest of Plentywood, built a shack on his land, and began the work of improving and cultivating the claim. His subsequent improvements have all been of a permanent character, and on this property he began his married life.

Mr. Vollum found but two lawyers in Plentywood when he first arrived in the town and selected it as his location for his future professional career. His first case was the defense of a man charged with assaulting with a knife the son of a leading citizen of the town, and in this, his first case in Montana, Mr. Vollum was successful, for he secured a very light sentence for his client. His work as a lawyer has been a general practice in the Federal and District courts and in the land office in the Probate courts and in the Montana Supreme Court.

On reaching the age of maturity Mr. Vollum became a republican voter, and in 1912 united his efforts with the progressive wing of that party and has taken some part in campaign work. He is a Master Mason, affiliating with Plentywood Lodge No. 91, and he is also a member of the Elks Lodge at Williston, North Dakota. With his family he is affiliated with the work of the Lutheran Church, which he is serving as a trustee of the congregation at Plentywood and as president of the "Call Committee."

On the 25th of May, 1914, Mr. Vollum was married to Miss Alma Robinson, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, a daughter of Edward and Mary Robinson, both of whom were born in Norway. Since coming to the United States Mr. Robinson has been engaged in the lumber business. Mrs. Vollum completed her high school training in Minneapolis, and then entered upon a business career as a stenographer. Two children have been born to bless this union, both daughters, Virginia, three years of age, and Marion Hope, who is but two years old.

CHARLES LINCOLN MARSHALL, secretary-treasurer, manager and editor of the Wolf Point Herald, is a newspaper man of wide experience, and has used his editorial pen with great force and clarity in behalf of agricultural progress and development in the Northwest.

He was born at Plattville, Wisconsin, October 21, 1870, but has spent practically all his life on the prairies of the Northwest. His ancestors were Virginia planters and slave holders. His father, George W. Marshall, was born near Winchester, Virginia, but after his marriage moved west and followed his trade as a miller at Hannibal, Missouri, and several years later at Plattville, Wisconsin, where he did lead mining, ran stage lines, and during the Civil war served as provost marshal. Soon after the birth of his son Charles L., he took his family by prairie schooner from Wisconsin, crossed Iowa, and went to Dakota Territory and entered a homestead thirty miles from Yankton, the old territorial capital in Yankton County. Some ten or twelve years later he moved to Parker, the county seat of Turner County, and spent the rest of his days there. He was born October 30, 1825, and died April 10, 1916. He became a republican upon the birth of the party, was a warm supporter of Mr. Lincoln, and in Dakota was frequently asked to become a candidate for office, but refused any other service than as a delegate to conventions. He married Sarah Hefflebower, who was one of the seven daughters and four sons of Daniel Hefflebower, a Hollander by ancestry and a Virginia planter in the Shenandoah Valley. He freed all his slaves at the outbreak of the war and became a Union sympathizer. Mrs. George W. Marshall died February 15, 1897, in her sixty-seventh year. Their oldest son is Thomas F. Marshall, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Oakes, North Dakota. He began his career at Yankton, handling a shovel on a section gang, carried a surveyor's chain, learned surveying, and for many years was a contractor. Later he engaged in the grocery business at Yankton, became interested in banking at Columbia, and was active in that business at Oakes until he retired. He was a member of both Houses of the North Dakota Legislature and for eight years was a republican member of Congress. The second of the children is Virginia V., a graduate of the Yankton High School and a teacher living at Parker, South Dakota. Jessie is the wife of Sewell F. Wentworth, of Sioux City, Iowa, while the youngest is Charles L.

Charles L. Marshall lived on the Dakota homestead to the age of fifteen, and then in the Town of Parker. He attended country schools, the village schools of Parker and Yankton College. After graduating from high school he went to work in the office of the New Era at Parker, one of the oldest papers in South Dakota. His pay was $4.00 a week. He also taught school several terms and was deputy in county offices of Turner County and eventually became proprietor of a store at Oakes, North Dakota. When the business was destroyed by fire he spent eleven months in the State of Washington, and then resumed newspaper work at Oakes. In July, 1910, he joined the Williston Herald, and for four years did reportorial and editorial work for that journal, and performed a similar service on the Williston Graphic for a year and a half. In all his newspaper work he has directed his efforts toward improved farming and farm economics, for the organization of farmers into clubs and bureaus, and has covered every phase of the modern country life uplift.

Mr. Marshall came to Wolf Point in March, 1917, and has been identified with the Wolf Point Herald since the 1st of April. With a former newspaper acquaintance, J. P. Wiest, he bought of C. M. Hanson the Herald, which was established in 1913. In March, 1919, he bought the interests of Mr. Wiest and incorporated the Wolf Point Herald, distributing some of the stock to local business men. H. A. Schoening is president of the Herald Company, while O. C. Johnson is vice president, the active management and editorial control vesting in Mr. Marshall. Mrs. Marshall is an active associate of her husband on the Herald and carries an equal share of the burden of its publication.

July 10, 1916, Mr. Marshall married Charlotte E. Barnes at Northfield, Minnesota. She was born at Lockhart, Minnesota, May 15, 1888, daughter of Jesse and Mary (Bradley) Barnes. Her grandfather Barnes was a Wisconsin soldier and died during the Civil war. Jesse Barnes was born in Wisconsin, and is now living at Northfield, Minnesota. Besides Mrs. Marshall the other children are: Leslie, on the old home farm at Lockhart; Leland, of Minneapolis; and Cecil. Cecil volunteered two weeks after America declared war on Germany, was a member of the 15th Machine Gun Battalion, was in the fighting at San Mehiel, Verdun and the Argonne, and was cited for bravery as a runner through the thick of the conflict, being the only one of several started with a message to reach their objective.

By a former marriage Mr. Marshall has a daughter, Marjory Wentworth, a graduate of South Dakota University and teacher of English and mathematics in the public schools of Scotland, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have one daughter, Jean Carleton.

Mr. Marshall has manifested a marked degree of independence in politics, was reared a republican and supported that party until 1912, and gave his vote twice to Mr. Wilson. He makes it a point to conduct the Wolf Point Herald as an independent newspaper in politics.

Joseph Peltier is one of the honored pioneers of Lincoln County, near Eureka, and has been a rancher there for over thirty years. He has used his influence as well as his labor to develop that section of country, has achieved prosperity, and also well merited esteem.

Mr. Peltier is of French ancestry, and has shown the vigorous and industrious characteristics of his race. He was born at Golette, Canada, in 1868, son of Antone and Theatiste (Poitra) Peltier, being the fourth in their family of nine sons. He acquired his education in his native country, and at the age of eighteen went to work in the lumber woods. He came to Missoula County, Montana, in 1888, and for two years was a lumber worker at Bonner. At that time Missoula County stretched north to the Canadian line, and after leaving Bonner he moved into the Flathead district, near the present site of Eureka. Afer a year he homesteaded 160 acres two miles west of where Eureka stands, and by subsequent purchases acquired holdings that now amount to 1,600 acres.

Mr. Peltier married Miss Lottie Adams, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of Joseph and Caroline (Hensley) Adams. After their marriage they united their efforts on the homestead, building up the land, improving with good buildings, setting out fruit trees and otherwise adorning their property. Ten children were born to their marriage, three of whom died in infancy. The seven still living are Alfred, Loretta, Vernie, Albina, Velma, Edna and Victor. The three older ones have been educated in the Eureka High School. Loretta spent two years in the Sisters School at Colton, Washington, and one year in the Holy Name Academy at Spokane, and is now employed as a stenographer and bookkeeper in the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Eureka.

Joseph Peltier

Lottie Peltier

Alfred married Juanita McClure and is a rancher near Eureka. At the age of nineteen he left school, was mustered into government service at Spokane, and after training at Bremmerton went into the navy. He served on the boats Puget Sound, Western Plain and Marcia and crossed the ocean three times. He was on the first boat that went through the Dardanelles after the signing of the armistice. He was in service from May 3, 1918, until September 15, 1918, when he was honorably discharged at Minneapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Peltier are members of the Catholic Church at Eureka, Mrs. Peltier being a member of the Altar Society. He is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus and both support the republican party. For many years Mr. Peltier has been regarded as one of the progressive citizens of Lincoln County. His ranch shows the results of his expert management, and he has made good use of the opportunities found in this wonderful country. The attractive home of the Peltier family is three-quarters of a mile northwest of Eureka.

HANK J. CUSKER, owner of the Roandale Ranch at Wolf Point, is a fine type of the manhood and citizenship that grow and come to flower in the free and open country of the Northwest. He was born in the Northwest, son of a pioneer Oregonian, and for over a third of a century has been doing his work as a cowboy, in the early days an expert broncho buster and roper, and for years past a successful stock rancher and breeder.

Mr. Cusker was born near the City of Walla Walla, Washington, June 10, 1865. His father was a pioneer of the Northwest whose career deserves a few words in this history. James E. Cusker was born in New York City about eighty years ago. He was a child when his father died, and he had no schooling after the age of thirteen. About that time he started alone for the great west. He left the City of Pittsburg, and by working at different things in intervals of his journeying eventually joined an emigrant train and crossed the plains to Oregon, reaching the Pacific Coast several years after he started from Pittsburg. He established his home in the famous and picturesque Willamette Valley of Oregon, became a farmer, married a native of the valley, and subsequently moved into Washington and settled at Walla Walla. For many years he was a freighter, packer and miner in that region, and eventually busied himself with the responsibilities of a stock farm a few miles from the city. He was in every sense a frontiersman, and a credit to that class. James E. Cusker, who died in 1913, married Alta Hayworth, who died several years earlier. They had a large family of children: Clarence, of Walla Walla; Mary E., wife of Will Gross, of Walla Walla; Mrs. Georgianna Snyder, of Palouse, Washington; Hank J.; Frank B., a stockman and farmer at Poplar, Montana; Minerva Jane, who died unmarried; George Francis, in Nevada; Orion, who died unmarried in Washington; Myra, of Wolf Point; Alta, wife of David D. McGowan, of Walla Walla; Sig, of Wolf Point; and Gertie, wife of William Pipar, of Wolf Point.

Hank J. Cusker had every incentive to a life of action when a boy. He attended the common schools in the country around Walla Walla for a number of terms, but otherwise he lived out in the open on his father's farm and learned to ride and run stock as soon as he could hold a seat on the saddle. Just before reaching his twenty-first birthday he left home and became a cowboy with the Home Land and Cattle Company. The owners of this well known outfit were the Niedringhaus brothers, prominent capitalists of St. Louis. He joined the organization at Walla Walla, and came into Montana with a bunch of their cattle. He already had some reputation as a rider, and during the eight years he was with the Home Land and Cattle Company he broke horses for the concern, served as wagon boss and also foreman. The company had a ranch on Prairie Elk and another near Jordan in Garfield County, and his work was on the range from the Canadian line to the Yellowstone River.

While Mr. Cusker was never with the wild west show, some of his feats as a rider were the sensation of the northwestern country and equalled if not excelled anything done by the performers in that show. While with the Home cattle outfit he and a comrade from Montana took a bunch of bronchos and steers to the Minnesota State Fair and entered the exhibition riding staged as part of the program. There he gave an exhibition of breaking and riding all kinds of horses, roping and tieing stunts, which were easily the center of interest at the Fair and one of the first exhibitions of the kind in the country. Later at a stock meeting he did exhibition riding at Miles City. The feature that made him winner of a prize was picking up quirts lying on the ground while his horse was running at full speed. Another horseman behind him was whipping Cusker's mount with a buggy whip, and Cusker not only had to manage his animal but had to pick up a quirt every twenty-five yards. He was also a well known professional roper, and when the sport of roping steers became tame he used the lariat on bears and coyotes.

After leaving the Home Land and Cattle Company Mr. Cusker spent two seasons with the "FUF" outfit, finally driving a bunch of 500 horses for them to the Winnipeg market. He then abandoned the range as a cowboy and since then his permanent interests have been at Wolf Point. His homestead was entered in McCone County, then in Dawson County, and his first home was built of Missouri River logs. It provided a shelter for himself and family until about four years ago, when he erected what is probably the largest house in McCone County, a two-story, eleven room, full basement home, attractive architecturally and with every comfort inside. Mr. Cusker has developed a ranch of more than two sections, and in recent years farming has been an important feature of his industry, particularly the growing of alfalfa. His horse brand is the "lazy N" and his cattle brand is "U up and U down." His ranch is widely known and patronized by seekers for high class stock. He has been breeding the Shorthorn roan strain of cattle, and has a herd of fine breeding animals, though not registered. He has the thoroughbred registered running stock of horses, and gives much attention to breaking and training his racers. His draft or work horses are the roan Belgian, breeding them for the market. His sires are all imported, and his dams also represent some of the best blood of the strain. Mr. Cusker is also a stockholder in the First State Bank of Wolf Point. Politically he has been a democrat through most of the years.

At Poplar, Montana, February 4, 1904, he married Miss Grace Kimmel. She was born near Mt. Vernon, Illinois, daughter of John and Hannah Kimmel, who spent their lives on a farm near Mt. Vernon. Besides Mrs. Cusker the other Kimmel children are: Miz, who married Charles Ecker, Jesse, Louis, Oscar, Mrs. Jennie Bawden and Mrs. Ruth Atkinson. Louis Kimmel is also a resident of McCone County, Montana, and Mrs. Bawden lives in Phoenix, Arizona. Mrs. Cusker came out to Montana to teach school and was a teacher at Poplar when she met Mr. Cusker. The children born to their marriage are named H. Jay, Ray, Roy, Clyta, Gertrude and Erma.

George H. Flint, vice president of the First State Bank of Wolf Point, has been identified with that town for over four years, was previously a farmer and business man in North Dakota, and is a member of a wealthy and influential Iowa family.

He was born at Spencer, Iowa, January 9, 1887. His grandfather was a native of England, brought to America when a boy, and spent most of his life as a farmer around Dodgeville, Wisconsin. He was a Union soldier during the Civil war. Of his three sons and four daughters the oldest was Thomas B. Flint, who was born in Wisconsin, and in 1881 took his wife and children to Iowa and settled near Spencer. He had very little capital, and largely through farming and stock raising advanced far beyond the goal of the average farmer. His success marks him as one of the conspicuous men of Iowa. He early recognized the future of his state, invested in lands when they were cheap, and became owner of extensive tracts of rural real estate. He is now living retired at Spencer. Some of his capital has found investment in Montana. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Oswego and of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Frazer, one of his sons being cashier of the latter.

Thomas B. Flint married Nellie Roberts, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Roberts, were natives of Wales. She died at Dodgeville, Wisconsin, mother of the following children: Jennie, wife of O. M. Cummings, of Everly, Iowa; Mrs. W. G. Fox, of Everly; Mrs. Charles Larsen, of Spencer; George H.; and Clyde, who is the cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Frazer. The second wife of Thomas B. Flint was Elizabeth Robbins, though there are no children of that union.

George H. Flint secured a practical education and also had much training while at home in Iowa. On leaving home he went to Belfield, North Dakota, homesteaded and proved up a claim near the town, and during the seven years he lived there was also engaged in the grain and mercantile business. In 1915 he became interested in the First State Bank of Wolf Point, and has made that town his home since March 1, 1916. His chief work and interest have been in the success of the bank, though he has a number of other interests, being vice president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Frazer and vice president of the Eastern Montana Security Company, an affiliated concern of the First State Bank. For two years he has served as city treasurer of Wolf Point, and is one of the directors of the Commercial Club. As a local banker he made his influence felt in behalf of the various campaigns for raising funds for the government and the auxiliary work of the war. Mr. Flint is a charter member of Loyalty Lodge No. 121 at Wolf Point, and is a member of the Scottish Rite Consistory at Helena and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine in that city. He is a member of the Lodge of Elks at Dickinson, North Dakota.

In 1916 Mr. Flint built a modern seven-room bungalow home with all facilities for comfortable living. He married at Dickinson, North Dakota, October 25, 1908, Miss Coila Scharf. She was born at Spencer, Iowa, February 16, 1889, daughter of Charles W. and Anna (Jepson) Scharf. She and Mrs. Fred E. Rathert of Wolf Point are the only children of their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Flint have two children, Cleo and Joyce.

Arthur J. Broadwater, of Havre, is one of Montana's substantial business men. He came to the Northwest when Montana was a territory. He was the type of man who delighted in achieving success by overcoming obstacles and solving the problems presented by a new and undeveloped country. The sublime faith that Mr. Broadwater has in Montana's resources was therefore born of an experience that comprehends practically every vicissitude that could befall a resident for over thirty years.

Mr. Broadwater is a brother of the pioneer merchant and banker of Havre, Edward T. Broadwater, and was born three years later than his brother, at Memphis in Scotland County, Missouri, November 7, 1864, a son of Thomas and Martha (Smoot) Broadwater. His mother is still living in Missouri, having spent all her life in Scotland County. His father was a Virginian by birth, but lived from early boyhood in Missouri, was a California forty-niner, and for many years a successful architect and builder.

Arthur J. Broadwater enjoyed the advantages of the public schools of his native town, and, like his brother, had that independent spirit that led him away from the comforts of a good home to carve his own destiny. At the age of sixteen he began learning telegraphy in a railway office, and followed that profession several years. In December, 1886, he arrived at Helena, Montana, where chance brought him in touch with a cousin, Charles Broadwater, whom he had not seen for a number of years. Mr. Broadwater came to Montana to enter the service of the Rocky Mountain Telegraph Company. He left Helena in a stage bound for Fort Benton, where his duties assigned him. When the stage reached Great Falls the party spent the night in a little shack known as the Park Hotel, and the following morning Arthur Broadwater sought out Mr. Gibson. The latter took him to what is now First Avenue, and the corner of First Avenue and Second Street Mr. Gibson offered to Mr. Broadwater for $500. This ground was covered with several feet of snow and the vista was not inviting to even one of a more speculative turn of mind than the young man who had just arrived in the northwestern country. His reply to Mr. Gibson's offer was that he would not give five dollars for all the snow covered land in sight. Mr. Broadwater tells this incident not to prove his lack of judgment but merely to show how rapidly things moved in Montana at that time. Eight months later, in August, 1887, the same corner that was offered to him in the depth of winter was sold for $27,500.

In the meantime Mr. Broadwater continued his journey to Fort Benton and began a six months' service for the Rocky Mountain Telegraph Company. After the big boom has been launched at Great Falls he returned to the city and bought from Mr. Gibson Lot 8 in Block 257, at the corner of Eighth Street and Second Avenue North, paying $2,250 for the ground. This property he still owns. After leaving the Telegraph Company he became quartermaster's clerk at Fort Assiniboine, remaining there about five years. The land in that region not yet having been surveyed, he became a squatter on the public domain, and since then has been more or less actively interested in farming in Montana. He served as deputy assessor of Choteau County under Albert Hamilton, later was deputy clerk and recorder of the same county.

Mr. Broadwater came to Havre in the very early days of the city, in 1892, and entered the general merchandise business. Later he was in the drug business until 1914, when his store, with many others of the business district, was destroyed by fire. In 1907 he bought from the receiver the H. W. Gross hardware business, and has since made this the leading furniture and hardware house of Havre. He has been a business man of the city for nearly thirty years, and for the past fifteen years has been an intelligent manager of some farming and livestock interests, and is therefore in a position to know conditions affecting both commerce and agriculture in his part of the state. This faith, based on long experience, was interestingly expressed in the summer of 1919, when Montana was suffering the greatest drought in its history, in a letter which Mr. Broadwater wrote in reply to a wholesale hardware house of Duluth, respectfully declining their offer of extension of credit and asserting the intention of the A. J. Broadwater Company to do business as usual on a discount for cash basis. Continuing, Mr. Broadwater said: "To reassure you in your confidence in Montana eventually making good, I have been right here on the job for thirty-six years and know that Montana will make good as soon as we get a class of farmers who will cultivate the soil as it should be and not expect to raise a crop from discing and seeding without plowing, which method has been used on three-fourths of our land in the past three years. Any farmer who summer-fallows in Montana will raise a crop and get a larger return for the same efforts than any land outdoors, taken as an average. This is the first year in my experience for summer fallowing land to have failed, and it has not made an entire failure this year. Most farmers who did, will get something."

W. P. Sherman

Nora K Shuman

In May, 1890, Mr. Broadwater married Josephine Skelly, who was born at Keensville, Canada. They have two daughters, Charlotte and Josephine.

Mr. Broadwater served one term as alderman of Havre from the First Ward, and when Edward F. Burke resigned as mayor he was appointed for the unexpired term. Politically he is a democrat.

Benjamin Frank Chestnut. The people who constitute the bone and sinew of this country are not those who are unstable and unsettled; who fly from this occupation to that; who do not know how to vote until they are told, and who take no active and intelligent interest in public affairs. The backbone of this country is made up of the families who have made their homes; who are alive to the best interests of the community in which they reside, who are so honest that it is no trouble for their neighbors to know it; who attend to their own business and are too busy to attend to that of others; who work on steadily from day to day, taking the sunshine with the storm and rear a fine family to a comfortable home and honest lives. Such people are wealth producers and are welcome in any community.

Benjamin Frank Chestnut, one of the leading real estate men of Havre, was born in Oakland County, Michigan, on the 4th of February, 1865. He is the son of Benjamin and Mary Ann (Martin) Chestnut. The father was born about two miles south of the famous Giant's Causeway, in the north of Ireland, and died in 1892, at the age of sixty-four years. His wife, who was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, died in 1904, when sixty-three years of age. Benjamin F. is the sixth in order of birth of the ten children born to his parents, and of which number nine are still living. Benjamin Chestnut remained in the Emerald Isle until fourteen years of age, receiving his education in the schools of his home community. At the age named he accompanied his widowed mother to the United States, the slow-going sailing vessel requiring six weeks to make the trip. They landed at Philadelphia, where the lad secured employment in a carpet factory. He married in Philadelphia when twenty-one years of age, and then moved to Oakland County, Michigan, of which he was one of the pioneers, and there he literally hewed a home out of the wilderness of great forest trees which covered practically all of that region. He remained there until March, 1871, when he moved to Jackson County, Kansas, where he engaged in farming during the remainder of his active years. He was versatile in his abilities, being also an expert in stone work and plastering. Politically he was a republican.

Benjamin F. Chestnut received his education in the public schools of Kansas, and his first active employment was in carrying water to harvest hands. On May 30, 1886, soon after attaining his majority, Mr. Chestnut went to Butte, Montana, where he first tended stage stock on the Red Rock. Later he went to Dawson County, where he went to work for John O'Brien at a stage station. In the spring of 1887 he assisted in the gathering of poor cows, but later on went to Williston, North Dakota, where he was employed at various forms of labor until March, 1888. From that time until April, 1891, he was engaged in the saloon business at Williston, moving on the date mentioned to Cut Bank, where he ran a saloon for a brief period, and soon afterward was engaged in the same business at Havre, Montana. He was so occupied up to May, 1908, since which date he has given his attention principally to the real estate business, with which he has been identified ever since locating in Havre. In this business Mr. Chestnut has been very successful, being a good judge of property values and an enthusiastic booster for Havre. He is the owner of several valuable pieces of property in Havre, including the Farmers State Bank Building. It is related of Mr. Chestnut by those familiar with his business record that his saloons were always run on a far higher plane than the average bar, everything approaching roughness or vulgarity being rigidly excluded, no gambling of any sort being permitted, and a general tone being cultivated that attracted only people of the better sort. It was not an uncommon thing for him to keep his place open on cold nights solely for the accommodation of people waiting for the late trains and who otherwise would have had no comfortable place in which to wait.

Politically Mr. Chestnut has always given his support to the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Butte Consistory of the Scottish Rite (thirty-second degree); Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena, and Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is held in high repute in his home city, in evidence of which is the fact that he has been elected to the City Council three times, giving efficient service to his constituents.

In March, 1892, Mr. Chestnut was married to Mary Ann Finn, a native of Montana, and they have become the parents of seven children, namely: Lula M., Eva H., Marvin F., Margaret E., Thomas William, Mary L. and John Havre.

Nora K. Sherman. The active head of the undertaking firm of Sherman & Miller of Kalispell is Mrs. Nora K. Sherman, who for many years was associated with her husband in that business and in its conduct since his death has proved her superior qualifications as a business executive.

The late W. P. Sherman was born at Dubuque, Iowa, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Sherman. When a boy his people moved to Butte, Montana, where he grew up and where he met Miss Nora Daugherty. She was born in County Mayo, Ireland, a daughter of James and Bridget (Kirby) Daugherty. She was educated in her native land and at the age of eighteen came to America with her uncle, John Kirby, and lived at Butte. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sherman were identified with the undertaking business in Butte for nine years, and then moved their establishment to the new city of Kalispell. Mr. Sherman became well and favorably known all over the Flathead country. He was a good business man, a man of honor, with a genius for friendship, and a kindness of heart and generosity that endeared him to all. It was with great regret that the community was apprised of his death in 1913. He was a member of the Masonic Order, belonged to the Woodmen of the World, the Elks, was a member of the Episcopal Church and a democrat.

After his death Mrs. Sherman continued the business alone until 1919, when she took in Mr. W. J. Miller as a partner. To Mr. and Mrs. Sherman were born the following children: William E., deceased; Nora K., Clara L., Harry, Grace, Edward, Roger and four that died in infancy. Mrs. Sherman took much care in the rearing and training of her children, and all were graduated from the Kalispell High School. Grace finished her school work in 1920; Harry is now a student in the Polytechnic School of Oakland, California. The daughter Clara has special gifts in music and has studied with some of the best instructors in Chicago. She is now pianist for the Glacier Park Band, and performs extended engagements with that organization in the Lewis Hotel of Glacier Park. Mrs. Sherman and her two daughters Nora and Clara are active members of the Eastern Star.

William M. Combes. Among the few who have been connected with Sidney throughout its entire history, from the inception of the town until the present time, is numbered William M. Combes. He was born near Clinton, Indiana, May 21, 1878, and grew to mature years there. His father, Francis E. Combes, was born in Vermilion County of that state, and spent all his life there as a farmer. He was a soldier of infantry during the war between the North and South, and was discharged at the close of the struggle without injury. He immediately resumed farming, and before his death, which occurred at the age of forty-six, attained considerable success. He married Elizabeth Hayes, who was also born in Indiana, her people coming as pioneer farmers to that state from Kentucky. She has reached the age of seventy and is living in Sidney. The children in the Combes family were: Elmer, of Vigo County, Indiana; Jennie, who married L. A. Clevenger and died at Lambert, Montana, in 1918; Myrtle, the wife of V. C. Saxton, of Hood River, Oregon; William M., of Sidney; Bonnie P., the wife of Fred Elzicar, of Sidney; and Harry, who also makes his home in Sidney.

Before leaving his native community of Clinton, Indiana, William M. Combes took up the carpenter trade as an apprentice, and he started out for himself as a mechanic at the age of twenty-one years, and continued at the trade until he abandoned it at Sidney many years later. From his home community he made his way to Colorado, where he spent a few months as a carpenter at Denver, and in May, 1904, arrived in Montana. In the embryo Town of Sidney he became a pioneer carpenter and builder, associating himself with P. O. Blake as the firm of Combes & Blake, and during the three years he continued actively identified with this line of work many of the early business houses and residences were built by the firm, of which may be mentioned the Bank of the Valley, now the First National Bank, the Thompson Kemmis, Ira M. Allin and Mrs. Meador's residences, the pioneer building of E. A. Kenoyer, occupied first by the Yellowstone Mercantile Company, the J. A. Ferris and John Smith business houses, the Ora Kemmis mercantile house and the post office building.

From contracting Mr. Combes drifted into the electrical business, organizing the Water Users Electric Company, and he also became identified with the telephone business, constructing and operating the long distance lines in the valley and connecting the territory from Mondak to Intake. He was made the manager of the enterprise. About this time also he took up undertaking, and when he added to the enterprise the furniture line he became one of Sidney's merchants. Later Mr. Combes became connected with the automobile industry, being one of the first automobile owners in the valley, and he has ever since dealt in cars and has erected a brick building for his livery and sales business. This business house, a two-story building 31 by 70 feet, is located on Morrill Street.

In 1916, in association with John P. Meadows, Mr. Combes built the pontoon bridge across the Yellowstone, and he is president of the bridge company. He is also one of the stockholders of the Deaconess Hospital of Sidney, and was a member of its building board and for a time served as a trustee of the hospital. He still continues in the undertaking business, owning two establishments, one at Savage and another at Lambert, Montana. In Richland County he was first appointed to the office of coroner, and was then elected to that position on the republican ticket, now serving his second term in the office. During his administration he conducted the inquiry concerning the death of Charles Mignaugh, assisted in unraveling the mystery of the killing and saw the murderer go to the penitentiary for life.

In Johnsonville, Illinois, in June, 1901, Mr. Combes married Miss Dicy D. Pastre, who was born in that community of Illinois June 20, 1883. They are the parents of two daughters, Geneva and Esther, both attending the Sidney High School, and members respectively of the classes of 1920 and 1921.

Garry Jackson Jeffries, lawyer and mine operator, was born on his father's farm in Saint Clair County, Missouri, October 23, 1885, a son of John D. and Susan E. (Price) Jeffries. John D. Jeffries was born in Kentucky, August 4, 1850, and his wife was born in Iowa, March 20, 1858. Their five children are all living, and of them Garry Jackson Jeffries is the third in order of birth. John D. Jeffries spent his youth in Kentucky, and in 1860 was taken to Missouri by his parents, who located in Putnam County. After the war the family removed to St. Clair County. In this region John D. Jeffries matured and developed into a successful farmer and stockraiser, and also became a buyer and shipper of stock to the St. Louis and Kansas City, Missouri, markets. On his farm he engaged in the breeding of Percheron horses. Ever since he cast his first vote he has given the republican party his warm support. The Christian Church in him has a faithful and earnest member.

Garry Jackson Jeffries was reared in his native state, and attended the public schools of Saint Clair County and the Kansas City School of Law, from which he was graduated in 1908. Following his graduation he was associated with Attorney Israel Cowen of Chicago; also employed as assistant night librarian in the Chicago Law Institute. Mr. Jeffries then took a special course in the law department of Yale University. In the fall of 1911 he came West and was associated with J. C. Huntoon at Lewistown until January, 1912, when he formed a partnership with Mr. Huntoon, under the name of Huntoon & Jeffries, with a branch office at Roundup, Mr. Jeffries taking charge of the same. In the November election of 1912 Mr. Jeffries was elected county attorney of Musselshell County, and the partnership was dissolved. He was reelected in 1914, and after serving two terms resumed his private practice. In July, 1918, Mr. Jeffries formed a partnership with A. G. McNaught, under the name of Jeffries & McNaught. Mr. Jeffries is a member of the Montana Bar Association. In politics he is a republican. A Mason, he belongs to Unity Lodge No. 71, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons. He formerly belonged to Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, but demitted to and is a charter member of Roundup Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons.

On June 17, 1914, Mr. Jeffries was married to Miss M. Josephine McGaughan, who was born in South Dakota, a daughter of Michael McGaughan and second in the family of six children born to her parents.

In 1916 Mr. Jeffries became interested in coal mining. He developed and owns the Independent Mining Company at Roundup, the only coal property in the Northwest operated exclusively on the "Long-Wall" system of mining. He is a stockholder in the Newton Hardware & Implement Company of Roundup; the Roundup National Bank, of which he is a director; also the owner of ranching property in the vicinity of Roundup.

Mr. Jeffries is one of those men who seem to succeed in whatever they undertake. Possessed of a superabundance of efficiency and initiative, he forges ahead. He takes deep interest in his law practice, his business enterprises, his ranching and his work as a good citizen. There are few more actively connected with various enterprises than he. Possessed of a striking personality, he attracts men and holds them by virtue of his rugged honesty and sterling qualities. He never forgets a favor, although he is the last man to ask one, and he feels that he owes his community a part of his time and financial support.

Elias Fenn Lyman. Although for some years a distinguished divine of the Congregational denomination, Elias Fenn Lyman has been equally successful along another avenue of usefulness, and is now one of the leading ranchers of Cascade County, his finely improved ranch lying three miles south of Cascade. He comes of two of the oldest families in the country, the Lymans and Fenns, representatives of both coming to the American colonies in 1633 and locating at Salem, Massachusetts. Mr. Lyman's grandfather, Elias Lyman, was born at Southampton, Massachusetts, from whence he moved to Trumbull County in the Western Reserve of Ohio, where he was one of the pioneers.

Elias Fenn Lyman was born in Garden Prairie Township, Boone County, Iowa, February 15, 1872, on the farm of his parents, Howard Fisk and Emerah Merriam (Fenn) Lyman. Howard Fisk Lyman was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, on November 30, 1841, and his wife was born in Ashtabula, Ohio, September 9, 1848, and died on February 22, 1872, having borne her husband two children, namely: Edna A., who is the wife of Joseph E. Haight; and Elias Fenn Lyman, whose name heads this review.

Howard F. Lyman attended the public schools of Ohio and learned to be a farmer. With the outbreak of hostilities between the North and the South he tried to join the army, but was rejected, but later was able to enlist in the Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry on April 14, 1865, and did guard duty at Chattanooga, Tennessee, but as his health was poor he was placed in a hospital and remained there until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged. In 1866 he went to Boone County, Iowa, and was engaged there in farming and stock raising until 1883, when he went to Dakota territory, locating near the present site of Armour, South Dakota, and continuing his agricultural operations there until the spring of 1901, when he sold his ranch. Going then to Redlands, California, he lived there in retirement until 1908. In the latter year he came to Cascade County, Montana, and bought a ranch of 920 acres in the vicinity of Great Falls, and is living on it, although retired from the activities of conducting it. He has never cared for public office, but gives an intelligent support to the republican party. All his life he has been a strong adherent of the Congregational Church.

Elias Fenn Lyman attended the public schools of Iowa and Yankton College at Yankton, South Dakota, from which he was graduated in 1895, following which he took a theological course at the Chicago Theological Seminary and was graduated therefrom in 1899 as a Bachelor of Divinity. His first charge subsequent to his graduation was the Congregational Church at Alcester, South Dakota, his last charge in South Dakota being at Milbank. In 1905 he was made pastor of the First Congregational Church of Great Falls, Montana, and continued as such for three years, when he resigned from the ministry and spent the subsequent year on his father's farm. He then began farming and stock raising in Chestnut Valley and has made a success of his undertaking. A man of progressive ideas, he has inaugurated a number of changes, and to him belongs the distinction of building the first silo in Cascade County. Mr. Lyman is specializing in breeding Holstein-Friesian cattle, and also carries on a dairy business, shipping his milk to Great Falls. During the Montana State Fair of 1919 Mr. Lyman received the grand champion prize on his nine month bull calf. He is an independent republican. At present he is president of the board of trustees of the Rural School District of Cascade County, this having been the first county to be organized under the county unit law. In addition to his other interests Mr. Lyman is president of the Cascade Co-operative Association, a mercantile concern.

On December 30, 1897, Mr. Lyman was united in marriage with Emily Ada Perrin, born at Garden Grove, Iowa. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lyman, namely: Perrin F.; Carolyn, who died in infancy; Howard M.; Marion, who died six years ago; and Elbridge Fenn. One of the best educated men in the county, Mr. Lyman is naturally an authority upon many matters, and as he has proven his ability to carry on his present undertaking his associates look upon him as an expert in it, so that he exerts a strong influence, and always in the direction of development and constructive citizenship.

Edmund W. Reid. While building and contracting, manufacturing and ranching, have made up the bulk of his experience since he came to Great Falls thirty years ago, Edmund W. Reid during the past ten years has also been a factor in promoting and developing the mining interests of Montana. He is the largest stockholder in the Reid Mining, Milling and Smelting Company of Great Falls, a company that owns and has in process of development a property in Teton County near the north line of the state whose assays show runs very rich in copper, silver and gold.

Mr. Reid was born near Montreal, Canada, September 19, 1856, son of James and Eliza Jane (Weir) Reid. His father, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was born in the Province of Quebec in 1825 and as a young man went into the wilderness section of Canada and cleared up a farm from the woods and spent his life as a farmer and stockman, and cultivating all the virtues of a citizen devoted to the soil. He was an active member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1902 and his wife survived him until 1919, when she was ninety-six years of age. They have nine children, six still living, Edmund W. being the second in age.

Edmund W. Reid spent his boyhood days in Canada, attended public school, worked on the farm, and also began to learn the carpenter's trade. At the age of seventeen he went to New York state and served an apprenticeship as a carpenter. In 1882 Mr. Reid was at Winnipeg, Canada, and was employed at his trade by the Canadian Pacific Railway, building stations and doing other work on some of the first towns along the line. In January, 1883, he went to Rat Portage, Lake of the Woods, Ontario, and the following summer did carpentry work. He was at Minneapolis from 1884 to 1890. During this time, in 1888, he first visited Montana and worked at Fort Assinniboine, laying out the tasks of the carpenters in the construction of that post. Mr. Reid became a permanent resident of Great Falls in 1890, and developed a general building and contracting business. In 1891 most of his time was spent at Havre, where he built the Place Hotel, the Hotel Rivers, and a building for a drug store. In 1894 he organized the Black Eagle Carriage Company at Great Falls, and has since been president of that thriving industry. In 1912 he filed on a homestead claim in Teton County, and in connection with other business affairs is still operating a 320 acre ranch, raising cattle and horses.

Mr. Reid is affiliated with Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a charter member of the local camp, Woodmen of the World. In politics he is a democrat and cast his first presidential vote for Grover Cleveland. August 25, 1891, at Great Falls, he married Addie Steele, a native of New York state, born near Buffalo. They had two children: Maud, who died in infancy; and Ethel.

Frank C. Vanatta, M. D., physician and surgeon of Cascade, is one of the members of his profession in Montana who gave his country military service during the great war, and has now returned to private practice. He was born in Fremont County, Iowa, August 17, 1883, a son of Hugh C. and Phebe (Reckard) Vanatta. Hugh C. Vanatta was born in Logan County, Ohio, March 17, 1846, and his wife was born in Indiana June 2, 1851. They were married in Fremont County, Iowa, and had four children born to them, of whom three survive, Doctor Vanatta being the youngest born. After receiving his educational training in his native state Hugh C. Vanatta went to Missouri, and from there traveled overland by ox team to Grant County, Iowa, and still later to Fremont County, where he was engaged in farming and stock raising until 1916, when he retired. A republican, he served in a number of offices, including those of school director, township assessor and supervisor, and is one of the best known men of his neighborhood. Fraternally he belongs to Crown Lodge No. 439, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Randolph, Iowa; and Shenandoah Chapter, Royal Arch Masons.

Following his completion of the courses of the public schools of his neighborhood Doctor Vanatta took his classical course at Drake University of Des Moines, Iowa, and then his medical course in the medical schools of Northwestern University, from which he was graduated in 1909. Subsequently he was interne at Saint Luke's Hospital, Chicago, for a time, and then spent eighteen months in the General Hospital at Sheridan, Wyoming. From there Doctor Vanatta came to Montana, first practicing at Maysville, but later moving to Cascade. In 1911 he joined the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States army with the rank of lieutenant, and received his commission as captain April 9, 1917, and was assigned to Fort William Henry Harrison, from whence he was later transferred to Camp Lewis, September 17, 1917, and remained in the service until March 3, 1919, when he was discharged and returned home.

On May 26, 1918, Doctor Vanatta was married to Ella M. Trimble, born in Kansas, a daughter of William J. and Jane (Marshall) Trimble, natives of Canada, who are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Trimble became the parents of four children, of whom three survive, Mrs. Vanatta being the second in order of birth. Doctor Vanatta was made a Mason by Crown Lodge No. 439, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Randolph, Iowa, but demitted and became a charter member of Meridan Lodge No. 105, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Cascade, Montana. He is also a member of Helena Consistory No. 3, which has made him a thirty-second degree Mason. Doctor Vanatta belongs to the County, State and National Medical associations. Like his father he is a strong republican. An able and skilled physician and surgeon, Doctor Vanatta belongs to the younger school of medicine, and is recognized as one of the most representative men of his calling in this part of the state.

W. J. Brennen. While one of the oldest residents of Flathead County, where he has devoted many years to the practice of law at Kalispell, W. J. Brennen is almost nationally well known, and as a lawyer and public leader is undoubtedly one of the most prominent men in Montana.

Reminescent of his early political activities is the sobriquet "Tin Plate Bill," a phrase that was given him some twenty years or more ago. During the nineties he did a good deal of campaigning throughout Montana as a republican speaker, and one of his political opponents as a gift sent him a diminutive tin plate, recommending it for a watchguard. The significance of the tin plate was due to Mr. Brennen's strenuous advocacy of the McKinley tariff bill, the famous protective measure which stimulated the tin plate and other American industries. Mr. Brennen promptly returned the proposed watchguard, saying that if the following inscription could be engraved on it he would cheerfully wear it and cherish it. The inscription was as follows:

> "McKinley's banner guards our land
> From England's greed and pauper pay,
> And when I play Great Britain's hand
> Just take me for a Blooming Jay.
> Bill."

The plate was returned to Mr. Brennen with the verse properly engraved and he wore it for many years. After that Mr. Brennen was advertised by the republican national committee as "Tin Plate Bill," and at campaign meetings he was an orator who drew out immense crowds.

Mr. Brennen was born at Watertown, Jefferson County, New York, a son of W. J. and Mary A. (Porter) Brennen. His mother was a graduate from one of the first schools of telegraphy, receiving her diploma of efficiency in 1859. In 1862, when W. J. Brennen was two years old, the family moved out to Colorado, where his parents went through many pioneer experiences and hardships. Their home was burned out three times by raiding bands of Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians. Mr. Brennen's mother was employed as one of the first telegraph operators in Colorado, and handled the telegraph key at an office forty-two miles south of Denver for the Barlow & Sanderson stage line on the old Pike's Peak road, twenty-three miles from the foot of Pike's Peak.

W. J. Brennen attended the public schools of Colorado and later graduated from Washington University at St. Louis. Immediately after leaving college he came to the Pacific Coast in 1880, locating in Seattle, then a small city of only 1,000 people. He was employed in the legal department of the Northern Pacific Railroad during the process of construction of its various lines between 1880 and 1889. After that Mr. Brennen began a private law practice at Helena. His associate was Dudley Dubose. Dubose was a grandson of Robert Toombs, the famous Georgia statesman. Dudley Dubose is the character "Durham" depicted in Rex Beach's story "The Spoilers." Dubose and Brennen were close friends for years, and Mr. Brennen pays his old associate the highest tribute as being a true friend and a man of big heart and true manhood. Dubose at one time was a district judge in Montana, and was ever a strenuous force in behalf of law and order in the territory and state.

In 1891 Mr. Brennen moved to the Flathead country. He had visited this district in 1887 and 1889, and his impressions of the district determined him to make it his permanent home. At Helena he married Miss Martha J. Allison. She was born at Eugene, Oregon. Their one son, Jasper Allison Brennen, born in 1889, was educated in the Shattuck Academy at Faribault, Minnesota, graduated in 1911. He married Miss Stella Locke, a native of Idaho, and a daughter of James Locke. They have a son, William James Brennen. Jasper Allison Brennen is a successful young farmer and stock grower in Flathead County.

From 1904 to 1908 Mr. Brennen represented his district in the State Senate, being elected on the republican ticket. He introduced the first Railway Commission Bill, and the provisions of that law are practically on the statute books today. He also introduced the law regulating fees of executors and administrators. Another piece of legislation was that providing for the organization of cemetery associations, insuring perpetual care for the cemeteries.

Mr. Brennen was a member of the National Convention which nominated Theodore Roosevelt in 1904, and was also a delegate to the convention at Chicago in 1916 when Charles Hughes was nominated. President McKinley appointed Mr. Brennen as the first superintendent of the Forest Reserve under the Forest Reserve Law. Mr. Brennen enjoyed relations of personal friendship with President McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and Senator Thomas H. Carter. During the World war he was a member of the Montana Council of Defense. He is a past master of his Masonic Lodge, is also a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and as a member of the Grand Lodge he participated in the ceremonies marking the laying of the cornerstone of the gate at the entrance of the Yellowstone National Park at Gardner. On that occasion Theodore Roosevelt was an honored guest. The Brennen family are members of the Episcopal Church at Kalispell.

When Mr. Brennen came to Flathead County for the first time in 1887 its voting population was about twenty-six. At that time the country was unsurveyed, and the historic settlement of Demersville was the extreme northwestern town of Montana and at the head of navigation. Mr. Brennen has lent his personal influence wherever possible to the development and improvement of this wonderful country and feels a sense of personal pride in the progress made in thirty years.

Mr. Brennen has made several trips to Alaska. He started on the first one on St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1883. He embarked on the steamer Ancon, a side wheeler, which took him as far as Juneau, whence he continued the journey on a sailing vessel as far as the present site of Dyie.

CHARLES A. SEDERHOLM. One of the thrifty and highly respected natives of Sweden who have cast their lot with the people of Montana in the period of its rapid development and have since prospered by close application and faithfulness to duty is Charles A. Sederholm, a distinctive type of the successful, self-made man. Not a pretentious or exalted life has been his, but one that has been true to itself and to which the biographer may refer with feelings of satisfaction and respect. He has shown himself to be a man of strong and alert mentality, deeply interested in everything pertaining to the advancement of the community, and is held in the highest regard and esteem by those who know him.

Charles A. Sederholm was born in Sweden on December 26, 1874, and is the son of August and Emma (Anderson) Sederholm. The father, who was born in 1852, is still living; the mother died in 1914, at the age of sixty-one years. They became the parents of four children, all of whom are living, Charles A. being the eldest. August Sederholm left his native land for America in 1878, landing at New York City. He located at Osceola, Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, where he engaged in mining until 1895, when he came to Montana, locating at Belt, where he engaged in farming and stock raising. He was successful in his labors, continuing his work until 1918, when he sold his ranch and retired from active work. Politically he is a supporter of the republican party. Fraternally he is a member of Summit Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Ebensburg, Pennsylvania. He is a man of splendid character and has richly earned the high standing which he enjoys among those who know him.

Charles A. Sederholm was but four years of age when the family came to the United States. He was reared and educated in Pennsylvania, and his first money was earned in trapping doors in the coal mines, for which he received fifty-five cents a day. He remained employed in the mines until 1896, when he came to Montana, locating at Belt, where he went to work in the coal mines of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. In 1900 he became foreman of these mines, but three years later he went to Cokedale, Montana, where for three years he was a mine foreman. During the following year he was foreman of the coal mines at Bridger, Montana, after which, up to 1912, he was connected with the coal mines at Nashua, Montana. From there he went to Tracy, Montana, where he became superintendent of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company's coal mines. Mr. Sederholm has an absolute knowledge of every phase of coal mining and has no superiors in his line. Personally he is a man of fine character and generous impulses, whom to know is to like, and he is well deserving of specific mention in a work of this character.

On January 23, 1900, Mr. Sederholm was married to Elizabeth W. Heron, who was born in Barton, Maryland, the daughter of Francis and Laura (Kight) Heron, both of whom were born at Barton, Maryland, and both of whom are living. Mr. Heron came to Miles City, Montana, in 1882, going from there to Lignite, and later to Timberline, Montana, where he was employed at his vocation as a miner. He is now living in Tracy, Montana. Politically he is a republican. Religiously he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sederholm, namely: Helen, who attended the public schools of Sand Coulee, graduating from the high school, and later attended the State Normal School at Dillon, is now teaching in the schools of Manchester, Montana; Cecil is a student in the high school at Sand Coulee; and Jack, Frank, Lois, Billie, Fay and Fred. Among those who know him best Mr. Sederholm bears a reputation of a man who exercises sound judgment and who keeps himself well informed upon general topics, exercising the duties of citizenship in a conscientious manner.

Samuel Dean. Clearly defined purpose and consecutive effort will inevitably result in the attaining of a due measure of success, but in following out the career of one who has attained success by his own efforts there comes into view the intrinsic individuality which made such accomplishment possible, and thus there is granted an objective inspiration and incentive, while at the same time there is enkindled a feeling of respect and admiration. The qualities which have made Samuel Dean one of the prominent and successful men of Western Montana have also brought him the esteem of his fellow men, for his career has been one of well directed energy, strong determination and honorable methods.

Samuel Dean was born in Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, on the 4th day of March, 1843, and is the son of William and Elizabeth (Mantain) Dean. The father was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died on March 12, 1853, in the seventy-third year of his age. His wife, who was a native of the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, died on February 12, 1875, at the age of seventy-one years. They were the parents of thirteen children, seven sons and six daughters, of whom the subject of this sketch is the only survivor. Soon after his marriage William Dean went from Philadelphia to Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, where he spent the remainder of his days. He engaged in farming, in connection with which he raised cattle, sheep and horses, having at times as many as 200 head of sheep. He occupied a prominent place in the community and served one term as sheriff of Huntingdon County. He was a member of the school board for many years and a justice of the peace for a long period, up to the time of his death. A number of years prior to his death he was shot by a robber and so badly injured that he was an invalid during the reminder of his life. He was an attendant of the Episcopal Church, of which his wife was a member. Politically he was first a whig and later a republican.

Samuel Dean received a good substantial education in the public schools of his native county, and his early years were spent on his father's farm. In August, 1863, he enlisted in Company A, Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, which became a part of the Twenty-fourth Corps, Army of the Potomac, with which he served until the close of the war, taking part in all the battles, skirmishes and campaigns in which his regiment had a part. He received an honorable discharge at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, August 27, 1865. His command had been at Fort Fisher twice, first under General Ben Butler and later with General Orr; he was also in the furious three-days battle at Gettysburg, and after the capture of Jeff Davis Mr. Dean was one of the guard who were placed over the ex-president of the Southern Confederacy.

In February, 1866, Mr. Dean went to Jackson County, Iowa, where he remained until April, 1867, when he went to Scott County, Minnesota, and for about a year was employed in an elevator at Blakeley. In the spring of 1868 he made the trip up the Missouri River to Buford, where he was employed in the building of the United States post, and in cutting hay and herding stock. In the spring of 1872 he was engaged in the survey of the boundary line between Canada and the United States, this occupying him until the fall of 1874, when he went to Helena. In 1880 Mr. Dean bought a ranch in the Prickley Pear Valley and in the spring of the following year he came to Sand Coulee with a band of horses. He entered actively in the business of breeding and raising of horses, and gave considerable attention to the mining of coal, he having been the first to discover the existence of coal in this locality. This coal interest he sold to the Nelson Coal Company in 1906, and since that time he has practically confined his attention to farming and the raising of cattle and horses, in which he has met with splendid success. Mr. Dean has thus been identified with this section of the country for a good many years and has been a witness of the wonderful development which has characterized the history of the Treasure State for the past forty years. In 1883 he run a big herd of sheep where Great Falls now stands, and can in various ways refer to events antedating many of the now flourishing towns of this commonwealth.

On the 7th of July, 1891, Mr. Dean was married to Sarah Donley, who is a native of Ireland, and to them have been born three children, namely: Ruth is the wife of George Lucas, of Tracy, Cascade County, Montana, and they have one daughter; William W. was married to a Miss Johnson, and they are living in Portland, Oregon; and Florence.

Politically Mr. Dean is an earnest supporter of the republican party and has taken a keen interest in public affairs. He rendered effective and appreciated service as a member of the School Board for twenty years and was public administrator of Cascade County for thirteen years. He is the only charter member surviving of Sheridan Post No. 18, G. A. R., at Great Falls. His life has been one of signal usefulness and honor, and he has richly earned the confidence and esteem which are accorded him by his fellow citizens.

Sumner A. Remington. It is a truly notable service that Sumner A. Remington has rendered to the city and community of Belt. He went there over twenty-five years ago, a young man of college and university training, to take charge of the local schools. Belt was then small in population and in commercial importance, and had correspondingly a very small school. Mr. Remington has been the head of the local educational system ever since, and his inspiring leadership has had much to do with keeping the school facilities apace with the growth and development of the city and the enlightened standards of modern education.

Mr. Remington, who for many years has been city school superintendent of Belt, was born at Mumford, Monroe County, New York, August 10, 1871, son of William and Mary (Graham) Remington. His father was born at Mumford March 4, 1830, was educated in Rochester University, became a Baptist minister, and was in charge of churches of that denomination in a number of states. He is still living, at the advanced age of ninety, at San Diego, California. His wife was born at Rochester and died when her son Sumner was a small child. There were six sons altogether, five still living, Sumner A. being the fourth in age.

Sumner A. Remington spent most of his youth in Michigan and took his early college work in a noted Baptist institution, Kalamazoo College. He then taught school at Homan, Michigan, and from there entered the University of Michigan. He came to Belt in 1894 and took charge of the one room school. In 1897 the high school building was erected, eleven years later, in 1908, the school facilities were enlarged by the erection of the Castner School, while in 1912 the handsome Auditorium school building was completed and gave facilities to the city hardly surpassed by any town of its size in Montana. Mr. Remington has been continuously superintendent of schools since 1897, a period of twenty-three years.

He is widely known for his work in Montana educational circles. Fraternally he is affiliated with Cascade Lodge No. 39, Knights of Pythias, at Belt, and Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks. In 1897 he married Miss Annie Mackie, a native of Scranton, Pennsylvania. They have an interesting family of six children, Sumner A., Jr., Genevieve E., Charles E., Ellen, Daphne and Maxine.

Adkin W. Kingsbury. It is signally consonant that in this work be incorporated at least a brief review of the life and labors of Adkin W. Kingsbury, who has long been one of the influential citizens of Western Montana, being a connecting link with the pioneer period, of which he has many interesting reminiscences. A man of forceful individuality and marked initiative power, he has been well equipped for the duties of life and for leadership in his community, while his probity of character and his genial personality, obliging nature and every-day common sense have gained for him universal esteem and friendship in the town and county where he has made his home for so many years.

Adkin W. Kingsbury was born on his father's farm in Howard County, Missouri, on October 20, 1842, and he is the son of Horace and Eliza (Brashears) Kingsbury, natives, respectively, of North Carolina and Missouri. They are both deceased, the father dying at the age of seventy years and the mother passing away when the subject of this sketch was a mere child. Adkin W. was the sixth in order of birth of their eight children, and he is now the only living member of the family. During his boyhood days he attended school during the winter months, his summers being spent in work on the home farm. He gave serious attention to his work, so that when nineteen years of age he was given entire charge of the farm for about three months. On May 9, 1864, he left home, with an ox team, and in company with his brother Lilburn traveled overland to Omaha, Nebraska, where they were joined by others westward bound, so that shortly the cavalcade amounted to over seventy wagons, some bound for Montana, others for Idaho, Washington and Oregon. The journey was begun and everything was all right until they reached Laramie, Wyoming, where they were stopped by United States troops, who would not permit them to go farther on account of the Indians then being on the war path. After things had quieted down, however, they were permitted to proceed. They reached Beaverhead, and thence went on to Jefferson City, where they passed the winter of 1864-5. In the spring Mr. Kingsbury's brother took up a ranch at the fork of the Prickly Pear River and Ten-Mile Creek, and here they engaged in farming in a modest way. Expenses were very high, as may be judged from the fact that at one time they paid as high as eighteen dollars for one ounce of onion seed. This venture did not prove a success and the brother, Lilburn, returned to his old home in Missouri. Mr. Kingsbury also gave up ranching and opened a livery stable in Helena, which proved a more fortunate enterprise, and he conducted it until 1871. He then engaged in prospecting and placer mining in Overland Gulch, but after a short experience at this labor he gave it up and was associated with Davenport & Ray in the purchase of a herd of 1,800 sheep which had been brought from Oregon to Deer Lodge, Montana, by William Harkness. These were the first sheep brought over the mountains from the west and were also the first sheep introduced into this immediate vicinity. The herd was placed on the Boulder River range for three years, and were then brought into what was then Choteau County, now Cascade County. Mr. Kingsbury and his partners remained in that business until 1873, when they added the cattle business, and in 1882 they organized the Chouteau Live Stock Company, Mr. Kingsbury being made general manager of the business. The enterprise was successful and they handled many thousand head of cattle and sheep. In 1892 the Big Sag Sheep Company was organized, with Mr. Kingsbury as president, and they have done a tremendous business in the handling of sheep and cattle. This enterprise has been an important factor in the stock industry of Montana and has been a big success financially. Mr. Kingsbury is also interested in mining and real estate, and is numbered among the enterprising and representative men of Western Montana. Politically he has always supported the democratic party, and has been keenly interested in public questions, though never a seeker after public office for himself.

In 1894 Mr. Kingsbury was united in marriage with Margaret Britt, a native of Ohio, and they are the parents of two children, Adkin W., Jr., and Mary Marguerette. Few men of this section of the country have played a better or more noticeable role in the general progress of the locality than Mr. Kingsbury, for while laboring for his individual advancement he has never shrunk from his larger duties to civilization, and now, in the golden Indian summer of his years, surrounded by the comforts of life as the result of his former years of industry, he can look back over a career well spent, in which duty was well and conscientiously performed, and know that he has the good will and hearty esteem of all those who have come into contact with him.

Martin Rising has been a resident of Montana thirty-one years and has achieved prosperity and distinction among the well to do ranchers in the vicinity of Columbia Falls.

He was born at Baltimore, Maryland, a son of Andrew and Johanna (Hackle) Rising, and was educated in his native state. He came to Montana with his brother, Peter Rising. Mr. Rising married Mrs. Margaret Bradley. Her daughter by her previous marriage was Martha, now Mrs. O. A. Spuhler. Mrs. Spuhler as a young girl was noted for her musical talents, and is now training her voice under the private instruction of one of the most noted voice teachers of Chicago and fitting herself for professional work.

Mr. and Mrs. Rising had two sons, Joseph Ivan and Daniel Martin. From earliest childhood Mr. and Mrs. Rising omitted nothing in the way of effort and planning that would contribute to the character and education of their sons. Both were sent to the Kalispell High School. Joseph graduated from the eighth grade and spent two years in high school.

The name of Joseph Rising stands on the roll of honor with a gold star affixed. He was one of the first to volunteer at the beginning of the World war. At that time he was under age. He enlisted in Company H of the 163rd Infantry and was a part of the famous Rainbow or Forty-second Division. The first service to which he was assigned after he got into the army was as a guard for railroad bridges at Cutbank, Montana, during the early summer of 1917, and he was subsequently transferred to a point between Helena and Great Falls to guard a tunnel near Wolf Creek. He was on duty there until sent overseas in December, 1917, and reached England in time to enjoy a fine Christmas dinner in that country. After reaching France he was transferred to the 127th Regiment. He was with the American troops which distinguished themselves at Chateau Thierry, and while on the front line there was wounded in the left arm. Then followed several weeks of recuperation in hospital, and he returned to the front line duty and was killed in action on the 9th of October, 1918, at the battle of Verdun. He was a young American of great spirit, a fine athlete, and possessed the development and initiative which distinguished the members of the famous Rainbow Division. He was a good musician, was a member of the band at Kalispell and a member of the First Section of Ruffo's Juvenile Band in Kalispell. He was a member of the Sunday School of the Christian Church and a very popular boy and a general favorite. He was also a member of the Kalispell Young Men's Christian Association. In athletics he especially excelled in swimming.

Mrs. Rising's father was a Union soldier during the Civil war, and Joseph Rising used his grandfather's example as the reason why he also should volunteer and serve his country.

Mr. Rising was reared in the faith of the Catholic Church. He has been successful in his business and is a generous hearted and kind neighbor. In politics he gives his support to the best man, and both he and his wife busy themselves in behalf of the welfare and improvement of Flathead County. Mrs. Rising came to Montana in April, 1887. She served three years on the district school board, being chairman of the board. Mrs. Rising is an expert shot, and in the early days she was relied upon to replenish the meat supply when it ran low at home. She killed many deer, and is also an enthusiast with the rod.

Isaac Pappin for over thirty years has conducted a business at Great Falls as a building contractor. Evidences of his work might be found in abundance in the city and at many points in Montana, and the organization he has built up and maintained is noted for its fidelity and promptness of performance.

Mr. Pappin was born at Newquay, Cornwall, England, March 14, 1862. His parents were Isaac and Maria (Gribbin) Pappin. His father was a seafaring man, and for forty years commanded a ship engaged in ocean traffic, carrying him to all the ports of the civilized world. When on shore he attended the Baptist Church. Captain Isaac Pappin died in 1918, at the ripe age of eighty-two. His wife died in 1875, aged fifty-one, and of their seven children Isaac is the youngest and one of the four still living.

Isaac Pappin acquired a public school education in Cornwall and the first money he earned was in buying and selling fish. He spent six years learning and working at the trade of ship carpenter and cabinet making, and is therefore an expert in most of the trades involved in building construction. He first came to America in 1882 and followed his trade in the mining districts of Northern Michigan, working as a carpenter at the mines at Humboldt six months, then at Marquette, was then employed at the waterworks at Republic, Michigan, and for two years worked as a carpenter at Negaunee. He also spent about three months at Huron, South Dakota. In 1884 he moved to Winnipeg, Canada, and after about seven months went back to England. About that time he engaged in one of the most interesting experiences of his life. He was with the English forces sent to Egypt, and was employed as a steamship pilot on the river Nile, carrying the British soldiers up and down that river. For the faithful performance of duty he received a medal and clasp from the Queen of England and also a bronze star and clasp from the Khedive of Egypt.

May 1, 1885, Mr. Pappin returned to England and on the 13th of June of that year he married Susan A. Knight. She was born at Truro, Cornwall, England. Mr. Pappin soon brought his bride to America, spending two weeks in Winnipeg, then a short time at Toronto, and from there came direct to Great Falls, Montana. With the exception of one year at Havre he has been a resident of Great Falls ever since, and has carried on a growing business as a contractor and builder. This business is now continued under the name of Pappin & Son, his partner and business associate being J. H. Floyd Pappin. Mr. Pappin is a republican in politics.

Seven children were born to his marriage and the five now living are: Lillian Annie, wife of T. C. Hibbard and the mother of two children; J. H. Floyd, who married Anna Pohlmeyer and has two children; and Flora, Clarice and Gordon.

Walter C. Blomquist is a Montana banker, managing official of the State Bank of Belt, and his record contains many proofs of his active and public spirited leadership in that community.

Mr. Blomquist was reared and educated in Montana, but was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, April 1, 1887, son of Louis and Hilda (Blomquist) Blomquist. His father was born in Sweden, came to this country when a young man, lived in Canada for several years and was proprietor of a hotel at Port Arthur. From Port Arthur he moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he continued the hotel business, and subsequently came to Montana. For about five years he was in the employ of the Boston & Montana Smelter Company at Great Falls, and then moved to a homestead in Cascade County near Belt, and his last years were taken up with farming and stock growing. He died in 1917. In politics he was a republican. He and his wife were married in Port Arthur, Canada. His wife was a native of Finland and died in 1916. Their six children, five sons and one daughter, are all living, Walter being the second in age.

Walter C. Blomquist attended the public schools of Montana, and finished his education in the Montana Wesleyan College at Helena. In January, 1908, at the age of twenty-one, he went to work for the State Bank of Belt as messenger boy. He was promoted to teller, became assistant cashier in 1910, and since January 3, 1911, has been cashier. For the past five or six years he has been the active manager of the bank, has handled its affairs wisely and efficiently, and by his courtesy has attracted a great deal of patronage to the institution.

During all the years he has not avoided those duties and responsibilities that rest upon good sitzenship. He served as city treasurer of Belt six years or more, was an alderman one term, on the school board several terms, and during the war was chairman of the Liberty Loan and Red Cross committees in the Belt district. The Belt district oversubscribed its quota in every campaign. Mr. Blomquist is past chancellor commander of Cascade Lodge No. 39, Knights of Pythias, at Belt, and was chairman of the building committee which erected the twenty-five thousand dollar Knights of Pythias Temple. He is also affiliated with Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and in politics is a republican.

In June, 1913, he married Miss Flora M. Wright, who was born in England, being the oldest of the three children of Thomas and Sarah Wright. Her parents are living at Belt, Montana, and her father has been a hard working blacksmith in that city for the past twenty-four years.

GORDON O. SHAFER. Among the earnest and enterprising men whose depth of character has gained him a prominent place in the community and the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens is Gordon O. Shafer, of Great Falls. A man of decided views and laudable ambitions, his influence has ever made for the advancement of his community, and usefulness to his fellow men has by no means been a secondary consideration with him. Thus strong and forceful in his relations with his fellows, he has gained the good will and commendation of his business associates and the general public, retaining his reputation among men of integrity and high character, and never losing the dignity which is the birthright of the true gentleman.

Gordon O. Shafer was born on his father's farm in St. Clair County, Michigan, on April 29, 1878. His parents were Oren H. and Mary (Sperry) Shafer, both of whom were born in Michigan, the former in 1846 and the latter in 1848. For a number of years Oren Shafer followed agricultural pursuits, but later entered the employ of the M., H. & O. Railway Company, leaving that company some time later to go with the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Company as station agent at Houghton, Michigan. He held that position for a number of years and then became branch manager at South Bend, Indiana, for the International Harvester Company. Politically he gives his support to the republican party, and he is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Gordon O. Shafer was educated in the public schools of Mount Clemens, Michigan, completing his studies in the high school. His first employment was as a farm hand, for which he received $8 a month. In 1896 he went to Denver, Colorado, where he was employed on a ranch, and later followed the same employment in Wyoming, riding the ranges and doing all the ouside work characteristic of a large ranch. Later he went to St. Paul, Minnesota, where for one season he was employed to handle stock in the yards of the St. Paul Stock Yards Company. The following winter he spent in the lumber camps, getting out timber, but in the spring of 1899 he came to Montana, locating on the Judith Basin with Jack Waite. Later he was a range rider at Fort Maginnis, but a short time later he went to Lewistown and entered the employ of Charles Lehman & Company, who operated a large mercantile business at that place. Afterward he became connected with the Judith Basin Bank, now the First National Bank of Lewistown. He entered the bank as bookkeeper, but later became paying teller and a director of the bank. In 1905 he organized the Citizens State Bank at Moore, later the First National Bank, of which he became cashier. He also managed a large lumber and mercantile business aside from his bank duties up to 1910, when he sold his interests there and constructed a water and electric light and power plant at Libby, Montana. Soon afterward he was appointed receiver of the Chester Trading Company at Chester, Montana, which required considerable of his attention for a time. In 1913 he came to Great Falls and organized the Shafer Investment Company, and in 1916, in association with his brother Hugh L. Shafer he organized the Great Falls Building, and Loan Association, of which he was chosen secretary, treasurer and manager. This has been one of the most successful enterprises of its character in this part of the state and reflects considerable credit on the conservative and yet wisely liberal policy of its manager. From 1904 to 1910 Mr. Shafer, with Murray H. Deaton engaged in the cattle business on a large scale in Fergus County, Montana. Today Mr. Shafer is numbered among the enterprising, progressive and influential business men of Great Falls, and holds the unequivocal confidence of all who have had business dealings with him.

Politically he supports the republican party, though he entertains no ambitions for political honors or leadership. Fraternally he was made a Freemason in Lewistown Lodge No. 37, of which he later became a past master, and demitted to Great Falls Lodge; he is also a member of Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, at Lewistown; Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar; Great Falls Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena. He is also a member of the Great Falls Chamber of Commerce.

LOUIS H. KOMMERS has been a well known and popular citizen of Cascade County during a third of a century. A test of his popularity is the fact that he was the only man in the county to serve three consecutive terms in the office of sheriff. Mr. Kommers was also chairman of the draft board for Cascade County during the World war.

He was born on his father's farm in Wright County, Minnesota, May 6, 1870, being second in a family of thirteen children, eight of whom are still living, born to Adolph and Barbara (Longheart) Kommers. The parents were both natives of Germany. His father was brought to America when a child by his parents, who established their home at Green Bay, Wisconsin. Adolph Kommers was educated at Green Bay, and at the beginning of the Civil war volunteered in the Sixteenth Michigan Infantry and saw four years of active service, being a participant in thirty-eight battles. He rose to the grade of sergeant of Company A. At the close of the war, after making a record of which his descendants may always be proud, he chose the life of a pioneer in Minnesota, opening up one of the first farms in Wright County. He has followed the business of farming there for half a century and is now seventy-seven years of age, while his wife is seventy-two. He has been honored with several township offices, including township assessor and justice of the peace. He is a republican and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Louis H. Kommers grew up on his father's farm in Wright County, Minnesota, attended public schools, and at the age of seventeen began earning his own way. For a time he was water boy for a gang of workmen on the Great Northern Railway. Coming to Montana in the spring of 1890, he was employed by the Cascade Land Company three years, and then established his home at Great Falls and was clerk for several stores. He was employed as furnace man, machinist, and electrician with the B. and M. Smelter Company fourteen years. He left that industry to accept appointment as first deputy sheriff under John A. Collins in 1909. After his experience as deputy he was elected and began his first term as county sheriff in 1913 and was re-elected in 1915 and 1917. He is a republican in politics, and is a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Order of Elks.

January 18, 1898, Mr. Kommers married Lillian Berteshe. She was born in Michigan, a daughter of Henry J. and Rose M. (Molthen) Berteshe, the former a native of Buffalo, New York, and the latter of Michigan. Her father died in 1905, at the age of fifty-seven. Mrs. Kommers was the oldest in a family of eight children, six of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Kommers have one daughter, Clara J.

Irwin F. Davis was one of the youngest soldiers on the Union side in the Civil war, and was still a young man when he came to Montana more than thirty-five years ago. For many years he was one of the pioneer saw mill operators in the Flathead country, and his name is widely esteemed and known in that section of the state.

He was born in Warren County, New York, January 1, 1849, a son of W. S. and Margaret A. (Swartwout) Davis. When he was a child his parents moved to Illinois, and he received his early education in that state. At the age of fifteen he ran away from home, and on October 24, 1864, joined the navy. His mother was worried and wrote to the governor of Illinois concerning his whereabouts. It was learned that he had found a berth on the hospital receiving ship Red Rover at Cairo, Illinois. This ship was providing for disabled and wounded soldiers and sailors. Later he was transferred to the Memphis Hospital, and on account of illness was an inmate in that institution three weeks. Following that he was on the gun boat Sybil in the Mississippi River service until the close of the war. He received his honorable discharge at Cairo and returned to Lodi, Illinois.

February 20, 1869, in Wisconsin, Mr. Davis married Miss Selena R. Mollett. She was born in Outagamie County, Wisconsin, August 4, 1852, a daughter of Nicholas and Rebecca A. (Crawford) Mollett. She acquired her early education in the public schools of Stevensville, Wisconsin. In her younger days in Wisconsin Mrs. Davis was employed as a nurse, and many will remember her skillful care and attention among the sick of the Flathead Valley.

Mr. Davis came to Montana in May, 1884, and as a sawyer and filer was engaged in the saw milling industry for many years. He helped operate the Patterson Mill at Jefferson City and later operated a mill for the Kalispell Lumber Company in the Flathead country, at the same time improving his farm. He filed on a homestead in 1891, and greatly developed it by the planting of fruit and shade trees.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis have seven children: Carrie A., Mattie H., Duane W., Myron I., Myrtle (deceased), William L. and Bert B., all of whom were educated in the public schools of Wisconsin and Montana. Carrie became the wife of Carroll Frank. Mattie was married to John J. Dyer, who was killed in a logging accident, and the six children of their marriage were Elbert I., Stella (who became the wife of Harry Cook, and they have three children, Elinor, James and Fern), Alice, Ray, Carroll and Glenn. Duane married Anna Leland, and had two children, Arthur, now deceased, and Alice. Myron married Rebecca Cooper, and they were the parents of six sons, Myron, deceased, Maurice, Clayton, Homer, Ernest and Penrod. Myrtle became the wife of Smith W. Sheldon and died at the birth of her only child, Myrtle, who in time was married to Omar Hawes. They have one child, Buddie. William L., who was a sergeant major during the Mexican border trouble and was a recruiting officer at Butte and Helena during the World war, married Ladessa Streper and has three children, Howard, Hazel and Ellen. Bert B., who was a soldier in the World war at Camp Dodge, being a drill seregant, is a mining engineer at Wolf Creek, Montana.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Kalispell. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order and the Grand Army of the Republic, while Mrs. Davis is active in the Eastern Star and the Woman's Relief Corps. Politically they are of liberal views and support the candidates best fitted for office. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have made good use of their opportunities since coming to Montana, and besides accumulating sufficient material prosperity have reared and trained their children to good citizenship. Besides the children and grandchildren above mentioned they have four great-grandchildren, Eleanor Cook, James Cook, Fern Cook and Buddie Hawes. A number of years ago Mr. and Mrs. Davis planted an orchard of 200 trees a mile northeast of Kalispell, and this orchard is now in full bearing, being twelve years old. There they built the first bungalow in Kalispell.

Louis Newman, present mayor of Great Falls, has shown a remarkable ability to adapt himself to circumstances or rather circumstances to his own needs, and has risen from newsboy to success and prestige in business, banking and public affairs in Montana.

Mr. Newman was born in Germany February 27, 1866, a son of Samuel and Bertha (Snider) Newman. His parents spent all their lives in Germany, where his father was a merchant. His father died in 1873 and his mother in 1869. Louis, the second of three children, was left an orphan at the age of seven and soon afterward came to America and acquired most of his education in New York City. While in school he sold papers on the streets of New York, and later was employed by the Union News Company, selling papers and other supplies on trains between New York and Chicago. He studied this line of business thoroughly, and gradually acquired a more than individual interest in it. In 1909 Mr. Newman took over the news and lunch system on the Butte division of the Great Northern Railway. Since coming to Montana he has rapidly developed his financial interests and is one of the directors of the Commercial National Bank, the First National Bank of Carter, the West Side State Bank of Great Falls and other banking institutions. For several years he was a resident of Havre, Montana, and was elected mayor of that city in 1904 and again in 1906. In 1918 he was chosen a member of the Montana Legislature for a two year term, and was elected mayor of Great Falls on April 7, 1919. He is a democrat in politics.

Mr. Newman is active in irrigation work in the state and is now president of the Montana State Irrigation Congress, which has charge of the initiative bill that will be submitted to the people at the next election, authorizing the state to issue $20,000,000 in bonds to help finance irrigation enterprises of the state, the money to be returned within thirty-three years.

Mr. Newman is affiliated with Euclid Lodge No. 58, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, with Butte Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

November 20, 1897, he married Miss Jennie Sineberg, a native of New York State. Their three children are Bernice, Edward and Arthur.

ARTHUR J. BREITENSTEIN. The man who has made a success of life and won the honor and esteem of his fellow citizens deserves more than passing notice. Such is the record, briefly stated, of Arthur J. Breitenstein, the well-known manager of the Hotel Rainbow at Great Falls. By a life of persistent and well-applied energy and commendable industry led along the most honorable lines, he has justly earned the right to conspicuous mention in a work of the province assigned to the one in hand along with other progressive and public-spirited men of the great Treasure State who have made their influence felt in their respective communities. And because of his unswerving honesty in all his dealings with his fellow men, his generous and kindly nature, he has won and retained a host of warm personal friends throughout the locality honored by his citizenship.

Arthur J. Breitenstein is a native son of the old Hawkeye state, having been born at Fort Madison, Iowa, on November 7, 1879, and is the son of Julius F. and Amelia (Noll) Breitenstein. Julius F. Breitenstein was born in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1843. After completing his education he learned the trade of a machinist, but at the outbreak of the great war between the states he enlisted in the Confederate navy. He was assigned to the "Merrimac," one of the most historic boats of the Civil war and which for a time threatened to destroy the Northern navy, and the story of the battles fought by this famous Confederate ram in Hampton Roads is extremely interesting as told by Mr. Breitenstein.

The "Merrimac" was originally a Northern vessel. Set afire in a battle with ships of the Southern navy, the ship was burned almost to the water line. Then it was taken by the Confederate Government and rebuilt. Above the water line the completed vessel showed nothing but iron four inches thick and beneath that was twelve inches of solid oak. The transformed ram carried a crew of two hundred and fifty-five men and ten guns, consisting of two seven-inch rifles, two six-inch rifles and six nine-inch smooth bores. The ship was 180 feet in shield length, while fore and aft there was a sixty-five-foot "wash," which was submerged slightly when the ram went into action, giving a total length of 310 feet. Despite the fact that the "Merrimac" was slow and clumsy, and would not last ten minutes in a modern naval battle, the craft was the only armored ship then afloat in the world. On that memorable morning of July 8 the "Merrimac" boldly steamed into Hampton Roads, where the Northern navy lay, and, after setting the "Congress" afire, she steered direct for the "Cumberland," into the side of which she plunged her nose. The "Cumberland" began to sink at once, and if the "Merrimac" had not succeeded in backing away at once she too would have gone down, but quick action and the fact that the ram's nose was broken off in the impact saved her. It was a terrible experience for the crew, who were cooped inside, with no possible chance to either escape in case of accident or to get away from the awful concussion which followed every shot that struck the ram. The next day the "Monitor" came and gave battle to the "Merrimac," one of the most famous naval engagements of modern times, because of the character of the two antagonists. At the end of the engagement practically every man on the "Merrimac" was bleeding from either the ears or the nose on account of the recoil of their own guns or from the concussion of the shots from their opponents.

Mr. Breitenstein has long been engaged in the machinist's trade, in one capacity or another, and he is credited with having originated some valuable improvements on the Westinghouse air brake, now so universally used on railroad cars. At the present time he is inspector of air brakes for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Burlington. He is a member of the Confederate Veterans Association, the American Handicap Association, an association of expert gun shots, the meetings of which he has never missed, and is also a member of the Burlington Gun Club. Politically he is a Democrat, while fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1873, at Quincy, Illinois, Mr. Breitenstein was married to Amelia Noll, who was born in Quincy in 1850, and to them were born six children, of whom five are still living.

Arthur J. Breitenstein was educated in the public schools of Burlington, Iowa, to which city his parents had moved. His first employment was as a call boy for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, at a salary of $10 per month. He afterward had employment with several other railroads, notably the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific Railways, and in the employ of the latter road he came to Missoula, Montana, in 1900, as a member of the superintendent's office force, where he remained for four years. During the following five years he was manager for a mercantile company, but gave up that position to become secretary of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce, which position he held for three years. His superior executive and administrative abilities had become generally recognized and he was induced to become manager of the Montana State Fair, a position of large responsibility, which he occupied for two years. On March 1, 1915, Mr. Breitenstein came to Great Falls as secretary of the Commercial Club, with which he was identified until May 6, 1918, when he became manager of the Hotel Rainbow, one of the best-known and most popular hotels in the Northwest. Mr. Breitenstein's wide acquaintance, his versatile experience and his natural qualifications peculiarly fit him for his present position, and he is proving very emphatically the right man in the right place.

Politically Mr. Breitenstein is an earnest supporter of the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of all the Masonic bodies, including the Commandery of Knights Templar, the Great Falls Consistory (thirty-second degree) of the Scottish Rite, and Algeria Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He was also a charter member of the Great Falls Rotary Club and is a director of the Great Falls Commercial Club.

On December 10, 1903, Mr. Breitenstein was married to Margaret Gillies, who was born in Burlington, Iowa, and to them have been born three children, Dixon, Margery and Elinor. Mr. Breitenstein has ever taken a commendable interest in the general welfare of the entire community and is a champion of every movement which promises to advance the best interests of the people. He is a man of pleasing personal address, who has won and retained a host of warm friends since locating in Great Falls.

Aloysius Dolan, M. D. It is not always easy to discover and define the hidden forces that have moved a life of ceaseless activity and large professional success; little more can be done than to note their manifestations in the career of the individual under consideration. In view of this fact the life of the distinguished physician and public-spirited man of affairs whose name appears above affords a striking example of well defined purpose, with the ability to make that purpose subserve not only his own ends but the good of his fellow men as well. Doctor Dolan has long held distinctive prestige in a calling which requires for its basis sound mentality and intellectual discipline of a high order, supplemented by rigid professional training and thorough mastery of technical knowledge, with the skill to apply the same. In his chosen field of endeavor Doctor Dolan has achieved more than ordinary success, and his eminent standing among the leading medical men of Montana is duly recognized and appreciated in Great Falls, the city honored by his residence.

Aloysius Dolan was born in Morris, Grundy County, Illinois, on December 6, 1871, and is the eldest of the three children born to James and Julia (Fitzsimons) Dolan. James Dolan was born in County Clare, Ireland, on May 3, 1841, and in young manhood was brought to the United States by his mother, the trip, which was made by a slow-going sailing vessel, requiring eight weeks, during two weeks of which time they were practically without fresh water. Landing at New York City, they soon came west to Rockford, Illinois, where young Dolan received a good practical education in the public schools. His first employment was with the Rockford Fire Insurance Company, now the North American Fire Insurance Company, and it is worthy of special mention that during all these years Mr. Dolan has remained with this company, acting at the present time as a special agent and adjuster. In politics he is a stanch supporter of the democratic party. His wife was born in Chicago, Illinois, on May 3, 1841.

Aloysius Dolan, who is the only survivor of the children born to these parents, received his elementary education in the public schools of Morris, Illinois, where he was reared. He was also a student in St. Mary's College at St. Mary's, Kansas, where he was graduated with the class of 1893, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He was then a student in Loyola University, Chicago, where he was graduated in 1895, and then, having determined to make the practice of medicine his life work, he matriculated in the medical department of the University of Illinois, where he graduated in 1898, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Doctor Dolan at once entered upon the active practice of his profession in Chicago, specializing in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. On May 28, 1900, Governor J. R. Tanner appointed him to the medical department of the Illinois National Guard, from which he resigned in 1905. In 1901 he was appointed assistant superintendent of the children's sanitary department of the Chicago Health Department, and he was also appointed medical advisor to the city attorney, in which capacity he served for two years. In 1912 Doctor Dolan came to Great Falls, permanently locating here, and since has been closely identified not only with the medical circles of this city, but also with many phases of the community life and the city's development and growth. In 1918 he was commissioned a captain in the United States Medical Corps, and was sent to Camp Gordon, Georgia, where he served for six months. He now holds a commission as captain in the United States Medical Reserve Corps. On May 8, 1919, Doctor Dolan was appointed secretary of the city Board of Health of Great Falls, where his wide experience and training have contributed in a very definite way to the efficient performance of his official duties.

On October 10, 1900, Doctor Dolan was married to Georgiana Sexton, a native of Chicago, and they are the parents of one daughter, Marie Julia.

Politically Doctor Dolan is a Democrat, and his religious affiliation is with the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Columbus. He is also a member of the Cascade County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a fine type of the sturdy, conscientious, progressive American of today—a man who unites a high order of ability with courage, patriotism, clean morality and sound common sense, doing thoroughly and well the work that he finds to do and asking praise of no man for the performance of what he conceives to be his simple duty.

John E. Dawson is a native of Montana, has had a continuous business experience for more than twenty years, was a prominent merchant at Glasgow for several years, but in recent years has been best known for his active part in the affairs of the Rocky Mountain Fire Insurance Company at Great Falls. He is general manager of this corporation and its business.

Mr. Dawson was born in the Boulder Valley of Montana December 27, 1876, son of Thomas and Mary (Smith) Dawson. His father was born in Quebec, Canada, in 1845, ran away from home at the age of twelve years and went to Michigan, worked in the lumber woods of that state, also lived in Minnesota for several years, and in 1868 came to Montana as a pioneer. He came overland by way of Utah and was one of the first settlers of the old town of Boulder. He was also identified with the Last Chance Gulch Settlement. For several years his work was that of a miner, but in 1879 he engaged in ranching and stock raising near Cold Springs, Jefferson County. He was one of the leading men in that line in the Boulder Valley, and in the spring of 1919 retired from active business. He and his good wife are still living, and have ample means for their enjoyment and comfort. They were married at Helena. The mother was born at Madison, Wisconsin. Their four sons are William W., Thomas F., Peter J. and John E.

John E. Dawson was educated in the public schools of Boulder and in the Montana State College at Bozeman. From 1896 to 1900 he was employed by two leading mercantile firms at Butte, and while there laid a substantial basis of business training and experience. For six years he was department manager for the Thomas O'Hanlon Company at Chinook, and in the fall of 1907 became interested in the firm of Lewis Brothers at Glasgow, general merchants. He was buyer for this firm until January 1, 1915, at which date he became vice president of the Rocky Mountain Fire Insurance Company at Great Falls. He had charge of the field agencies of the company until February, 1917, when he was made general manager. His large acquaintance and expert business abilities have done much to promote the welfare and success of this corporation.

While at Chinook he served as a member of the Town Council, and he served two terms as mayor, from 1909 to 1913, at Glasgow. While in that office he was instrumental in putting Glasgow into the class of progressive cities of Montana, the waterworks and electric light plant being installed while he was mayor. He has always taken an active interest in public affairs and during the war was a leader in the Red Cross and Liberty Loan campaigns, being on the executive committee of the Red Cross in Cascade County. Mr. Dawson is a democrat, and is affiliated with Butte Lodge No. 240 of the Elks.

Simon Hausworth

On August 12, 1901, he married Miss Mamie J. Ross, a native of Nova Scotia. Her father, George Ross, was one of the pioneers of the Milk River Valley in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Dawson have one son, Edward K.

Col. Simon Hauswirth is commandant of the Montana Soldiers' Home, an institution of which the state is deservedly proud and whose comforts and conveniences are greatly appreciated by the old veterans who live there. The beautiful home is situated on the Flathead River at Columbia Falls.

Colonel Hauswirth, who was a Union soldier in the Civil war and a member of Company C of the Thirty-fifth Wisconsin Infantry, and is a member of Lincoln Post No. 2, Grand Army of the Republic at Butte, was born in Switzerland December 16, 1844. He has frequently remarked that while not privileged to be a native son of the United States he takes comfort in the fact that he was born in the oldest republic in the world. His parents, Rudolph and Catherine (Romang) Hauswirth, came to America in 1855, bringing their family of eight children and settling at Milwaukee, where the father engaged in farming. Simon Hauswirth was reared to manhood in Wisconsin, attending the public schools in winter and working on the farm in summer. On December 7, 1863, he enlisted at Milwaukee with the Thirty-fifth Wisconsin Infantry. When he announced this fact to his father, the father maintained that on account of his youth he was not yet qualified for the duties of a soldier. He replied, "Father, the boys of our neighbors are offering themselves to their country; do you think it looks right for me to stay at home?" His argument prevailed. A friend advised him to accept the $300 some were offering for substitutes. He said, "No, I am not going for money, but going freely for my country." He was two weeks in training at St. Louis, and thence went down the Mississippi to Baton Rouge, was at Duval's Bluff, Little Rock, Arkansas, again at New Orleans, was in the siege of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakeley on Mobile Bay, and after the surrender of Lee's army he was sent with other troops to the Mexican border at Brownsville, Texas. He was mustered out at Brownsville March 15, 1866, and granted an honorable discharge at Madison, Wisconsin.

May 31, 1868, Colonel Hauswirth married Mary Deck, who was born near Waukesha, Wisconsin, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Deck. In May, 1870, Colonel Hauswirth came to Montana, locating at Stewart, and in May, 1875, moving to Butte, in which city he has had his home ever since. He and his wife had six children, named John R., Emma, Mary, Albert, Louisa and Charles A. Louisa died at the age of two years, while Emma died in East Orange, New Jersey. The children were well educated in the public schools of Butte. John R. married Mary Bachler and is a farmer at Hamilton, Montana; Mary became the wife of William Rickey, who was killed in an automobile accident at East Orange, New Jersey; Charles A. married Miss Nau and is in the mining business at Butte, his two children being named Audrey and Lucine.

Colonel Hauswirth has played a prominent part in the public affairs of the City of Butte. He was elected an alderman when the city was first chartered, was chosen city marshal in 1884, and in 1886 elected city treasurer. He also served as deputy sheriff under Charles S. Henderson. His work in public office was always thoroughly satisfactory. He was appointed commandant of the Soldiers' Home by the Board of Managers in 1919, and has discharged its duties to the eminent satisfaction of the old soldiers and the state government.

In the first company of militia ever organized in Montana, the Union Guard at Butte, Mr. Hauswirth served under Sam Reynolds, enlisting in Company F and being promoted to second lieutenant. He was chosen department commander of the Montana Grand Army of the Republic in 1917. Colonel Hauswirth and family are members of the Christian Science Church at Butte, and he and his wife are members of the Pioneer Society of Montana. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and in politics supports the principles of the republican party. He has had a long life, and throughout has made his record in keeping with the high qualities of his soldier days when he fought for the integrity of the Union.

John Duncan. If any of the people who go to make up our cosmopolitan civilization have better habits of life than those who came originally from far-away Scotland the writer is in ignorance of it. One will find on making a study of these people that the qualities of thrift, stability, honor and soundness of judgment form the principal basic elements. Such qualities in the inhabitants of any nation will in the end alone make that nation great, affording such qualities as will enrich any clime and place any land at the top of the countries of the world in the scale of elevated humanity. Of this excellent people came John Duncan, the well known building contractor of Great Falls. He came of a race that produced such intellectual giants as Scott, Miller, Burns, Wallace and Bruce. He comes of a race that is famous for its original research in the various realms of science, invention, art and literature, to say nothing of the practical, every-day things of life.

John Duncan was born in Farfarshire, Scotland, on November 21, 1862, and is the son of George and Annie (Niven) Duncan, both of whom also were natives of Scotland. Both parents are deceased, the father dying on May 5, 1892, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and the mother passing away in 1906, at the age of eighty-three years. They were the parents of ten children, of which number the subject of this sketch is the ninth in order of birth. The father followed the vocation of farming and was a member of the Free Church of Scotland. He frequently told his boys that they would all be rich some day, and, as a matter of fact, all of the sons have been successful in their various lines of effort. Two sons came to the United States, two went to Australia and two to Ireland.

John Duncan spent his boyhood days on his father's farm and pursued his studies in the neighboring school. His father was none too well off financially, and thus it became necessary for the sons to begin earning their own expenses as soon as possible. Mr. Duncan began working on a farm at the age of fourteen years, receiving 25c a day. In 1886 he decided to go to a land where larger opportunities were offered those who were willing to make use of them, and he came to the United States, landing at New York City. From there he proceeded to Minneapolis, Minnesota, near which city he worked at the carpenter trade for about three years. He then came to Helena, Montana, in 1889, working at his trade for about two years, and in 1891 he branched out into the contracting and building line. He was successful from the start, and through all the years since then he has enjoyed his full share of the business in his line in this section of the state. In the last year mentioned Mr. Duncan identified himself with Great Falls, which has since been his home and the center of his operations. He has erected probably more buildings here than any other one man, having constructed a number of the finest blocks and apartment houses in this city, and in the early days of the city's growth he is credited with having built nearly a thousand homes, so that in reality he has been a very prominent factor in the growth and development of Great Falls. He is now engaged in the construction of a splendid block on Central Avenue, to be known as the Duncan-Kennedy Building. He is thoroughly up-to-date in his construction ideas, and his patrons get the benefit of his knowledge.

On January 13, 1890, Mr. Duncan was married to Minnie N. Nisbet, who was born in Alloway, Scotland, and they have become the parents of nine children, eight of whom are living, namely: Nellie Elizabeth, the wife of Lieut. Harold Irwin, of Minnesota; John G., Hazel Mary, wife of Dudley Jacobsen, of Great Falls; George R., Margaret Annie, Raymond, Irving, Edna, deceased, and Winnafred.

Politically Mr. Duncan assumes an independent attitude, preferring to vote for the men and measures which meet his approval, regardless of party lines. His religious membership is with the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is a life member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is also a member of the Commercial Club. He has always been true to every trust reposed in him and has been rigidly upright in his dealings with his fellow men, at the same time lending his support to the advancement of any cause looking to the welfare of the community at large.

Before closing this review it is worthy of note that a brother, David Duncan, who also came to the United States, located in Minnesota in January, 1887, and there became a partner with John Duncan in the business of contracting, a relation that existed up to the time of the brother's death, in 1906. At that time they had taken a large contract with the Government for the erection of large barracks and stables. David left a widow and six children, his widow being a sister of the wife of John Duncan.

S. O. Huseth was one of the men early identified with what is now the Sun River irrigation project. For many years he has been a successful Great Falls business man, a leading jeweler and optician.

He was born in Norway, May 19, 1869, son of Ole and Bertha (Roe) Huseth. His father died in Norway in 1879, at the age of forty-eight. He was a goldsmith by trade and a member of the Lutheran Church. The widowed mother afterward came to this country and died in 1911 in Minnesota, at the age of sixty-seven.

S. O. Huseth, who was the fourth among seven children, four of whom are still living, attended school in Norway up to 1885. He was then sixteen years of age, and on coming to this country located near Broadhead, Wisconsin. He worked as a farm hand there, attending school one winter, and then removed to another locality, near Mount Horeb, where he continued as a farm hand several years and at the same time acquired a good English school education. Leaving Wisconsin he went to North Dakota and worked on farms for about two years. He then began learning the watchmaker's trade at Park River, North Dakota, and worked steadily at his apprenticeship for two years. Returning to Mount Horeb, Wisconsin, he engaged in the jewelry business, following it about six years, and at the same time studying and preparing for work as an optician. He went back to Park River, North Dakota, and for about four years was engaged in business for himself. At Litchfield, Minnesota, he took a course in optometry, and from there in 1902 came to Montana and entered a homestead and a desert claim. He was one of the settlers in that locality who organized the Kilraven Canal Company. Later, through the influence of Paris Gibson, then a Montana congressman, this irrigation project was taken over by the government and is now the Sun River Irrigation System. Mr. Huseth located at Great Falls in 1903, and since then he has prosecuted to success his business as a jeweler and optician. He is a charter member of the Montana Opticians Association, being at the present time vice president. He is also secretary of the Montana Jewelers Association, and is a man of high standing in business and professional circles.

Mr. Huseth is affiliated with Cascade Lodge No. 54, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, at Great Falls, and is a member of the Scottish Rite Consistory. Politically he is a republican. On May 23, 1893, he married Miss Gina Lee, a native of Norway. Seven children were born to their marriage, named Olive, Blanche, Elmer (who died at the age of six years), Ethel, Grace, Oliver and May.

Albert E. Schwingel came to Montana as an employe of the Great Northern Railroad, but soon left the railroad service to join the Conrad Banking Company at Great Falls, and has been with that institution and from time to time promoted to larger responsibilities for nearly twenty years.

Mr. Schwingel was born on his father's farm in Steuben County, New York, August 19, 1876, son of John A. and Mary (Miller) Schwingel. His father was born in Germany and died in 1905, at the age of seventy-two. His mother was born in Chicago and died in 1913, also at the age of seventy-two. Albert E. was the youngest of a family of seven sons and four daughters. John A. Schwingel at the age of thirteen, after his father's death, came to America with his widowed mother, and finished his education in Steuben County, New York. He spent the rest of his life as a practical, hard working New York State farmer. He took considerable part in politics, was a republican, held various township offices and was affiliated with the Lutheran Church and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Albert E. Schwingel acquired his early education in the public schools of Steuben County, New York, his days of school being alternated with the work and discipline of the home farm. Between the age of eighteen and twenty-one he taught school. Following a course in a commercial college at Corning, New York, he spent about a year in New York City as stenographer for a manufacturing firm, then lived for one summer at Amsterdam, New York, and from there went to Lima, Ohio, and was in the employ of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railway for about two years. While at Lima he had his only military experience, as a private in the Ohio National Guard.

Geo. Paul & Wife

In May, 1900, Mr. Schwingel went to work at Great Falls with the transportation department of the Great Northern Railway. In August of that year the Conrad Banking Company was established, and Mr. Schwingel was one of its first force of employes, as stenographer and messenger. His abilities have brought him steady promotion. He was made chief clerk, then assistant cashier, and in 1905 became cashier and since 1913 has been vice president of this bank. He is also interested in farming and livestock, and has been connected with several corporations. He was an active member of the Commercial Club, affiliated with Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, is a republican and a member of the First Church of Christ, Scientist.

September 24, 1902, at Geneseo, New York, he married Miss Mabel C. Burley, daughter of William Burley. They have two children, Milton Frederick, born August 4, 1903, and Burley Carlyle, born May 13, 1907.

James W. Speer came to Montana and began the practice of law at Great Falls twenty years ago. As a lawyer he has been noted for his industry and the vigorous handling of all the interests entrusted to his charge. He has been prominent in politics, and has filled a number of offices of trust and responsibility in his home county and city.

Mr. Speer was born on his father's farm in Jo Daviess County, Illinois, February 25, 1871, and he had about the average opportunities of an Illinois farm boy, working and earning the money which paid his way through college and gave him his training for the law. His parents were Charles and Nancy (Campbell) Speer. His father was born in Pennsylvania and died in 1916, at the age of seventy-four, while his mother died in 1879, aged thirty-five. James W. is the third of seven children, six of whom are still living. Charles Speer was a small boy when his parents moved to Jo Daviess County, Illinois, and he grew up in that locality, acquiring a common school education and spending his life as a farmer and stock raiser, also as a buyer and shipper of livestock. For a number of years his farm was the home of a herd of pure bred Shorthorn cattle. He served as township supervisor several years and for many years was a member of the school board. Religiously he was active in the United Presbyterian Church and in politics was a whig and republican.

James W. Speer lived on his father's farm to the age of eighteen. His education in public schools was supplemented by several terms in Monmouth College at Monmouth, Illinois, and he took his law course in the Northern Illinois College at Dixon. He earned the money for his education by work as secretary of a creamery concern and selling harvesting machinery for the McCormick Harvester Company and the Deering Harvester Company, traveling on the road for the latter organization some time. He graduated from law school in 1900, was admitted to the Illinois bar the same year, spent some months of that year at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, was admitted to the South Dakota bar in September, and in October, 1900, arrived in Great Falls, Montana, where he was admitted to the Montana bar and began the general practice of law. He was alone in practice until January 1, 1916, when J. A. Kaufman became his partner. Mr. Kaufman not long afterward entered the United States army.

Mr. Speer served two terms as county attorney of Cascade County, a period of four years. He was mayor of Great Falls from 1911 to 1913. He has been chairman of both the county and city central committees of the republican party and at present is chairman of the city central committee. He is a past master of Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, a past grand master of the Grand Lodge of Montana, and is affiliated with Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons, Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, Butte Consistory of the thirty-second degree, the Lodge of Perfection at Great Falls, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is also a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks.

June 15, 1904, Mr. Speer married Grace C. Shoats, a native of Ludington, Michigan. They have four children, named Jennette, James W., Jr., Catherine and Ruth Estell.

George Paul was one of the first resident homesteaders in the Flathead Valley, and long years of contending with adversity and solving the problems of existence have made him rich in experience and satisfactorily rich in this world's goods down to the present time, when he and his good wife enjoy one of the good homes at Big Fork.

Mr. Paul was born at St. Louis, Missouri, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Paul. At the age of sixteen he left home and started for the West, spending four and a half years in Colorado. He then came to Montana, and for one winter worked in a smelter. In 1889 he reached the Flathead country, preempting 160 acres at Holt's Ferry and homesteading 160 acres at Swan Lake.

After coming to Montana Mr. Paul married Mrs. Bartlett. They have two sons, Kenneth and George, both of whom were educated in the public schools. Kenneth is now a student in the high school at Kalispell.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul attend the Methodist Church at Big Fork. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and gives his political support to the republican party.

Mrs. Paul's maiden name was Mattie Wines, a native of Tennessee, but reared in Missouri, where her parents, Jerry and Louise (Clark) Wines, moved when she was a child. Her first husband was Henry Bartlett, now deceased. By that marriage she had the following children: Charles, Oran, Ralph, Cleve and Glen. Mrs. Paul has the distinction of being the mother of four sons who were soldiers in the World war. Her son Charles married Annie Conradson and lives in Colorado, and they have three children, named Mabel, Julius and Norine. The son Oran, who married Hilda Smith, of Columbus, Ohio, was a member of the Three Hundred and Sixty-Second Infantry, was promoted to lieutenant, and saw active service overseas. He is now a practicing dentist at Whitefish, Montana. Ralph, who married Mary Smith and had two children, Kate and Hallie, was in the navy during the World war. Cleve married Alma Hanson and has a son, Cleve, Jr. He was also in the war, a member of the Three Hundred and Sixty-Second Infantry, and is now chief clerk in the State Prison at Deer Lodge Montana. Glen, who was a member of Battery C of the Three Hundred and Forty-Eighth Field Artillery, saw active duty overseas.

George Harper is an old time citizen of Great Falls, where he located more than twenty-five years ago. He is one of the best known men in Cascade County, particularly as a result of his eleven years of executive service as clerk of the district court.

Mr. Harper is of Scotch ancestry and nativity and of an old Scotch Presbyterian family. He was born in Scotland, June 6, 1874, youngest of the nine children of George and Isabella (Milne) Harper. His mother died the year he was born, at the age of forty. His father died in 1887, aged sixty. George Harper, Sr., spent all his life as a Scotch farmer.

Mr. Harper secured a fair education in Scotland and in June, 1889, at the age of fifteen, crossed the ocean to Canada and lived about five years in the Dominion before coming to Great Falls, where he arrived in August, 1894. He soon found work and made himself useful for 14½ years with the Great Falls Meat Company, his chief responsibility being as bookkeeper for that firm.

In November, 1908, Mr. Harper was elected clerk of the Eighth Judicial District, and by repeated election has been retained in that post of responsibility ever since.

He is a democrat in politics, and is affiliated with Euclid Lodge No. 58, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, Great Falls Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons, Black Eagle Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and is also a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks, while he and his wife are members of Olive Chapter No. 10 of the Eastern Star.

December 6, 1910, Mr. Marper married Mary Isabell McKinnon, a native of Manitoba, Canada. They had two sons, George, Jr., and John D. The latter died in 1918, at the age of twenty-two months.

JOHN E. MORAN for twenty years or more had a continuous record in public office or as a soldier. He is a veteran of the Philippine war. For the past five years he has been county clerk and recorder for Cascade County.

Mr. Moran was born in Wyndham County, Vermont, August 23, 1856, a son of William and Nora (Brosnan) Moran. His father was born in County Kerry, Ireland, and his mother was a native of the same county, and they were married at Brattleboro, Vermont. They came to this country as young people by sailing ship, both landing at Boston. William Moran became a Vermont farmer, and spent his last days retired at Brattleboro, where he died in March, 1898, at the age of sixty-eight. His widow is still living. John E. was the second in a family of seven children, and two sons and two daughters are still living. His father was a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church.

John E. Moran had a farm rearing and training, and graduated from the Brattleboro High School in Vermont in 1874. He has had many varied experiences during the subsequent forty-five years. Until 1878 he was employed in the shoe business of his uncles, the Brosnan Brothers, at Chicago. He learned that business thoroughly, and when his uncles opened a branch store at Minneapolis he took charge as managing partner. In 1882 he engaged in the shoe business for himself, and in 1890 left Minneapolis and came to Great Falls, Montana. Here he was first clerk for the Boston Store and later manager of the shoe department of that veteran merchant and banker Joseph Conrad. Mr. Moran's first introduction to public affairs was two years' service as a sergeant of the police department. He then served as deputy or under sheriff during the administration of Hamilton, Dwyer and Proctor as sheriff. Mr. Moran enlisted in April, 1898, for service in the Spanish-American war and was made captain of Company A of the First Regiment of Volunteers of Montana. This regiment was sent to the Philippines, and he landed at Cavite in the harbor of Manila on August 23, 1898. Later he was appointed captain of Company L of the Thirty-seventh Regiment, United States Volunteers, and saw much arduous and dangerous service during the Philippine insurrection. He was mustered out February 22, 1901, at the Presidio in San Francisco.

On returning to Great Falls, Mr. Moran was appointed city clerk, filling that office two years, was chief clerk of the United States Reclamation Service at Fort Shaw four years, and in 1911 was made deputy county clerk of Cascade County. Four years later, in 1914, he was elected county clerk and recorder, and has been kept in that office by his loyal friends and supporters ever since.

Mr. Moran is a past departmental commander of the United Spanish War Veterans. He is a republican, is past exalted ruler of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks, a past noble grand of Rainbow Lodge No. 28, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Woodmen of the World.

FRED C. ANDRETTA, who was elected in November, 1918, county treasurer of Cascade County, has been a conspicuous figure in politics and public affairs at Great Falls for the past ten years.

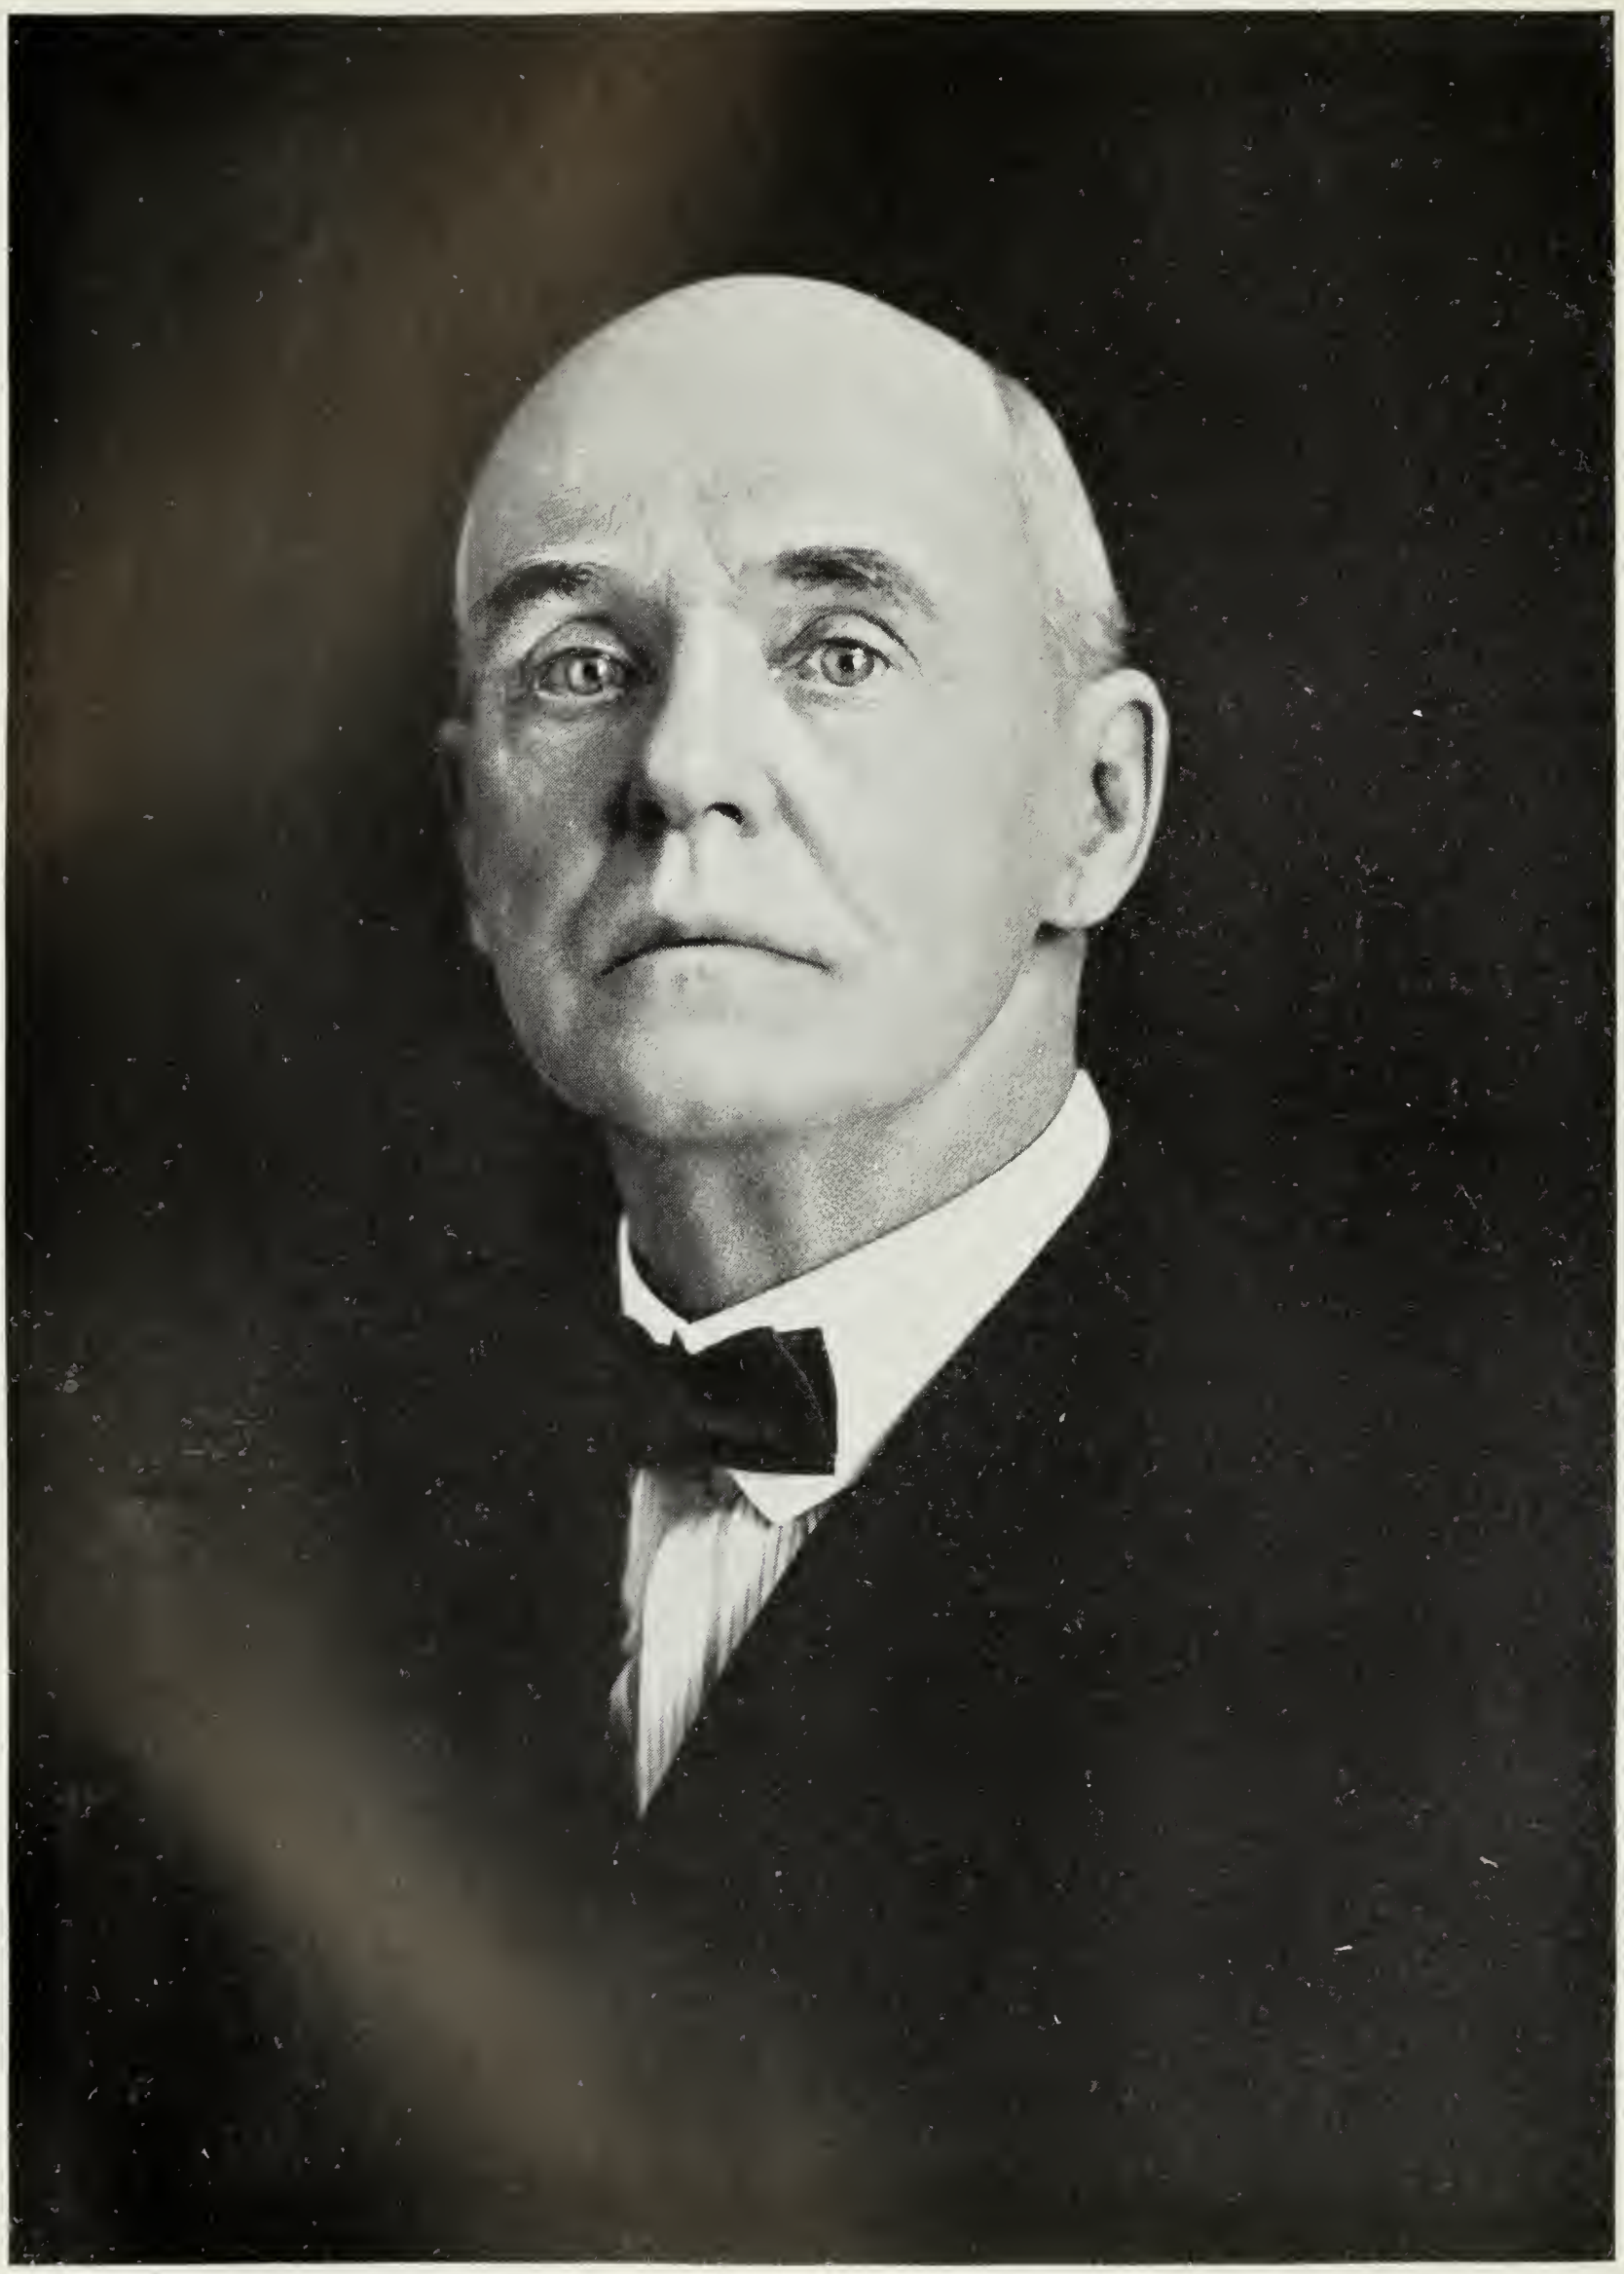
Mr. Andretta is a young man and a native Montanan, having been born at Butte, March 29, 1886, a son of Charles and Mary C. Andretta. His father was born at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1847, and his mother was born in Paris, France, September 8, 1856. She is still living. Charles Andretta came to America at the age of thirteen, and from New York drifted west to Nevada, finished his education in that state, and was a prospector and miner at Virginia City, Nevada. Later he engaged in the dairy industry, and in 1881 became one of the pioneer dairymen in the City of Butte. In April, 1891, he settled on a ranch 4½ miles south of Great Falls, continuing dairying, and there death overtook him in his labors on September 8, 1892. He was a republican in politics. He and his wife were married at Carson City, Nevada, in 1876, and had four children, three of whom are still living.

Fred C. Andretta, youngest of the family, acquired his early education in the public schools of Great Falls. At the age of eleven years he was partly supporting himself by selling newspapers. For a time he was agent for the Anaconda Standard, and later for about 1½ years worked as a mail carrier. For about two years he was a salesman, and was then appointed deputy county clerk and recorder under Lee Deenis, county clerk and recorder. In 1911 he became deputy clerk and recorder and in 1915 chief deputy county treasurer. Thus his experience and abilities have brought him steady promotion at the court house at Great Falls, and he is now the chief and duly elected county treasurer.

Mr. Andretta is a republican and is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus. He married, September 1, 1914, Mary Isabell Snyder. She was born at Kansas City, Kansas, a daughter of Winfield P. and Nancy (Whitehouse) Snyder, the fifth of their eight children, seven of whom are still living. Mrs. Andretta is a graduate with the class of 1911 from the Nurses' Training School at St. Patrick's Hospital in Butte.

JAMES P. BURNS, present sheriff of Cascade County, is a veteran railroader and has been connected with the Great Northern Railway, with home and headquarters at Great Falls, for over twenty-five years. He has also been interested in ranching, and is one of the most popular citizens of Cascade County, the best evidence of which is furnished in the fact that he was elected sheriff on the democratic ticket in a nominally republican stronghold of Montana.

Mr. Burns was born on his father's farm in Iowa



C. A Matthews

County, Wisconsin, December 30, 1871, a son of James and Martha (Connars) Burns. His father was born in Ireland and died in September, 1918, at the age of eighty-two, while his mother is a native of Wisconsin and is still living. Sheriff Burns is the second in a family of four sons and four daughters. His father came to America when a young man by sailing ship, and was a pioneer settler in Iowa County, Wisconsin. That district was then new, raw and undeveloped, and he made a farm from the midst of the heavy timber and became widely known as a successful farmer and dairyman. He also was honored by his fellow citizens in local offices, serving as assessor for several terms. He was a loyal democrat and in religion a Catholic.

James P. Burns received his education in the public schools of Iowa County, Wisconsin, until he was seventeen. For several years after that he operated a threshing outfit, but in 1893 moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, and entered the train service of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad. He came to Great Falls, Montana, in July, 1895, and entered the employ of the Great Northern Railway, and for fifteen years prior to the beginning of his duties as sheriff he was a railway passenger conductor for that road. He is a member of the Order of Railway Conductors and has held that affiliation for twenty years.

Mr. Burns was elected sheriff on November 5, 1918. He is affiliated with Great Falls Lodge No. 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. For a number of years he owned a ranch of 480 acres in the Judith Basin, and made it a grain farm. He sold this ranch in December, 1917.

Charles A. Matthews. One of the most widely known and honored of Montana's early settlers is C. A. Matthews of Whitefish, Flathead County, who came to this favored region more than three decades ago and has lived here continuously since. He early had the sagacity and prescience to discern the eminence which the future had in store for this great section of the Treasure state, and, acting in accordance with the dictates of faith and judgment, he has reaped in the fullness of time the generous benefits which are the just recompense of indomitable industry, spotless integrity and splendid enterprise. Few men of the county have played a better or more noticeable role in the general progress of that locality than he, for while laboring for his individual advancement he never shrank from his larger duties to the community, and he today enjoys the good will and hearty esteem of all who have come in contact with him.

C. A. Matthews is a native of Ontario, Canada, and the son of Thomas N. and Eliza (Ayers) Matthews. He was reared under the parental roof and secured a good practical education in the schools of his home community. In 1875 Mr. Matthews came to the United States and located in Michigan, where he was engaged in the mercantile business for eleven years. In 1886 he came to Montana, locating in Marysville, where he was employed as a clerk in a mercantile establishment. Lured by the excitement of the wonderful gold discoveries, he went to Dirt Lincoln Gulch in Lewis and Clark County, where he engaged in the mercantile business. Eventually, however, Mr. Matthews sought a promising location for a permanent location and came to the Flathead Valley, settling on the Whitefish River, where the City of Whitefish now stands, but which at that time had only been located. He has thus been a witness of the splendid growth which has characterized this section and has done his full share in pushing forward the wheels of progress. Today Whitefish is a beautiful town, with attractive bungalow homes and substantial building blocks, the general appearance of the place indicating the inhabitants to be people of good taste and municipal enterprise. Indeed, some have enthusiastically called this section of Montana the Switzerland of America, so enchantingly beautiful is the scenery. During the sixteen years Mr. Matthews has been in business in Whitefish he has been successful to an eminent degree, being now the leading merchant in his line in the town. He carries a large and well-selected stock of books, stationery, novelties and toys, and during the season serves ice cream and soft drinks. His courteous and prompt service and the high quality of goods carried by him have helped to attract to his store a large and representative patronage.

Mr. Matthews was married to Frances L. Soper, a native of Ontario, Canada, and the daughter of George T. and Martha L. Soper. To Mr. and Mrs. Matthews has been born one child, Clare, who is now the wife of George H. Blume, engaged in the oil fields of California. Mrs. Blume received a good education in the schools of this state, having graduated from the high school at Helena. She is the mother of three children, Doris, Gladys and Gordon H. Mr. Matthews possesses a very unusual and valuable photograph, containing the portraits of five generations of his family.

Politically Mr. Matthews gives his support to the republican party and has taken an active part in its interest. He has never sought public office, his only public tenure being as a member of the election board at the time Montana was admitted to the Union as a state and as a member of the school board, in which capacity he rendered effective and appreciated service on behalf of education. Every phase of civic life that has promised to be of benefit to the people has received the hearty support of Mr. Matthews. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Mr. and Mrs. Matthews are members of the Presbyterian Church, to which they give generous support. Mr. Matthews is proud of Whitefish and loses no opportunity of advertising to outsiders the beauties and advantages of the locality. To this end he is active in pushing the Booster Club of Whitefish, an enterprise which promises to be of material advantage to the town. One of the projects which is now being agitated and which is approved by practically every one is the boulevard from Whitefish, along the lake, to the town of Eureka, where it will connect with the great state highway. Through the years of his residence in this locality Mr. Matthews has been true to every trust reposed in him, whether of a public or private nature, and his reputation in a business way is unassailable. His sterling traits of character have commanded uniform confidence and regard and he is rightly numbered among the representative men of his community.

Ransom Cooper, who began the practice of law at Great Falls in 1890, has by thirty years of continuous service earned the right to rank among the leading lawyers of the state, a position which is his by the unqualified opinion and judgment of his contemporaries.

Mr. Cooper was born in Skiawassee County, Michigan, in March, 1857. His parents, Andrew H. and Sarah (McGilvey) Cooper, were natives of New York State, and his father died at the age of fifty-six and his mother at fifty-seven. His father spent his active career as a flour miller in New York and Michigan.

Ransom Cooper was the youngest of seven children, five of whom are still living. He was educated in the public schools of Michigan, attended the University of Michigan and studied law in a private office. He was admitted to the bar in his native state in 1880, and practiced law there until 1890, when he moved to Great Falls, Montana. He carried on his general practice alone until 1911, when he became associated with Sam Stephenson under the name of Cooper and Stephenson. Mr. Cooper was for six years prosecuting attorney of Osceola County, Michigan, and in 1892 he declined the republican nomination for attorney general of Montana. Politics has had little attraction for him and he has preferred the steady and uninterrupted devotion to his accumulating business as a lawyer. He has served as school trustee at Great Falls, is a member of the state and county bar associations and also of the American Bar Association.

Mr. Cooper has a fine family. December 31, 1879, he married Lillian Colgrove, a native of Pennsylvania. Their five children are Edith B., Ransom, Jr., Mathew H., Irving C. and Philip. Edith is the wife of William L. Dethloff. Mathew married Florence Southmayd. Ransom, Jr., early in the war with Germany enlisted at Syracuse, New York, was trained as an aviator at San Antonio, Atlanta, Georgia, at the Wright Field in Ohio, was commissioned second lieutenant, and saw several months of active service in France. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Mills, New York. The son Irving also was a soldier, first enlisting in the Ambulance Corps in July, 1917. In March, 1918, he enlisted in the Engineers Corps and was discharged at Camp Dix, New Jersey, April 23, 1919.

NEWTON T. LEASE in point of continuous service is one of the oldest contractors in Montana. He has been in that line of business with headquarters at Great Falls for over thirty years. Much of his work has been on public buildings in the state of Montana, and he is head of a firm with ample resources and with the experience and skill and equipment that insure faithful and thorough performance of every contract entered.

Mr. Lease, whose name belongs among the territorial settlers of Montana, was born at Forest City in Holt County, Missouri, August 7, 1865. His birthplace was a log cabin. He was the fifth in a family of nine children, seven sons and two daughters, born to Tobias S. and Mary J. (Poe) Lease. Five sons and one daughter of the family are still living. Tobias Lease was born near Romney in Hampshire County, Virginia, now West Virginia, February 19, 1829. He was a small child when his parents moved from Virginia to Ohio. At the age of nineteen, in 1848, he went to the edge of vestern settlement in Missouri, locating in Holt County. He became a farmer there and conducted his farm until the outbreak of the Civil war. Though a Virginian by birth he was a stanch Union man and he enlisted in Company F of the Thirty-third Regiment of Missouri Volunteers for a three years' term. After serving out his first term he re-enlisted in the same company and regiment. He was in the army of General Thomas at the battle of Nashville on November 16, 1864, and during that engagement received a severe wound in the left leg from a fragment of shell. He was taken to a hospital, and in May, 1865, received an honorable discharge. The rest of his life he was a cripple, but showed a great deal of skill and efficiency in the handling of the affairs of his farm. He died on the old homestead in Holt County, December 28, 1898. In politics he was a stanch republican. His widow, now eighty-five years of age and a resident of Forest City, Missouri, was born at Lancashire in Garrard County, Kentucky, May 8, 1834.

Newton T. Lease spent his boyhood on the old Missouri farm. He helped in the fields, attended school in winter time, and earned his first regular wage by working as a farm hand in Holt County, Missouri, at 50 cents a day. Not long afterward he accepted an opportunity to learn telegraphy in the office of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway. In February, 1886, at the age of twenty, Mr. Lease came to Montana. A stage brought him to the Town of Sun River, and thence he proceeded on foot to Chestnut Valley and from there to Great Falls. For a time he worked in a general merchandise store in the Chestnut Valley, performing every labor required of him from porter to salesman. In the spring of 1886 he joined a railway surveying party, doing work for the Montana Central Railway toward Great Falls. After construction began he was employed by the engineering department of the road, and continued in that way during the winter of 1886-87. In June, 1887, he left engineering work and became a practical carpenter, and not long afterward was taking contracts. The firm for many years has been Lease and Richards. As contractors for the Government they have built the barracks and the barns at Mammoth Hot Springs. They have also built a number of courthouses in Montana and in North Dakota, including those of Cascade County, Teton County, Blaine County and Williston and Williams counties, North Dakota. They have also erected many schoolhouses and other public as well as many private structures.

Mr. Lease served as a member of the Montana National Guard from 1891 to 1894. In April, 1913, he was elected mayor of Great Falls. He gave the city a splendid administration for one term. In 1918 he was appointed a member of the State Council of Defense by Governor Stewart, while in 1919 he became a member of the State Efficiency and Trade Commission. He is one of the broad minded business men who are doing much to help the people of the state to adjust themselves to the new conditions following the World war. He is a member of the Great Falls Chamber of Commerce, Euclid Lodge No. 58, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Great Falls Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of Great Falls Lodge No. 214 of the Elks. In politics he is a republican.

July 20, 1892, Mr. Lease married Miss Nettie C. Stites. She was born at Pleasanton in Linn County, Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Lease are the parents of nine children: Esther Marie, Jessie F., Helen E., Howard S., Ruth Nettie, Alice Gertrude, Thomas S., Margaret Josephine and Rachel Dorothy. All are still living except Esther, who died at the age of twelve years.

JOHN CHARLES MAHER, who is district traffic agent at Butte for the Great Northern Railway, gained his early experience in railroading in his native city of St. Paul, and has been continuously active in the service of the Great Northern from boyhood to the present time.

Mr. Maher was born at St. Paul April 4, 1877, and his father, the late John F. Maher, was also a Great Northern employee for many years. His grandfather, Timothy Maher, was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1805, and lived to the remarkable age of 102 years. He came to America in early life, lived in Canada, and subsequently was a pioneer homesteader near Lansing, Iowa, and developed a fine farm in that state. He died near Lansing in 1907. His two sons were James and John F. James was a business man and died at St. Paul in 1904. John F. Maher was born at Montreal, Canada, in 1849, and was reared and educated in Iowa. During his early manhood he removed to St. Paul, where he was married and where for many years he was in the operating department of the Great Northern Railway. He died at St. Paul in 1909. He was a Catholic and a democrat. His wife was Margaret Horrigan, who was born in St. Paul in 1857 and died there in 1882. She was the mother of four children: Ella, unmarried, and living at St. Paul; John Charles; T. J., clerk of the District Court at Spokane, Washington; and D. H., who is in the postal service at St. Paul.

John Charles Maher was educated in the public schools of St. Paul, graduating from high school in 1895. After that he was a student in St. John's University through his sophomore year, and left college to become office boy at St. Paul for the Great Northern Railway. During more than twenty years of service Mr. Maher has won many promotions. From office boy he became rate clerk in the same department, and in 1901 left St. Paul and became contracting freight agent for the Great Northern at Spokane. Later he was promoted to traveling freight agent, and since July, 1918, has been at Butte as district traffic agent. His offices are in the Daly Bank Building.

Mr. Maher is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church and is affiliated with Spokane Lodge No. 228 of the Elks. His home is at 838 West Silver Street. Mr. Maher married at Spokane in November, 1914, Miss Mildred Simmons, daughter of John W. and Martha (Lyman) Simmons, the latter now deceased. Her father is a fruit grower and orchardist at Greenacres, Washington. Mrs. Maher is a graduate of the high school of Sauk Center, Minnesota. They have one son, John Robert, born October 18, 1919.

GEORGE C. THOMSON. The recognized prestige of George C. Thomson as the leading photographer of the State of Montana is due not alone to his continuous activity in that profession in this state for over thirty years, but also to the thoroughly artistic talent at the basis of his work. He is a prominent resident of Butte, member of the Rotary Club, and is representative of an old and prominent Scotch family.

George Carr Thomson was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, December 19, 1869. There is authentic record of the family in Scotland for many generations. His great-grandfather, Alexander Thomson, was a farmer at Haughhead, Lumphanan, while the grandfather, Alexander, also spent his life in agriculture at Lumphanan. Alexander Thomson, father of the Butte photographer, was born at Lumphanan in 1822, and lived out his active life on a farm near Aberdeen, where he died in 1915. He was a liberal in politics and a very devout Presbyterian. He married Agnes Thomson, of an unrelated branch of the Thomson clan. She was born at Wicker Inn, Banchory in Aberdeenshire, in 1836, and is still living at Aberdeen. Her people have been proprietors of the old Wicker Inn for more than a century. George Carr Thomson was second in a family of four children. His brother James is proprietor of the Grand Central Hotel at White Sulphur Springs, Montana, and has been the genial host of that establishment for over thirty years. The two daughters, Mary and Jennie, are married and live in Aberdeen, Scotland. Each of them had six sons in the World war. The oldest son of Mary was in active service more than four years, lost his life and was buried at St. Quentin, France.

George Carr Thomson received a high school education in Aberdeen and was schooled in art at the famous institution, South Kensington Art School, London, graduating in 1887. In the same year he came to the United States, and has been a resident of Butte since April, 1887. At that time he joined his skill with A. J. Dusseau, famous as the pioneer photographer of Montana. They were associated in the profession for twenty years. Upon the death of Mr. Dusseau in 1909 Mr. Thomson continued the business under his own name. His chief studio is at 121 West Park Street, and he has several other studios in Butte. If a list of the sittings made at the Dusseau and Thomson studio could be compiled it would doubtless include most of the noted men and women of Montana during the past forty years.

Mr. Thomson is a republican in politics, and besides his membership in the Rotary Club he is affiliated with Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Butte Camp No. 153, Woodmen of the World, and the Royal Highlanders. His modern home is at 800 South Jackson Street.

In 1895, at Butte, Mr. Thomson married Miss Mary E. Kraft. She was born in York, Pennsylvania, and died at Butte in 1906. She was the mother of two daughters, Sophia and Mary, the latter a junior in the Butte High School. Sophia is the wife of Ray Loomas and lives at Butte. Mr. Loomas, now deputy city treasurer, was an American soldier overseas, participating in the Chateau Thierry, Argonne Forest, St. Mihiel drives, was three times wounded, and received the Croix de Guerre. Mr. Thomson married for his present wife Miss Bessie Mae Kelsey, a native of Butte, and daughter of John and Susan Kelsey, pioneers of the city. Her parents still live there, Mr. Kelsey being prominent in financial affairs. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson have one daughter, Susan, born March 11, 1916.

ROBERT J. BALL. No man who has lived in the Flathead country has been better known or more highly esteemed than Robert J. Ball. His life has indeed been a busy and successful one and fraught with much good to his fellow men, for, while earnestly laboring to advance his own interests, he has never been neglectful of his larger duties to the public, and his record is eminently worthy of perusal by the student who would learn the intrinsic essence of individuality and its influence in moulding public opinion and giving character and stability to a community.

Robert J. Ball was born in England, August 18, 1856, and is the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Fisher) Ball. When he was twelve years of age, the family came to the United States. He never attended school after leaving England, but being always a great reader he is one of the best informed men in Flathead County. The family first located in Salt Lake City, the son Robert eventually going to various places in Nevada, where he remained until 1880, then going to Butte, Montana, taking a freighting outfit with him and remaining in that vicinity working for the Alice Mines until coming to the Flathead country, where he located in 1884. He pre-empted 160 acres of land, located five miles south of where the town of Kalispell now stands. At that time the only nearby place was Selish, which also was a postoffice, and to which people came for mail from points as far distant as the Canadian line. The country at that time was sparsely settled, Indians, miners and hunters being practically the only occupants, while wild game was exceedingly abundant. The first school in the Flathead country was held in the location cabin of D. J. Lambert, the first teacher being an old trapper named Robinson. After locating his land Mr. Ball remained one summer, during which time he built a good cabin and made other improvements. He then went to Butte and engaged in mining until the following spring, when he returned to the ranch. About this time he was married, and his wife came to the ranch and remained during the last six weeks prior to proving up on it, while he returned to Butte, where he was employed as overseer in the smelter of W. A. Clark. In 1893 they decided to make their permanent home in the Flathead country, and from that time they devoted themselves heart and soul to their farm. The country was still almost unoccupied, and Mr. and Mrs. Ball found that they were compelled to adapt themselves to surroundings and conditions to which they were unaccustomed. Persistent and judiciously applied energy had its rewards, and Mr. Ball was enabled from time to time to add to his original holdings until his estate amounted to 480 acres, comprising as fine a farm as there was in the valley. The original log cabin home was replaced by a comfortable and attractive residence, and during the subsequent years they realized the fulfillment of their earlier hopes, so that at length they felt able to lay aside the labors of the farm and enjoy that rest to which their years of labor had entitled them. In 1916 they sold their old home place and occupied a modern home which they had erected across the road from the old homestead, and there they are wisely spending their latter years in quiet and contentment.

On November 5, 1885, at Helena, Montana, Mr. Ball was married to Jennie Claflin, who was born in Charlotte, Michigan, the daughter of B. I. and H. B. Claflin. She attended the public schools of Michigan, and then Olivet College, where she was graduated. She had prepared herself for the vocation of a school teacher, and sometime prior to her graduation she had applied to the Missionary Society for employment as teacher. At this time she received a call to the "New West," under the supervision of the Congregational Church and, accepting, was sent to Bountiful, Utah. She taught school there three years and one year at Heber, Utah. She then returned to her home in Michigan for a visit. Later she met Mr. Ball in Helena, Montana, and their marriage occurred there in the fall of 1885. Mrs. Ball passed away July 18, 1920. She possessed a very beautiful character, and was a true Christian woman and much beloved by friends and neighbors. No children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ball, but out of the kindness of their hearts and their love for children they educated and assisted in starting in life fourteen boys and girls, feeling that in this way they could start them in life right fitting them for true American citizenship, they were performing a real service to their country and humanity. The home has always been noted for its spirit of hospitality, the latch-string, figuratively speaking, ever hanging on the outside, and none in distress have ever left their door empty-handed.

Politically Mr. Ball is a stanch supporter of the republican party, while Mrs. Ball, who believed that every woman should exercise her right of franchise, also believed that the fitness of every candidate should be considered as of more importance than party affiliations. Mr. Ball attends the Presbyterian Church at Kalispell, of which Mrs. Ball was a member. He has always been deeply interested in the welfare of the schools in his neighborhood, as was also his wife. When they first came to Flathead there was but six weeks of school in each year, that being at Demersville. Their homestead was not included in any school district, though they were claimed by both Demersville and Brocken. They finally proposed to unite with Demersville if the later would move their schoolhouse to a more central location, which was done. Mrs. Ball's experience as a teacher qualified her to take an active interest in matters educational and the voters of the district, recognizing her fitness, elected her a member of the school board, which position she filled for several succesive terms. For fifteen years Mr. and Mrs. Ball opened their home for Sunday school work, thus promoting and encouraging a work that would have suffered without such support. Mrs. Ball herself invited and gathered the young into the school and acted as its superintendent for some time.

In 1915 Mr. and Mrs. Ball took an automobile trip through the states of Washington, California, Oregon, Nevada and Utah, and enjoyed the delightful scenery and historic spots of these localities.

FRANK REID came to Montana in 1880, arriving at Virginia City on July 2nd of that year. He was then nineteen years of age, and his knowledge of the world was largely confined to that gained on a farm in the Hudson Valley of New York State. He quickly adapted himself to the circumstances of Montana, and during the period which has since elapsed has become one of the most extensive land owners and stock raisers of the Twin Bridges community.

He was born at New Scotland, Albany County, New York, December 21, 1861. His Scotch ancestors were colonial settlers in the Hudson River Valley. His grandfather, John Reid, was born in Albany County in 1788 and spent all his life as a farmer there. He died at New Scotland in 1874. On February 23, 1820, he was commissioned lieutenant of a company in the One Hundred and Fiftieth Regiment of New York State Infantry, and on May 23, 1823, was made captain in a Battalion of Rifles in the County of Albany. An old powder horn which he carried is now owned by his grandson George Reid of Twin Bridges. This powder horn was made by an Indian boy at Lake George and bears the date August 31, 1758. George I. Reid, father of Frank Reid, was born at New Scotland, New York, in 1820, spent his life there as a farmer and died in 1871. He was a republican and member of the Dutch Reformed Church. His wife was Anna M. Fuller, who was born in New Scotland in 1827 and died there in 1908. Frank Reid was the seventh and youngest of their children. John G., the oldest, was for fifty years an employee of the Erie Railroad and is now retired on a pension at Jersey City, New Jersey. Catherine, the second in age, died at Coemans, New York; Orcelia died at New Scotland; Louisa is the wife of David T. Hurst, a farmer at Guilderland Center, Albany County, New York; Gershum Fuller is on the old home farm in New Scotland; Hannah died at the age of twenty-two months.

Frank Reid left school at the age of eighteen, and soon afterward came to Montana. The first two years of his residence in this territory he worked at the mines, did teaming and also contracting. In 1882 he went to Butte and spent a year with the Bell Mining Company. Returning to Virginia City in 1883, he operated with that town as his headquarters until 1890, engaging in mining and teaming. He became a resident of Twin Bridges in 1890 and since then his interests have been growing and expanding in the ranching industry. With A. J. Wilcomb he owns 1,700 acres, with his son Alvin is owner of an 800-acre ranch five miles north of Twin Bridges, has another place of 340 acres in Nezperce Basin, has 200 acres seven miles northwest of Twin Bridges at Rock Springs, and also has 200 acres west of Silverstar on Cherry Creek. With his sons Mr. Reid runs as high as 13,000 head of sheep in a season, and is also operating extensively in cattle and horses.

At Twin Bridges besides his modern home on Seventh Avenue he owns a brick business block on Main Street and several dwelling houses, while Mrs. Reid is half owner of the hardware store block at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Main Street. Mr. Reid's affairs have been greatly prospered in Montana and he also stands high among his fellow citizens and in social circles. He has been a man of influence in behalf of the republican party and of good local government, and several years ago was a candidate for county commissioner. He is a director and stockholder of the First National Bank at Twin Bridges, and is secretary of the Farmers Elevator Company. He is affiliated with Westgate Lodge No. 27, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is a former member of the Knights of the Maccabees and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On December 29, 1886, at Butte, he married Miss Margaret Gilbert, daughter of one of the famous pioneers of Montana. She was born at Virginia City February 26, 1865. Mr. and Mrs. Reid have three sons, two of whom were in the World war. Almon Gilbert and Alvin F. are twins, born April 8, 1888, while George Henry, the youngest, was born June 5, 1895. Almon Gilbert enlisted June 24, 1918, was sent overseas after a brief period of training in August, and went over the top in the great battle of the Argonne Forest on the 26th of September. He was mustered out June 23, 1919, and is now a partner in the ranching business with his father. Alvin F. Reid lives on his ranch six miles north of Twin Bridges and is individual owner of 400 acres. He married Norma E. Cornforth, and they have two children, Helen May, born January 11, 1913, and Charles, born May 21, 1917. George Henry Reid was drafted September 3, 1918, was sent to Camp Lewis, thence to Camp Fremont, California, to Camp Mills, New York, and finally to Camp Hill, Virginia, and was mustered out April 2, 1919. He is now assisting his father in the latter's varied business affairs. Mrs. Reid, who is one of the oldest native daughters of Montana, was educated in the public schools of the territory, in a private school at Virginia City, and taught school for four years in Madison County before her marriage. She is a member of the Episcopal Church.

Her father, the late Henry S. Gilbert, was born in Pennsylvania in 1833 and died at Virginia City in 1903. He was a native of Berks County, son of Henry and Lydia (Spang) Gilbert, both also natives of Pennsylvania. Henry Gilbert, Sr., operated a grist mill and woolen factory. The great-grandfather of Henry S. Gilbert came from England to America in 1750, and one of his sons, born in Pennsylvania, was with the American forces in the war for independence. Henry S. Gilbert had a common school education, attended the Academy of Boyertown, Pennsylvania, and for a time was a teacher. He learned the trade of saddler, bought the business of his employer, and continued it for two years. In 1854 he moved to Lafayette, Indiana, worked at his trade six months, and then went on to Laurens, Kansas, at that time the center of the great free state struggle in Kansas. He was a contractor and builder and took up Government land near Manhattan, but in 1855, probably due to the disturbed condition of affairs in Kansas, moved to Missouri, where he worked at his trade for a time. In September of that year he started for the Rocky Mountains. On reaching Fort Laramie, Wyoming, he remained until 1859 engaged in trading with the Crow and Sioux Indians, and furnishing supplies to the overland emigrant trains. In the spring of 1878 he was sent to overtake General Johnson's command, then pushing forward against the Mormons, for the purpose of supplying the soldiers with rations. Being unable to reach the forces of General Johnson, he stopped at South Pass and established a trading post and general store and for two years traded among the Snake Indians. Selling his business in 1859 he then established a post at the foot of Rocky Ridge in Wyoming, and built the first wooden house there. He was a trader among the Indians on Wind River until the fall of 1860, when he removed to Fort Bridger and established a store at Millersville.

At Millersville, Utah, November 20, 1860, he married Margaret McMinn, of Salt Lake City. She was a native of Nova Scotia, and from there as a girl accompanied her parents to Utah. They were converts to the church of the Latter Day Saints, and their children embraced that religion.

After his marriage Henry S. Gilbert located on a ranch south of Fort Bridger, and remained there until the spring of 1862, when, owing to an uprising among the Ute Indians, who menaced the safety of all the people in that community, he abandoned his ranch and with his family returned to Fort Bridger. There he entered the service of the Government, putting in a bridge at Ham's Fork and subsequently with Judge Carter took a contract to furnish hay for the military post and beef to the troops.

August 12, 1863, Henry S. Gilbert started for Virginia City, Montana, and arrived in that pioneer mining post on the first of September. He bought two placer claims in Alder Gulch, but their working proved unprofitable. He then erected a brewery at Virginia City, the first in the state. He conducted that as a very successful business for a number of years, and his output had a large demand over all the country around Virginia City. He was a resident of Madison County forty years and always regarded as one of its most alert and progressive citizens. He was an ardent democrat, and in 1880 was elected county treasurer, an office he held for eleven years. He was assessor of Madison County in 1871, served two terms as mayor of Virginia City, and six terms as alderman. He was past master of Virginia City Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

The widow of Henry S. Gilbert is still living at Virginia City. She was the mother of fifteen children, whose names are briefly noted as follows: Frances, wife of Jacob Albright, proprietor of a men's furnishing store at Virginia City; William Henry, a miner in Alaska; Mrs. Frank Reid; Clara, who lives in Virginia City, widow of Frank Foster; Amelia, twin sister of Clara, is the wife of Edward Trout, a miner and present city marshal of Virginia; Elizabeth, wife of A. J. Wilcomb, the Twin Bridge banker; Walter, who died in Virginia City at the age of twenty-one; Linnie and Ethel, unmarried, and living at San Francisco, as is their sister Helen; Cora, unmarried, a resident of Virginia City; Lewis and Valentine, both of Virginia City; May, wife of George P. Leineweber, a merchant at Alder; and Sarah, wife of James H. Powell, of Butte.

William J. MacDuffie is manager and one of the partners of the leading hardware business at Twin Bridges. Before entering his present business he was an expert tinsmith, a trade he learned while a boy and which he followed for a number of years in his native state of Wisconsin.

Mr. MacDuffie was born at Rio, Wisconsin, March

11, 1882. His people were originally Scotch but came from England to the United States. His grandfather, John MacDuffie, was born in 1804 and was one of the earliest settlers of Southern Wisconsin, clearing up a farm in Walworth County, long famous as one of the best agricultural counties in Southern Wisconsin and noted as a great dairy center. He died at Rio in 1891. John Walworth MacDuffie, his son and father of William J., was born in Walworth County, Wisconsin, in 1833, fifteen years before Wisconsin became a state. After his marriage he lived on a farm in Rio and in 1912 retired to Seattle, Washington, where he remained three years and since then has made his home in different localities but is now a retired resident of Seattle. He served as a justice of the peace at Rio, and from that community he enlisted in the Third Wisconsin Cavalry during the Civil war and for three and a half years fulfilled all the requirements of a brave and capable soldier. He was in many of the battles of that great war, was with Sherman on the march to the sea, and was twice wounded, once seriously in the hip. He married in Pennsylvania Mary Carter, who was born in that state in 1857, and died at Seattle in 1914. Howard, the oldest of their children, is overseer of an iron ore mine at Ironwood, Michigan. Maude is the wife of Charles Tillotson and lives at Chicago. Adelaide is the wife of Thomas Carter, a fruit grower at Seattle. Alice is the wife of William Yale, owner of a large steam laundry at Duluth, Minnesota. DeWitt is a rancher at Belt, Montana. Harriet, who died at the age of thirty-eight, was the wife of D. H. Taylor, a traveling salesman with home at Missoula. William J. is the seventh in age. Roy, the youngest, is a railroad engineer with home in Florida.

William Joseph MacDuffie received his education in the public schools of Rio, Wisconsin, graduating from high school in 1900. For four years he was an apprentice at the tinner's trade, and then going to Alma, Wisconsin, worked as a tinsmith for ten years and two months. In 1910, on coming to Twin Bridges, he worked for George Dess and D. H. Taylor, and in November, 1918, bought his present store at the corner of Main Street and Fourth Avenue. Besides a good stock of hardware he also handles groceries. The business is incorporated with Fred C. Seidensticker and wife, respectively, president and vice president, and Mr. MacDuffie as active manager.

Mr. MacDuffie is a republican in politics and is affiliated with Alma Camp No. 760, Modern Woodmen of America. He married at Alma June 15, 1905, Miss Julia Stohr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Stohr. Her mother lives at Alma and her father, who was a carpenter by trade, died there. Mrs. MacDuffie is a graduate of the Alma High School and is a member of the German Reformed Church.

Harvey Frederick Jackson. During a residence in Montana of thirty years Harvey Frederick Jackson has had a varied and extensive experience in the mines, as a merchant, rancher and real estate dealer. He has developed the leading real estate business at Twin Bridges, which has been his home for the past five years.

Mr. Jackson was born at Logansport, Indiana, March 21, 1863, but spent most of his early life in Iowa. His grandfather, John A. Jackson, was descended from ancestors who were pioneer settlers in Kentucky, and he spent his active life as a Kentucky farmer. Noah M. Jackson, father of Harvey F., was born at Logansport, Cass County, Indiana, in 1831, and as a young man became a wagonmaker by trade. He married at Logansport, also did some farming in that section of Indiana, and in 1863 moved to Iowa, and had a farm in Union County where the present town of Thayer is now located. He died at Thayer in 1907. For twenty-six consecutive years he served as justice of the peace at Thayer, and one term as county commissioner of Union County. Politically he was a republican and was a very active member of the Christian Church. He also belonged to the Odd Fellows. Noah M. Jackson married Phoebe Gripp, who was born in Indiana in 1835 and died at Thayer, Iowa, in 1884. Of their children Harvey F. was the fifth. Sarah. the oldest, lives in Nebraska, widow of Peter Walters, a farmer in Iowa and Nebraska; Mary resides in Union County, Iowa, widow of Elias Day, a farmer; John A., a farmer near Hopeville in Union County, Iowa; Launa, who married West Walters, a farmer, and both died and are buried at Afton, Iowa; J. M. Jackson is a real estate broker at Kansas City, Missouri; Nora is the wife of Walter Wake, a farmer at Afton, Iowa; Mrs. Emma Johnson is the wife of a farmer at Lincoln, Nebraska; and Mrs. Laura Lewis is the wife of a farmer and carpenter at Leavenworth, Kansas.

Harvey F. Jackson was educated in the rural schools of Union County, Iowa, and lived on his father's farm there until he was twenty-four years of age. When he came to Montana in 1888 he located at Dillon and was employed as a smelterer at the mines for five years. One year he was proprietor of a hotel at Bannock, and in that town he erected a building and stocked it with general merchandise and for sixteen years commanded the bulk of the mercantile trade in that community. He was also postmaster during the greater part of his mercantile career. He first became identified with the Twin Bridges community as a farmer in 1912. He left here and for one year was engaged in selling mines in old Mexico. In 1915 he came to Twin Bridges and engaged in the real estate business, and has made his business, conducted as the Superior Land Company, the chief establishment of its kind in that part of Madison County. He handles ranches and city properties. He individually owns a valuable place of 360 acres two and a half miles southeast of Twin Bridges. This is irrigated land, and is used both for grain and stock production. Mr. Jackson lives on his ranch and he also owns considerable real estate at Twin Bridges.

Politically he is a republican. He married at Afton, Iowa, in 1888, Miss Cora Tash, daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth (Weter) Tash the latter living with Mr. and Mrs. Jackson. Her father, deceased, was a farmer in Iowa. Mrs. Jackson was educated in the Normal School at Afton, Iowa, and was a teacher in that state before her marriage. They have two children: Donald T., born March 28, 1903; and Dorothy, born May 28, 1907.

William Ruppel, a Montana pioneer, long identified with the practical side of farming and stock raising, is a resident of Twin Bridges and is now giving his chief time to the management of the Farmers Elevator of that city.

He was born in the Province of Hesse, Germany, February 22, 1856. His parents were Henry and Margaret (Jacob) Ruppel, natives of Hesse, and Henry spent his active life as a farmer. Henry Ruppel served with the German army in the war against Austria in 1866. He and his wife died at the same time and were buried together. William Ruppel had a good education in the German schools, worked on the farm and on coming to America went from New York west to Iowa. He was one of a family of ten children, most of whom remained in Germany. He was the second in age, Valentine, the oldest, being a resident of Germany and a farmer. The third in the family, Adam, is a merchant at San Francisco, California. He was named for his uncle Adam Ruppel, who was one of the pioneers of Minnesota, going there while a member of the United States army in 1856. He served during the Indian uprising in Minnesota and was a business man and school teacher. The other children of Henry Ruppel and wife were: Margaret, Henry, Peter, all still in Germany, Jacob, a retired farmer at Twin Bridges, Catherine and Mary, both in Germany, and Frederick a farmer at Vulcan, Alberta, Canada.

After eighteen months working on a farm at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, William Ruppel came to Montana and arrived at Twin Bridges in Madison County in December, 1882. For four years he worked on farms and ranches, and during that time helped drive a large band of cattle from Twin Bridges to Choteau County. As soon as possible he got into the cattle raising business on his own account and his efforts in that line were centered in Choteau County from 1889 until 1898. He was connected with some of the leading outfits in that part of the state. He returned to Twin Bridges in 1898 and bought the Wilhart ranch of 652 acres. This is one of the best ranches in the Madison Valley, and he soon had it stocked with high grade Shorthorn cattle. He continued active in the livestock business until the spring of 1912. At that date he was one of the local men associated with the organization and establishment of the Farmers Elevator at Twin Bridges. This is the only elevator in the town. Since June, 1917, William Ruppel has been active manager.

He owns a modern home on Madison Street. He is a stanch democrat and in many ways his public spirit had a healthful influence in the development of his home community.

In 1896, at St. Paul, Minnesota, Mr. William Ruppel married Miss Anna Margaret Ammon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Ammon, both deceased. Her father was a manufacturer of chicory. Mrs. William Ruppel died October 15, 1917. She was the mother of six children: William Ammon, born April 23, 1897, is a farmer at Twin Bridges; Henry George, born August 23, 1898, is a student in the State University at Missoula; John F. Ruppel, who was born at Twin Bridges December 13, 1900, was educated in the local public schools, including three years at high school, and is assistant manager under his father of the Farmers Elevator at Twin Bridges; Margaret, born December 19, 1902, is a student in the Wesleyan Business College at Helena; Jacob Lenhart, born January 13, 1905 is in the Twin Bridges High School; and Viola, the youngest, born April 17, 1907, is also in public schools.

Robert Nordtome. To a great extent the prosperity of the agricultural sections of our great country is due to the honest industry, the sturdy perseverance and the wise economy which so prominently characterizes the foreign element that has entered largely into our population. By comparison with their old-country surroundings these people have readily recognized the fact that in America lie the greatest opportunities for the man of ambition and energy. And because of this many have broken the ties of home and native land and have entered earnestly upon the task of gaining in the new world a name and competence. Among this class may be mentioned Robert Nordtome, who by reason of indefatigable labor and honest effort has not only acquired a well-merited material prosperity but also richly earned the highest esteem of all with whom he has been associated.

Robert Nordtome is a native of Norway and is the son of Arnte and Marit Nordtome. He remained under the parental roof until he was eighteen years of age, and in the meantime he received a good practical education in the schools of his home community. At the age mentioned he determined to seek a wider field of opportunity and sailed from the port of Trondhjem for the United States. Landing at Philadelphia, he proceeded at once to Wisconsin, where he obtained work as a carpenter. He later was employed in Minneapolis for a short time, but finally came to Montana, locating at Missoula, where he remained until the fall of 1888, when he came to the Flathead Valley and pre-empted a tract of land located about three miles northwest of where Kalispell now stands. That was in the formative period of this locality, and Mr. Nordtome entered heartily into the labors incident to the opening up and settlement of a new region. There were no railroads through here at that time, it was a long and tiresome trip to the nearest postoffice, and the country was not altogether free from danger from Indians. So that Mr. Nordtome is entitled to the honor that is given the pioneers of any locality, for to them are the later residents indebted for the initial steps in the development of the community. Mr. Nordtome's first home here was in a typical log cabin of the period, but it has long since given place to a modern and attractive residence, which, together with the substantial and well arranged farm buildings, makes an attractive farm view, standing in marked evidence of the industry and good taste of the owner. Many years ago he planted fruit and shade trees, a wise forethought which is today appreciated.

While a resident of Minneapolis Mr. Nordtome was married to Carrie Sneen, and to them were born six children, namely: Andy, Mida, Clarence, Alma, Lena and Edward. All of these children were given good public school educations and are useful and honorable members of society. Andy was married to a Miss Iversen, and they have two children, Kenneth and Owen. He is a successful dairyman at Kalispell. Mida became the wife of Fred Schmauch, and they are the parents of two children, James and Leo. Mrs. Carrie Nordtome died in 1910 and later Mr. Nordtome was married to Inga Nordtome, a native of Minneapolis and the daughter of Mens and Karen Nordtome. To this latter union have been born two children, Milford and Clifford.

Politically Mr. Nordtome is an active supporter of the democratic party, being an ardent admirer of President Woodrow Wilson. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In religious matters Mr. and Mrs. Nordtome are actively interested as members of the Norwegian and Danish Methodist Episcopal Church of Kalispell. Several times Mr. Nordtome has been elected lay delegate to the annual conferences of the church, and at the annual conference of 1912 he was elected one of the lay delegates from the annual conference to the general conference which met at Minneapolis. This is probably the greatest honor which the Methodist Episcopal Church can confer on a layman, and it was duly appreciated at its full value by Mr. Nordtome. In 1919 he went as a delegate to Seattle, and was accompanied by Mrs. Nordtome and children. Standing "four square to every wind that blows," Mr. Nordtome has been a powerful force for righteousness in his community and has consistently given his support to every movement which has promised to be of advantage to the community, materially, morally or educationally. He has been a man in whom the utmost confidence is reposed, scrupulously honest in all his dealings with his fellows, kind and obliging, and a man whom all respect and admire.

FRANK CAREY is a native son of Montana, spent his youthful years as a cowboy, but for a quarter of a century has been active in business affairs and is now one of the partners and owners of the largest department store at Sheridan.

He was born at Adobetown, Montana, September 28, 1878. His people were Irish, his father, Nicholas, and his grandfather, Mathew Carey, being natives of County Wicklow, Ireland. Nicholas was born in 1831. Mathew Carey brought his family to America about 1847, locating at Albany, New York. Nicholas Carey grew up there and in 1863 came to Montana as one of the early pioneers of the Northwest. He established a home at Adobetown, and probably had the first general mercantile store there. He also operated a freight line between Corinne, Utah, and Adobetown. He had a long and useful career and died in 1906. He was a democrat in politics. His wife, Mary Emerson, was born at Omaha, Nebraska, in 1854 and her parents crossed the plains to Virginia City, Montana, in 1864. Thus on both sides Frank Carey is identified with the earliest pioneer families and history of Montana. Mrs. Nicholas Carey after her husband's death bought a ranch near Sheridan and is still living there. She and her husband had a large family of thirteen children. Matt is clerk of court of Madison County at Virginia City; Mary is the wife of W. D. Hustead, appraiser of state lands at Helena; Frank is the third in age; Elizabeth, who died in the Ruby Valley in 1905, was the wife of Dennis Mahagin, a rancher at Alder; John was deputy clerk of court at Virginia City and died in the winter of 1918; Katherine lives with her mother on the home ranch; Dora is the wife of H. M. Colwell, a printer at Ellensburg, Washington; Nicholas enlisted early in 1918 in the United States navy; Henry manages the home farm near Sheridan; William enlisted in June, 1918, was sent overseas less than sixty days after enlisting, was with the One Hundred and Eleventh Infantry and was wounded in the great battle of Argonne Forest and was returned to the United States in the spring of 1919; Fannie, Hugh and Steve, the three younger children, are all at home with their mother on the ranch.

Frank Carey had the advantages of the public schools of Adobetown. From the age of twelve until 1894 he almost lived in the saddle and became an expert cowboy, working for several well known cattle outfits. In June, 1894, he went to work for Henry Elling & Company at Sheridan. He rapidly assimilated mercantile knowledge and in 1896, with D. W. Raymond, established a grocery house. After two years he returned to the service of Henry Elling & Company and remained with that organization until March, 1906. At that date he bought an interest in the J. M. Madison store, and is a partner in the business today, conducting the leading department story of Madison County. The store on Main Street has floor space 46 by 80 feet, basement and balcony, and the store is completely stocked with an adequate supply of general merchandise to meet the demands of the patronage, part of which is drawn from a distance of fifty miles.

Mr. Carey is also active in local affairs, is present town clerk of Sheridan, and in 1904 was candidate for county clerk and recorder. Politically he is a democrat and is affiliated with Ruby Valley Aerie No. 1780, Fraternal Order of Eagles, at Sheridan. He owns a good home on Mill Street, having extensively remodeled his residence in 1918. He married at Butte in June, 1911, May Lyden, daughter of P. J. and Annie (Martin) Lyden, who reside at 221 North Idaho Street in Butte. Her father is one of the oldest members of the Butte police force. Mrs. Carey is a graduate of the Butte High School, and is the mother of two children, Lyden, born March 17, 1912, and Alice Catherine, born February 14, 1919.

JACOB FRED OAKWOOD as a young man was a practical electrician, and has been identified with one of the greatest power companies in the state for a number of years. He is now manager at Sheridan for the Montana Power Company.

He was born at Bozeman, April 19, 1881, and is a member of a pioneer family of the state. His father, Jacob Oakwood, was born in Switzerland in 1829. When he was about twenty years of age as a British subject he joined the British army and took part in the war in 1852 between England and Turkey against Russia, known as the Crimean war. He had a life of varied interest and adventure. He located at Bozeman in 1874, was a merchant in that city and served as first city marshal. He was presented by H. Mounts of Bozeman with a gold headed cane in appreciation of the efficient manner in which he filled the office. He was a republican in politics. He died at Bozeman in 1885. His wife was Annie Heffner, who was born at Rochester, New York, in 1851 and died at Bozeman in 1913. Lottie, the oldest of the children, died at Bozeman in 1903, wife of Frank Lampo, who is in the United States mail service and now a resident of Cleveland, Ohio. Emma is unmarried and a bookkeeper at Bozeman. Jacob Fred is the third in age. Mamie is a trained nurse and for two years was in the American Red Cross service in France. Mrs. Jacob Oakwood after the death of her first husband became the wife of John Mitchell, who is still living at Bozeman, a retired merchant. By that union she was the mother of two daughters, Agnes and Ruth. Agnes is the wife of Alfred Dier, a son of George P. Dier, manager of the Bozeman Hotel, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Dier live at Buffalo, New York, where he is a civil engineer in the employ of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Company. Ruth is unmarried and is cashier in the Mull Store at Bozeman.

Jacob Fred Oakwood was educated in the public schools of Bozeman, graduated from the Gallatin County High School in 1900 and also spent two years in the Montana State College. With a good education as ground work for his future career he entered the service of the Gallatin Light and Power Company in 1902. He worked as electrician, as wire man, and also operated street cars. This corporation sold its property to the Montana Power Company in 1904 and Mr. Oakwood remained with the larger organization at Bozeman and became local superintendent. March 22, 1915, he was assigned to Sheridan as manager of the Ruby Valley branch of the Montana Power Company, and has been at that post of duty now for five years. He has the management of the corporation for four towns, Sheridan, Twin Bridges, Alder and Laurin.

Mr. Oakwood was quite prominent in politics at Bozeman, serving eight years on the City Council and was twice candidate for mayor. He is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church and still has property interests at Bozeman. He resides in the Ruby Hotel at Sheridan.

November 15, 1904, at Townsend, Montana, he married Miss Edith Butler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Audley G. Butler, her father a retired merchant of Iowa and now living at Flushing, Long Island. Her mother is deceased. Mrs. Oakwood was a sister of Ellis Parker Butler, one of the foremost American humorists and writers. Mrs. Oakwood, who died at Sheridan at the time of the influenza epidemic in February, 1919, was the mother of one son, Ellis J., born May 24, 1906.

Walter J. Derrick, forest supervisor of the Madison National Forest, was in Montana several years before he entered the United States Forestry Service in the spring of 1906. He has since been one of the hard working and viligant men in that department, and has enjoyed steady promotion.

His first work was as assistant forest ranger stationed at Race Track, Powell County. June 1, 1909, he was sent to Helena and employed at special work until November, 1911. He was then given a ranger's district out of Helena until December, 1916, after which he was stationed at Billings as deputy supervisor of the Bear Tooth Forest a year and a month. Toward the end of January, 1918, he was made deputy supervisor of the Jefferson National Forest at Great Falls, and on June 1, 1919, was promoted to forest supervisor of the Madison National Forest, with offices in Sheridan. During the forest fires Mr. Derrick has under his supervision 19 regulars and 100 temporary fire fighters, and since entering his present office has had forces steadily at work safeguarding his district in a period of unusual danger.

Mr. Derrick was born at Detroit, Michigan, November 20, 1880. His grandfather, John Derrick, was a native of England, and was an early settler in Michigan, where he engaged in the sheep business, and where he died before Walter J. Derrick was born. Walter's father was George A. Derrick, who was born in Michigan in 1852, was reared and married in that state, lived at Detroit and Pontiac, where he engaged in the livery business, and finally moved to Webster, South Dakota, where he died in 1895. He was a democrat in politics. George A. Derrick married Louise Walter, who was born in Michigan in 1859, and is now living at Henry, South Dakota. Of their six children Walter J. is the third. Clara, the oldest, is the wife of William Giffels, who has charge of a large orchard at Weiser, Idaho. Alberta is clerk in Sand Brothers dry goods house at Helena, Montana. Ethel is the wife of Rollie Gray, who served as a first lieutenant in the One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Infantry with the Expeditionary Forces of the Army of Occupation in Germany. Harry, the fifth of the family, works on a ranch at Townsend, Montana. George A., the youngest, enlisted in the regular army prior to the declaration of war against Germany, being subject to army duty for seven years unless released prior to that time. He was sent overseas with the Sixth Infantry, was promoted to sergeant and was also in the Army of Occupation.

Walter J. Derrick was educated in the public schools of Webster, South Dakota, finishing the sophomore year of high school. At the age of seventeen he began working for himself and in 1900 he came to Niehart, Montana, and was employed in the assay office of the Diamond R Mining Company 1½ years. He spent another year in the assay office in the Henderson Mines Company at Phillipsburg, Montana, and the same organization, but operating under the name of the Basin Gold Mining Company near Phillipsburg, employed him for two years as a ditch tender. That brings his record up to the spring of 1906, when he entered the service of the government.

Mr. Derrick owns a residence at Billings. In politics he is independent. He married at Deer Lodge, Montana, in 1911, Miss Pearl Meyers, a daughter of John H. and Katharine (Hoss) Meyers. Her parents are residents of Deer Lodge, and her father was a pioneer rancher in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Derrick have two children: Claire, born August 4, 1912, and Pearl Louise, born January 31, 1915.

William Edward Ballard. There is no influence so powerful in shaping the policies of a community or developing a region as that exerted by a journal that is capably and intelligently edited by a fearless young man of constructive ideas. Because of this influence those who desire to go counter to the policies of such a journal realize they have a hard task before them, and many an unworthy candidate has been defeated and a movement not calculated to be beneficial to the majority has failed of success because of the attitude of the members of the Fourth Estate. In the same measure, of course, unworthy men and measures can be carried to their goal if they are able to subsidize the press, but to the credit of the fraternity, especially in the West, the discreditable ones are in a small minority. Three Forks is fortunate in having in its midst as proprietor and publisher of the live newspaper of the region, the News, William Edward Ballard, a man of high character and unflinching reliability, who, while he supports the policies of his party, also upholds those outside of it in their efforts to bring about reforms, and stands for the best standards of citizenship.

William Edward Ballard was born in Belvidere, Illinois, November 8, 1874, a son of Edward Ballard, the latter of whom was born in England in 1845, and died at Sycamore, Illinois, in 1912. The parents of Edward Ballard came to the United States about 1847, settling at Belvidere, Illinois, where their son Edward was reared and learned the stone cutting trade. In 1882 he moved to Sycamore, where he followed his trade for the remainder of his active life. Early in life he was a democrat, but later became a republican, and after moving to Sycamore was elected city collector. During the war between the states he enlisted in the Union army as a member of the One Hundred and Fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. While living at Belvidere Edward Ballard was married to Mary Markey, who survives him and lives in Jefferson County, Montana. She has taken a homestead, proven it, and now has a nice property thirteen miles north of Three Forks. Mrs. Ballard was born in England in 1846, but was reared at Belvidere, Illinois. She and her husband had the following children: Charles, who is a baker by trade, resides in Illinois; Frank, who has been with the tea and coffee firm of Chase and Sanborn of Chicago for the past fifteen years; Elizabeth, who is librarian of the public library at Belvidere, Illinois; May, who married Frank Millett, an electrican, lives at Sycamore, Illinois; Nellie, who married Max Hersiz, lives thirteen miles northwest of Three Forks on a ranch; Gertrude, who married Irving Fothergill, a clerk in a store at Holcomb, Illinois; Ruth, who married William McCarthy, foreman in L. K. Pence's garage at Bozeman, Montana; and William Edward, whose name heads this review.

William Edward Ballard was reared at Belvidere and Sycamore, Illinois, and attended the public schools of both places. When only fourteen years of age he began to be self-supporting, beginning to learn the printer's trade at Sycamore when sixteen, and completed it in four years. He then joined the International Typographical Union and followed his trade in various places, coming to Montana in 1909, when Three Forks was founded, and developing with this region. Homesteading 160 acres, he proved it and sold it in 1915, and while doing this, in order to make a living, he worked at his trade on the paper he now owns, having bought it in 1913, and is now the sole proprietor, editor and publisher. When he arrived in Montana Mr. Ballard had as his sole earthly possessions $10.65, and today his plant is valued at $12,000, and he not only owns it, but the building in which it is located. The plant is well equipped with modern machinery and appliances, and the News is issued every Thursday and circulates in Gallatin, Jefferson, Broadwater and Madison counties. The plant and office are conveniently located at Nos. 16 and 18 Date Street. Since becoming its owner Mr. Ballard has built up this journal from practically nothing, and it is now recognized as one of the leading weeklies of the state, and one of the strongest democratic organs of its size in the West. Ever since he cast his first vote Mr. Ballard has been a strong democrat, but he has never aspired to office, although he belongs to the county central committee of his party. Although not a member of any religious organization, Mr. Ballard was reared in the faith of the Episcopal Church.

In 1901 Mr. Ballard was married at Beloit, Wisconsin, to Miss Anna Warren, born at Macomb, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Ballard have no children. They are the center of a delightful social circle, and can be relied upon to give an effective support to those measures which are inaugurated to bring about a betterment of existing conditions or a moral uplift.

John Isch. The name of John Isch is well known among the leading farmers of the Flathead country, whither he came many years ago, and through close attention to business and unswerving industry he has met with a large degree of material success. He comes of sturdy Swiss stock, he himself having been born in Switzerland and his family on both sides going far back into the annals of the mountains and valleys of that wonderful little republic. So he has in him many of the elements that always win in the battle of life, no matter where fought out, and while he was fortunate in coming to a rich country where the soil was strong, competition not too fierce and where, as the English poet, Mackay, wrote a century ago, "the humblest may gather the fruits of the soil," if they be willing to put forth a little effort, yet Mr. Isch, no doubt, would have succeeded in establishing a good home in any country or locality where he might have settled.

John Isch was born in 1854, the son of John and Fannie Isch. His parents brought their little family to the United States when the subject was but six months old, their first home here being established in Iowa. In that neighborhood he was reared to manhood and secured a good practical education in the public schools. Subsequently the family moved to the state of Illinois, where both of the parents spent the remainder of their lives and died. The subject, who has devoted his entire active life to agricultural pursuits, acquired considerable farming land in Iowa, but when he finally decided to make his permanent home in Montana he disposed of his Iowa holdings and devoted his entire attention to his home ranch. Progressive and energetic, Mr. Isch was enabled to create a home that would be hard to excell in the way of comfort and convenience. A good business manager, he was successful through the years, enjoying an enviable reputation throughout this section of the country as an enterprising, industrious and far-sighted farmer. After applying himself indefatigably to his farm through the years until 1917, Mr. Isch decided to retire from the active management of the farm and moved to Kalispell, where, at the edge of that attractive little city, he owns a comfortable home, surrounded by thirteen acres of land, and where he expects to spend the rest of his days in the enjoyment of that rest which his years of toil so richly entitle him.

Mr. Isch was married to Wilhelmina Nels, who was born in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, the daughter of Louise and Ernestine (Donvagen) Nels. To Mr. and Mrs. Isch have been born ten children, namely: Josephine, Emma, Alfred, Herman, August, Julius, Lena, Henry, Ella and Minnie. Josephine became the wife of Samuel Streit, and to them were born the following children: Josephine, Emma, Della, John, Helen, Edna, Gladys, Herman and Daisy. The mother of these children died in 1918 of the influenza. Emma became the wife, first, of Frank Will, and they had one daughter, Caroline. After the death of Mr. Will Emma became the wife of Rudolph Streit, of Alabama, and to them were born seven children: Willie, Julius, Minnie, Mary, Margaret, Paul and August, the latter deceased. Herman, who is a successful rancher near Kalispell, married Hattie Jacobson, and they have four children, May, Grace, Mary Louise and Josephine. August, who also operates a ranch in the Flathead Valley, was married to Hilda Jacobson, now deceased, and they had one child, Viva. Julius enlisted in the United States army for service in the recent World war, was first sent to Camp Lewis and then to France, where he spent eighteen months. He took part in many of the notable engagements in which the "doughboys" had a part and was severely wounded in battle. He was finally returned to the United States and honorably discharged. He is married to Emma Bernard. Lena is the wife of Frank Donek, and they have two children, Rozelle and Francis. Henry was married to Anna Jensen, and they have one son, Harry. Ella remains at home with her parents. Minnie became the wife of Gus Wendt and the mother of three children, Vivian, Eva and Wayne.

In his political views Mr. Isch is not bound by party ties, though he sees some good in all parties. But he reserves the right to vote for the men and measures which in his view promise to be of the greatest benefit to the greatest number. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mrs. Isch was reared in the faith of the Lutheran Church, of which she is a faithful member. Mr. Isch has been closely identified with the progress and prosperity which has characterized the Flathead Valley, and a history embracing this section of the state would not be complete without the foregoing reference to his life and the success he has achieved as an earnest, courageous laborer in one of the most important fields of endeavor, agriculture. He is public spirited and generous, and enjoys to an eminent degree the confidence and good will of all who know him.

H. J. Caspers is the leading druggist of his section of Montana, and the only one in the Madison Valley, and his store, located on Main Street, Ennis, is well equipped and extensively patronized. Mr. Caspers comes of a family founded in this country by his grandfather, Thomas Caspers, who born in Germany in 1814, left his native land for the United States during his young manhood, and finding conditions to suit him at Auburn, Nebraska, migrated there and assisted in building up that locality, and there his useful life was terminated by death in 1888. His son, John T. Caspers, was also born in Germany, in 1852, and he was only a baby when his parents came to the United States in that same year, and he was reared at Auburn, Nebraska, and there he died in 1912. All of his life he was engaged in farming, and found that occupation a profitable one. Both as a democrat and a Lutheran he lived up to his beliefs, and was a most excellent man in every respect. His marriage took place at Auburn, when he was united with Sophia Eggers, born in Germany in 1856. She also died at Auburn, passing away in 1894. Her parents were early settlers of Auburn. John T. Caspers and his wife became the parents of the following children: Grace, who married a Mr. Dirks, a farmer, lives at Johnson, Nebraska; Mary, who married John Mientz, a farmer, resides at Beatrice, Nebraska; Maggie, who married George Frerichs, a farmer, resides at Auburn, Nebraska; Thomas, who was a farmer living at Auburn, Nebraska, died at Saint Joseph, Missouri, when thirty-three years of age; H. J., whose name heads this review; John, who is a farmer of Hildreth, Nebraska; Herman, who is a farmer of Athol, Kansas; and Adelia, who married Henry Nordbrock, a farmer of Hildreth, Nebraska.

H. J. Caspers was born at Auburn, Nebraska, July 23, 1883, and grew up in his native town, where he attended the public schools. He then took a course at Midland College, Atchison, Kansas, and after two years left to become a student of the School of Pharmacy at Fremont, Nebraska, from which he was graduated in 1904, with his degree of graduate of pharmacy. For a short period thereafter Mr. Caspers gained a practical experience in his profession, working in a drug store at Dunbar, Nebraska, and then went to Westmoreland, Kansas, and conducted a drug store of his own for two years and two months, when he disposed of it and for the subsequent four months worked in a drug store at Manhattan, Kansas.

In 1907 Mr. Caspers entered upon a new phase by enlisting in the United States navy, and as a member of the medical department was sent to Norfolk, Virginia, for a month, and then to the national capital for four months. He was then assigned to the United States battleship Kentucky, and was with it for two years, during that period taking part in the trip around the world of the fleet sent for that purpose by President Roosevelt. After a month at the Philadelphia Hospital Mr. Caspers spent eight months attached to the Chelsea Hospital at Boston, Massachusetts, and then for a short period was at a naval sanitarium at Las Animas, Colorado, where he acted as hospital steward. He was mustered out of the service in July, 1911, having been broadened by his various experiences and opportunities for travel. After leaving the service Mr. Caspers conducted a drug store at Johnson, Nebraska, for nine months, and then for three months operated a bakery at Auburn, Nebraska. For the subsequent three months he was employed in Cline's drug store of Auburn, and then on July 1, 1913, came to Dillon, Montana, remaining in that city for five months, during that time working in a drug store. For a month he was at Livingston, Montana, and for a year at Great Falls, Montana. During all of this time he was looking for an opening that suited him, and at last found one to his liking, and on November 1, 1914, established his present business at Ennis, where he has built up a connection so important that competitors are discouraged and do not try to enter his territory. His modern residence is also located on Main Street, and he owns a ranch of 160 acres of irrigated land one mile southwest of Ennis. In his political views Mr. Caspers is independent. Having been brought up in the faith of the Lutheran Church he early connected himself with that denomination. He belongs to Madison Lodge No. 87, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Jeffers, Montana, of which he is master. In addition to all his other interest Mr. Caspers is a director of the Westside Canal Company.

On January 8, 1912, Mr. Caspers was married at Johnson, Nebraska, to Miss Hattie B. Kiel, a daughter of Ferdinand and Ella (Johnson) Kiel. Ferdinand Kiel was a ranchman of the vicinity of Johnson, Nebraska, but is now deceased, although his widow survives him and lives at Johnson. Mr. and Mrs. Caspers have one daughter, Wana Donna, who was born September 10, 1912. There are few men who have had such a varied experience as Mr. Caspers, and he shows in his business and social life the benefits of it. Having viewed men and affairs from so many standpoints, he is able to judge fairly and to understand the requirements of his patrons, and in meeting his demands he has gained control of the trade in his neighborhood. Having decided upon Ennis as his permanent home, he is a great booster for the place, seeing in it splendid possibilities, and is willing and able to forward all movements looking toward a development of these natural advantages.

PETER M. PETERSON, who is manager for the Montana Lumber Company at Shawmut, is also a Montana homesteader, and has had a varied business career, having lived for a number of years in Iowa and in Texas.

He was born at Corning, Adams County, Iowa, August 7, 1880. His father, Jacob, spelled the family name according to the Danish custom, Petersen. He was born at Aalborg, Denmark, March 27, 1839, grew up in his native country and in 1866, at the age of twenty-seven came to the United States. He worked his way through Michigan, went to Omaha, Nebraska, was in the service of the street car company for a time, and about 1878 moved to Corning, Iowa. He became a prosperous farmer in Adams County, Iowa, all his children were born in that state, and since 1910 he has lived a retired life at Corning, being now past eighty years of age. He is a democrat and a member of the Lutheran Church. Jacob Petersen married Lena Larsen, who was born on Jutland Island, Denmark, in 1857. Peter is the oldest of their children; Andrew is a farmer at Forestburg, South Dakota; Anna is the wife of L. O. Jensen, an electrician with the Street Railway Company at Omaha, Nebraska; Iloe is the wife of L. A. Jensen, also an electrician with the Street Railway Company at Omaha; James B. is a resident of Corning; Mary is the wife of Leo Shinn, a druggist at Corning; and Harry W., who was born at Corning January 15, 1899, is a graduate of the Corning High School and is now assisting his brother Peter at Shawmut.

Peter M. Peterson attended the rural schools of his native Iowa county and lived on his father's farm there to the age of twenty-one. After that he remained in Iowa, in Adams County, as an independent farmer three years, and three years as a blacksmith. In 1906 he removed to the Texas Panhandle, and conducted a store at Tulia in Swisher County three years, and for another three years was manager of a business at Happy, Texas. Going to Omaha in 1912, Mr. Peterson was motorman with the Omaha Street Railway Company until the latter part of February, 1915, and on March 1 of that year arrived at Grass Range, Montana. He filed on a homestead of 160 acres and acquired by purchase 160 acres more. He still owns this half section, now a well developed farm located thirteen miles north of Grass Range. Mr. Peterson had his home on his claim for eighteen months, and while there was appointed deputy sheriff of Fergus County.

He has been in the service of the Montana Lumber Company since December 15, 1917, beginning as yardman at Grass Range. May 23, 1918, the company transferred him to Shawmut as manager of the local yards, which are on First Street, near the Chicago and Milwaukee Railway tracks.

Mr. Peterson is a citizen always ready to do his part in community affairs. He is treasurer of the Shawmut Chamber of Commerce, and has acquired considerable local real estate, including a modern home. He is a democrat, a member of the Lutheran Church, and is affiliated with Grass Range Lodge of Odd Fellows and also with the Encampment of the same order.

Bert Hofer, one of the substantial citizens of Harrison, is engaged in a hardware and furniture business, which he has developed into paying proportions and he is a man who stands well in his community. He was born at Linc, Austria, January 18, 1854 a son of Joseph and Barbara (Schneider) Hofer. Joseph Hofer was also born at Linc, Austria, in 1801, and died at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, in 1900, at the extreme old age of ninety-nine years, nine months and seven days. After learning the profession of architecture in his native land, and also the business of building and contracting, he came to the United States in 1869, and after two years spent at Baltimore, Maryland, came west to Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, where he engaged in farming for the remainder of his active life. After becoming naturalized he espoused the principles of the democratic party. All his life he was a consistent member of the Roman Catholic Church. His wife, who was born in Austria in 1798, died at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, in 1882. Their children were as follows: Theressa, who is deceased; Mary, who is married, lives at Bloomer, Wisconsin, her husband being the proprietor of a hotel; Louisa, who married Joseph Eder, a farmer, resides at Chippewa Falls; Elnora, who is married, lives at Chippewa Falls, her husband being a cigar maker of that city; and Bert, who is the youngest of the family.

Bert Hofer attended the public schools of Austria, and after coming to the United States with his father in 1869, was engaged in general labor at Baltimore, Maryland, but when he located at Chippewa Falls in 1871 he began learning the tinner's trade, and followed it there and at Helena, Montana, to which city he moved in 1880, being with the firm of Clark, Conrad and Curtain in the latter place. In 1882 he went to Bozeman and remained in that city from 1882 to 1888, and from the latter year until 1892 he was at Great Falls, both in Montana. Moving then to Neihart, Montana, he spent a year there, leaving it for Choteau, Montana, where for four years he conducted a business of his own, and in 1897 transferred his interests to Pony, Montana, establishing himself in a hardware business and tin shop, which he conducted until 1915, when the Town of Harrison offered still better opportunities, and he moved his stock to this community, adding furniture to his lines of business. Mr. Hofer owns his store, which is stocked with a fine assortment of high grade furniture and hardware, and he conducts his business upon such principles and according to methods which win for him the goodwill of his customers and the approval of his community. The business is conveniently located on Main Street, and Mr. Hofer has made his establishment one of the most attractive in the place. He also owns his modern residence on Main Street. Politically he is a republican, and has always taken a deep interest in civic matters, while at Pony serving as a member of the City Council. His fraternal connections are with Choteau Camp, Woodmen of the World.

In 1886 Mr. Hofer was married at Bozeman to Anna Young, a daughter of Captain Young, now deceased, who was a veteran of the Civil war and a pioneer of Harrison, where he conducted a blacksmith shop and was engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Hofer became the parents of the following children: Walter D., who is on the ranch of W. H. Young, of Madison County, Montana; and Bert, who is now at home with his parents. During the great war he enlisted for service and was sent to New York, and then to the aviation schools of St. Paul, Minnesota, Dayton, Ohio, and Marshfield, California, and has been graduated in aviation by the government. As he is now only nineteen years of age, his youth prevented his being sent overseas.

Horace Sampson. To the commercial development of Lincoln County Horace Sampson has supplied a vital element, and while a resident of the county only eight years he has built up one of the most widely patronized stores in the county, the Sampson Mercantile Company at Eureka.

Mr. Sampson was born in Oregon, a son of Ephraim and Eunice Sampson. He married Miss Cora Harris, a native of Darlington, Wisconsin, and daughter of William and Caroline (Sleep) Harris.

In 1912 Mr. Sampson came to Eureka and bought the general store of A. Y. Lindsey. Subsequently he moved the store down the street, remodeled it, and has been extending his facilities every year, until his trade reaches out over a wide radius of country, and he carries a stock to supply all the needs of general merchandise.

Mr. and Mrs. Sampson have one son, Harland H. Sampson, who graduated from the Eureka High School and acquired a business training to fit him for association with his father, in the Northwestern Business College at Spokane. During the World war he volunteered, was mustered in at Libby, Montana, was trained at Camp Dodge, and while there contracted the influenza and pneumonia. He spent some time in a hospital at Camp Lewis and was honorably discharged. At Camp Dodge he was with the One Hundred and Sixty-third Depot Brigade, Tenth Battalion, Company 39, and subsequently was transferred to the medical corps.

Mr. Sampson and his son both joined the Masonic Lodge at the same time, and all the family are members of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Sampson is also affiliated with the Rebekahs and Maccabees. They are republicans in their political sympathies, and Mrs. Sampson is an ardent prohibitionist and a member of the Methodist Church. They are people of Lincoln County who can always be depended upon to support every movement for general good. Harland Sampson married Miss Cecil Lundin, a native of Iowa. She and her husband graduated from the same class in the Eureka High School.

O. P. J. Mosby. For thirty years a resident of Northern Montana, O. P. J. Mosby came to the state while in the service of the Great Northern Railroad, but for a number of years past has been the well known and popular proprietor of the Montana Hotel at Eureka.

Mr. Mosby was born in Denmark, a son of Jens Peterson Mosby. He came to this country in early life and at St. Paul, Minnesota, married Marie Johnson, also a native of Denmark, daughter of Johan Anderson and Cecelia Nelson.

Mr. Mosby came to Montana in 1890, and carried mail during the construction of the Great Northern Railroad, from Harve to Seattle, on horseback. In Henry Good.

1891, he located in Kalispell and later moved to Eureka, where they are now located.

Mr. and Mrs. Mosby became the parents of six children: Arthur, Harold, Norman, Ellsworth, Cecelia and Victoria. Arthur, an electrician at Kalispell, married Edna Conlin. Harold is married and lives at Seattle. Norman married Coralie Divers and is also an electrician at Kalispell. He served as a corporal in the Marines in California. Ellsworth is a student of the State University of Montana at Missoula and has a most honorable military record. He enlisted in the Second Montana National Guard, August 11, 1910, was promoted corporal September 10, 1911, promoted sergeant September 22, 1912, commissioned second lieutenant March 10, 1914, and commissioned a first lieutenant September 19, 1914. He saw service in the Butte riots from August to October, 1914. From June 29, 1916, to November 8, 1916, he was in service on the Mexican Border, and was called into service March 26, 1917, sent overseas December 15, 1917, was wounded at St. Mihiel September 13, 1918, received the Croix de Guerre in August, 1918, and was honorably discharged at New York, January 12, 1919. He returned to the University of Montana to finish his education. The daughter Cecelia was educated in the Kalispell High School and in a business college and is now a stenographer in the office of H. G. Pomeroy, a Eureka attorney. Victoria is now in her second year at the State University at Missoula.

Mr. and Mrs. Mosby attend the Episcopal Church, of which their children are members. Politically they are republicans, and Mrs. Mosby is a member of the Maccabees, Arthur is an Elk and Ellsworth is a member of college fraternities. Mr. and Mrs. Mosby are ideal landlords, and they have given their hotel a homelike atmosphere greatly appreciated by the traveling public.

HENRY GOOD. Deeds are thoughts crystallized, and according to their brilliancy do we judge the worth of a man to the country which produced him, and in his works we expect to find the true index to his character. A worthy representative of that type of American business man who may properly be termed "progressive," that character which promotes public good in advancing individual prosperity and conserving popular interests, is Henry Good, the well known farmer, real estate owner and logging contractor of Kalispell, Flathead County. He has been prominently identified with the business and other interests of his locality for many years, and while his varied affairs have brought him success they have also advanced the general welfare.

Henry Good was born in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, on June 15, 1877, and is the son of Hugh G. and Mary M. (Loughry) Good. When he was seven years old the family came to Montana, locating at Butte, where they lived until 1886. In that year Mr. Good's father made the trip from Butte to the Flathead Valley by covered wagon, that being several years prior to the founding of Kalispell, and he established his home about two miles southwest from where that city now stands. There he preempted 160 acres, remaining there three years and then homesteading 160 acres twelve miles north of Kalispell. In 1898 Henry Good bought 160 acres ten miles north of Kalispell, where he at once went to work to develop a farm and by indefatigable and persistent efforts he has succeeded to the extent that today his ranch home is considered one of the finest and most attractive in all that part of the country. The residence is not only attractive, but is provided with all the conveniences and comforts of a city home. The barns and other farm buildings are substantial in character and convenient in arrangement, the general appearance of the place indicating the owner to be a man of excellent taste and good judgment. His estate comprises 510 acres of as fine land as can be found in the Flathead country. In addition to his ranch Mr. Good has for many years been engaged in logging contracting, which occupies a fair share of his time and attention, and in which also he has been very successful, he having cut and delivered over 26,000,000 feet in 1919. He also owns other farm lands and is numbered among the prosperous and well-to-do men of his locality.

Mr. Good was married to Ada Bowdish, who was born in Chattanooga, Tennessee, and they have become the parents of two children, Mark Henry and Ruth Ada. The son, after graduating from the high school at Columbia Falls, took a business course, and is now assisting his father in the latter's office at Kalispell. Ruth Ada is a student in the Central School at Kalispell. On November 11, 1918, the death angel invaded the home of the subject and took away the wife and mother. She was possessed of those qualities of character which had endeared her to a large circle of friends. During the dark days of the recent World war she had been especially active in Red Cross work, and in many other ways had evinced a generous and self-sacrificing spirit. On March 4, 1920, Mr. Good was married to Miss Alice E. Ketchum, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Eugene and Emeline E. (Jones) Ketchum. Mrs. Good is a graduate of the Chicago University of Music and the Minneapolis College of Music and Art, and she taught and supervised the teaching of music three years in the graded schools and two years in the high school of Kalispell.

Politically Mr. Good gives his support to the democratic party and has taken an active part in promoting its success. He was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, in which position the voters of the county retained him six years, and during four years of that time he served as chairman of the board. Religiously Mr. Good is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a generous supporter. He is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in which he has attained to the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, and he also belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Good has taken a material and practical interest in the general affairs of the community and contributed in a definite way to the promotion of many enterprises for the public good. He is a member of the board of directors of the First National Bank of Kalispell; a director in the Flathead County Pure-bred Live Stock Association; president of the Stillwater Land Company, which owns 15,000 acres of land; president of the Whitefish Land Company, which is engaged in developing the country around Whitefish; president of the Flathead County Fair Commission, under appointment by the board of county commissioners; president of the Flathead and Lincoln Counties Motor Club. Mr. Good is an enthusiastic advocate of good roads and has probably done more to stimulate and encourage the improvement of the public highways of this section of the state than any other man or agency. He has spared neither his time nor means in his efforts to arouse an active interest in this most important subject, and has the satisfaction of knowing that his work has not been fruitless, great strides having been made in the last decade in the improvement of roads. In Mr. Good's judgment the most important road project in the West today is the road through Glacier Park connecting West and East Montana, and he is devoting a great deal of energy in that direction, four miles being completed east of Belton. Mr. Good's efforts have not gone without recognition, and today no man in the Flathead country is held in higher esteem generally than he. Genial but unassuming in disposition, he enjoys a well-deserved popularity, his friends being in number as his acquaintances.

L. E. McGee, who for a number of years past has been superintendent of the P. L. Howe Lumber Mills of Eureka, is also responsible for the development of Eureka's chief source of pure milk and cream. His enterprise has supplied a long felt need, and such has been his success and the appreciation of his patronage that he is now taking active steps to enlarge his industry.

Mr. McGee's dairy ranch is in Tobacco Valley, where he owns eighty acres and leases 400 acres besides. He now has a twenty cow dairy, and keeps a delivery truck on the ranch, making daily trips to Eureka with milk and cream. Everything is conducted systematically and with a strict regard for sanitary principles, and he has more business than his present equipment can supply.

Mr. McGee has been in the lumber industry for forty years and is an expert in every phase of saw milling and lumber manufacture. He was born in Ontario, Canada, in 1859, son of Emery and Elizabeth (Hutt) McGee. Mr. McGee settled at Eureka in 1910, and for the decade past has had an active part in converting the timber resources of this region into finished product.

At Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, he married Julia Burke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Burke. To their marriage were born twelve sons and one daughter, and nine sons are still living: Hubert, William, Elmer, John, Leo, George, Frank, Harry and Fred. The children were well educated in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and most of the sons have been trained in the same vocation as their father. Fred married Miss Marvel Bottger and has a son, Carrel. Elmer, a sawyer with the Eureka Lumber Mills, married Miss Ida Bothum and has a son, Lewis James. William is a foreman in a garage at Minneapolis. Leo is a filer connected with the Howe Lumber Mill. He married Miss Nellie Carleson and has a son, Eugene. Frank, also a filer with the company, married Miss Jeanette Audett and has a son, Fredrich R. George, a sawyer in the mills, married Miss Thelma Salvege. John is night foreman of the company. Harry is a carriage setter, and Hubert is a setter in another mill.

Mr. McGee is a democrat but generally votes for the man rather than the party. He is a member of the Catholic Church at Eureka. His son William was in the service of the government three years, and was on the Texas and Mexican border.

William S. Mills. For forty years William S. Mills has known the varied experiences of the pioneer in the Montana country, and only recently he relieved himself of the heavier responsibilities of ranch management and retired to a comfortable home in the little City of Eureka.

Mr. Mills was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, at New Cumberland, on June 25, 1855, one of the twelve children of Jonathan and Sarah (Downing) Mills. As a boy he attended district school in his native county and afterward a college at Clay City, Illinois. In 1876 he was fortunately married to Miss Theora C. Downing, also a native of New Cumberland, born on August 1, 1857, a daughter of Hugh and Margaretta (Ryan) Downing. For a time after their marriage they lived on the old homestead in Ohio, and in 1881 Mr. Mills started for the West, going to Colorado, and two years later was joined by Mrs. Mills in Wyoming. In the fall of that year they came to Montana and settled in the wild Indian country at Powderville, between Miles City and Deadwood. Later they moved to Ekalaka, and in 1895 came to the Flathead country. In those years before railroads were built they kept a roadhouse on the Kootenai River, supplying the needs of the passengers on the steamboats. Later they bought a ranch across the Canadian line of 352 acres and engaged in the stock business and ranching. Mr. Mills paid $3 an acre for his land, and after improving it sold some for $55 an acre and the rest for $160 an acre. He helped reclaim the country, and through a long period of good and bad years saw his affairs steadily prosper.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mills, Lily A., Eva, Anna and Jud. They were educated in the schools of Tobacco Plains. Lily became the wife of Joe Tetrault, of Eureka, and they have five children, named Verna, Wilfred, Theora, Alice and Helen. Eva is the wife of F. R. Baney, present sheriff of Lincoln County, and has a son, Force. Anna was married to Fred Rock and has a daughter, Evalyn. Jud, who married Viola Brock, has three children, Gladys Lucile and twin sons, Dias Dean and Dale Eugene.

In 1919 Mr. and Mrs. Mills, having sold their ranch property, moved to Eureka and bought their present home in the eastern part of the village. Mr. Mills is a republican, and has always done his share in supporting community enterprises. For two years after coming to Montana, Mr. and Mrs. Mills lived in a hut and felt a great deal of pride when they secured the better accommodations of a log cabin, though they used gunny sacks for windows and doors. For years Indians were their neighbors and visitors. At one time thirty-five Indians camped at their cabin, among them being the famous Indian warrior Sitting Bull and his wife. Mr. Mills had a small grindstone, and the Indians employed him all day sharpening their hunting knives. When Mrs. Mills left her home in the East her mother gave her two bright red tablecloths. The colors attracted the eyes of Sitting Bull, and he coaxed her for one. She was loath to part with it but finally let him have it, and he was so pleased he threw down a $10 gold piece on the table and walked proudly away with the cloth, which he used for a shawl. At that time a fine baby girl was in their home, and Sitting Bull also admired and coveted the child and offered Mrs. Mills her choice of his fine ponies for the baby, saying she could visit her when she became eighteen years of age. Mrs. Mills was in great dread lest the Indians kidnap the baby. In the early years Mr. Mills had to freight all his provisions over the trail for seventy-six miles from Kalispell.

Monroe P. Shenefelt. Retired from the more strenuous activities of former years in the environment of a delightful town home in Eureka, Monroe P. Shenefelt is able to look back upon a long vista of years and experience, the most profitable and pleasant of which have been those spent in Montana, which state regards him as a pioneer.

Mr. Shenefelt was born in Carroll County, Illinois, May 11, 1861, son of Isaac and Catherine (Bolinger) Shenefelt. He was the fifth among their thirteen children. In the spring of 1865, when he was four years of age, his parents left Illinois in a covered wagon and made a long journey across country to Kansas. While en route the news of Lincoln's assassination was given them. They became pioneer homesteaders in Bourbon County in Southeastern Kansas, and in that locality Monroe P. spent his boyhood days and acquired his early educational advantages. Subsequently his father traded his Kansas farm for one over the line in Missouri, and Monroe lived there four years.

About the time he reached manhood he returned to his birthplace in Illinois, where he met and afterward married Laura Scott, who was born in the same neighborhood, a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Neikirk) Scott. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Shenefelt settled down to the industrious routine of an Illinois farm, and for ten years was thus engaged. In the spring of 1892, having sold their Illinois properties, they started for Montana in March, and in the course of the same year settled in the Flathead Valley, five miles south of Columbia Falls, where Mr. Shenefelt purchased a ranch. During the panic of 1893-94 they decided to move to the upper end of what was still Flathead County, where Mr. Shenefelt filed on 160 acres in what is now Lincoln County. He proved up and improved the land, bought other land adjoining, and was accompanied by three of his old neighbors when he located on the homestead. Mr. Shenefelt was the first man in that locality to make a persistent trial and convincing demonstration of the dry farming plan, which others regarded as impractical. He proved the contrary, raised a crop of fine grain, and hauled the first winter wheat over the trail from the Flathead Valley to Tobacco Valley.

Of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Shenefelt one died in infancy. Those still living are Orville P., Olive M., Edith May and Harriet Evelyn. They were all carefully educated. Orville was a student in the Montana Wesleyan University at Helena, and later studied theology in the Garrett Biblical School at Evanston, Illinois, and while there filled regular appointments as a minister. Later he was for four years pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Hingham, and for the past four years has been pastor at Malta, Montana. He is a forceful and earnest worker and able minister. He married Miss Katie Jolly, of Ekalaka, Montana, and they have a family of six children, named Aubrey, Roy, Esther, Beulah, Ruth and Orville. Mr. and Mrs. Shenefelt's daughter, Olive M., is the wife of George Dorsey, of Greenfield, Iowa, and they now live at Corona, south of Los Angeles, California. Their two children are Loraine and Iola. The other two daughters are still at home with their parents. Edith graduated from the Lincoln County High School at Eureka with the class of 1918, was also a student in the Wesleyan College of Helena, and is now a stenographer in the real estate office of C. E. Davis of Eureka.

Mr. Shenefelt in politics has been interested in the man and the policy rather than the party. He served on the school board, has been a worker for good schools and good instruction, and was chairman of the board of commissioners for three years of the irrigation project at Eureka known as the Glen Lake Irrigation District. Mrs. Shenefelt and her daughters are active in the Eureka Methodist Church, and Mrs. Shenefelt spent much of her time in Red Cross work during the World war. The family left their ranch in 1915 and moved to Eureka, where they erected one of the very attractive and modern homes. Mr. and Mrs. Shenefelt have seen many changes in this section of Montana during the past quarter of a century. When they came there were no railroads near them, and Mr. Shenefelt freighted goods in and out of the valley. A monument to his industry in the country is one of the fine homes in Tobacco Valley and some splendid ranch buildings. He and Mr. Peltier frequently hauled freight from the Flathead Valley and would camp at night on the ground, sleeping on two feet of snow with the thermometer thirty degrees below zero. In the morning they would prepare their breakfast by cutting their bread and meat with an axe. Notwithstanding this exposure they declared they never felt better than in those days. Mr. Shenefelt on coming into this country drove a covered wagon, and made his first stop under the widespreading branches of a large pine tree. A long canvas was stretched around some trees, and within was set up the stove, this giving a tent home. Here their first friendly neighbors visited them. Two visitors who came were Joseph Peltier and Miss Lotta Adams, both of whom had homesteads on the Kootenai River. Later Miss Adams became Mrs. Peltier, and the friendship between the Peltier and Shenefelt families cemented in pioneer days has continued to the present.

Boyd Culver is a prominent Montana business man, active head of the C. C. Bradley Company of Eureka, a mercantile house that has grown steadily in influence and trade connections under his management.

Mr. Culver was born in Wyandot County, Ohio, in 1874, a son of James C. and Letitia (Lamor) Culver. He had a thorough education, beginning in public schools and completed at the Ohio Northern University at Ada. After three years of work as a teacher in his home county he came to Montana in 1897, locating at Kalispell, where he was connected with the McIntosh Hardware Company until 1907.

While in Kalispell Mr. Culver married Mrs. Lucy M. Crosby, daughter of Platt Mack of Iowa. Her death occurred in Eureka in 1915. In the meantime Mr. Culver had become shipping and receiving clerk in the McIntosh store, and in 1907 was sent to Eureka as manager of the branch establishment of the McIntosh hardware business. In 1909 the ownership of this store changed and another change was made in 1912, but Mr. Culver was continued as manager. In 1914 he took the management of the Lindsey Mercantile Company of Eureka.

In 1917 Mr. Culver married Mrs. E. M. Bradley, widow of C. C. Bradley. Since then he has been active head of the C. C. Bradley Company. As proof of the general confidence the public has in him he was elected to the office of justice of the peace and has also served on the school board and as mayor and alderman of Eureka, all public duties having been discharged by him in a capable manner and to the interests of the people. In 1919 his name was put on the republican ticket running against one of the strongest men in the county. When the vote was counted there was a tie, a second count was made, and only in the final recount was an error discovered that resulted in his opponent getting the office.

Mrs. Culver has two children by her former husband, Carlin Keith Bradley and Muriel Maude Bradley. Keith is a senior in the Lincoln County High School and Muriel is in the seventh grade in the Eureka school. Mr. and Mrs. Culver and their children are members of the Baptist Church and for a number of years have taken a prominent part in its affairs. Both are teachers in the Baptist Sunday School and Mr. Culver is church treasurer and head of the choir. Mrs. Culver is a member of the Eastern Star and Rebekahs, and a member of the school board; and he is a Mason and Eastern Star, while in politics he has taken an active part in several county conventions. Mrs. Culver was a very active and inspiring worker at the time of the World war and served as chairman of the Lincoln County Eastside Red Cross. During the influenza epidemic, while they enjoyed comparative freedom from the disease, they taxed their resources to the utmost in caring for the stricken members of their community, and practically turned their house into a Red Cross kitchen, Mrs. Culver overseeing the work of preparing good food and Mr. Culver distributing it in his car to the homes of the sick. That was a service which will not soon be forgotten by the people of Eureka.

Mrs. Culver was born in Iowa, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Carlin of Sioux City, Iowa. She was liberally educated and was a successful teacher in the State of Washington. She was the only woman ever elected secretary of the Baptist State Convention of Montana. For a number of years she has been president of the Baptist Ladies Aid Society.

J. A. Samson. Although he is now retired, J. A. Samson has been very active in Whitefish and has done much to develop the place as a real estate operator. He is a man of wide experience and ample means, and is entitled to the comforts he is now enjoying. The birth of Mr. Samson occurred in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, he being a son of James and Olive (Churchill) Samson. He attended the public schools of his home state until he was nineteen years old, at that time going west as far as Minnesota, where he spent five years. He then returned to Pennsylvania and was married to Miss Belle Lyman, after which he went to New York state and for eight years was engaged in lumbering, leaving that state for West Virginia, and there being engaged in business as a lumber merchant. After two years there he went to Kentucky and for eight years was engaged in buying and shipping railroad timber, a portion of the time being located at Jackson and the remainder at Winchester. In his transactions he was brought into contact with mountaineers who later became noted in criminal history, among them being the Hardys. In 1907 he came to Montana, and making Whitefish his headquarters embarked in the business of buying railroad ties.

Mrs. Samson dying, he took her body back to Pennsylvania for burial. Their two children had also died, and upon his return to Whitefish he felt his loneliness very keenly. In the meanwhile he had branched out into a real estate business, specializing in the erection of modest cottages for newly married people, to whom he would sell upon reasonable terms. In one of his business transactions he met a Mrs. Duncan and interested her in a project he had in mind, the erection of a first-class apartment. After due consideration Mrs. Duncan decided to join him in its construction, and the association then begun resulted in the marriage of the widow and widower. Mrs. Samson was born on Prince Edward Island, a daughter of George and Sophia (Mutch) Mason. She came to Montana in January, 1883, locating at Glendive, she became the wife of Dr. A. R. Duncan on Prince Edward Island, but their children were born in Glendive, Montana. She came to Whitefish in 1905, when the Divisional terminal of the Great Northern Railroad was changed from Kalispell to Whitefish, and erected and conducted the only hotel in the place that was heated by a furnace. At that time it was considered a marvel of comfort and luxury and is now conducted under the name of the Lindell Hotel. Under Mrs. Duncan's charge this hotel was well patronized and she became well known all over this section.

At the time of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Samson, the following was published in the Whitefish Pilot.

"Duncan-Samson Nuptials. Wedding bells were ringing on Wednesday eve, November 30, but rang so softly and quietly but few in town knew or even heard them jingle, though they had been listening intently for some time.

"However, a wedding had been expected to take place in the near future, involving two well known Whitefish people, namely J. A. Samson and Mrs. J. Duncan, but the exact date was not known, and although the representatives of the Pilot were as alert as a Hawkshaw sleuth they were foiled in their attempt to secure a scoop on the expected event.

"The marriage was a quiet affair and took place at their new apartments in the Duncan-Samson Building, Rev. J. W. Gaston officiating, with Mrs. J. W. Goodell and Miss Mary Gaston as witnesses.

"After stealing a march on their most intimate friends they confessed to the soft impeachment the next day after the knot was tied. Mrs. Samson, nee Mrs. Duncan, is well known in this community as a capable and successful business woman. By her energy and business acumen she has acquired a small fortune in a few years, and has shown her faith in Whitefish by joining forces with her partner there in a building that would be a credit to any metropolitan city. It is not saying too much to add that this building has added real values to every bit of property in Whitefish.

"Mr. Samson is an enterprising man whose money is helping to build up the town, adding to the place not only substantial but well constructed and handsome buildings. He has shown his faith by his liberal investments of money here. Of our honored and useful citizens they take a high place in the ranks.

"It was not generally known that the apartments they now occupy were intended all along for their present use. With an up-to-date and artistic home, well merited, they enter upon life's golden days, which their numerous friends hope will be many and happy ones. We might add that as a wedding present Mr. Samson was handed a membership in the Town Council."

By her first marriage Mrs. Samson had the following children: Stella, who married Charles Malloy of Spokane, Washington, has a daughter Catherine, who is married and has a daughter, Dorothy Goodell; and Gladys, who is Mrs. Scott of Great Falls, Montana, has two sons, George and Jack. Fraternally Mr. Samson is a Mason. He belongs to the Seventh Day Advent Christian Church. In politics he is a strong republican, and has cast his vote for presidential candidates in five different states of the Union. In addition to being a member of the council of Whitefish, he has been on its School Board, and was instrumental in raising the standard of the schools very materially. He is one of the directors of the First National Bank, which is now housed in a beautiful brick building recently erected. Both Mr. and Mrs. Samson are fine people, big of heart and action, who have hosts of friends not only at Whitefish but all over this country, and they deserve the confidence reposed in them, for they have won it themselves.

Marius Anderson was one of the Danish settlers in that part of the Yellowstone Valley included in Richland County at the beginning of the present century. For nearly twenty years he went through all the experiences of pioneering, living simply, with rude comforts, working hard, and rather rapidly expanding his holdings and increasing his prosperity as a farmer and stockman.

Mr. Anderson was born in the City of Odense on the Island of Fyn, Denmark, March 12, 1879. His father, Christof Anderson, was a baker and a brother of Peter Anderson, founder of the Danish colony of the Lower Yellowstone Valley. Christof and

J. A. Samson Jemima L. Samson

Sophie Anderson had only one child, Marius. The latter learned his father's trade, acquired a good education, and at the age of nineteen left his trade to enter the army. This was compulsory military service, and for two years he spent most of his time in training and as a resident of the barracks at Odense, serving as a private. He left the army a poor man, his little capital of a few hundred crowns saved from work at his trade having been used to maintain himself while a soldier, and he also spent his meager wage of four and a half dollars a month paid by the Government. The soldier of Denmark at that time had to provide his own shoes, underwear, board, polishing powder for his gun and buttons, the Government providing only uniform and gun. The service in the army therefore was no advantage to a young man who intended to abandon the country and make his future home elsewhere.

After his military training Mr. Anderson resumed work at his trade for a few months. About that time his uncle Peter returned home on a visit from Montana, and had much to say of the opportunities for industrious young men in the United States. It was to realize the vivid pictures formed in his mind by listening to his uncle that caused Marius Anderson after deliberation with his young wife and other members of the family to start for the New World. They sold their little business, and secured enough money to pay their fare across. Peter Anderson had assured them that if they could do that the rest would take care of itself, that the country in the northwest would give them a living and something to spare. The little company sailed from Liverpool, England, on the liner Saxonia for New York, and arrived at Fort Buford February 9, 1901. That was midwinter and the climate was very different from that of Denmark, so that Mr. Anderson and his family suffered from insufficient clothing. His uncle supplied him with a few dollars to provide extra clothing, and with the passing of winter and the appearance of spring Mr. Anderson went to work for his uncle as a farm hand at $30 a month. Horses and cattle were cheap, and he bought a couple of old horses as equipment for improving his homestead. He had exercised his right as a homesteader a few months after coming to the country. His location was a mile east of the home of his uncle. For a number of years he raised some good crops of grain, though the abundance of yield was offset by the difficulties of marketing. It required a four days' journey to take a load of grain to Glendive, the nearest market point, sixty miles away, and when the grain was sold it was the usual custom to receive pay in trade instead of cash. A better way of disposing of his grain crops Mr. Anderson found to trade his oats and wheat for livestock, and thus he acquired a nucleus of stock and was soon making progress rapidly.

The Anderson homestead was equipped with a two-room log house roofed over with boards and dirt. It was a rude shelter, though the home was one of contentment and good cheer for the five years the family occupied it. In that time they accumulated some capital and bought a quarter section of land near Sidney, where Mr. Anderson put some building improvements, including a home that cost $3,000 and equipped with many comforts such as they had not known before. He built a good shelter for horses. He had a profitable experience at his new location both as a farmer and grain raiser. He sold his place at a good advance and moved to the farm he still owns, six miles north of Sidney. This land likewise he took at the "grassroots," and on the homesite erected a substantial house of nine rooms. He also has a basement barn 40 by 60 feet, with mow capacity for 105 tons, has a granary of 3,000 bushels capacity, and two machinery sheds. These buildings, together with other features, constitute one of the best improved farms of the valley. He has 444 acres, most of it under the irrigation ditch. By the close of 1919 he had put 250 acres under cultivation along the Sidney-Fairview road. The direct source of his profits on this farm has been handling horses and cattle. The Anderson family occupied the farm in 1911, and in 1919 he sold out and for the better health of his wife took up his residence in the mountain country of Montana, locating at Kalispell in the spring of 1920.

As a prosperous farmer Mr. Anderson has been interested in a number of enterprises in Richland County. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers National Bank of Sidney and served as vice president until he sold his stock. Later he was one of the organizers of the Sidney National Bank, and served as a director until 1919. He bought an interest in the Princess and Orpheum moving picture theaters in Kalispell, and the same interests are now building in Kalispell a fine new picture house at a cost of $60,000, which will be the most magnificent in Northern Montana. Mr. Anderson took out citizenship papers as soon as he could, acquired full rights in 1907, and has been a republican since casting his first presidential vote in 1908. He and his family were brought up as Lutherans and are attached to the institutions of that church and he has given generously to the erection of two Lutheran churches in his part of the Yellowstone Valley.

On the Island of Fyn, where he was born, Mr. Anderson, in September, 1900, married Annie Nelson, daughter of Chris Nelson. Their family consists of five children: Carl E., Sophus, Melvin, Carrie and Ella. Carl is a salesman with the Yellowstone Mercantile Company of Sidney, while Sophus is a practical young farmer.

C. D. O'Neil. To an important degree the city of Kalispell depends for its lumber and building supplies upon the enterprise and resources of the O'Neil Lumber Co., of which C. D. and C. I. O'Neil, brothers, are proprietors. The O'Neils have for many years been factors in the life of the city and have done much to improve its commercial and civic wealth.

C. D. O'Neil was born in Osborne County, Kansas, a son of D. C. and Belle L. (Frear) O'Neil. His father, DeWitt Clinton O'Neil, was a Union soldier. While living in New York he enlisted in the Tenth New York Heavy Artillery, serving as a sergeant. He was sent home on account of illness, later going to Michigan, and recovering his health volunteered a second time, with the Sixteenth Michigan Regiment, and altogether served three years.

C. D. O'Neil was educated in the public schools of Missouri and at the age of seventeen came to Montana to join his brother C. I. O'Neil, who at that time was working at Belt. Subsequently the brothers moved to Flathead County, locating at Kalispell, where they bought a lumber business. Since then they have energetically developed their business and their facilities, and in 1902 incorporated the O'Neil Lumber Co. This is one of the largest organizations of its kind in Northern Montana. Besides extensive yards they operate a planing mill, sash, window and door factory and box factory, and are owners of 5,000 acres of timber land adjacent to Kalispell. From this timber their mills manufacture a large part of the material worked up by the planing and other factories in the city.

C. D. O'Neil married Miss Emma A. Engermann, who was born in Renville County, Minnesota, a daughter of Henry and Anna (Gaffney) Engermann. Her father was also a Union soldier, serving with a Minnesota regiment. Mrs. O'Neil was educated in the public schools of Minnesota and came to Montana in 1898. To their marriage were born four children: Vera Ann, Wilda May, Dewitt Clinton and Carle Francis. Dewitt C. is a student in the fourth grade of the Kalispell public schools, and the daughters are also in school. Wilda May has shown much musical talent, and her studies are being directed by one of the competent instructors of music in Kalispell. She is a member of the Kalispell Grade School Glee Club, a talented organization that has earned much credit by its performances on different occasions, including its part in the program of the recent Woman's Christian Temperance Union convention at Kalispell. The children are all members of the Presbyterian Sunday School and Mr. and Mrs. O'Neil are workers in the First Presbyterian Church. For a number of years he has been superintendent of the Sunday school. In politics he is a republican and was a warm admirer of the late Theodore Roosevelt and one of the delegates at the State Progressive Convention at Billings in 1912. Though a very busy man, various objects of good and betterment in his community have been accorded his time and energies. For several years he served as fire chief of Kalispell, and is one of the men most enthusiastic about the wonderful resources and other attractions of the Flathead country. In 1909 he erected the family residence on First Avenue, West, one of the most attractive homes in that part of the city.

John Arthur Lamb, M. D. For nearly twenty years the City of Kalispell has been fortunate in having available the professional skill and exceptional abilities of Dr. John Arthur Lamb, a man of the highest qualifications and ideals as a physician and surgeon.

Doctor Lamb was born June 1, 1874, at Ottawa, Canada, son of William A. and Helen (Black) Lamb. His mother was born in Scotland and his father was of Scotch ancestry. Third in a family of five children, Doctor Lamb was liberally educated, attending school at Ottawa, and completing his medical education in McGill University at Montreal, where he graduated in 1898. During 1899 he had an extensive hospital experience in New York City, and in 1900 came to Montana as a contract physician for the coal mining companies at Sand Coulee. He resigned that work and located at Kalispell in 1901, and has ever since been busied with a large general practice.

December 29, 1909, Doctor Lamb married Miss Maud Talbott. She is a native daughter of Montana, born at Butte, where her parents, James A. and Josie (Ramsdell) Talbott, lived for years. Her mother was a beautiful character, and tributes to her Christian womanhood are still expressed in the community where she lived. Doctor and Mrs. Lamb are attendants of the Episcopal Church at Kalispell. Politically he is a republican, and is a prominent Mason, having filled the office of master of his Lodge, high priest of the Chapter, eminent commander of the Knights Templar, and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, while he and his wife are both members of the Eastern Star.

For a number of years Doctor Lamb served as city health officer of Kalispell. He was chairman of the local Medical Advisory Board during the war, and also received a commission as captain in the Medical Corps, and had given up his office and made all preparations to go to the front when the armistice was signed. Some years ago Doctor Lamb had an interesting experience at the well remembered sinking of the steamship Republic a few miles out of New York harbor. This maritime disaster occurred January 19, 1909. Among the thousand passengers on board one was Doctor Lamb, who was bound for Europe on a tour of professional study and investigation. During the hours of danger and confusion on the stricken vessel he went quietly about his duty as a professional man, and rendered invaluable aid to the passengers. Afterward the steamship company as an expression of their gratitude for this assistance asked him if he would accept a complimentary round trip ticket over Europe, and doing so he again sailed from New York and enjoyed an extended European tour with all expenses paid. Doctor Lamb is a physician and citizen whose life has well justified the confidence and esteem in which he is held.

Otto Jensen. Among the capable citizens and substantial business men of Kalispell is Otto Jensen, proprietor of the Glacier Park Meat Market, one of the best equipped and most sanitary markets in the Flathead country.

Mr. Jensen, who is a Montana business man of wide experience, was born in Frederickstadt, Norway, December 27, 1872, son of Arve and Carrie (Anderson) Jensen. He was the third in a family of four children, and received his early education and business training in his native country. At the age of twenty-one, seeking the larger opportunities of the western hemisphere, he started for America with his sister Albertina. They took passage on the steamer Iceland at Christiana, crossed the ocean to New York, and their first destination was Fargo, North Dakota. Mr. Jensen was soon working steadily in that vicinity, and while there he met and married Miss Janna Arves, also a native of Norway. They were married at her home near Fort Ransom, North Dakota. After one year of happy wedded life Mrs. Jensen passed away, leaving one daughter, Janna. Leaving his daughter with her grandparents to take the place of her mother in their hearts and home, and by whom she was tenderly reared and educated, Mr. Jensen came to Montana and spent some time at Missoula looking over the state. He eventually decided to cast in his lot with Kalispell, and since then has been actively engaged in the meat business.

At Kalispell he married Dense Marco, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Marco. Mr. Jensen is an honored member of the Norwegian Church, the church of his forefathers, and is a liberal supporter of its various causes, while Mrs. Jensen is a member of the Christian denomination. Mr. Jensen gives his political support to the republican party. He is a member of the Elks. Coming to this country with his principal asset a sterling character inherited from his forefathers, and aided by honesty, industry and progressiveness, he has achieved that success which every American looks forward to, and has also come to enjoy a large circle of friends and their confidence and esteem as one of the able men of his community.

W. M. Cusick, county commissioner of Flathead County, is one of the best known men of this region and one who deserves the confidence he inspires. He not only has made a name for himself in politics, but has also proven his worth as a business man and rancher, and owns a fine rural property five miles outside of Kalispell. He was born at Burbank, South Dakota, a son of Benjamin and Emma (La Dien) Cusick, both of whom were of French ancestry, his birth taking place on December 16, 1878.

William M. Cusick

Growing up at Burbank, South Dakota, W. M. Cusick attended its schools and then put himself through the State University, from which he was graduated in 1896. With the close of his school days Mr. Cusick entered the mercantile field and successfully conducted a large dry goods store at Burbank until 1901, when he sold his business and bought his present ranch, on which he has since been occupied with the various branches of agricultural industry. Since becoming the owner of this property Mr. Cusick has put in some very valuable improvements which enhance its value and aid in his operation of it.

In 1905 Mr. Cusick was married to Miss Helena Nye, and they have one daughter, Velma. Mr. Cusick is a Mason. The democratic party receives his support, and he was elected county commissioner on its ticket. A man of high character, Mr. Cusick transacts the business of his office in the same manner as he does his personal affairs, and the county is the beneficiary of such action. Owing to the fact that he is well educated and that his judgment with relation to men and affairs is sound, his advice is often sought, and his policies followed. Possessing as he does a strong personality and genial nature, Mr. Cusick is sure to have a large following and the county is to be congratulated that a man of his influence is so conscientious and upright a man and public servant. Few movements are inaugurated and carried to a successful completion without his co-operation, and he is responsible for much of the advancement shown in recent years. Having lived at his ranch in Flathead County since coming to Montana, he is naturally deeply interested in all that pertains to this region, and may be depended upon to give it a fair and impartial administration in his present office or in any other to which he may later be elected.

HARRY GATISS. A pioneer of the Flathead country, a man who has always been a leader in local development, whether in the clearing up of the land or in the promotion of good institutions, Harry Gatiss owns one of the fine ranches and one of the fine country homes in the vicinity of Creston.

A native of England, he was born in County Durham May 16, 1864, a son of Luke and Elizabeth Gatiss. Reared and educated in his native country, he came to the United States when a young man, and in August, 1891, he first located in the Flathead district, with his brother Robert, who was located on land eleven miles east of Kalispell. At that time all this district was densely wooded with fir, spruce and pine. Harry Gatiss went to work with a will to achieve a home, and in 1895 he found a companion for his home and a sharer in his enterprises by his marriage with Miss Rose M. Wilson. They were married at Butte, Montana. Mrs. Gatiss was born at Thursk, York County, England, a daughter of Henry and Mary (Coates) Wilson. She is a cousin of David Coates of Seattle, one of the prominent political leaders of the Northwest. Her father for many years was a ship store merchant at Glasgow, Scotland, and did a large business as a ship chandler. Her mother's great-grandmother was Lady Hilton of Hilton Castle, England, and Mrs. Gatiss has in her home some valuable silverware which once belonged to Lady Hilton and was used in Hilton Castle. Mrs. Gatiss' education was carefully supervised by her parents at Glasgow, and she had the advantage of the best instruction afforded by the music masters of that and other cities. She trained herself as a choir musical director and teacher, and for years has enjoyed a large circle of students in Montana and has done much to elevate musical standards in her own community. With literary as well as musical gifts, she has written many articles that have been contributed to the press.

Mr. Gatiss when he first came to America lived in Nebraska for a time, and for three years served in the regular United States army. Years later, when the World war came on, he had the satisfaction of seeing his only son a soldier, and he and his wife never lost an opportunity to keep the patriotic work going on in their own community.

The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Gatiss is Robert Hilton Gatiss, who was born at Butte August 15, 1896. He was carefully trained at home and given the advantages of the schools of Flathead. Early in the war with Germany he volunteered with his Montana comrades, and was assigned duty as photographer with the engineers, serving in Company A of the Two Hundred and Eleventh Engineers in the Lafayette Division. He received his training in Camp Forest in Georgia and Camp Meade in Maryland. After the signing of the armistice he made the wise choice of returning home to assist his father on the ranch.

The first home of Mr. Gatiss in the wilderness of the Flathead country was a log cabin. He prizes a photograph of that cabin, showing also a dressed deer hanging in front. It was the scene of earnest labor, and it also marked a period in his life when he was possessed of "that delightful discontent which the hope of better things inspires within us," and it is gratifying to know that the ambitions and labors of those early years have borne ample fruit. A large ranch now responds to his efforts as a manager, and for his family he has erected a beautiful modern home, with a complete water system and other facilities for comfort and convenience. Mr. and Mrs. Gatiss are independent in their political attitude. Both were reared in the Church of England. Mrs. Gatiss is a member of the Eastern Star. Their associations and activities have raised up for them a large circle of friends, and these many friends as well as home and other substantial interests give them enduring ties of affection for the Flathead country.

F. W. BUCK. A pioneer of the Flathead country, where he has lived for thirty years, F. W. Buck is a merchant of long standing, and the people of Kalispell and many of the residents of the surrounding territory have learned to appreciate the quality of service and the quality of goods carried in Buck's Grocery at 302 Main Street.

Mr. Buck came to Montana from Iowa in the fall of 1890. At that time Kalispell was not in existence. He came by way of Flathead Lake to old Demersville and settled near Columbia Falls. Through all the subsequent years his interests have been identified with Flathead County. His primary occupation was farming, and when he left the farm he established a business, and owned and conducted a general mercantile store at Creston, where for seven years he was also postmaster, keeping the office in his store. From Creston he moved to Kalispell and established a business of which he is proprietor today. He has lived to see many changes for the better in the Flathead country, and his own energy and industry have assisted in the upbuilding.

Mr. Buck lost his good wife several years ago. He is the father of three sons and a daughter, Thelma, who lives in California. The sons are Harry, Earl and Fred. They were well educated at Creston. Harry, who is the active manager of his father's business, married Miss Adele Werner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Werner, and they have two children, Thelma and Harry Werner Buck. During the World war one of the sons, Fred, responded to the call for volunteers and was trained as an aviator at Kelley Field in Texas. Later he was sent to France, where he was on duty for thirteen months. He received his honorable discharge after the armistice, and was with one of the early contingents to return home. It has been a source of gratification to Mr. Buck to see his sons as they came to manhood engage in the same line of work with himself. All three sons now have a part in the store, the oldest assuming the management, so that Mr. Buck has comparative leisure. In politics the Buck family support the principles of the republican party and are attendants at the Methodist Church.

JOHN E. UEHLINGER, who is the representative of the New York Life Insurance Company, came to Kalispell about the time the city was laid out and founded, and has been prominently associated with many phases of its business and social life.

He was born in New York City, a son of George and Anna (Burgin) Uehlinger. He attended the Hayward Street School in Brooklyn and at the age of fifteen came to the Flathead country to visit a schoolmate, Andrew Grosswieler. The visit became a permanent sojourn, and for four years he worked on the Plume horse ranch. Mr. Uehlinger located at Kalispell in 1894, and for twenty-five years has been one of its hard working business men. He has developed a tremendous business for the New York Life Insurance Company.

June 9, 1897, he married Miss Elizabeth Kirk. When she was two years old her parents, George and Elizabeth (Gray) Kirk, left Scotland and came to America, settling at Watertown, South Dakota, and subsequently moving to Spokane, Washington. When Kalispell was founded the Kirk family moved there, the townsite being improved with only two shacks at the time. The first white child born in Kalispell was Etta Kirk, a niece of George Kirk. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Uehlinger began housekeeping in the same block where they are living today. They have had their home there for twenty-two years.

Three children have been born to their marriage: Archibald E., Mildred and Eunice. Archibald graduated with honors and as president of the senior class from the Kalispell High School, and showed unusual proficiency in mathematics, mechanics and modern languages. He had an ambition to continue his education in a military school. About that time Montana's congresswoman, Janet Rankin, advertised competitive examinations for appointment to the great army and navy schools. Archibald Uehlinger took both examinations, and had the unusual distinction of winning first place in each. Having a choice, he selected the navy, entering the Naval Academy at Annapolis, where he is now in his second year. The daughter Mildred Uehlinger is a graduate of the Kalispell High School, and during her high school course became a stenographer and in her senior class was employed in that capacity by the county attorney. She is now attending the Montana State University at Missoula and is private correspondent for the president. She has also specialized in music, and her present plans are to make music a profession.

Mr. and Mrs. Uehlinger attend the Episcopal Church, and she is one of the active Guild workers and in various church undertakings. She is also a member of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Uehlinger is a democrat and time and again has gone out of his way to encourage and help the party to success. He is one of the prominent members and present exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks in Kalispell, serving his local lodge as leading knight, and was formerly esquire, a post he held fifteen years and during that time officiated in the initiation of over 400 members. He has many tokens of friendship and esteem from his fellow Elks, including a life membership card.

F. B. ARNETT. Throughout his residence in Montana, which has continued for many years, Mr. Arnett has been closely identified with the ranching and stock raising interests, and is one of the most substantial men in the Flathead Valley. His ranch and farm are located close to Columbia Falls.

Mr. Arnett was born at Mount Ayr, Iowa, a son of William L. and Mary M. (DeLong) Arnett. His father was a dutiful Union soldier during the Civil war, serving in Company M of the Third Iowa Cavalry.

F. B. Arnett was educated in his native village and afterward attended the Washington State College at Pullman. At Colfax he married Miss Lily Richardson, who was born in that city, a daughter of William and Phoebe (Stockton) Richardson. Mrs. Arnett was liberally educated, attending school at Colfax and also the Washington State College. After his marriage Mr. Arnett moved to Flathead County and bought on time a farm of 120 acres. Then followed years of hard work, economy and thrifty management until the farm was paid for, and since then its area has been increased to 200 acres. The Arnett country home is 3½ miles south of Columbia Falls. It is a well improved place, devoted to general farming and stock raising, and has a herd of full blooded Holstein cattle.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnett have one daughter, Elma, a student in Bad Rock District School No. 1. Mr. and Mrs. Arnett are members of the Methodist Church at Elk Park and fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and American Yeomen, his wife being a member of the auxiliaries of these two orders. Politically he favors the republican party, but frequently casts his vote for the man. He has served as a member of the school board of his district and several times as chairman of the board. Mr. Arnett has found the opportunities his ambition craved since coming to the Flathead country and is one of its most loyal citizens.

JOHN H. FOY. After any section has been advanced beyond the pioneer state it is difficult for those who then come to it to realize what efforts were expended to develop it, and the hardships endured by those who put forth these same efforts. Montana is among the younger states both as to political and industrial development, and therefore many of its pioneers are still living in its midst, who talk entertainingly of the days when this great commonwealth was still on the frontier of civilization. One of these pioneers of Flathead County is John H. Foy of Kalispell.

John H. Foy was born at Ogden, Utah, one of the family of nine children born to his parents, John M. and Alice (Jost) Foy, the father born in Pennsylvania, while the mother was a native of Nova Scotia. After their marriage they went to Utah, where John M. Foy was employed as a scout in the Indian warfare. John H. Foy was reared in the West, going in young manhood to Montana, and in 1879 was married at Bozeman to Miss Nancy Jane Gregg, a daughter of William and Ashsah (Phelan) Gregg, natives of Scotland and Ireland, respectively. After five years at Bozeman Mr. and Mrs. Foy, together with his parents and a married sister and her family, came to Flathead County, making the trip with covered wagons drawn by teams, and being many days on the road. They reached here on September 22, 1883, and from that day to the present the Foys have been residents of this county. At that time the country was new, Indians were numerous and wild game abundant. All provisions had to be freighted a distance of 137 miles by wagon. Mr. and Mrs. Foy went through the days of hardships cheerfully and willingly because they knew that their privations then would result in their future prosperity.

The children born to the Foys were as follows: Earl, who died when thirteen days old; Murdon H., who was born in 1885; and Gurdon H., who was born in 1893. Murdon H. Foy was graduated as a civil engineer and had a bright future before him, when he was wounded by the accidental discharge of a gun, and his death resulted, his passing being regarded as a tragedy by the community in which he was held in such high esteem. Gurdon H. Foy was married to Miss Nellie B. McCarthy, a daughter of Judge McCarthy. He is now employed by the Great Northern Railroad, and lives at Whitefish, Montana. The one child of Mr. and Mrs. Gurdon H. Foy is Perry Eugene.

When the Foys first came to Flathead County they found there was great need for lumber on the part of the settlers who desired to erect homes on their new locations. They therefore selected as their homestead a beautiful property on a body of water that now bears the family name and is known as Foy's Lake, and here erected a saw-mill, which was the first in the county, and here was prepared a greater part of the lumber used by the earlier settlers in the construction of their first homes. The cabin which housed John H. Foy and his wife at first had no floor save that provided by nature, and was built of logs, for the mill was not then in operation. A small window and one door furnished the openings, but the door itself had to wait until Mr. Foy could spare the time to go 137 miles to Missoula, the nearest trading point. After securing a load of necessary provisions he himself sawed out three boards in a saw-mill and brought them back to make a door for his cabin. He filed a homestead and pre-emption claim near Demersville, now Foy's Bend. Of course there were no taverns in those days, and it was not long before the traveling hunters and prospectors learned that Mrs. Foy was an excellent cook and imposed upon the open-handed hospitality of the excellent couple. Hunters, trappers, miners and Indians flocked to this general headquarters, and not only expected to receive their meals, but depended upon Mr. Foy for all kinds of information. Finally, almost in self-defense, they began to charge for their services, and in time Mr. Foy became the proprietor of several wayside taverns of the period. The experiences of Mr. and Mrs. Foy with their various guests are interesting enough to be placed in a book by themselves. When a man out of luck and with empty pockets turned up at the tavern he was treated to the best the house afforded, and oftentimes given a new start in life, for no one ever appealed in vain to John Foy. Mrs. Foy was the proud possessor of a small cook stove during those early days, and on it she used to cook royal meals for the hungry wayfarer as well as for her own family. Their tavern was the first in Flathead County, and Mrs. Foy says that beginning to cook on that little stove she has never left off since, and those who enjoy her present hospitality feel certain that she has not lost any of her former skill. For some years past in addition to his ranching activities Mr. Foy has been employed by the county in building good roads.

Mr. and Mrs. Foy enjoy meeting their old friends and living over again the pioneer days, which had their pleasures as well as hardships. Such friendships remain through life, being founded as they are on mutual esteem and service, and are much more valuable than some of the transient ones of today.

PATRICK J. WALSH. In Columbia Falls is a beautiful home facing a lofty range of mountains, surrounded by inspiring landscape. This is the home of Patrick J. Walsh and family. Mr. Walsh has well earned the comforts with which he is now surrounded. He was one of the earliest settlers in Columbia Falls, and the part he has played as a worker and good citizen is appreciated throughout that community.

Mr. Walsh was born at Scranton, Pennsylvania, April 27, 1859, a son of Thomas P. and Bridget (O'Hara) Walsh. His parents were both born in Ireland. Thomas Walsh came to this country at the age of fourteen and lived for many years in Scranton.

Educated in the public schools of his native town, Patrick J. Walsh at the age of nineteen yielded to a zest for adventure and new scenes and went west to Nebraska. In 1878, during the Indian war in the Black Hills region, he was a member of a company taking supplies to Deadwood City. After returning to Nebraska and in the same fall he started for Colorado and became a coal miner at Erie, thirty miles from Denver. In 1879 he went over the mountains to Western Colorado in the Gunnison Valley, and worked at the Hortense gold mine. Grand Junction, now one of the largest cities in Western Colorado, then contained only two log cabin huts. He located and opened a coal mine on Grand River, four miles from Grand Junction. He then sold that property and located a pre-emption four miles from Grand Junction. Subsequently he looked after interests at the Crested Butte mine in the Gunnison Valley.

At Grand Junction in 1883 Mr. Walsh married Miss Catherine Welch. She was born in St. Lawrence County, New York, a daughter of Patrick and Ellen (Bradley) Welch. Her father was a Union soldier, being a member of Company K of the New York Heavy Artillery. Mrs. Walsh was educated in the public schools at Hogansburg, New York, and also in a convent.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Walsh came to Montana and in the spring of 1887 homesteaded 160 acres three miles west of Columbia Falls. This was then a portion of the real wilderness, inhabited by Indians and wild game, and only here and there the cabin of an isolated white settler. Mr. Walsh had come to this region on a mission for Marcus Daly, by whom he was employed as an expert to locate coal fields on the North Fork of the Flathead River. Mr. Walsh executed that commission, but was so attracted by the beauties and opportunities of the new country, that he settled down and has since been a factor in the agricultural development. He and his wife built for their first home a log cabin.

Six children were born to their marriage. Mary and Ellen are now deceased. The survivors are

John J., Maud, Oliver T. and Richard Patrick. They were carefully trained at home and in the public schools of Flathead County. The daughter Maud completed a course in the State Normal at Dillon, Montana, and is now the wife of Ernie McCrea, a Kalispell lumber man. The son John made the first filing on land in what is now Glacier Park and is a rancher and postmaster of Kintla. He married Miss Harriet Smith, a teacher who came to Montana from Wisconsin.

The son Oliver T. Walsh was one of the four members constituting the first graduating class at Columbia Falls High School in 1916. December 3, 1917, he enlisted for service in the World war and was in service until honorably discharged at Fort Russell, Wyoming, July 20, 1919. His number was A S 2492162. He was a corporal and was company clerk of Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-Ninth Engineers. With his command he saw active duty in France. He is now at home with his parents and is an active member of the Knights of Columbus. Mr. and Mrs. Walsh are Catholics, and he is a Knight of Columbus. Politically he gives his support to the democratic party. Both Mr. and Mrs. Walsh were workers in behalf of various patriotic causes that demanded their efforts at the time of the World war. Mrs. Walsh gave much of her time to the local Red Cross Chapter at Columbia Falls.

Albert Lee, who is one of the interesting old veterans at the Montana Soldiers Home in Columbia Falls, is a native of Canada and was one of many thousands of Canadian native sons who served with the Union armies in our Civil war.

He was a son of Charles and Catherine Jane (Ferguson) Lee, and was educated in the public schools of Canada and New York. He was eighteen years of age when he enlisted in Williamsburg, New York, in Company D of the Sixty-Seventh New York Infantry, under General Wright. He was first sent to City Point, Virginia, and participated in several notable battles, including Cedar Creek. He was taken prisoner and after three months in Libby Prison was paroled and recuperated in St. John's Hospital at Annapolis, Maryland. He then rejoined his comrades in front of Petersburg and participated in the historic charge on Fort Stedman the 25th of March and was also in the battle of Petersburg on Sunday morning, April 2, 1865. There he was wounded, and during the concluding days of the war was in hospital at City Point, Virginia. Three days after Appomattox President Lincoln visited the wounded soldiers in that hospital, and among others he greeted and shook hands with Albert Lee. That was just three days before the president's assassination. Mr. Lee was mustered out June 21, 1865, and then went back to his old home in Canada.

After the war he learned the blacksmith's trade, worked for a time in Michigan and first came to Montana in 1870. He has been all over the western states. He was reared in the faith of the Methodist Church and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Masonic Order, and in politics supports the principles of the republican party.

John W. Fisher came to Montana soon after the close of the great Civil war, in which he bore a worthy part as a Union soldier. He has been a soldier in Montana, fought against the Indians in many campaigns, and is one of the most interesting of the veterans who are now spending their declining years in the State Home for the soldiers at Columbia Falls.

Mr. Fisher was born in Sullivan County, Indiana, a son of W. and Anna Fisher. At the age of twenty years he entered the service of his country as a member of Company B of the Eighty-Fifth Indiana, and was transferred to Company H of the Thirty-Third Infantry. He served under General Buell and General Sherman. He was in the battles of Chattanooga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta, and was with Sherman on the march to the sea. He was captured in Tennessee, but on the fifth night after capture he and other prisoners made their escape. He was in the campaign through the Carolinas culminating in the surrender of General Johnston, and later went on to Richmond and from there to Washington, where he was among the veterans of General Sherman's army who marched down Pennsylvania Avenue in the Grand Review. From Washington he was sent west to Louisville, and was mustered out and granted an honorable discharge at Indianapolis.

He came to Montana in 1866, and was in the Government service many years. At the time of the Custer massacre he helped rid the country of its hostile Indians and break up the bands of hostile Sioux, Cheyenne and Nes Perces. Since 1887 his residence has been continuous in Montana. He lived in Choteau County and also in Blaine County, and is widely known among the old settlers and old soldiers of the state. He is a member of Custer Post No. 5, Grand Army of the Republic, and in politics is a stanch republican.

Mrs. Nancy J. Walker is a resident of Columbia Falls, and widow of the late John A. Walker, an honored veteran of the Civil war.

Mrs. Walker was born at Berwick, Illinois, daughter of Joseph and Nancy (Hagler) Pierce. She was married in Van Buren County, Iowa, to John A. Walker. Mr. Walker was a soldier in Company H of the Forty-Seventh Infantry under Captain Gowdy. He served one year, and was with General Sherman on the march to the sea. During an illness in that campaign he was hauled for four days in a wagon. He was a brave and dutiful soldier, until his honorable discharge.

Mr. and Mrs. Walker had nine children, two of whom, Mary and Harper, died in infancy. The others are Nancy C., Joseph, Gracie, Oliver, Margaretta, Charles and Clella May. Nancy C. is now Mrs. Hartman, and her children are Leslie, Robert, John, Ethel, Stella and Marvin. Joseph, who was accidentally shot and killed on a hunting expedition in Arizona, had six children. His son Ernest was a soldier in the World war and his three daughters are Marie, Freda and Ida. Gracie died at the age of sixteen. Oliver Walker has two daughters, Mabel and Florence. Margaretta Walker is the wife of Arthur Wilcox and has three sons. Charles was killed in a train wreck. Clella May is the wife of Clyde Drollinger, of Kalispell, and their children are Burl, Veta, Clyda and May.

Mrs. Walker is a faithful member of the Methodist Church and is affiliated with the Women's Christian Temperance Union. She is a good Christian woman, has reared her children to right principles, and has always been a stanch temperance woman.

Mrs. Clara Cramer is the wife of Ben Cramer, and both of them deserve record as among the pioneers of the Polson district of Flathead County.

Ben Cramer was born in Gratiot County, Michigan, August 21, 1865, son of Martin W. and Delinda (Sias) Cramer. Martin W. Cramer was a Civil war veteran, a member of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, and was for four years in the service of his country, a volunteer. He took part in many of the notable engagements, and was wounded seven times. Martin Cramer's father was a minister of the Disciple Church. Ben Cramer has frequently been a delegate to the republican state conventions, and was a delegate to the Chicago National Convention in 1916. At present he is marshal of Polson. He has always been friendly to the Indians. At one time Chief Antone was severly wounded in a fight, and as there was no physician in the country Mr. Cramer had him carried home on a stretcher and sewed up the gash with silk thread. The chief was always afterward grateful to him.

Mrs. Cramer belongs to the real pioneer stock of Montana and was born at Frenchtown in Missoula County, a daughter of J. B. and Catherine (Wood) Ducharme. Her father was of French ancestry. Clara Ducharme was the youngest in a family of twelve children. When she was eight years of age her parents moved to western Canada, to what is now the province of Alberta, and while there her mother died when the daughter was thirteen and two years afterward the father followed. After the loss of her parents she returned to Great Falls, and while there met and married Ben Cramer.

Soon afterward they moved to the Flathead country south of the lake, where Polson now stands. They were the first to locate in that Indian country, and subsequently filed on a homestead. They were established and in readiness with their hospitable hearts to help the first comers to Polson. Mr. Cramer developed an extensive business as a rancher and stockman and enjoyed unusual success in that industry. Several years ago he sold his homestead and removed to Polson, where he erected a modern bungalow, one of the best homes in Polson.

Mr. Cramer in former years was one of the great nimrods of this country. The district is still noted for its big game, and only recently a mountain lion and a cougar were killed in what is known as the Cramer Addition to Polson. During one hunt Mr. Cramer killed two elk, a mountain goat, a cinnamon, black and grizzly bear and several deer. His home is adorned with the trophies of the chase, including the mounted heads of two elks, perhaps the finest specimens of the kind in the state, and for one of which Mr. Cramer was offered, but refused, a thousand dollars.

While living on the ranch Father Ravelli, a pioneer priest, was a frequent visitor at the Ducharme home and often enjoyed its hospitality. Mrs. Cramer's father, J. B. Ducharme, was a prominent pioneer Catholic of Montana, and lived to the extreme age of a 105, dying on his birthday. His home ranch was at Frenchtown.

Mr. and Mrs. Cramer never had any children of their own but reared two girls from childhood. One was Mary Beauvais, who became the wife of Harry McKenzie of Polson. The other is Miss Nettie Moss, now a student at Chemawa, Oregon, and a vivacious young woman with an interesting outlook on life. Both these adopted daughters have been a great comfort to Mr. and Mrs. Cramer. Mrs. Cramer attends the Presbyterian Church at Polson, both are stanch republicans, and their political sympathies are indicated by a fine portrait of the late Theodore Roosevelt that hangs in their home.

In the early days Mr. and Mrs. Cramer had some exciting experiences when they first came to the reservation. They were regarded by the native Indians as intruders, and the mounted policemen of the Indians never omitted an occasion or opportunity to do what they could to frighten and intimidate the white settlers. Mr. and Mrs. Cramer were proof against their wiles and threats. One day during the absence of Mr. Cramer some Indians came riding up on their horses, and seeing Mrs. Cramer at a distance gave chase. She was mounted on a swift horse and easily kept ahead of her pursuers until the horses of the Indians were tired out, and instead of being frightened she confesses that she really enjoyed the chase as good sport. Mr. and Mrs. Cramer have seen many changes in this district, having lived here for twenty-nine years, during which time Polson has been developed from nothing into one of the thriving and pretentious commercial centers of the Flathead district.

Cromwell Marsh, of Columbia Falls, was an honored veteran of the Civil war whose death occurred in April, 1920.

He was born at Sullivan in Ashland County, Ohio, son of Aretas and Evangelia (Toms) Marsh. He received his early education at Sullivan, and was twenty-two years of age when he was mustered in at Cleveland, Ohio, in Company M of the Second Ohio Cavalry, under Colonel George Doubleday. Most of his service was on the western border. He was first sent to Kansas City, then to Fort Scott, Kansas, then into Indian Territory, and at Fort Scott helped rig up a train of 300 wagons, six mules to each wagon, loaded with provisions and supplies for the army. He did picket duty along the Missouri River during the summer, and participated in several engagements in Kansas and Missouri. He remained at Fort Scott until December, and then returned to Columbus, Ohio, and was sent to Knoxville, Tennessee. On leaving Camp Chase his regiment was detailed as body guard to the general of the division. On January 7th he started home and, re-enlisting, joined the Army of the Potomac. He was at Annapolis, Maryland, and for twenty-two days was in continuous fighting. He was at the battle of Winchester at the time of General Phil Sheridan's famous ride and saw that great cavalryman as he came into camp. He was also under General Custer in the Shenandoah Valley campaign. He participated in the battles of Cedar Creek, Fisher's Hill, and helped pursue and drive back the forces of General Early. For four days he was in the saddle in a drenching rain, and camped one night in the middle of a plowed field, his blanket freezing to the ground. Later he was furloughed and returned home in February, and after his return to Maryland was appointed drill master and was sent to Rolla, Missouri. He walked 125 miles to Springfield, Missouri. At the close of the war he was orderly sergeant of his company. He was commissioned second lieutenant at Springfield and later first lieutenant, and was mustered out at Columbus, Ohio.

February 13, 1866, Mr. Marsh married Miss Rachel McConnell, who was born at Ashland, Ohio, a daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Miller) McConnell. She was educated at Ashland, Ohio. For fifty-three years Mr. and Mrs. Marsh were devoted companions and they were childhood playmates still earlier. They have two children, George and Maud, both of whom were well educated and given normal training in the schools of Kansas. Maud taught school in Kansas. George married Lizzie McCurdy and has a son, Eugene. George Marsh is now a farmer near Conrad, Montana. Maud is the wife of Albert Palmer, who is a shipbuilder living at Anacortes, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Palmer have three daughters, Vivian, Hazel and Margery.

Mr. Marsh was active in all good works and was a stanch republican in politics. He was affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Grand Army of the Republic, and Mrs. Marsh is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic. She was a skillful nurse and for many years followed that profession in the eastern states and at one time was connected with the hospital at Anacortes, Washington.

JAMES J. AMES over thirty-four years ago came to the Flathead country of Montana, took up and developed a homestead, and in all the following years has been one of the honored and substantial residents of the state.

His present home is at Columbia Falls, and he is an honored veteran of the Civil war. He was born in Pennsylvania, a son of Ruel C. and Sally (Burgess) Ames. He was twenty years of age when he enlisted as a soldier, being mustered in at Philadelphia in Company B of the Fifty-Eighth Pennsylvania Infantry. He was sworn in August 25, 1864, and his first post within the enemy's country was at Bermuda Hundred, Virginia. Toward the close of September he engaged in the battle of Fort Harrison, and in that battle was wounded in the left foot. He was taken to Fortress Monroe Hospital, later transferred to the Long Island Hospital, and furloughed home. He rejoined his regiment in the spring of 1865 at Richmond, and received his honorable discharge July 12, 1865.

On September 18, 1865, Mr. Ames married Miss Viola D. Fassett, a native of Pennsylvania and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Fassett. To this union was born one son, Charles W. Ames. He was educated in Pennsylvania, took a business course in New York City, and is now connected with Switzer's Furniture Store at Kalispell. He married Miss Nellie Jayne, a native of Pennsylvania, where she was educated, a daughter of Judson and Eliza Jayne. Charles W. Ames and wife have two children, Clyde I. and Nina.

After the death of his first wife James J. Ames married Miss Sarah Dorsey, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of Mary and Owen Dorsey. To this marriage was born a daughter, Mary Blanche, who received her education in the public schools of Pennsylvania and is now the wife of Lew Switzer, the well-known furniture merchant of Kalispell. Mr. and Mrs. Switzer have a daughter, Kate, who is the wife of Herbert V. Alward and lives at Tacoma, Washington. There are three Alward children, Kate, Lewis and Herbert.

In politics Mr. Ames is a stanch democrat. When he came to Montana in 1886 he took up a homestead in the Flathead country and was an industrious farmer who reaped many of the rewards due to early residence and contending with the hardships of the time. He has had a long life, and the later years have been as honorable as was his record as a youthful soldier for the Union.

HUBERT BECKERS, of Big Fork, practically grew up and has spent all his life in the Flathead district of Montana. He is a prosperous young farmer and as a citizen is widely known over this section of the state.

He was born March 12, 1879, on the river Rhine in Germany, son of Charles and Mary (Kuhn) Beckers. His parents came to America in 1881, when Hubert was two years of age. They lived at St. Vincent, Minnesota, several years, where the father was employed by the Great Northern Railroad Company. In 1892 the family moved to the Flathead country of Montana, about the time Kalispell started its growth as a city.

Hubert Beckers married Miss Gena Cook, daughter of James and Margaret (Allen) Cook. She was born in Butte and was educated in the schools of Kalispell. They have three children, Margaret, a student in the Big Fork school in the fourth grade, Cecelia Marie and Hubert, Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Beckers are members of the Catholic Church, he is affiliated with the Elks and in politics is a democrat.

Mr. Beckers some years ago bought the Cook ranch on Big Fork, containing 158 acres, with a home situated on a picturesque and commanding site. This home has long been noted for its hospitality and no one was ever turned from the door empty-handed. Mr. Beckers has given support to community measures of benefit and advancement.

Though born in Germany, he had no choice in the matter of his birthplace, and is as much an American as though his ancestors had lived here for generations. In proportion to his means he gave liberally to the winning of the war, and was preparing to volunteer as a mechanic in the United States Naval Yards in the State of Washington when the armistice was signed.

As a boy in Kalispell he was the first to cry the newspapers on the streets, and has always been a hustler, a ready applicant for any job. He would set up pins in bowling alleys, sell papers, run arrands, and in that way he attracted attention and not only earned a living when a boy but laid the foundation of that credit and confidence which are indispensable to a business man. Mr. Beckers has an ingenious mechanical mind, and has patented a collapsible baby cab. Once walking down the street he observed two ladies hauling a baby in a cab with runners over the snow. From one block the snow had been swept, and it was necessary for them to carry the cab. This suggested to Mr. Beckers a problem which he has worked out through his invention. By a slight pressure on a hand lever the cab can be changed in a moment from wheel to runners, and by reverse process from runners to wheels. In addition to this convenient feature the cab can be folded flat and easily carried on a car or other vehicle.

C. D. MORTON, a farmer and stockman, has been closely identified with the history and development of the Flathead Valley for over thirty years, and his industry has aided much in the upbuilding of the country.

He was born at Columbia, Tennessee, son of G. L. and Emily (Hardison) Morton. He first came to the West in 1880, going to Colorado, and after staying there seven years came to the Flathead Valley in 1887, homesteading 160 acres. In passing years his industry has met with success, and he bought additional lands until he owns today 380 acres.

Mr. Morton married Mary Newhan, daughter of James and Harriet Newhan. She came to Montana at the time of the Custer massacre. To their marriage were born seven children: James, Ruth, Charles, Joel, John, Paul and Thomas. All were educated in the schools of Flathead County. Ruth is the wife of Henry E. Slick, a farmer of Flathead. The son James was an early volunteer in the World war, going to Vancouver. He was with the Field Artillery, was promoted to sergeant, and was honorably discharged as first sergeant in the Fifth Squadron of the First Provincial Regiment.

Mr. Morton in fraternal affairs is a Modern Woodman and Odd Fellow and in politics supports the man rather than the party. He has made good use of his time and opportunities in Montana, and has acquired a fine country home, situated on an eminence overlooking a picturesque part of the Flathead Valley. Believing that country homes should have all the conveniences of the city he is now planning a modern residence. His well tilled fields show his ability as an agriculturist, and he is making preparations to specialize in Holstein cattle. Mr. and Mrs. Morton have long been noted for their hospitality, and it is said that no needy individual ever applied to them in vain and that they never took a dollar for the numerous meals they furnished to the travelers through their section of the country. They may well look back with pardonable pride upon the accomplishments and experiences of the years since they came to Montana.

W. M. Irvine. Fortunate is the man who finds his work early in life and pursues it with undivided attention and vigor all his years. That has been the case with W. M. Irvine, one of the oldest and best known residents of the Flathead Valley. His work and interest from youth up have been ranching and stock raising, with special emphasis on livestock. He is accounted one of the acknowledged authorities on good livestock, and every condition affecting the breeding, raising, care and marketing of stock in Montana.

Mr. Irvine was born at St. Ignatius, Montana, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Irvine. He grew up on a ranch, in the saddle, worked as a cowboy and traveled and worked with cattle outfits all over the West and Northwest. Later he settled down in the Flathead country and now owns 5,000 acres in that and Sanders County. He usually runs 500 head of cattle on his land, and gives his personal supervision to his herds and ranches. Naturally he is an employer of men, and has a number of competent helpers.

Mr. Irvine married Mrs. Emily Larrivee, a native of the State of Washington. They are liberal supporters of the Catholic Church of Polson. Politically Mr. Irvine casts his ballot according to his judgment as the best man for office. He has had his home in the Flathead Valley for twenty-nine years, and about eight years ago he moved to the Town of Polson, where he has a modern home, fitted with every comfort and convenience. He is also regarded as one of the liberal, progressive and public spirited citizens of his home district, and everything for local advancement and improvement can count upon his encouragement and assistance. Mr. Irvine was a personal friend of the historic Catholic priest, Father Ravelli, who played such a prominent part in the affairs of Montana.

William P. North came to the Flathead country thirty years ago, when the district was new, isolated, and with few evidences of the refining hand of man. His part has been the development of a fine ranch and country home, and through all the years he has exerted his influence in behalf of good order, good community institutions and has ever been progressively public-spirited.

Mr. North was born in Clinton County, Missouri, second of the nine children of J. L. and Anna M. (Green) North. He was educated in the public schools of his native state, and at the age of twenty years followed a desire aroused in him by what he had read and heard concerning the Northwest, and identified himself with Montana. In 1889 he preempted 160 acres at Flathead River, and built the log cabin home which sheltered him while he was making his first clearings and improvements. He came to this region with a four-horse wagon. He has kept stock, has increased the area of his cultivation, has planted fruit trees and much of the substance of his early plans and efforts is now in evidence. He lived here when there was an abundance of wild game, and when it was not necessary to leave one's home ranch in order to get all the meat the family required. The deer, says Mr. North, frequently came down from the mountains in droves, and at any time a man could go to the Big Fork River and catch all the fish he could carry home.

In 1903 Mr. North married Miss Katherine Smith, a native of Columbus, Ohio, and a daughter of J. W. and Ella (Hunt) Smith. She was educated in the Columbus High School, and fitted herself for teaching, a work which she did with pleasant success for several years. It was in the capacity of a teacher that she came to Montana, and for two years taught in the Flathead country before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. North have two children: Carl and Frederick, both students of the Big Fork School.

In time the log cabin home of Mr. North was replaced by a comfortable ranch house, and it is now surrounded by a group of barns and other buildings, while fruit and shade trees have grown up from the original plantings made by Mr. North. The home is on a picturesque site overlooking Flathead Lake. Here Mr. and Mrs. North may spend their last years with every satisfaction and comfort, and can look back over the past and their choice of a home in Montana without regret.

They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Big Fork, and in fraternal affairs he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He supports the republican party in national affairs, but takes a broad minded interest in local matters. He has served as a member of the school board and in other ways has contributed his influence to local improvements.

Paul Smith is president of the Flathead Commercial Company and president of the State Bank of Big Fork. He bears his honors and dignities in business unassumingly, and it is only his friends and associates who know and speak of the effective and useful career he has had in the Flathead country for many years.

He was born at Columbus, Ohio, a son of Joseph W. and Catherine G. (Piatt) Smith. His parents had six children: Joseph, Charles, John, Paul, Ada (who became Mrs. Hall) and Rose. These children were all reared and educated in Columbus, Ohio.

At the age of twenty-six Paul Smith came to Montana, first locating at Helena and later homesteading a quarter section in the Flathead country. Not long afterward he became engaged in general merchandising at Holt Ferry on the Flathead River. He was a merchant at a time when the country was new and most of its settlers were making a difficult struggle to maintain themselves from the meager proceeds of their farming enterprise. Many a man in the Flathead Valley will tell of Mr. Smith's generosity and kindness to a newcomer who was making every effort to establish a home and rear a family. The helping hand of the local merchant frequently was the only thing that stood between such families and failure and emigration. Some years later Mr. Smith went into partnership with Mr. Harry Horn and they established the Flathead Commercial Company of Big Fork, which now maintains a number of branch stores over the Flathead Valley. Mr. Smith has also been president of the State Bank of Big Fork since its organization.

Mr. Smith is not a member of any particular religious denomination. However, it can be truly said he is an honorary member in good standing of the organization known as the Universal Brotherhood, and a charter member of the Flathead Valley. In politics he is a republican. While he is modest to an extreme degree regarding his own virtues, his good qualities are never permitted to be lost sight of by his friends and admirers. He is public spirited, always willing to render aid to everything good for the community and everyone in need.

J. H. Horn is a veteran merchant and has long been identified in a business and civic way with the history of the Flathead country.

Mr. Horn, whose present mercantile efforts are in Big Fork, was born in Canada, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Illingworth) Horn. The parents were both natives of England. He was educated in public schools and at the age of twelve came to the United States and finished his education at St. Paul and other towns in Minnesota. He married Alida Guernon, a native of St. Paul and daughter of a well known physician of that city. She was educated in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Horn had four children. Their daughters were Gladys, who died at the age of nine years, Hazel, who died at the age of 3½ years, and Margaret, who died in infancy. The only surviving child is Harry I., who is a graduate of the Kalispell High School. During the war he was in the Commissary Department of the United States Navy, and his company was scheduled for overseas duty about the time the armistice was signed. He was in the Thirteenth Naval Department in the Supply Division. Since returning to civil life he has become an employe of the Imperial Dry Goods Store at Kalispell.

Mr. Horn in 1889 came to Helena, Montana, and for a time was employed by the Lindsey Company. Later he came to the Flathead country, first at Demersville and later joined fortunes with Kalispell when that town took over and absorbed Demersville. For fifteen years he was connected with the Colon Mercantile Company. Later he moved to Big Fork, where he engaged in business two years, and then helped organize the Flathead Commercial Company, erecting one of the largest stores in this section of Montana. The store is 30 by 100 feet and carries a complete and thoroughly systematized stock of general merchandise.

Mr. and Mrs. Horn are members of the Baptist Church at Kalispell. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being a charter member of the former at Kalispell. In politics he is a 100% republican, and was a stanch admirer of the late Theodore Roosevelt. Mr. Horn has made good use of his opportunities in a business way, and is a highly popular and esteemed citizen. Mrs. Horn is a member of the Maccabees.

O. E. Lehmicke is a veteran resident of Montana, having lived in the state over thirty years, about half of the time having been spent in Eastern Montana and the remainder in the Flathead country.

Mr. Lehmicke, who is postmaster and a prosperous merchant at Big Forks, was born at Stillwater, Minnesota, son of Rudolph and Jane (Tackaberry) Lehmicke. He had a public school education. In August, 1883, he came to Montana and helped to bring in the first cattle owned by the noted rancher Mr. Pierre Wibeaux. He lived four years in Western North Dakota, at Dickinson. During President Cleveland's first term he was appointed and served as the postmaster of Dickinson.

In 1888 Mr. Lehmicke married Pauline Kottka, also a native of Stillwater, Minnesota. They have two children, both natives of Montana, Rupert T. and Margaret H. Both are graduates of the Flathead County High School at Kalispell. The son is now a partner with his father in business at Big Fork, and the daughter is also at home. The son during the World war was in the quartermaster's department at Washington for over a year. His work was so satisfactory there that the Government failed to give him the privilege of going overseas, an opportunity he greatly desired.

In 1901 Mr. Lehmicke came to the Flathead country and for two years was a factor in the Somers Lumber Company at Somers with Mr. John O'Brien. He then moved to Big Fork, and has since conducted a prosperous general mercantile business. The duties of postmaster at Great Forks first devolved upon Mrs. Lehmicke, who was appointed in 1905 and filled the office with admirable ability for nine years. In 1914 Mr. Lehmicke was appointed postmaster, and has served out a four year term. Mr. and Mrs. Lehmicke attend the Methodist Church at Big Fork. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow and in politics has always given his active support to the democratic party. He is one of the men who by experience and long residence are competent to judge the opportunities of the Flathead country, and he is an ardent advocate of its wonderful advantages.

E. E. Dow. At the western entrance of the famous National Glacier Park is the little Village of Belton, one of whose most conspicuous features is the Hotel Belton, which probably has accommodated as many tourists during the seasons since it was opened as any hostelry in the state.

Its proprietor is E. E. Dow. Mr. Dow was born in New Brunswick, Canada, son of Millen L. and Olive (Tompkins) Dow. He was educated in Canada, and came to Belton, Montana, at the age of twenty-three. He is one of the old timers in Flathead County, and began his home making in this state by taking up a quarter section of wild land. This was about the time the railway was built, and the district abounded in wild game. His first home and his home accommodations for ten years were those of a lob cabin. Later he built a commodious residence, but the old log cabin still stands as a reminder of his early experiences and hardships in the Montana wilderness. As a branch of the Great Northern Railway was built through his land his home became the nucleus of the growing Town of Belton. On account of its position Belton is the railway point from which the majority of the annual visitors to the National Glacier Park make their first acquaintance with that great scenic attraction. To accommodate this increasing travel Mr. Dow erected a large and roomy hotel, containing forty rooms, and with accommodations for the utmost comfort of the guests. Hotel Belton constantly radiates the home spirit of sociability, and its service is the highest class. Those who have patronized the hotel regard its table service as unexcelled, partly due to the fact that Mr. Dow has always contracted a large part of his supplies fresh from the immediate surrounding country district.

Mr. Dow is an enthusiastic sportsman and has many trophies of his skill and prowess preserved in the hotel, including mounted heads of mountain goat, deer, antelope and elk.

Mr. Dow married Miss Katie Conant, also a native of Canada. She is a member of the Catholic Church. Politically he is a supporter of the democratic party. He came to Montana when the country was all new, and throughout his residence, while very busy with his own affairs, has exercised a public spirit that has meant much to the development of the Flathead Valley. In connection with his hotel he also operates a large general mercantile store and supplies many of the commodities required by the surrounding country. For twenty years he has also represented the United States Government in the office of postmaster.

E. G. AND GEORGE BJORNEBY. The Bjorneby brothers occupy prominent places in the esteem of the people of the Flathead Valley, and are universally respected, for as business men fair dealing is their watchword in all their transactions. As proprietors of the Bjorneby Brothers Milling Company at Kalispell they have gained a well-earned reputation as reliable business men who have figured more or less prominently in the affairs of that section for some years, ever lending such aid as was their just due in furthering any movements having as their object the general upbuilding of the county in a material, civic and moral way. They have not been neglectful of their duty in any of the avenues of life, and there is peculiar satisfaction in offering biographies of such people in a work of this nature.

E. G. and George Bjorneby were born in Adams County, Wisconsin, sons of G. I. and Olea (Anderson) Bjorneby. Both of these parents were natives of Norway, who immigrated to the United States in 1851 and 1856, respectively, settling in Wisconsin, where they made their future home and reared their children. Subsequently the family moved to Red River Valley, North Dakota, of which locality they were pioneers. George Bjorneby became a rancher in North Dakota, where he remained for a number of years. E. G. Bjorneby engaged in the hardware business at Grafton, North Dakota, which occupied his attention until 1895 and in which he met with fair success. In 1895 he came to the Flathead country, Montana, settling in Kalispell. He first engaged in farming and also handled real estate. Subsequently for about five years he conducted a grocery store, under the firm name of Bjorneby and Weberg, the latter being the present city treasurer of Kalispell. Mr. Bjorneby also erected the Norden Hotel at Kalispell, one of the best hotels in this section of the country. About ten years ago he decided to build a mill, and at the north end of town he erected a fine four-story building, 36 by 48 feet in size. The elevator has a capacity of 35,000 bushels of grain and a productive capacity of 150 barrels of flour. In addition there is also a flourishing flour and feed store conducted in connection with the mill. Flour is furnished to the local trade as far east as Havre, Montana, and west to Sand Point, Idaho.

E. G. Bjorneby was married to Margaret Bryson, a native of the State of Iowa and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Bryson, of Waterville, Iowa. To them have been born five children. Olea is the wife of Rev. A. Skindlor, better known as Bishop Skindlor, superintendent of the Rocky Mountain district of the Lutheran Church, and they have five children, Alice, Robert, Allen, Marcella and Doris. Theressa is a girl of rare courage and business acumen, as was evidenced when she filed and proved on a homestead near Devon, Montana. She later attended and graduated from Miss Church's Art School, of Chicago, and is now an instructor in that institution. Emily is the wife of R. J. Gerlough, with whom she was a fellow instructor in the Wardner-Kellog High School of Idaho. He was an overseas veteran during the World war, serving in the hospital department, and is now studying medicine in Cleveland, Ohio, where his wife is engaged as a public school teacher. Margaret is a bookkeeper in the Glacier Park Garage at Kalispell. Jeannette is a student of music and dramatic art in Spokane College, Spokane, Washington.

Mr. Bjorneby takes an independent attitude in political matters, holding that the fitness of men for public office is of more vital importance to the community than the fact that they may belong to a certain political party. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, while religiously he and his wife are active members of the Lutheran Church. He is looked upon as a man who can always be counted on to support every movement for the betterment of the community in any way, and to an unusual degree enjoys the confidence of the people of his community.

George Bjorneby came to the Flathead country about 1909 and entered into the milling business as a partner with his brother. He is a man of wide experience in handling grain, having operated a number of grain elevators in North Dakota over a period of about eight years, being thus well qualified to enter actively upon the business here. He too is well liked by all who know him, for he possesses to eminent degree those qualities which characterize real manhood. He is alert and wide-awake, possesses good judgment and up-to-date ideas, and is a constant "booster" for the locality with which he is identified.

George Bjorneby was married to Elida Retvedt, who was born in Christiania, Norway, and who came to the United States alone at the age of twelve years. To Mr. and Mrs. Bjorneby have been born the following children: Helen is the wife of C. J. Lund, of Great Falls, Montana; Grace is a student in St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minnesota; Elliott is a student in the Kalispell High School; Arnold is a student in Spokane College; May and Walter are students in the public schools of Kalispell. The members of the family are identified with the Lutheran Church, while fraternally Mr. Bjorneby is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

The Bjorneby brothers are noted for their progressive spirit and are leaders in the business circles of Kalispell. The qualities of keen discrimination, sound judgment and executive ability have entered very largely into their makeup and have been contributing elements to the material success which has attended their efforts.

EDWARD MCCONVILLE. No life is more interesting than that of the old pioneer, for in the days when the wilderness of the West was conquered there were men of iron mould, men who were fearless, courageous and self-sacrificing, who were willing to undergo hardships in order that succeeding generations might be benefited. It is doubtful if such a class of people live today, for the day of the pioneer in this country is gone and we are in the midst of a settled stability and permanency. Nevertheless, as we look about us we find a few representatives of the early days who become at once the center of interest because they are the custodians of the real history of the early days in this section of the country. In this connection we make reference to one of the sturdy residents of Whitefish, Edward McConville, who has been identified with the great West for more than forty years, during which time he has taken an active part in the great transformation of the country, and it is interesting to hear him recall reminiscences of the early days.

Edward McConville is a native of America's metropolis, New York City, and is the son of Arthur and Ann McConville. He was reared to manhood in his native city and secured his education in its public schools. In 1878 Mr. McConville determined to cast his lot with the great and rapidly-developing western country and came to Miles City, Montana, where he remained for a time. From there he continued farther west, stopping at Helena, but eventually located at Bozeman, where he engaged in driving stage for the well-known firm of Gilman and Salisbury. He drove four- and six-horse teams and became an expert driver, being considered one of the most reliable as well as fearless drivers in the western country. We of the present day can hardly get a true mental picture of those old stage-coach times, times which were day after day filled with dramatic and often tragic situations that could only be met successfully by men with iron nerve and unlimited courage. The only means of overland conveyance at that time, it was the means by which thousands of the first settlers of the western states came to their new homes. Mr. McConville enjoys the distinction of having driven the famous Overland stage from Major Brooks' to Sheridan and Virginia City, where it connected with the Billings route, this being one of the most noted of the historic old routes. Mr. McConville drove this stage until the advent of the Northern Pacific Railroad into that country, which effectually killed business for the stages. Mr. McConville then engaged in the express business, which proved a very successful enterprise, and it has been stated on good authority that he probably carried more wealth overland than any other man in Montana. His largest consignment was of $60,000, and he states that he was a little anxious until they had safely delivered his freight, for at that time highway robbers were frequently holding up the overland stages. Mr. McConville was engaged as an expressman around Helena for a number of years, and served as express agent at Ravelli until the Great Northern Railroad came in through the Flathead country. Mr. McConville then came to the Flathead Valley, first settling at Kalispell, where he was employed by the express company for a time. Subsequently he moved to the vicinity of Whitefish, where he bought a tract of land, to the improvement and cultivation of which he devoted his time and energies with gratifying success. He is a good manager and has proven an enterprising citizen of the Flathead country, being a constant booster for this section of the state as a place for either business or residence, and he has given evidence of his faith by platting a portion of his land along the Whitefish River into residence lots, which he has put onto the market, reserving for his permanent home thirty acres along the river and adjoining the townsite. He has erected an attractive and comfortable modern home, situated on the Kalispell road. Mr. McConville has never regretted his coming to the West, for he has been a witness of and a participant in the most wonderful period of advancement and development that this country has ever seen. He came to this section of Montana before Billings or Livingston were founded, and when Colson was the chief town in that locality.

Before leaving Mr. McConville's life record mention should be made of the fact that during the troublous days of the Civil war, when he was but sixteen years of age, he enlisted in the Union army, but was not at that time accepted because of his youth. Sometime later, at Dubuque, Iowa, he enlisted in Company G, Eleventh Regiment, United States Regular Infantry, with which he went to Vicksburg. From there he went to various places in the South, doing guard duty most of the time, and at the close of the war he received an honorable discharge at Galveston, Texas.

Mr. McConville was married to Anna Kirk, a native of Scotland, and they are the parents of three children, Chester, George and Ruth. Chester enlisted in the United States navy during the recent World war and was assigned to the hospital department. He is now in the Naval Reserve Force and will not receive his discharge until 1922. During his active service he was located at the Bremerton (Washington) Navy Yard. George is assisting his father on the home ranch and Ruth is attending school.

Politically Mr. McConville is a stanch supporter of the republican party, to which he has given his life-long support. Fraternally he has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for more than fifty years. Although a quiet and unassuming man, with no ambition for public position or leadership, he has contributed much to the material, moral and civic advancement of the community, while his admirable qualities of head and heart and the straightforward, upright course of his daily life have won for him the esteem and confidence of the circles in which he has moved.

JOHN H. HENNESSY. Each man who strives to fulfill his part in connection with human life and human activities is deserving of recognition, whatever may be his field of endeavor, and it is the function of works of this nature to prepare for future generations an authentic record concerning those represented in its pages. The value of such publications is certain to be cumulative for all time to come, showing forth the individual and specific accomplishments of which generic history is ever engendered. The record of the gentleman whose name forms the caption to these lines, and who is widely and favorably known as a successful hotel man at Whitefish, Flathead County, is worthy of perpetuation on the pages of history, as we will readily ascertain by a study of the same in the following paragraphs.

J. H. Hennessy is a native of the State of Wisconsin and the son of John and Ellen Hennessy. He was reared on the paternal farmstead, and secured his education in the public schools of his home neighborhood. Upon reaching mature years he engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native State, but later moved to the State of Minnesota, and still later to North Dakota, where during the following seventeen years he was engaged in farming. He also operated a threshing outfit there and did a large amount of work in that line. In 1904 Mr. Hennessy came to the Flathead country, Montana, and located in Whitefish, where he engaged in the hotel business. The Whitefish Hotel, of which he is the proprietor, is one of the best known caravansaries in Western Montana and for many years has been a favorite stopping place for transient guests and for those who desire the best of service. The hotel is eligibly situated and splendidly furnished, every effort possible being made to make the guests of the hotel feel at home, the spirit of hospitality and good cheer being in evidence to an unusual degree for a public place.

Mr. Hennessy was married to Margaret Gunning, who was born in Wisconsin, the daughter of John and Mary Gunning. She was educated in the public schools of Richmond, Wisconsin, completing her studies at the school conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph. To Mr. and Mrs. Hennessy were born six children, namely: Edward, Beatrice, Mary Ellen, Bernadette, Elaine and Vincent. Mary Ellen, who was a graduate of the high school at Whitefish, became the wife of Dr. W. E. Clifford, of Kalispell. Of the children born to the subject and wife only one is now living, Elaine, who is a student in the Whitefish schools.

Politically Mr. Hennessy is a stanch supporter of the democratic party, while fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Columbus. He and his wife are faithful members of St. Charles Roman Catholic Church at Whitefish, to which they are generous contributors. Mr. Hennessy is a close reader and keen observer, taking an intelligent interest in passing events and holds decided opinions of the great questions of the day. He is a great admirer of President Woodrow Wilson, whom he looks upon as one of the greatest characters of the present age—a man who has given his life to the cause of universal peace. Mr. Hennessy is a strong booster for the Flathead country—in fact, he is one of the most active members of the Boosters' Club of Whitefish. As a man reliable and trustworthy in every respect, public spirited in his attitude toward every movement for the general good, he has won and retains to a notable degree the confidence and esteem of the entire community.

Edward. Lamoureux

E. B. Knott. One of the leading business men and best known citizens of Flathead County, Montana, is E. B. Knott, a member of the well known and popular firm of Knott & Thurson Mercantile Company at Whitefish. He has succeeded in his chosen life work because he has been persistent and energetic and honorable in his dealings with the public, and he has therefore had the confidence and good will of all, which are indispensable factors if one succeeds in any line where the public has to be depended upon.

E. B. Knott was born in Lima, Ohio, and is the son of William and Eliza Knott. He was reared to manhood in his native town and attended its public schools in his youth. In 1869 he went to Rochester, Fulton County, Indiana, where he engaged in business, remaining there until 1880, when he went to Texas. In the Lone Star State he was employed for four and a half years as a range rider in the cattle business. Later he went to Ord, Nebraska, where he was engaged in the stock business until he came to Kalispell, about sixteen years ago, since which time he has been closely and prominently identified with the mercantile and amusement affairs of Kalispell and Whitefish. Here he first engaged in the real estate business, in which he met with pronounced success, but about three years ago he formed a partnership in the general mercantile business which is now conducted under the title of the Knott & Thurson Mercantile Company. The store is one of the leading establishments of the kind in Flathead County and enjoys a large and constantly increasing business, which can be attributed to the high quality of the goods carried and the prompt service and courteous treatment, while the members of the firm are personally popular in the community because of their splendid personal qualities. The store, which is located on the corner of Second and Baker streets, is 52 by 120 in size and has recently undergone extensive improvements, including the construction of a mezzanine floor, which is now given exclusively to the display of furniture, while the lower floor is devoted to hardware and kindred lines. A large and well selected stock is carried and the concern is one of the most successful and reliable houses in the city. Mr. Knott, aside from his mercantile interests, is also responsible for the establishment of one of the most popular and attractive amusement enterprises in the community, this being the Princess Theater, which he established several years ago and which already has justified the judgment of Mr. Knott in its inception. It is artistically and conveniently arranged and enjoys a deserved popularity.

Mr. Knott was married to Emma Stone, who was born in England, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Stone, and to them has been born a daughter, Laura E., now the wife of Harry Taylor, who is manager of the Western Union Telegraph office at Kalispell. Mrs. Taylor is well educated and specialized in music and dramatic art, in which she has attained not only great excellence, but also a wide reputation. She is now acting as pianist at the Princess Theater, where her music delights the people who attend there nightly. In 1918 occurred the death of Mrs. Emma Knott, and her death was sincerely mourned, for she was a woman of kindly qualities of character and had endeared herself to a host of warm friends throughout the community.

Politically Mr. Knott gives his support to the republican party, while fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is an attendant of and a generous contributor to the Episcopal Church. Mr. Knott is one of the most enthusiastic boosters for the Flathead country and loses no opportunity to spread abroad the good features of the locality. He is an intense admirer of its scenery, which rivals that of Switzerland in many respects. He has worked hard for the success which is now his, and has honorably earned the reputation which he enjoys as one of the leading and public-spirited citizens of his community. He is held in high esteem by all who know him, for he has thrown the force of his strong individuality and sterling integrity into making the community what it is.

Edward Lamoureux. The older settlers of Montana found an entirely different condition of affairs when they came here to those which prevail today. Prior to the opening up of this region for homesteading the open range was free to any man who desired to let his cattle feed on it, and many fortunes were made in the cattle industry by those who realized the desirability of taking advantage of such opportunities. It was difficult for these pioneer cattlemen to realize that their great herds must give way to the encroachments of settlers, but the more progressive among them made other arrangements for continuing their cattle raising, or turned their energies into other channels. One of the men who has the distinction of being a very early settler and pioneer cattleman of Hot Springs is Edward Lamoureux, now living retired, but formerly one of the important factors in the cattle industry of this part of the state.

Edward Lamoureux was born in Canada in 1834, of French-Canadian ancestry, a son of Julian and Mary (Cyr) Lamoureux. He left Canada in young manhood, and coming to the United States was for a time engaged in mining in California, but then came to Montana and embarked in the cattle industry. At the time he came to this vicinity there was only one settler, an Indian, and Mr. Lamoureux bought his interest. Then wild game was very plentiful, and Mr. Lamoureux became a mighty hunter and has a number of deer head and bearskins as trophies of his skill.

He was a man of good sense and anxious to profit by any opening which occurred, and so conducted a ferry at Cedar Creek, and while there used to kill on an average three deer a day, furnishing his less energetic neighbors with venison. His hospitality has been well known for many years, and it is his pride that no one ever came to his house for help without receiving it. In the early days there were practically no taverns or places where the traveler could receive food and shelter save at the homes of the settlers, and to their credit be it said that few ever refused entertainment, such as it was.

Coming to Hot Springs before the virtue of the waters became famed the country over, Mr. Lamoureux has lived to see many changes and to welcome those who have joined him in the upbuilding of the community in which he has always taken such great pride. He was a friend to the Indians and sought to give them a fair deal. It is told of him that when one Indian of his acquaintance died Mr. Lamoureux took up some of the boards of the floor of his cabin, made a coffin out of them, in which he placed the body which he had clothed with some of his garments. During the period this Indian's widow survived him Mr. Lamoureux cared for her, and when she died took up some more boards for her coffin.

Those were exciting days, and many incidents occurred which Mr. Lamoureux relates entertainingly. Four Indians at one time attacked a party of white men, freighting a load of provisions, at Libby, Montana, and killed them. Two of the Indians escaped, the others being killed. A party of white men went to the chief of their tribe and demanded the surrender of these men, and they were handed over, and one of them was hung in the manner of the day, by placing a rope around his neck, throwing the other end over the branch of a tree, the Indian being on horseback. When the rope was properly secured the horse was driven out from under the condemned man, and the body was left dangling. The other Indian broke away from his captors and tried to go free by jumping into the river, but they shot him, and his dead body drifted ashore much further down the stream.

Mr. Lamoureux was married when a young man to Mary Matt, who died about 1905, since which time he has lived at his home, a comfortable residence surrounded by forty acres of land, being cared for by Mrs. F. Richard, who was with Mrs. Lamoureux in her last illness and gave her a daughter's affection and attention. The maiden name of Mrs. Richard was Rosa Tanguay, and she is a very efficient housekeeper. In politics Mr. Lamoureux is a democrat. Among other of the oldtimers with whom Mr. Lamoureux maintained friendship was Father Ravelli, the first priest in this part of the county, whom Mr. Lamoureux used to drive to keep his appointments with the Indians. The years sit lightly on this venerable pioneer, who, although eighty-five years of age, can saddle and mount a horse as he used to years ago when that animal was practically the only means of getting from one place to another in this western country. It is interesting and instructive to listen to Mr. Lamoureux's recollections of the early days and draw a contrast between them and the present, and he takes pride in the fact that he has borne his part in the development and expansion of this region.

Samuel Hilburn. Among the strong and influential citizens of Western Montana, the record of whose lives have become an essential part of the history of that section of the great Treasure State, the gentleman whose name appears above has exerted a beneficial influence throughout the community where he resides. His chief characteristics are keenness of perception, a tireless energy, honesty of purpose and motive and every-day common sense, which have enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also to largely contribute to the moral and material advancement of the county.

Samuel Hilburn is a native son of the old Buckeye State, having been born at Xenia, Ohio, and he is the son of Cal and Louisa (Fleishman) Hilburn. He was reared at home and received a good practical education in the public schools of Xenia. He supplemented this training by a thorough course in the Bryant & Stratton Business College in Detroit. Thus equipped for a business career, Mr. Hilburn came to Montana in January, 1882, and settled at Miles City, where he engaged in the mercantile business. Later he located at Terry, this state, where also he was engaged in the operation of a store until May, 1891, when he came to the Flathead country, locating at Kalispell, where for three years he was engaged in the mercantile business. He was then elected treasurer of Flathead County, serving one term, and then, at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, he enlisted in the Montana National Guard, in which he received a commission as first lieutenant. He became a member of Company H, First Regiment of Montana Volunteer Infantry, and during the war he was promoted to a captaincy. He was sent to the Philippine Islands, and in that country took part in a number of the most important engagements of the conflict over there, including Cavite and Manila. He remained there one year, and received his honorable discharge at San Francisco in October, 1899. He then returned to Kalispell and was engaged in the mercantile business until 1900, when he was again elected county treasurer. So satisfactory was his administration of the office that in 1902 he was elected to succeed himself, thus serving two terms, or four years, his last term expiring on March 1, 1905. In the meantime Mr. Hilburn had been elected mayor of Kalispell, in which office he served two years—a period characterized by a number of splendid improvements and a thorough business-like administration of the city's public affairs. Upon the expiration of his term of office he engaged in the warehouse and store business, which engaged his attention until June, 1914, when he was appointed postmaster of Kalispell. He was reappointed to that position in September, 1918, and is the present incumbent of the office. Mr. Hilburn literally believes that "public office is a public trust," and in demonstration of that belief he has so conducted the affairs of the office as to win the approbation of both the postoffice department and the patrons of the office.

On November 22, 1915, Mr. Hilburn was married to Mrs. Grace Close, a native of Minnesota, and a lady who has endeared herself to a large circle of warm friends.

Politically Mr. Hilburn is a stanch supporter of the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Spanish-American War Veterans. Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Hilburn are members of the Church of Christ, Scientist, at Kalispell. Mr. Hilburn has to a remarkable degree enjoyed the confidence of his fellow citizens of Flathead County and the City of Kalispell. In no way is this fact emphasized in so unmistakable a manner as the unanimity with which he has been elected to the various offices of the county and city, he never having been defeated for any office to which he has aspired. He is eminently deserving of the success which he has attained, for he has forced his way to the front through obstacles, overcoming conditions which would have discouraged many less courageous; but he has within him those attributes which never fail of success when backed by energy and ambition. He has ever stood at the forefront in advocating measures which promised to advance the best interests of the city, and he has richly earned the confidence and esteem of the people.

George T. Hodgson came to Montana in 1875 with his wife and one child. He remained only a brief time, but has vivid knowledge of conditions prevailing at Helena and other points in the state. Now a properous retired rancher living at Kalispell. Mr. Hodgson knew that town when wild grass grew several feet high and furnished substantial pasture for great herds of cattle on the very ground where the city's best homes are now built. In Helena he saw miners running their ditches and digging for gold in the very streets, and he met many wagons piled high with buffalo hides, that being one of the chief commodities of commerce in that day.

Mr. Hodgson was born on the banks of the St. Lawrence River in Canada, the old homestead being in one of the picturesque regions of Canada. His parents were William and Mary (Archie) Hodgson, and he was fourth in a family of ten children. He received his education in the public schools and was working as a clerk in a store when in 1873 he married Miss Euphemia Marcure. She was born in New Brunswick, a daughter of Regis and Ozeta (Theriault) Marcure, of French ancestry. She was educated in public schools to the age of ten and after that in a Sisters School in New Brunswick. For two years after his marriage Mr. Hodgson continued clerking for a general merchant.

In 1875 he and his wife came to Montana. He lived at Missoula six months, being employed by a mercantile firm there. He had come west by railroad train as far as Sioux City, then took a boat up the Missouri River and was thirty-five days in reaching Fort Benton. Before getting to Missoula there was another two weeks' journey by covered wagons. Mr. Hodgson was not satisfied with the Montana of forty-five years ago, and leaving the territory he journeyed by way of Ogden, Utah, and thence by railroad to New Brunswick, where he formed a partnership with a cousin and established a country store in the state of Maine. They did a prosperous and thriving business there for ten years. His earlier visit to the Northwest had impressed him with the charm of the mountain region, and Mr. and Mrs. Hodgson in 1886 disposed of their interests in the East and coming to Montana settled in Flathead County. Mr. Hodgson filed on a homestead, proved up and was soon doing a prosperous business as a farmer and stock man. He developed a fine farm of 240 acres and on that farm he and his wife laid the foundation of the prosperity they enjoy today. In 1917 they sold the farm and bought a fine residence on First Avenue, East, in Kalispell.

Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hodgson: George, Charles, Sophia, Mary, Lena, Emma, Leonard, Alvenia, William and Fred. All are living except Fred. George married Miss Lena Pauline and is a rancher near Missoula. Sophia is the wife of John McIntosh, an automobile man at Kalispell, and they have three children, Allan, Frank and Helen. Mary is the wife of Burt Hubbard, an electrician at Troy, Montana, and their children are Burnett, Clark, Marie, Kenneth and George. Lena is the wife of Charles Watson, a druggist at Ontario, Oregon, and her children are Phyllis, Alice and Margaret. Emma is the wife of William Monroe, of Seattle. Alvenia married Robert Boreland and has a daughter Roberta. William is a butter maker at Butte.

Mrs. Hodgson was reared in the Catholic faith. Mr. Hodgson is hundred per cent republican in politics. He was elected clerk of the school board and served for a number of years as a member. He and his wife sent their three youngest children to the Kalispell High School.

JOHN KENNEDY, assessor of Flathead County, is one of the aggressive young men of this region who has risen through his own efforts to be one of the best representatives of Montana, although he is of Canadian birth, coming into the world at Kingston. He is the son of John and Maggie (Shea) Kennedy, and the youngest of their thirteen children.

Mr. Kennedy was graduated from the Seaforth High School of his native country but came to the United States in 1891, locating at Kalispell, where for fifteen years he was connected with Listel's Cafe. In 1913 he was elected chief clerk for the county assessor, and served as such until 1916. In 1917 he was elected assessor on the democratic ticket and has recently been re-elected to the same office. Mr. Kennedy made application for his papers of naturalization at Saint Paul, Minnesota, and his second papers were taken out at Kalispell.

Mrs. Kennedy was a widow, Mrs. Hattie Reynolds, when she and Mr. Kennedy were married. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gould of Wisconsin. Mr. Kennedy is an Odd Fellow and his wife a Rebekah, and she is also an enthusiastic worker in the Woman's Relief Corps of Anderson Camp, Grand Army of the Republic, her father having served his country as a soldier in the war between the North and the South.

Since he became a member of the official force of Flathead County, Mr. Kennedy has proven his worth as a man, and is regarded as one of the county's most valuable citizens. He is earnest, steadfast and reliable, and is rendering a valuable service to the taxpayers by placing a fair and equitable value on their possessions, not permitting any outside influence to swerve him in his work.

MAJOR JOHN DELANEY, one of the men who is serving his country in the United States army as a member of the Russian Railroad Service Corps, is held in the highest esteem by his fellow citizens of Whitefish. Mr. Delaney was a master mechanic at Whitefish when he entered the service of his country and was sent from San Francisco to Japan, where he spent a year, and then went forward to Vladivostok and Harbin and still later to Omsk in the interior of Russia. He was promoted to the rank of major after reaching Russia, and is assistant superintendent of construction work. With his comrades he is experiencing the hardships incident to the occupancy of this region, but is enthusiastic in his support of the administration, and firm in his adherence to the democratic party and its principles.

On September 21, 1915, Major Delaney was married to Mrs. Mullin, a widow, with a daughter, Vera, who was graduated from the Flathead High School, and is now a student of the Downer College at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Mrs. Delaney was born in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, a daughter of George and Emeline Opdike. She attended the public schools of her native state, and later took a course in a nurse's training school, from which she was graduated, and for the subsequent eight years was a trained nurse of Kalispell. She is now conducting the Radium Hotel of Whitefish with remarkable success, and is recognized as one of the best business women of the county. She belongs to those brave American women who in order to release their husbands for military duty threw themselves into the breach and developed into active forces in the industrial world.

Major Delaney is a member of the order of Elks, and his wife of the Royal Neighbors. In his religious faith Major Delaney is a Catholic. Having served the Great Northern Railroad Company as a master mechanic for some years he was well fitted for his present work with the United States forces, and those who knew him in this country know that the work carried on under his supervision is of the best of its kind. He has many warm personal friends in Flathead County who are following his career and they, with his family, feel very proud of him and of the sacrifices he has made in order to uphold this administration in its foreign policies. Both Mr.

and Mrs. Delaney are very fine people and are rightly numbered among the best representatives of Flathead County, loyal and patriotic citizens.

Robert J. De Mers. The merchant is the man who comes into close commercial touch with the people of any neighborhood, and he knows them for what they really are. In dealing with them he learns of their failings and good qualities, and if asked seldom errs in placing the correct estimate upon their rectitude. His position is an important one, for not only does he accommodate the public by furnishing it with the kind of goods they want, but he also adds to the importance of his region by increasing its financial transactions, and generally a man who can successfully conduct a mercantile establishment possesses requirements necessary in a good citizen, else his prosperity would not be of long duration. Such a man is Robert J. De Mers, vice president and manager of the Hot Springs Commercial Company, one of the leading mercantile establishments in this section of the country.

Robert J. De Mers was born at Jocko, Montana, the old Indian agency, a son of Jacques and Leona G. (Garnot) De Mers, both of French ancestry. They had two sons and two daughters, namely: Robert J., Jacques Julian, Corinne and Blanche. At an early day Jacques De Mers came to Montana and was an extensive trader in this state and Indian Territory, with posts at Coeur d'Alene, De Mersville and Frenchtown, and developed into the most important and successful trader in the northwest. He was a man of remarkable insight into human nature, and great kindness of heart. Although in business to make money, he never turned an honest man away, and would give credit whenever he was convinced the man asking it was worthy, even if he was not sure of any payment of his account. His own integrity was unflinching, and he was so recognized as a man of his word that his mere spoken promise was taken as another man's bond. Living as he did at the outposts of civilization, oftentimes his house would be the only one for many miles around, and he kept his door open for all travelers, entertaining them all with an open-handed hospitality not easily imagined in these days of self-centered people. Although it is now many years since this most excellent man rendered his last account, he is remembered with grateful affection by the older settlers, and his example of industry and honesty is held up to the younger business men as one worthy of emulation. When he died in 1889 the entire state lost one of its representative and honorable men, and the mercantile world a potent factor.

Robert J. De Mers had the misfortune to lose his good father when he was only a lad, but he still remembers his teachings, and has shaped his life according to the admirable precepts of that excellent man. He first attended school in a French settlement in Montana, and completed his educational training at Missoula. He then entered the Missoula Mercantile Company, and remained with that concern until he was twenty-two years old, at which time he went to Butte and engaged in a grocery business, which he conducted until his location at Hot Springs, at which time he bought the stock of the Hot Springs Commercial Company, and continued the business under the same name.

Robert J. De Mers was married to Lynetta A. Little, born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Joseph and Mary (Dunlop) Little. Mrs. De Mers was educated in the schools of Pittsburgh, and took a course in stenography and typewriting. Desiring to acquire something she could fall back upon, she came West and filed on a homestead, much against the will of her family, who felt that she was too venturesome in leaving home for what they regarded was a wild, western country. She came here with the intention of only remaining until she had proved up her homestead, but found more than she imagined was awaiting her in this land of promise, an excellent and devoted husband, a happy home, and, as the years went by, three children, Jacques, Margaret Dunlop and Martha Elinor. Mr. De Mers is a Catholic, and Mrs. De Mers an Episcopalian. In politics he is a stanch republican, although he is the only one of his family to espouse its principles.

The store of which Mr. De Mers is the virtual owner is one worthy of the most metropolitan center. A full line of timely goods is carried, including dry goods, hardware, clothing, boots and shoes, implements, furniture and similar commodities, so that new settlers are able to outfit themselves with everything they need, and the old ones to replenish their homes and ranches.

Mr. De Mers possesses in a large measure those qualities necessary to secure success in a mercantile undertaking of this nature. He is genial, wholesouled and progressive, and a worthy son of a most worthy father. Mrs. De Mers is a highly educated and capable lady who supports her husband in his undertakings and his encouragement of civic improvements. They have gathered about them a circle of very congenial people, and enjoy social relaxation in their company, entertaining and being entertained as only westerners can.

M. M. Hori, proprietor of Hori's Hotel and Cafe at Whitefish, is one of the leading hotelmen of this part of Montana and a man widely known and everywhere respected. He is a native of Japan, who when twenty-four years old came to the United States, and for the past fourteen years has been engaged in the hotel, bakery and restaurant business in the same place. Twenty-three years ago he came to Montana, and for eight years was at Kalispell, and then came to Whitefish. In 1919 he completed a $50,000 hotel and cafe, artistically and luxuriantly furnished and supplied with every modern comfort. The service is perfect, the cuisine excellent and Mr. Hori is a past master in making his guests thoroughly comfortable. In the beautiful lobby of this modern hotel are to be seen some of the most magnificently preserved specimens of elk, buffalo and deer heads to be found on the western coast. The entire establishment is spotless, and the affairs of the hotel are conducted in an efficient manner. Mr. Hori has the hotel supplied every day with fresh fruits and vegetables from his own ranch, and his registered herd of Holstein cattle supply the milk, cream and butter consumed by his guests.

In addition to his hotel property Mr. Hori owns a fine ranch property one mile east of the City of Whitefish, and takes great pride in his fine herd, one of the best of the Holstein strain to be found in Montana. In addition to supplying his hotel Mr. Hori maintains a fine dairy with the product from this herd.

Mr. Hori was married after coming to the United States to M. Aya. An excellent business man, he has known how to put his natural talents to good use, and his success, while remarkable, is not to be wondered at, for he has steadily and quietly progressed, and has fairly earned all he today possesses. He is one of the most popular landlords in this part of the country, and his natural courtesy and unfailing efficiency have won for him a large and constantly increasing patronage not only from the traveling public, but those of Whitefish and the surrounding country who prefer to shift to his shoulders the responsibilities attendant upon home making in these days of high prices and shortage of household servants. The people of Whitefish are very proud of the prestige an establishment of this high class confers upon the community, and hold Mr. Hori up as an example of what can be accomplished by one provided he is willing to exert himself and make use of the talents given him by nature.

F. P. Scott, surveyor of Flathead County, and a man very widely known and universally respected, belongs to that class called self-made, for he owes his present position in his community to his own efforts and uprightness of character. He was born at Boulder, Colorado, a son of W. T. and Alta (Green) Scott. Both were born in Iowa and became the parents of three children, of whom F. P. Scott was the youngest.

After attending the public schools of his native state F. P. Scott was graduated from the State College of Colorado, following which he secured the position of civil engineer for the Huntley reclamation project in the service of the United States government, and was at Huntley for four years as civil and irrigation engineer, and then for two years was with the Saint Mary's storage unit of the Milk River project, which added a large and valuable amount of land to the state. Mr. Scott then came to Kalispell, where he was employed as deputy surveyor for three years, and then, in the fall of 1908, was elected to the office of county surveyor, which he still holds. While with the Huntley project Mr. Scott was canal superintendent, and had charge of the field work as acting division engineer of the Milk River project. Since coming to Kalispell he has been mainly engaged in concrete construction work on the bridges and roads of Flathead County, very much improving all of them, and making this section one of the best in the state.

Mr. Scott was married to Miss Angeline McIntyre, of Fort Collins, Colorado, a daughter of John C. McIntyre. Mr. and Mrs. Scott became the parents of two children, namely: Helen Elizabeth and Florence Elinor. In politics Mr. Scott is a republican. He is a Mason and a member of the college fraternity Alpha Kappa Epsilon. Mr. Scott has used his knowledge and experience to forward public improvements, and is an expert in his line. His interest in the bridges and roads of Flathead County is a warm and living issue with him, and he takes pride in what he has already accomplished and has plans for many other changes in the near future. Such men as he are a decided asset to any community and Kalispell is to be congratulated in the acquisition of him and his experienced services. Both he and Mrs. Scott are popular and have gathered about them a delightful and congenial circle of friends.

S. C. Bibee, clerk and recorder of Flathead County, is one of the representative men of his community, who has proven his worth as a man and a citizen. He was born near Shibley's Point, Missouri, a son of James P. and Sarah E. (Brooks) Bibee, being the eldest in a family of five children. After attending the rural schools of his native county S. C. Bibee took a course in the Kirksville State Normal School and fitted himself for office work during the time he was attending the school, spending 3½ years in the United States postal service to provide himself with the necessities of life. In 1910 he came to Montana and became a clerk in the Polson First National Bank, and later became assistant cashier of the Security State Bank of the same place. In 1910 he came to Kalispell to become deputy clerk and recorder of Flathead County, and in the fall of 1918 was elected to the office on the republican ticket, and is still holding it.

Mr. Bibee was married at Browning, Missouri, to Miss Mayme E. Holding, a daughter of LeRoy Holding. Mr. and Mrs. Bibee have one son, Donald Brooks, who was born June 1, 1911. Fraternally Mr. Bibee belongs to the Odd Fellows. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bibee are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in whose good work they take an active part.

Mr. Bibee is a fine type of American manhood, progressive, studious and cultivated. Possessing the confidence of an appreciative public, his advancement is watched with interest and other gifts within the power of his constituents are likely to be made him in the future if he cares to remain in public office, for his worth is recognized and voters want him to have charge of their affairs, for they know that if he has they are certain of receiving a fair deal in every way. In his twofold office Mr. Bibee is discharging his duties in a worthy and efficient manner, which is creditable to himself and his locality. He has made good in every position he has ever held, and has followed the rule of his life to live within his means, to always save something and to render a faithful service to the public. Such men are rare, and when found are appreciated and their services are eagerly sought. Personally Mr. Bibee is pleasant and accommodating, and his friends are legion and enthusiastic with reference to his abilities.

Leslie Duncan. A man of recognized business and executive ability, Leslie Duncan, manager of the Helena branch of the National Biscuit Company, holds a position of responsibility and trust, having full charge of the firm's interests in this city. A son of J. H. Duncan, he was born January 30, 1880, in Cooper County, Missouri, of thrifty Scotch lineage, his emigrant ancestor having emigrated from Scotland to Missouri in pioneer days.

Born in 1858 in Missouri, J. H. Duncan was there bred and educated. Engaging in agricultural pursuits when young, he was engaged in farming in Cooper County until 1884, when he removed with his family to Saline County, Missouri, where he was similarly employed for four years. In 1888 he came to Helena, Montana, which has since been his home. Until 1892 he was in the employ of Sanford & Evans, pioneer merchants of this city, and for several years thereafter worked in the Helena Flour Mill. Making a change of occupation, he was employed for some time by the old Montana Lumber Company, after which he was employed by John T. Murphy, a pioneer grocer of Helena, remaining with him until he sold his business to Bach, Cory & Company. Accepting a position with the new firm, he was manager of its wholesale grocery department until the partnership was dissolved. The following four years he was janitor at the State Capitol, after which he served as jailor during his son Rolla's term as sheriff of Lewis & Clark County. He is now custodian at the State Capitol. He is a stanch republican in politics, and for many years has been an active member of Red Cross Lodge No. 32, Knights of Pythias.

J. H. Duncan married in Missouri Amelia Susan McMahan, who was born in that state in 1861, and to them children have been born as follows: Leslie, the special subject of this sketch; Rolla, engaged in the theatrical business at Lewiston, Idaho; Thomas, who died at the age of two years; Stella, living in Helena, is the widow of Charles ne Flette, formerly superintendent of the Lewis & Clark County Poor Farm; Elmer lived but two years; Mabel, wife of Emmett McMahan, an oil promoter of California;

Lillian, wife of E. C. Kempter, who has charge of the State Nurseries at Helena; John, who died at the age of two years; Rowena, wife of James Hix, who was until recently engaged in farming at Roxbury, Idaho, is now living in Helena; Irene, attending the Helena Business College; and Grayce, who is with the M. S. T. & T. Company of Helena.

Completing the course of instruction in the public schools of Helena, Leslie Duncan took a business course at the International School of Correspondence at Scranton, Pennsylvania. At the early age of fourteen years he began life as a wage earner in the clothing and dry goods store of L. Manheim, serving as a clerk, and when, about 1896, his employer transferred his business to Anaconda, Montana, Mr. Duncan accompanied him and helped him establish his new store. Returning then to Helena, he clerked six months for Mr. Manheim's successor, P. J. Shellhorn. The following eight years Mr. Duncan served as a clerk in the grocery of C. G. Stubbs, who then sold out to Weinstein & Company. Forming a partnership then with C. G. Stubbs and D. E. White, the firm thus formed established a grocery in the Sixth Ward of Helena, under the name of the Helena Trading Company. Selling his interest in the business at the end of three years, Mr. Duncan accepted a position with the National Biscuit Company, assuming charge of the candy shipping department. A year later, he was made superintendent and city salesman, a position of importance, and proved himself so competent in every respect that in May, 1916, he was made manager of the company's largest establishment in Helena. Under the efficient supervision of Mr. Duncan the business of the Helena branch of the National Biscuit Company, whose plant and offices are located at 1308-22 Boulder Avenue has grown with surprising rapidity, its trade being extensive and highly lucrative.

Religiously Mr. Duncan, true to the faith of his Scotch ancestors, is a stanch Presbyterian. Politically he is identified with the republican party. Fraternally he is a member of State Treasure Camp No. 6306, Modern Woodmen of America; and of Helena Aerie No. 16, Fraternal Order of Eagles. He resides at 660 North Ewing Street, his home being a center of social activity.

Mr. Duncan married in 1897, in Helena, Miss Myrtle Fowler, a daughter of D. D. and Ida (Grandie) Fowler, residents of Seattle, Washington, where Mr. Fowler is actively engaged in mercantile pursuits. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan, namely: Wesley, born July 4, 1899, was graduated from the Helena High School and is now bookkeeper for the National Biscuit Company; Russell, born August 2, 1900, is employed in the packing department of the National Biscuit Company; and Raleigh, born March 22, 1907. In 1918 Wesley Duncan, the eldest child of the parental household, enlisted for the World war in the Marine Corps, and after special training at Mare Island, California, was qualified as a sharp shooter. He was sent then to Quantico, Virginia, and was ready to go overseas when the armistice was signed.

ELMER L. CAIN, of Vandalia, Valley County, came into Montana in 1890 and began his career with the state at Saco. He has spent the last twenty years on the Valley Ranch on Milk River, where for some years he has been identified with stock raising and farming. He is essentially a stock man, one of the old Texas trailsmen who from 1890 to 1893 made trips across the plains from the Lone Star State to Montana.

Mr. Cain was born in Schoharie County, New York, August 25, 1869, a son of Anson and Lora (Phillips) Cain. During his early life the father was a farmer, but finally became a railroad shopman at Utica, New York, and it is believed he spent the remainder of his life in that vicinity. Mrs. Cain subsequently married a Mr. Miller, and she died at Starrucca, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Cain had but two children, Elmer and Minnie.

Elmer L. Cain was reared as an orphan lad and lived in various homes while growing to mature years, and finally fell to the care of his maternal uncle, Joshua Phillips, one of the earliest settlers of Ness county, Kansas. Mr. Phillips went into that region with the New York State Colony, but he subsequently went back east, and when he returned to Kansas in 1883 he brought his nephew with him. The latter attended school at old Schoharie, Ness County, during the winters and rode the range herding cattle during the summer months in Kansas and later in Colorado, for which he was given a man's wages when yet but a boy in years. He and his uncle separated at Las Animas, Colorado, the uncle going to Aspen. For several years afterward they lost track of each other, until by accident the uncle saw the announcement of his nephew's marriage in a Montana paper, and he came down into the Milk River Valley at Vandalia from the west end of the state to visit him. Mr. Phillips is now a neighbor of the Cain ranch.

Elmer L. Cain went from Ness County, Kansas, to Texas in a spring wagon, in company with Clarence Broadbrook, of Saco, and becoming connected with the "N-N" Cattle Company they started north with a trail herd from White Deer, Texas, to Montana, loading the cattle at Panhandle City and unloading them at Windover, Wyoming, trailing them from there on to Prairie Elk, and south of Oswego, Montana. Returning south, Mr. Cain and his partner went to Kansas City, where they remained during the winter, and in the following spring continued the return journey to Texas, from whence they started for another trip over the trail from the same locality and for the same company, but this time drove the entire distance and delivered the stock three months and twelve days after starting. The cattle were delivered to the N-N ranch on the Little Dry, between the Missouri and the Yellowstone rivers, and Mr. Cain spent the remainder of the season with that company with its beef wagon.

Mr. Cain then located north of Hinsdale, and in the following year took a bunch of cow horses to Orin Junction, Wyoming, but went on himself to Trinidad, Colorado, trailing a herd of cattle back to Dodson, Montana, for the Circle Diamond people, the Bloom Cattle Company, completed the season with them, and then returned to his old employers, the "N-N." In the fall of 1894 he began work for Kennedy & Broadbrook, one of whom was his old partner, continuing with them while he worked for wages, a period of about five years, and then entered stock raising for himself on Milk River, at the site of his present ranch.

Although Mr. Cain entered his homestead northwest of Saco, he abandoned it after proof was made, at the end of seven years, and took up his desert claim east of Vandalia, which was the nucleus of his ranch here. While engaged in the cattle business he raised range stock and run them under the brand "U quarter circle 9" on the left hip, and the few cattle he still owns bear this brand. He shipped annually during many years, and during his shipments encountered the panic year of 1907, when there was practically no market for cattle. This particular consignment of seven cars met so stringent a money market that he received but $100 cash on the entire shipment and settled the balance with paper.

G. M. Embrey

Mr. Cain has developed a ranch of 800 acres, which represents public lands taken up by both himself and his wife. His home is the old-fashioned log building of five rooms, and his barn is the real conspicuous improvement of the ranch, a building 30 by 40 feet, with a leanto 16 by 40 feet. He is raising both grain and alfalfa, specializing in maccaroni wheat, which has yielded him forty bushels to the acre, and his rye has yielded thirty bushels to the acre. An irrigation system for his valley lands, one of the large private systems of the county and providing a reservoir area of 160 acres, is one of the features of his farming of first importance.

Mr. Cain has manifested a deep interest in the community schools, and for ten years was a member of the school board, during which time he helped to build five school houses in the district, buildings which are standard and reflect the spirit of progress of the community. In politics he is a democratic voter, casting his first presidential ballot for Mr. Cleveland in Glasgow in 1892. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity, belonging to Glasgow Lodge.

At Harlem, Montana, August 25, 1902 Mr. Cain was married to Miss Georgie L. McConnell, who came to Montana from Wilmington, Ohio. She was a teacher for a number of years in Savoy, Culbertson, Saco and Hinsdale. She is a graduate of the Wilmington High School, and became a first grade teacher in Montana as early as her teaching experience permitted. She was born in Ontario, Canada, February 28, 1878. She is a relative of Judge McConnell of Helena, Montana. Her mother's name before marriage was Margaret Carruthers, and she bore her husband ten children, namely: Samuel, of Helena; Mrs. Mary Holiday, of Washington, D. C.; Belle, of Wilmington, Ohio; Fred, who died at Butte, Montana; John, of Manitoba, Canada; William, who is with his brother John; David, of British Columbia; Rev. Thomas H., a Presbyterian minister in Florida; Mrs. Cain; and Robert G., of Wilmington, Ohio. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cain, Elmer Earl, Edith Margaret, Grace Belle, Bertha Louise, Fred Maxwell and Philip Rex.

Austin Morgan Embrey from boyhood to the present has found his business experience chiefly in groceries and provisions. He is widely known as a commission merchant in Montana, and at Great Falls is managing head of the Dairy Products Company of that city.

Mr. Embrey was born at Bealeton, Fauquier County, Virginia, November 12, 1878, a son of Charles O. and Samantha E. (Colbert) Embrey. His father was born in Virginia in 1837 and his mother in West Virginia in 1850. Charles O. Embrey was a Confederate soldier during the Civil war and was a member of Pickett's famous division in the battle of Gettysburg and in other campaigns. After the war he occupied his energies with general merchandising, farming and saw milling at Bealeton. He retired from business in 1909, and he and his wife now make their home at Washington, D. C. He is a Baptist and a democrat in politics. The Embreys are a virile and long-lived family. All the twelve children, seven daughters and five sons, born to Charles O. Embrey and wife are still living.

Austin M., sixth in age among these children, acquired his early education in the public schools of Virginia, but at the age of fifteen left home and went to work in the grocery store of his uncle, Austin Colbert. During the next four years he gained a great deal of detailed knowledge of merchandising and he also carefully saved his earnings to complete his higher education. He finished his education in Wood's Commercial College at Washington. Mr. Embrey had charge of a retail commission business at Greensburg, Pennsylvania, and also managed a wholesale butter and egg business at Pittsburgh. In November, 1906, he came to Montana, and at Butte was associated with the Henningson Produce Company as salesman and superintendent. In July, 1907, he opened a branch of this establishment at Great Falls, and had a financial interest in the concern. In 1916 he reorganized the business under the name of the Great Falls Dairy Products Company and has since been manager, secretary and treasurer of the corporation.

Mr. Embrey is affiliated with Euclid Lodge No. 58, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and the Great Falls Lodge of Perfection. He is a Rotarian and has been a director in the Great Falls Commercial Club for nine years. Politically he is a democrat and is a member of the Baptist Church.

June 23, 1910, Mr. Embrey married Elsie A. Bower, a native of Montana. They have one daughter, Faith Thurston.

Edward Engebritson. It is possible to say of Edward Engebritson, of Redstone, that he has done a man's work in whatever sphere and relationship destiny has placed him. Work has been the primary outlet for his energies and ambitions, and many persistent years have brought him a degree of success and community esteem thoroughly justified.

Mr. Engebritson, who is in point of service one of the older merchants and citizens of Redstone, was born in Chippewa County, Minnesota, February 19, 1876. His father, Christ Engebritson, was born near Christiania, Norway, and came to the United States at the age of eighteen, just after the Civil war. His first settlement was near Stockholm, Wisconsin. He had been trained as a gunsmith, and there being few opportunities to make a living in that occupation he turned his skill to blacksmithing. From Wisconsin he became a pioneer in Minnesota, conducted a shop at Lake City, and finally settled on a homestead in Chippewa County and devoted many years to farming. He died in 1915, at the age of seventy-six. He married Christina Rolighed, a native of Norway who died in early life. Their children were: Annetta, wife of Thomas Holte, of Chippewa County; Edward; and Dina, wife of Christ Johnson, of Swift County, Minnesota. By a second marriage Christ Engebritson had children named Peter, Carl, Even, Alfred, Fritjof, Otto and Stella.

Edward Engebritson grew up on his father's farm, and from the farm home attended the neighboring country school. On the farm was a blacksmith shop where his father continued his trade in combination with farming. In that shop Edward also worked at the anvil and bellows until he acquired considerable skill. He also worked out in summers in the harvest fields and threshing times. On leaving home he went to Minneapolis, secured employment as a cabinet maker, and spent most of his leisure hours away from work attending night school. He also did some college work in Minneapolis.

On leaving his native state Mr. Engebritson moved to North Dakota, entered a homestead near Crosby, but relinquished before proving up to engage in blacksmithing. He conducted a shop at Crosby for six years, and entered heartily into the spirit and activities of the community, serving as a member of the town council, as town clerk, justice of the peace, and chief of the volunteer fire department.

From North Dakota Mr. Engebritson came to Montana and identified himself with the Village of Redstone in its infancy. He entered the hardware business, succeeding Nels Rasmussen, and to that enterprise has devoted most of his time and attention ever since. He owns his business house in Redstone, and was an active member of the Redstone Improvement Association, which did some important development work here.

Mr. Engebritson is also an equal partner with Jack White in the Redstone Coal Mining Company. This industry was established by Mr. White in 1913. The company mine is near the station at Redstone and is a drift under the big hill almost overshadowing the town. The work has been carried back into the hill for a distance of 800 feet, and the tunnels now make a network providing air and easy access to the diggings. This is a lignite deposit, found in two main strata, and is of a quality to make it popular as fuel and through the operations of the company Redstone has become practically independent of outside supplies for heating and lighting.

Mr. Engebritson's father always voted the republican ticket in national affairs, and the son acquired the same party affiliation. The latter's first presidential vote was given to Major McKinley in 1900. He is affiliated with the Lodge of Masons at Redstone.

At Crosby, North Dakota, March 11, 1913, Mr. Engebritson married Miss Dora Wolford, who was born in Martin County, Minnesota, in 1875. She was liberally educated, attending a Minnesota college, and was a teacher until her marriage. Six years later, during the general shortage of teachers in the fall of 1919, she was prevailed upon to "substitute" in the Redstone schools, and taught during that winter. Mr. and Mrs. Engebritson have a daughter, Edith, born in January, 1914.

J. J. Cremans, proprietor of the popular Cadillac Hotel of Whitefish, has for some time been giving the traveling public a first class service and has completed the erection of a new brick hostelry which is one of the finest of its kind in Flathead County if not in this part of the state. Mr. Cremans is an old railroad man, and having traveled almost continuously in his younger days understands and appreciates the needs of those whose business takes them from their homes, and so can cater intelligently and effectively to them.

J. J. Cremans was born in New York City, a son of James and Hannah (Sweeney) Cremans, natives of Ireland, and there reared, attending the schools of that city and those of Somerville, Massachusetts. When he was sixteen years old he ran away from home and went first to New Orleans, Louisiana, and from there traveled over the southern and southwestern states, finally going to Michigan, and spent some time at Crystal Falls and nine years at Ironwood, that state, and while living in the latter city was a member of its City Council and also served as city treasurer. Mr. Cremans then went to San Marcial, New Mexico, as conductor for the Santa Fe Railroad, and was also yardmaster for three years. His wife's health failing, he sought a different climate and coming north was at Duluth, Minnesota, and was in the employ of the Duluth & Iron Range Railroad until 1901, when he came to Kalispell as conductor on the Great Northern Railroad, his run being between Havre and Spokane, and he was also engaged in railroad construction work at one time. Some years ago he located at Whitefish, and for the last three years has been conducting the Cadillac Hotel. For four years he was on the school board of Whitefish and is recognized as being one of the leading men of the place.

Mr. Cremans was married at Stambaugh, Michigan, to Mary Hannan, an educated and talented lady who was engaged in teaching school at Norway, Michigan, at the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Cremans became the parents of the following children: Joseph, who married Miss Maud Bronson, has four sons, Joe, Earl, Jack and Donald, and is a railroad conductor; Mary, who married Charles Manswaring, a railroad conductor; John, who is a railroad man; Christine, who is a graduate of the Spokane High School and the Cheney Normal School, and is now the wife of Bernard R. Huetter, a Spokane contractor; and Tom, who is in the employ of the Great Northern Railroad. Mr. Cremans belongs to the Masons and the Order of Railroad Conductors. He is a very strong republican, and has always voted the straight ticket of his party. He is a progressive man, always giving his moral support to every movement he believes will work out for the good of the majority, and few stand any higher in public esteem. Mrs. Cremans is an ideal hostess, and those enjoying the hospitality of the Cadillac Hotel have reason to appreciate the homelike influence she creates there. She shares the popularity of her husband and is called the "best-liked woman" in Flathead County.

Levi H. Sweetland, who is spending his declining years amid the comforts of the Montana Soldiers Home at Columbia Falls, is not only a veteran of the Civil war, but was a soldier who helped rid Montana of hostile Indians during the '70s..

He was born in LaSalle County, Illinois, son of Harrison W. and Harriet Sweetland. He was twenty-five years of age when he enlisted on June 3, 1864, in Company F of the One Hundred and Forty-Fourth Illinois Infantry. He did guard duty at Columbus, Kentucky, and at other points in the South, and received his honorable discharge at Chicago.

In 1884 he married Mrs. Mary McNary. She died, and in 1885 he married Mrs. Mary M. Brown.

Mr. Sweetland came to Montana in 1876. For five years he was a regular soldier and participated in many of the notable Indian campaigns. On May 7, 1877, he was under General Miles in an all day battle with the Sioux and Cheyenne tribes. September 30, 1877, he was in a battle which resulted in a victory for the American troops against the Nez Perce Indians.

Mr. Sweetland filed on a homestead and developed a fine ranch, planting fruit and shade trees, and he still owns this estate, which is rented, while he enjoys the companionship of some of his old comrades at Columbia Falls. Mr. Sweetland is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in politics is a stanch republican. He came to Montana when much of the country was wild and inhabited only by Indians, and has made good use of his opportunities, has exercised industry and always manifested the qualities of a good citizen. He served some years as a school director. He was deprived of the companionship of his good wife by her death in 1902. She was a splendid Christian woman and had a host of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Sweetland were very fond of children, and their home was known as the orphans home. Sometimes they had as many as six or eight orphan children. When death would break up a family in their community, leaving dependent children, the invariable answer to the question as to what would be done with these orphans was that they should be placed with Mr. and Mrs. Sweetland. Thus they performed an unselfish service in rearing and providing for so many young people.

years and as a veteran Union soldier is now spending his declining days in the Montana Soldiers Home at Columbia Falls.

He was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, a son of Philip and Prudence Wamer, and in 1837, when he was a child, his parents moved to Bloomington, Illinois. He acquired his education in the public schools of that state. As a young man with all the strength and vigor of youth he enlisted in Piatt County, Illinois, in Company F of the Second Illinois Cavalry, under Colonel Noble of Bloomington. He was in one of the early fights at the beginning of the campaign for the Mississippi Valley at Belmont, Missouri, following which he was at Columbus, Kentucky, where the Second Illinois Cavalry were the first troops to enter the city. He was also at Holly Springs, Mississippi, at Oxford, Tennessee, and in the battles of Champion Hill and the many engagements included in the siege of Vicksburg. He was under Grant and Sherman as a member of the Thirteenth Army Corps. After Vicksburg he was at Jackson, Mississippi, and the concluding months of his service were spent in Southern Texas. He was mustered out at San Antonio November 25, 1865, after having spent four years, four months and ten days as a Union soldier. He had enlisted for three years and reenlisted for another three years or during the war at New Iberia, Louisiana. Thus he fought from practically the beginning to the very end of the struggle for the integrity of the Union.

After getting his discharge he returned home, and on February 19, 1873, in Missouri, married Miss Zina See, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan See. To their marriage were born six children, Maud, Pearl, Cary, Lula, Lucy, and Edna. Those who reached mature years finished their educations in the high school at Great Falls, Montana. Maud and Edna were both graduates. Maud, now deceased, was the wife of George Stuffel and had two children, Gladys and Louis. Cary married Thomas Hurley, and has two children, Francis and Helen. Lula is the wife of Theodore Johnson and has a daughter, Mabel. Lucy married Edward Sanborn, and her four children were Harold, Leslie, William and Bettie. Edna became the wife of Harry Adams and has a daughter, Gladys Jane.

Mr. and Mrs. Wamer were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Great Falls. He is affiliated with Custer Post No. 5 of the Grand Army of the Republic, and politically has always voted in line with the principles for which he fought as a soldier, with the republican party.

In 1878 Mr. Wamer came overland to Montana, arriving at Bozeman. Two years later Mrs. Wamer followed him, coming to Fort Benton by boat. They lived at Fort Benton for 4½ years, and then moved to Great Falls, where Mr. Wamer was one of the earliest pioneers. He erected the first house in that town and was engaged in the livery business for a number of years. Later he bought a relinquishment and developed his claim and homestead for twelve years. After that he returned to Great Falls and was a resident of that city until he entered the Montana Soldiers Home.

Jess H. Stevens is carrying on a general law practice at Kalispell. He was born at Salina, Kansas, January 25, 1877, a son of John A. and Sarah I. (Gilstrap) Stevens.

Jess H. Stevens obtained a liberal education in the high school of Centerville, Iowa, to which city his parents had moved when he was still a lad, and then read law and became a student of the law department of Drake University of Des Moines, Iowa. In 1900 he was admitted to the Iowa bar and the following year to that of Montana, having come to Kalispell in that year. Mr. Stevens steadily advanced in his profession and in 1908 was elected attorney for Flathead County. During his term of office he had appointed the first probation officer in the state, the following circumstances leading him to ask for the appointment. Three boys were arrested and jailed. Upon inquiry Mr. Stevens found they were all old offenders who had been in the reform school, who had so little benefited by their former punishment that they had again broken the law. He felt that to return them to the reform school would only increase their criminality, so he sought to have them placed in the charge of a responsible party so they could have a real chance to redeem themselves. His plan proved so successful that others took the matter up and now the custom prevails all over the state. Mr. Stevens belongs to the Northwestern Montana and American Bar associations, and is a believer in these professional organizations.

While still a student at Drake University Mr. Stevens enlisted in Company E, Fiftieth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and served during the Spanish-American war.

He was married to Miss Helen Howard, of Kirkwood, Georgia, a daughter of Colonel George W. and Sarah Howard, the former of whom was a colonel in the Confederate army. Mrs. Stevens was educated in the schools of Atlanta and Athens, Georgia, and was graduated from the Kirkwood, Georgia, High School. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens had two children, Sarah Martha, generally called "Dixie"; and John Howard. On September 26, 1912, Mrs. Stevens was taken from her home and family by death. She was a lovely lady and her loss was deeply felt by the entire community. Mr. Stevens is a Mason and Odd Fellow and belongs to the Modern Woodmen. In politics he is a stanch republican, and was delegated to represent his district at the national convention of his party which nominated Charles E. Hughes for the presidency at Chicago in 1916, and has also served as delegate to republican state conventions. He was a member of the committee on resolutions at the Great Falls convention of the republican party in 1912 that made the first endorsement of woman suffrage in Montana, and as a delegate to the national convention he was in favor of granting the right of franchise to women. In 1920 he was a candidate for the republican nomination for associate justice of the State Supreme Court, but was defeated by a narrow margin of votes. Mr. Stevens is a firm believer in a non-partisan judiciary. During the more than twenty years he has been in practice at Kalispell he has proven his worth as a man and attorney, and in his practice is reaping the results of his integrity, legal knowledge and general uprightness.

Mrs. Harriet Shoaf, proprietor of the Lindell rooming house of Whitefish, is one of the active business women of Flathead County and one who enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know her. She was born in Franklin County, Ohio, a daughter of Washington and Martha E. (Ludlow) Simpson, the latter being a native of Canada of English parentage. Washington Simpson was born in Ross County, Ohio, and was a farmer by occupation. He and his wife had twelve children, of whom Mrs. Shoaf was the third in order of birth.

Growing up in Franklin County, Ohio, Harriet Simpson attended its schools and was there united in marriage with Henry Shoaf. Mr. and Mrs. Shoaf became the parents of the following children: Cary, who died at the age of nine years; Herbert, who is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, married Nellie Sams, a talented vocalist, and their children are Herbert, Jr., Doris, Evelyn, Aubrey, Nellie and Josephine; Martha who married J. W. Schofield, of Fullerton, Nebraska, has a son, Marion, a graduate of the Boone County, Nebraska, High School; Randall, who is employed by the Great Northern Railroad at Whitefish; James, who is master mechanic on the Great Northern Railroad, resides at Great Falls, and is married to Marie Lano, and has one daughter, Mary Ellen; John, who died at the age of thirty-one years, was a railroad conductor, was injured in an accident on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad in Nebraska, and left a widow, who had borne the maiden name of Hazel Hause, and one son, Harry; and Marie, who married J. E. Harrison, an engineer of the Great Northern Railroad, has a son, Jacque. She was educated at Wesley University and specialized in music, becoming a fine vocalist. In 1917 Mr. Shoaf was taken from his family by death, and is sincerely mourned, for he had been a kind and indulgent husband and father. Mrs. Shoaf has continued her rooming house business, although in 1919 much of the responsibility was taken off her shoulders by Mrs. Harrison.

Mr. Shoaf early connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Mrs. Shoaf also belongs. In politics he was a republican. Mrs. Shoaf belongs to the Eastern Star. For twenty-five years Mr. and Mrs. Shoaf were residents of Nebraska, spending fifteen years of that time in the suburbs of Lincoln, where the children were educated. For six years Mrs. Shoaf was engaged in institutional work as matron at the Lincoln Girls' Industrial Home at Milford, Nebraska, and was very competent and well liked. At the time of Mr. Shoaf's death Mrs. Shoaf was conducting a bakery and restaurant in addition to her rooming house, but later sold them. She is a bright, progressive woman, optimistic and energetic. Her great aim in life was to give her children good educational advantages, and deemed no sacrifice too great to accomplish it. She has been spared to see her children develop into fine men and women as the result of her foresight and watchful care.

MOTHER ST. JOSEPH is the Mother Superior of the "Religious Hospitalers of St. Joseph," located at Polson, Montana. This organization came here from Kingston, Ontario, Canada, to open a hospital, and besides Mother St. Joseph there are two other sisters in charge, Sister Mary of the Sacred Heart and Sister Leahy. The hospital was opened in September, 1916, and has used temporary quarters, but for all the disadvantage the organization has accomplished a magnificent work and has rendered a great service to the people of the Flathead Valley. All classes have learned to appreciate the good done by these consecrated hospitalers, and plans are now under way for the construction of a fireproof $30,000 hospital, that will give the Flathead country hospital facilities equal to any in any part of the state. The subscription list for the building was headed by Colonel A. A. White, who gave his personal check for $1,000. He was moved to this act by special gratitude to Sister St. Joseph for her kind attention to him during a severe illness.

Mother St. Joseph came of a Catholic family and at the age of fifteen determined to consecrate her life to the church and to helping suffering humanity. She had a two years' trial as a novice and was then accepted by the community and has now spent forty-seven years in dutiful obedience to her vows. In the course of her experience she lived at Cornwall, Canada, at Chicago, and then at Kingston, Ontario. While there a call came from Father O'Haley of Polson for volunteers to establish a hospital, and Mother St. Joseph with two other sisters, Sister Mary of the Sacred Heart and Sister Leahy were the volunteers for the arduous service.

I. R. AFFLERBAUGH, proprietor of the Polson Packing Company, has been a resident of Montana twenty years, and has gained his standing as a business man and citizen in the Flathead country and is extremely loyal to his favorite section of Montana.

He was born in Nebraska, a son of N. W. and Leah (Erb) Afflerbaugh, and received his education in the public schools of his native state. Twenty years ago when he came to Montana he settled at LaSalle, locating on a farm, and subsequently homesteaded at Polson.

In Nebraska he married Miss Dora Steiger, a native of Illinois, but reared and educated in Nebraska. Her parents were Jacob and Sophie (Snyder) Steiger.

Mr. Afflerbaugh on moving to his homestead at Polson engaged in farming and stock raising, and gradually has prospered and made his present business one of the leading institutions of its kind in Northern Montana. He and his wife have five children, Harvey, Reta, Loren, Ira and Wilber. All are being given the advantages of the Polson High School. Mr. and Mrs. Afflerbaugh attend the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and in politics supports the republican party. He served as a member of the school board at LaSalle and also at Valley View, and has always taken an interest in educational matters. His business record can be surveyed without finding a flaw, and at every stage of his career he has deserved the esteem of his fellow men. Mrs. Afflerbaugh is a fine homemaker, and is a Christian woman of refinement and culture.

J. K. HOWE, of Hot Springs, is one of the honored veterans of America's great war between its two sections over half a century ago. He was born at Montpelier, Vermont, a son of John and Polly (Reed) Howe, natives of New England. In 1857 J. K. Howe went as far west as Minnesota, and was residing in that state when, at the age of twenty-three years, he enlisted in Company D, Seventh Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and his first year in the army was spent fighting Indians in Minnesota and the more western country. He was sent south with his regiment, and for six months was stationed at St. Louis, Missouri, and then was engaged in raiding expeditions in different parts of the south, and was discharged in Minnesota after a brave and gallant service.

In 1861 Mr. Howe was married to Elizabeth Yolton, and they had two children, namely: Irwin, who married Justine Lies, is president of the Howe News Bureau, of Chicago, Illinois, and has three children, Alice, Margaret and Fred; and Carrie, who married Ed Rudd, lives at Neosho, Missouri, and has four children; Blanche, Harry, Ward and Ella. On September 17, 1876, Mr. Howe was married secondly to Margaret Nesmith, born in Schuylkill, Pennsylvania, a daughter of James and Agnes (McIntyre) Nesmith, natives of Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Howe became the parents of four children, namely: James; Mary, who married John Christie, resides at Camas, Montana, on a ranch; and has two children, Margaret and Elsie; Clarence, who married Lulu Webb, of Oklahoma, resides in Minnesota, and has four children, Raymond, Emma, Elizabeth and Irwin; and Hattie, who married Harvey Burke, a ranchman of Camas Prairie has a son, Joseph.

Mr. and Mrs. Howe belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church of Hot Springs. When he was living in Minnesota Mr. Howe joined the Grand Army of the Republic, and enjoys meeting his old comrades at the different reunions. No history of Montana would be complete without definite mention of the women of this state. Side by side they worked with their husbands, giving them at all times a hearty support, and never faltered no matter how difficult the way. They brought up their children to be useful men and women, and can now look back upon well spent lives.

Coming to Montana many years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Howe developed a valuable ranch, and lived upon it until increasing years suggested a retirement, and they now reside at Hot Springs, where they are enjoying the comforts their industry and thrift have provided for them. They are most estimable people who enjoy the respect and confidence of a wide circle of friends. Their children have done well and are winning approval in the several communities in which they have settled. It is such people as Mr. and Mrs. Howe and their sons and daughters who make up the great backbone of American citizenship, and are developing the country west of the Mississippi River into the great section it has become. They are naturally proud of what they have accomplished, they and the other pioneers, and the coming generations will look back and revere their memory.

ARLIE M. FOOR began his career at Wolf Point in 1917 as a young and hopeful lawyer, practiced with his old classmate of law school, Hugh N. Marron, until he left his office to enter the army, and since his military service has given his time and enthusiasm to his duties as executive secretary of the Wolf Point Commercial Club. He has been the real leader of that organization, some of whose achievements are briefly noted in the following paragraphs.

Mr. Foor was born at Lithopolis, Ohio, July 29, 1892. The name Foor is said to be a corruption of Foos, and the remote ancestors probably came from Denmark. The grandfather of the Montana lawyer was George Foor, who settled in Ohio from Pennsylvania, and like most of the earlier generations of the family was a farmer. He spent many years in Central Ohio, and is buried at Lithopolis. In his family were four sons and three daughters: Calvin, a farmer who died at Ashville, Ohio; Frank, who lives at Ashville; Ella, who died at Jefferson, Ohio, wife of Henry Weimer; Harvey, father of Arlie M.; Bertha, Mrs. Harvey M. Morehart, of Canal Winchester, Ohio; Ida, wife of Lute Heller, of Columbus, Ohio; and Albert, of Lithopolis.

Harvey Foor was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, and spent his brief career as a farmer. He died in February, 1901, at the age of thirty-five. He married Rhea A. Morehart, daughter of William and Mary (Fellers) Morehart. The Morehart family is also of Danish ancestry. Rhea Morehart was born in Greencastle, Ohio, where her parents located a few years before the beginning of the Civil war as emigrants from Pennsylvania. She had three brothers: Harvey, of Canal Winchester, Ohio; Jesse, a farmer in the same community; and William, a farmer at Pickerington, Ohio. Harvey Foor and wife were the parents of five children: Arlie M.; Clarence, a farmer near the old Foor home; Raymond, also in the same vicinity; Forrest, a teacher in Fairfield County, Ohio; and Ercell, who recently completed her high school education at Canal Winchester. Forrest Foor served as a first class seaman in the navy during the World war, and with his brother Arlie shares in the credit for the military record of this generation of the family.

Arlie M. Foor spent his boyhood in the country near the Village of Lithopolis, and did not relieve himself entirely of the responsibilities of work on the farm until he was nineteen. In 1909 he graduated from the Canal Winchester High School, for two years was principal of the schools at Greencastle, Ohio, and then pursued his legal studies in Valparaiso University in Indiana, graduating in June, 1916. For about a year he practiced at Winchester, Indiana, being associated with an old time lawyer of the locality, Benjamin F. Marsh, under the name Marsh & Foor. He tried his first law suit there.

In the meantime he has been keeping up an active correspondence with Hugh Marron, who immediately on leaving the law school of Valparaiso University had come into Montana. It was altogether due to the influence of Mr. Marron that Mr. Foor came out to the Treasure state, and they became associated in general practice at Wolf Point, until their firm was dissolved and the members went into the army.

In March, 1918, at Miles City, Mr. Foor enlisted and was stationed at Fort Keogh as an office man until June was then transferred to the navy as a musician, and sent to Salt Lake, Utah, and subsequently at Bremerton, Washington, was placed in the training camp band and remained there until March 12, 1919, when he was put on the inactive list and allowed to resume his civil duties. Mr. Foor organized the Leonard Dethman Post No. 22 of the American Legion, and is chairman of its executive committee.

With his return to Wolf Point Mr. Foor accepted the responsibilities of secretary of the Wolf Point Commercial Club. He has handled the heavy work of this organization, and in many cases has initiated and brought success to movements under the club's auspices. Some of these achievements are noted briefly as follows: The establishment of a United States Employment Service at Wolf Point; a central distributing point for weather forecasts of the weather bureau; establishment of a merchants association of which Mr. Foor is secretary; a community fair association at Wolf Point, providing for rural and other exhibits properly programmed; the working out and establishment of the most feasible route for the Powder River Trail, connecting Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, and El Paso, Texas; the acquisition through the club leadership of additional territory for the townsite of Wolf Point; and the club's initiative in the establishment through this region of the Roosevelt Highway. In this matter Mr. Foor initiated the correspondence and carried a large share of the total burden of the undertaking. The Commercial Club was also responsible for the establishment of a department of music in the Wolf Point schools.

Mr. Foor is married. Though reared in a democratic atmosphere, his early observation and convictions led to alliance with the republican party, and he cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Hughes in 1916. Fraternally he is a past noble grand of Leedge No. 386 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Canal Winchester; a member of the Patrons of Husbandry in that community; and joined the Masons at Lithopolis, but is now a member of Liberty Lodge No. 121 at Wolf Point.

ARTHUR C. D was called to the superintendency of the Industrial School of Montana at Miles City in June, 1914. This school, otherwise known as the State Reform School, is one of the important institutions of Mon and it has been the peculiar good fortune o confined to its care that the school has been under such able and experienced administration as that given by Mr. Dorr.

Mr. Dorr is a veteran institutional and soial service worker, and has given that work practically a lifetime of study and experience.

He was born at Rochester, Minnesota, June 2, 1875. The Dorr family was established in the United States by Gustave Dorr, who came from Frankfurt-on-the-Main, and spent his last years in Minnesota. He is buried at Pleasant Grove in tha state. He was a man of great accomplishment, spok seven different languages, and came to the Unite States at the age of twenty-one. He was a busine man. His first wife was a Mrs. Reeder, and s became the mother of his children, three daught and two sons surviving him.

One of them was Edwin Dorr, who was born Pennsylvania and prior to the Civil war moved Illinois and thence to Minnesota. He married Olmsted County, Minnesota, Miss Emma Rud, and they are now living at Eugene, Oregon.

Arthur C. Dorr, the oldest survivor of five ildren, was reared and educated in Minnesota and acquired his first experience in institutional ork there. To the age of sixteen he lived on a rm, attended rural schools, and remained at hom until reaching his majority. Up to that time his practical experience had been gained as an eploye of his father in a store. At the age of twey-one he became an employe in the State Insne ospital at Rochester, and was there four year Is personal qualifications then gained for hi te office of steward in the Hastings State Hospit in Minnesota, and he was connected with that ititution for seven years. He was then invited to e office of the Minnesota State Board of Control ithe investigation and inspection service of the intions under that board, and followed that wo for three years. For 2½ years he was assistan perintendent of the Training School at Red ng, Minnesota, and for two years steward at St. Cloud Reformatory. From there he was ed to Montana to become superintendent of Industrial School at Miles City.

Six years ago the State School Miles City owned 98½ acres of land with five in buildings. Since then 220 acres have been pu ased, and an additional area of 480 acres of sc lands have been turned over to the use of t institution by the state. This gives a farm and in trial property of more than 800 acres. During M Dorr's administration stock barns have been bu hicken house, cold storage and dairy house erect and the farm is conducted on an intensive and stific system of management under the supervisiona chief farmer, who also has charge of the dair nd other stock interests. Sufficient crops are p ced to supply the institution, and as an additio source of profit to the institution and as a me of stimulating dairying in that section of the st a herd of pure-bred Holstein cattle is maintai With all this equipment Mr. Dorr is able to e the institution realize the purposes for which was founded and provide means of industrial voc nal education for the delinquents committed to th ool. A complete course of instruction is maintai from the first to the eighth grades.

Mr. Dorr has found other op unities to identify himself usefully with the stat d his home community. He is a member of th iles City Chamber of Commerce, being on its cultural committee, is one of the commissioners the Tongue and Yellowstone River Irrigatio district, served as president of the Miles City in 1918, is superintendent of the Swine and ltry Department of the Custer County Fair, an a member of the executive board of the Custer County Farm and Stock Bureau. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, Elks and Royal Arcanum.

At Rochester, Minnesota, April 17, 1899, he married Miss Louisa Pedersen. Her father, H. O. Pedersen, came from Norway, was an early settler at Rochester, where he followed his trade as a blacksmith, and was the father of four daughters and one son. Mrs. Dorr was born at Rochester. They have three children: Alice, Mildred and Elsie.

JOSEPH H. KLINKHAMMER, one of the early settlers of Wolf Point, and as a business man and public official vitally identified with the upbuilding of the community, has spent his life in the northwestern states of Minnesota, South Dakota and Montana, and represents the third generation of the Klinkhammer family in America.

His grandparents were Gerhard and Margaret (Vogelsberg) Klinkhammer, who emigrated from the Province of Alsace, first locating in Wisconsin, and then moved out to Minnesota territory when there was not even a wagon road in that great expanse of country. The head of navigation on the Mississippi was not yet distinguished by even the villages of St. Paul and Minneapolis. The Klinkhammers settled three miles west of New Prague, where Gerhard Klinkhammer spent the rest of his life as a farmer and is buried. He and his wife had two sons and a daughter, all of whom married and reared families: Joseph, who spent his life in LeSeur County, Minnesota; Peter, a retired farmer and one of the large land holders of Southern Minnesota; and Mary, Mrs. John J. Lenz, of Nobles County, Minnesota.

Peter Klinkhammer, who represents the second generation of the family in America, was born in Alsace, near Cologne, Germany, and was six years of age when his parents came to America and settled in Wisconsin. He grew up in Minnesota, and in 1862 became a Union soldier, serving three years and seven days, until the surrender of General Lee's army. He was a private in Company G of the 10th Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. Soon after his enlistment the Sioux Indians went on the war path, and the 10th Minnesota was sent back from the South to protect the frontier, and Peter Klinkhammer was on duty during the pursuit and rounding up of the hostiles after the massacre at New Ulm. When Chief Little Crow and his band of warriors were captured the entire tribe was marched across Dakota to some point in Montana, where they were corralled. Part of the 10th Minnesota was detailed on this expedition, and then returned by river to St. Paul, only to find that some of the Sioux had escaped from Montana and had returned to their favorite camping grounds in Minnesota. Peter Klinkhammer was present at Mankato at the execution of the thirty-seven ringleaders of the Sioux tribe for their part in the work of the New Ulm massacre. After this Indian campaign Peter Klinkhammer saw, as a participant, some of the great battles of the war in the South and ended his service at St. Louis. He was discharged at Fort Snelling in Minnesota, and then returned to his farm and became one of the most successful agriculturists in his part of Minnesota. With the accumulation of capital he sought other interests and engaged in banking as a stockholder in a bank at Ellsworth, Minnesota. He is a democrat in politics and his family are Catholics.

Peter Klinkhammer married Louise Johanna Witt, daughter of Carl Witt, who came from the Province of Pommern, Germany, to Minnesota. He spent the rest of his life as a miller and farmer in Scott County. Mrs. Peter Klinkhammer died in 1895.

She was the mother of the following children: Joseph H., of Wolf Point; Margaret, Mrs. John Switzer, of Nobles County, Minnesota; Carl, a farmer near Adrian, Minnesota; John J., of Sidney, New York; William, of East Grand Forks, Minnesota; Peter, a miner and stock man of Hump, Idaho; Gerhard, of Sioux City, Iowa; Mary, still at home with her father; and Barbara, wife of Mat Giesen, of Scott County, Minnesota.

Joseph H. Klinkhammer was born forty miles south of the "Twin Cities" February 18, 1873, and spent most of his boyhood on his father's farm in LeSeuer County. He attended country schools, and at the age of fifteen went with his parents to Nobles County and came to manhood near Ellsworth, Iowa, a town on the Minnesota-Iowa line. About that time he acquired the butcher's trade and first engaged in the business at Ellsworth, and from there moved to Rock Rapids, Iowa, where he operated a butcher shop two years, and also proved up a nomestead. He commuted after a brief residence and sold the land and improvements. His next home and place of business was at Mitchell, South Dakota, where he lived for six years, engaging in the meat business.

In March, 1912, Mr. Klinkhammer came from South Dakota to Wolf Point, and was the first to open a butcher's shop in the little hamlet. He engaged in that essential line of business for six years, and participated with his neighbors in the joint action necessary to build up a business community. After leaving the retail meat business he turned his energies to the ice industry, which is his present work. He is also identified in some measure with farming upon the homestead entered and proved up by his wife.

The first official service Mr. Klinkhammer rendered Wolf Point was as fire chief. He resigned that office when he was elected the first mayor of the town in the fall of 1915. He was re-elected in the spring of 1916, and with the aid of a strong council he made his administration one of distinct improvement and benefit to the community. The first sidewalk building was done under him as mayor, the town was bonded for waterworks, the first electric lights were installed and the first street lights placed. Two additions were platted to the original townsite, an eighty-acre tract on the north and an eighty-acre tract on the south, on which many of the better residences of the town have been built. A general grade was established for the city, also an up to date fire department provided, and in other ways the preliminaries of a substantial city were wisely arranged.

Mr. Klinkhammer is a democrat in politics. He married at Wolf Point November 28, 1915, Miss Edith Dexter, who was born in Wisconsin in March, 1891, the youngest of the four children of Maynard and Emma Dexter. Her parents are farmers of McCone County, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Klinkhammer have one daughter, Louise, born in January, 1917.

HUGH N. MARRON has been a successful lawyer at Wolf Point since July, 1916, though for about half a year he was absent from his office and professional work to serve with the colors during the World war.

Mr. Marron was born at Waucoma, Iowa, October 5, 1893, and is of the third generation of the Marron family in America. His grandparents, Hugh and Catherine Marron, came to this country from County Cork, Ireland, during the forties, and after a brief residence in Ohio moved out to Iowa in 1849. They were pioneers in that state, and developed a modern farm in Winneshiek County, where both of them spent their last days. They were the parents of four sons and three daughters: Thomas, a farmer at Waucoma; Robert, who was killed by a bandit while sheriff of a Montana County; Joseph, who died in Iowa; James; Mrs. Anna Tierney, of Austin, Minnesota; Rose, who married Edward Laird, of Portland, Oregon; and Celia wife of Harry Gaffney, of Portland.

James Marron, father of the Montana lawyer, was born at Milan, Ohio, but has spent his active career as a farmer in the vicinity of Waucoma, Iowa. He married Anna Traufler, who was born at Sumner, Iowa, in 1874, and is about three years younger than her husband. Her parents were natives of Luxemburg, Germany. Hugh is the oldest of the children of James Marron and wife. His sister Irene lives in Waucoma; his brother Harry is a farmer on the old homestead; William was still in the United States army in 1920 at Camp Grant, Illinois; George is a student in the University of Missouri; and Florence and Frank are completing their high school educations.

Hugh N. Marron grew up on a farm, and his boyhood memories are altogether associated with an Iowa rural community. He finished his high school work at Waucoma, and two years later, in 1912, graduated from the Valder Business College at Decorah, Iowa. At the age of nineteen, having decided upon his life work, he entered Valparaiso University in Indiana, and completed the law school course in 1916. He received his diploma in June, and the following month came to Montana. After a brief time at Poplar associated with Senator Dana Easton he came to Wolf Point and succeeded to the practice and the office of J. P. Murphy.

His first court case outside a justice court was tried at Great Falls before Judge George M. Borrquin in the Federal District Court. He was attorney for the defendant in a grand larceny case. Since then his practice has extended to all classes of litigation, both in Federal and state courts, including bankruptcy proceedings. His reputation is widely extended as a successful criminal lawyer. He defended Johnson, charged with shooting his wife and daughter, assault in the first degree, and his client received only a short sentence. He cleared Bert Warwick, charged with assault in the first degree, with intent to kill. He has also handled many contests before the courts involving titles to land entries, numerous divorce cases involving wealth and property considerations, and few lawyers of his age have had a more versatile experience in their profession.

Mr. Marron enlisted for the World war in June, 1918, and spent five months in the naval officers training school in San Francisco. He was there when the armistice was signed, and received his honorable discharge in December, 1918. He took an active part in the organization of the Leonard Deitman Post of the American Legion at Wolf Point. While his father was an old-line democrat, Mr. Marron is a republican, and is a man of convictions gained by close study of political questions. He is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, being an official in the Wolf Point Council. He is a member of the Wolf Point Commercial Club, which he has served as a director, and during the war was a member of the four-minute men and is a popular speaker, frequently designated as a toast-master at banquets and entertainments. He is one of the three managers of the Wolf Point Co-operative Association and as attorney he represents two of the banks of the city. On June 14, 1920, Mr. Marron was appointed city attorney for the city of Wolf Point.

On June 9, 1920, Mr. Marron was united in marriage to Rose C. Pogreba in St. Ann's Cathedral, Great Falls, Montana. Mrs. Marron was born and raised in Great Falls, and at the time of her marriage was in charge of the collection department of the Conrad Banking Company of Great Falls, having served in that capacity for several years.

THOMAS M. MORROW, M. D. The active experience of Doctor Morrow as a physician and surgeon in Montana began in 1913. He was one of the first volunteers in the state to join the Medical Reserve Corps, and for nearly two years was in the army as a medical officer, spending more than six months of that time in France and experiencing some of the stern actualities of modern warfare in the late summer of 1918.

Doctor Morrow, who since leaving the army has found his abilities welcomed at Wolf Point, was born at Ardoch, North Dakota, November 21, 1888. His father, George L. Morrow, a native of Ontario, Canada, was one of the pioneers of the Red River Valley of North Dakota, going there from Perth, Ontario, in the early '70s. He spent his active life as an expert accountant and died at Minot, North Dakota, in February, 1919, at the age of about sixty years. He married Mary Malloy, a native of Pembroke, Ontario, and daughter of Patrick Malloy. She is still living at Minot. A brief record of the family is as follows: Frank J., proprietor of a department store at Minot; George P., manager of a wholesale grocery house at Brandon, Manitoba; Dr. Thomas M.; John C., a three-year veteran of the World war with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and one of the three surviving men of the Third Machine Gun Battalion, is manager of a wholesale grocery house at Regina, Saskatchewan; Genevieve is Sister St. Ignatius, superintendent of nurses at St. Mary's Hospital in Minneapolis; William D. is a student of dentistry in Creighton Dental College at Omaha; and Eileen is completing her education in St. Catherine's College at St. Paul.

When Doctor Morrow was four years of age his parents moved to Minot, North Dakota, where he grew to manhood. He attended the public schools of that city, and then entered Creighton University at Omaha, Nebraska, taking his Bachelor of Science degree in the regular collegiate course and then remaining a student of medicine until he graduated in April, 1911. The following two years he received special training as a surgeon in eye, ear, nose and throat work at St. Mary's Hospital in Minneapolis.

Doctor Morrow came to Montana from the Twin Cities of Minnesota in 1913, and engaged in general practice at Medicine Lake for five years.

Doctor Morrow volunteered from that point, receiving his commission in July, 1917, and reported and trained in the Medical Officers Training Camp at Fort Riley, Kansas. After seventeen weeks in the camp he was assigned to duty at the Base Hospital there, and later completed a two months' special course in war surgery at Philadelphia. Following that he was on duty on the surgical staff at Camp Wadsworth, South Carolina, for about nine months, and was then ordered overseas. He sailed from Hoboken on the transport Kroonland, and disembarked at Brest in the latter part of July, 1918. His first assignment was as chief of the medical service at Allerey with Provisional Hospital No. 4. For a time he was also with the American troops in the Argonne region, and later was given special duty in eye, ear, nose and throat work at Base Hospital No. 53 at Langres. Doctor Morrow returned to the United States as a casual, leaving Bordeaux in February, 1919, with Convalescent Medical Detachment No. 114 aboard the ship Atenas, and landed at Pier No. 2, Brooklyn, March 16th, hospitalized at Embarkation Hospital No. 2, New York Polyclinic at West Fifty-ninth Street, and was transferred to the United States General Hospital No. 29 at Fort Snelling, Minnesota, where he received his honorable discharge April 28, 1919.

On returning to Montana Doctor Morrow resumed his professional work as a resident of Wolf Point. He holds the office of Special Examiner of the United States Public Health Service and is also county physician for Roosevelt County.

Doctor Morrow is unmarried. His father was a democratic voter, but all five of the sons have become affiliated as republicans and Dr. Morrow cast his first presidential vote in 1912 for Colonel Roosevelt, the progressive candidate. Doctor Morrow is affiliated with the Lodge of Elks at Williston, North Dakota.

JOHN GRAYSON. A decade comprises the history of the thriving Town of Antelope. The first active commercial enterprise established on the townsite was the store of Grayson Brothers, who came to that point in 1910, and have never neglected an opportunity to increase the welfare and development of the locality, and their own interests have grown apace with the general prosperity of the region.

The Grayson family were identified with the pioneer history of North Dakota and came to the United States from Canada and more remotely from England. The grandfather of Grayson Brothers was John Grayson, a native of Oxford, England, who emigrated to Canada, married Miss Kester, and they spent the rest of their lives as farmers in the Dominion. Of their six sons and five daughters, four sons came to the United States, another located near Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, one daughter lived in Michigan and the other children remained about the old Canadian home near Woodstock.

The late William Grayson, father of Grayson Brothers, was a well known and highly esteemed pioneer of Antelope, Montana, where he died in January, 1919. He was born near Woodstock, Ontario, in 1844, grew up on a farm, acquired a common school education, and his entire life was devoted to country pursuits. In the spring of 1882 he moved to the United States, and homesteaded in Walsh County, North Dakota. He was actively engaged in farming three miles from Lankin in that county until the spring of 1910 and then removed to Antelope, Montana. William Grayson married in Ontario Miss Mary Ramsey, who died at Antelope in 1915, at the age of sixty-eight. In Canada they were members of the Established Church of England, but on coming to the United States joined the Presbyterian Church and Mrs. William Grayson was especially active in her church interests. William Grayson took out citizenship papers in North Dakota and espoused the republican party. There were three children in the family, Richard and John, comprising the firm of Grayson Brothers, and Sara, wife of James Stewart of Antelope.

John Grayson, of the firm of Grayson Brothers, was born near Mt. Forest, Ontario, November 26, 1871, and was about ten years of age when his parents moved to North Dakota. He spent his early life on the farm near Lankin, acquired a public school education, and began his own career as a farmer. He owned a farm and conducted it for about nine years. He left farming to become a merchant at Lankin, and without previous experience and with limited capital opened a stock of hardware under the firm name of Grayson & Wambden. This business was continued until Mr. Grayson sold out to his partner, and then with his brother Richard came to Montana in 1910. He first saw Antelope before the first train reached the town. The grade had been built but the steel was not yet laid, and the townsite was nothing but barren landscape. Grayson Brothers were really the first merchants, and their original store was stocked with a general supply of hardware, machinery and general merchandise. They did their banking for a short time in Medicine Lake, and before the establishment of the postoffice their mail was delivered from the stage as it passed through from Culbertson to Plentywood. After eight years a fire destroyed their store, and when they resumed business Grayson Brothers confined their stock entirely to machinery.

Since 1915 the Graysons have also been constructive factors in the farm development of this region. They bought land, broke the sod, improved and put up buildings. Their crops have comprised wheat and flax and of five years good harvest rewarded their efforts in all except 1919, which proved disastrous to Montana farmers.

Grayson Brothers were associated with R. R. Ueland and W. W. Clark in building the first elevator at Antelope, and were active in its management for two seasons. They are stockholders in the First National Bank of Antelope, of which John is vice president. John Grayson was honored with election as first mayor of Antelope, and for nine years has served as a member of the school board. The present splendid school building was erected while he was on the board. After reaching his majority, John Grayson cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley, and has been steadily identified with the republican party since.

At Grafton, North Dakota, December 6, 1899, Mr. John Grayson married Miss Elizabeth Little, daughter of John and Jane (Brown) Little. Her father was a native of Ireland, spent his early life in Canada, and was married near Quebec, and came to the United States at the same time as the William Grayson family, establishing his home in the Golden Valley of Walsh County, North Dakota. He homesteaded there, and spent the rest of his years as a practical farmer. There were five children in the Little family: Hugh, John, William, Mrs. Elizabeth Grayson and Mrs. Ella Bergerson. Mr. and Mrs. Grayson have a lively household of children, some of whom have finished their schooling. Their names are John Elsworth, William Lawrence, Ella May, Earl, Walter James, Opal Louella and Roger.

James W. Austin, Sr. The ranks of the Montana pioneers who were on the ground at the very institution of organized government in the Territory of Montana are rapidly diminishing, and it must be a matter of interest to all the people of the state to read briefly of the career of one of the survivors, James W. Austin, Sr., whose home is at Cascade and whose life and work have been in that section for half a century.

Many regard the period of the sixties and seventies in Montana as an era of romance and venture, though in the opinion of Mr. Austin neither he nor his companions appreciated particularly the romantic side of their lives, since they were too close to the danger, the hard work, the constant hazard and privations to which the pioneers, whether miners, prospectors or livestock men, were subjected. On the whole, Mr. Austin has been well satisfied with his long and active career in Montana, and on the material side his efforts have been well rewarded as a farmer and stock raiser of Cascade County. He still owns a handsome and well improved ranch located six miles south of the Village of Cascade in Chestnut Valley.

He was born at Palmyra in Wayne County, New York, October 18, 1839, son of Thomas and Julia (Garrison) Austin, his mother also a native of the same state. His father, who was born in England, spent his active life as a butcher and operated markets in various places where he lived. He finally came out to Cascade County, Montana, and died here at the venerable age of ninety-one. The mother of James W. Austin passed away in 1845. Thomas Austin was a member of the Church of England and in politics a democrat, while the mother was a Methodist.

James W. Austin acquired practically all his education in the public schools of New York. In 1852, when he was thirteen years of age, he accompanied his father to Indiana, and thereafter he had such practical duties as herding stage mules and other lines of employment, and his opportunities to attend school practically ceased.

About 1863 occurred the memorable stampede to the Bannack Mines of the Northwest. Mr. Austin came to Montana in company with peculiarly distinguished men, including Sidney Edgerton and Colonel W. F. Sanders. Sidney Edgerton, as those familiar with the history of Montana Territory know, was the first territorial governor of Montana, appointed by President Lincoln. One of his associates was Colonel Sanders, who easily became distinguished as one of the most notable men in the history of both territory and state. During the year 1864 Mr. Austin was at Last Chance Gulch, and while there had his chief experience as a miner. He took up a placer claim of 200 feet in length, and with varied success continued his operations as a miner and prospector until 1870.

In that year he came to the locality of his present ranch, acquiring a preemption and homestead, each of 160 acres in the Chestnut Valley of Cascade County. In this one locality he has lived for half a century. His own affairs have been prosecuted with success, and in the meantime he has witnessed a wonderful program of change and development go on around him, in all of which he has been more than a passive spectator.

In 1870 Mr. Austin married Miss Emma Jacobs, a native of Utah. She died April 3, 1884, the mother of six children. Of these, Thomas, Ernest and William are now deceased, and the living children are George M., James W., Jr., and Julia. October 19, 1884, Mr. Austin married Miss Buena Vista Warden, a native of Missouri. Her death occurred in February, 1889, and of her children two are living, Joel C. and Grover Cleveland. Mr. Austin married on August 8, 1890, Miss Margaret Washington, a native of Virginia. To their union have been born four children, Sarah L., Alfred W., Thomas G. and Nettie C. Mr. and Mrs. Austin are active members of the Christian Church at Cascade. In politics Mr. Austin is a democrat, and while his life has been mainly devoted to ranching and his own affairs he has been in a position to know many of the state's leading men and is thoroughly familiar with its political history.

John Q. Coates is one of the substantial men of Meagher County, who, thoroughly understanding the demands of his locality, is profitably engaged in conducting a mercantile establishment at Martinsdale, drawing his trade from a wide area in the surrounding country. He is a practical business man, knows how and when to buy, and so keeps his stock fresh and up-to-date and is enabled to sell at prices as low as are consistent with conditions and the market quotations.

The birth of John Q. Coates occurred at Moberly, Randolph County, Missouri, on April 16, 1862, and he is a son of John T. Coates, whose birth occurred in Kentucky in 1830, and his death at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, in September, 1919. The father of John Q. Coates' grandmother moved his family to Moberly, Randolph County, Missouri, in 1833, and John T. Coates, only a little child at that time, was reared at the last named place. He was a farmer, and raised, fed and shipped stock on an extensive scale to the Saint Louis, Missouri, market, doing an excellent business until his retirement in 1910, when he moved to Oklahoma City, and there lived until his death. He was a democrat in politics and in religious faith a follower of the creed of the Christian church.

John T. Coates was married at Moberly, Missouri, to Amanda Smith, who was born in Randolph County, Missouri, and died at Moberly in 1868. She and her husband had the following children: T. D., who spent nine years in Montana, returned to Moberly, Missouri, and is now very successfully engaged in farming at the edge of the town; W. W., who is mentioned below; Minnie, who married J. F. Rucker, who has been connected with the Saint Louis internal revenue office of the Government service for the past twenty-seven years, and they live at Moberly, Missouri; Elizabeth, who married William Tolle, a real estate operator in Texas until his death in 1910, is a resident of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; H. W., who is in partnership with his brother J. Q.; and John Q., whose name heads this review.

W. W. Coates, brother of John Q. Coates was born at Moberly, Missouri, in 1857, and was there reared until he was eighteen years old, at which time he came to Montana with his elder brother, T. D. Coates, they arriving in the state in 1875 For a time W. W. Coates was at Helena, and did his part in forwarding the pioneer activities. In 1889 he came to Martinsdale and held the contract for carrying the mail and had a livery stable, which, progressing with the times, he later turned into a garage, and conducted it until the summer of 1919, when he disposed of his interests and is now living retired. In 1890 he married Margaret De Con, a native of Iowa, and they have one daughter, Marian, who was born June 22, 1901. She was graduated from the Lewistown High School in the fall of 1919.

The grandfather of these brothers was Thomas Coates, and he was born in Kentucky and died in Randolph County, Missouri, in 1867, where he had been a pioneer farmer. His wife bore the maiden name of Durrett, and it was her father, Tarlton Durrett, who induced the Coates family to accompany him in his migration into Randolph County, as mentioned above, this event taking place in 1833. At the time the Coates and Durrett families came as far west as Missouri the utmost pioneer conditions prevailed, and they passed through all of the hardships incident to life on the frontier, but did so successfully, and representatives of both names are not only to be found in different portions of Missouri but in other states much further toward the setting sun, and almost without exception they are numbered among the worth-while citizens of any community in which they have seen fit to locate.

John Q. Coates, of Martinsdale, attended the schools of his native county, the State Normal School at Winchester, Tennessee, which he left in 1881, and William Jewell College at Liberty, Missouri, spending a year in the latter institution. In 1882 he secured a position with a dry goods and clothing store at Moberly, and while he remained with it, learned the mercantile business in every branch and became a practical merchant. Desiring to broaden his experiences, he came west to Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1891, and was in one of its stores for a few months, and then in June, 1891, went to Helena, and for the subsequent two years worked in one of its mercantile concerns. From 1893 until 1898 he followed the same line at Great Falls, Montana, when he was offered and accepted the position of department manager of the men's clothing department of the Symms Dry Goods Company at Butte, Montana, and discharged its manifold duties very acceptably until the spring of 1910, when he was able to realize his ambition to become the owner of his own store. At that time he came to Martinsdale, built his present modern store on Main Street, stocked it, and since then he and his brother H. W. Coates have operated it under the firm name of Coates Brothers. This store carries a general line of goods, and the business has been a success from the beginning and is now the leading one of its kind from White Sulphur Springs to Harlowtown, customers coming to them from both Meagher and Wheatland counties. The brothers are recognized as men of strict integrity and no one ever questions their reliability either as merchants or citizens. John Q. Coates owns a comfortable modern residence on Grand Avenue. In politics he is a democrat.

In 1901 he was married to Miss Josephine Weishar, a daughter of Louis and Catherine (Miller) Weishar, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Weishar was a builder and contractor at Edina, Knox County, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Coates have no children.

The career of Mr. Coates and his brother proves that it is not only possible, but not so difficult, for newcomers in a community to get a hold on its business and develop with it, provided they understand in a practical way what they are undertaking to do, are willing to work hard and give the public a fair deal. These requirements have been met by the Coates brothers from the start, and at the same time they have contributed generously to civic movements, have interested themselves in county matters, although in no sense of the word politicians, and have in every way made their influence felt in behalf of law and order, progress and sensible uplift, so that it would be difficult to find in Meagher or surrounding counties men who are more firmly established in public confidence and esteem than these two dependable merchants of Martinsdale.

SAMUEL VERNON STEWART, who has been governor of Montana since January, 1913, one-fourth of the entire period of Montana's statehood, was born in Monroe County, Ohio, August 2, 1872, son of John W. and Marie A. (Carle) Stewart. He is the second of their four living children. His older brother, W. R. C. Stewart, is a prominent lawyer and former judge of the District Court, living at Bozeman. His younger brother, Captain H. M. Stewart, also a Bozeman attorney, held the rank of captain during the World war and was military aide in the administration of the selective draft in Montana. The only daughter, Miss Sallie M. Stewart, is a graduate of the State Normal School of Emporia, Kansas, and a teacher in the Butte High School.

Governor Stewart at the age of eleven removed with his parents to Coffey County, Kansas, near the town of Waverly. In that district, close to the line of the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, he lived the life of the average farm lad, and made all possible use of his opportunities to attend school. Seeking more than the rural schools could give him, he entered the Kansas Normal College at Fort Scott, where he spent one year, and for two years was a student in the State Normal School at Emporia. In 1898 he graduated in the law course of Kansas University at Lawrence.

On the 5th of July, 1898, Governor Stewart arrived in Montana and began his law practice at Virginia City, and gave his time to his profession until he removed to Helena to take up his duties as governor.

For twenty years he has been a recognized leader in the democratic party of Montana. In 1904 he was elected county attorney of Madison County, holding that office two terms. He was chosen chairman of the State Central Committee in 1910, and continued until he entered the campaign that resulted in his election as chief executive. In January, 1913, he was inaugurated governor for a four-year term. At the primaries August 29, 1916, he was nominated for a second term, and on the 7th of November was re-elected by a majority of 9,136.

Governor Stewart has served as a director of several different banking institutions in Montana. He is affiliated with a number of fraternal organizations, including all of the Masonic bodies, has filled the state presidency of the Eagles, and is a member of the Elks and Modern Woodmen of America. He is a member of the Montana Club of Helena.

April 27, 1905, he married Miss Stella Dyer Baker, of Booneville, Missouri. They have three daughters, Emily, Marjorie and Leah.

ROBERT MARTINDALE RATHBONE. Some of the most reliable citizens of Havre are those who for years have been discharging the onerous and responsible duties connected with the position of passenger conductor for the Great Northern Railroad. In order to reach such a position a man has to have a practical railroad experience and a certain amount of actual service back of him, and possess qualifications which warrant his being entrusted with responsibilities of grave import, so that naturally he is one to whom good citizenship is a matter of course. Recognizing the value of organized effort, he seeks to bring about concerted action in the conduct of civic affairs, and is a decided addition to any community in which he locates. One of these men who belongs to the class above referred to is Robert Martindale Rathbone, passenger conductor for the Great Northern Railroad and one of its valued employes.

Robert Martindale Rathbone was born at Sparta, Wisconsin, November 13, 1874, a son of Robert B. and Augusta D. (Martindale) Rathbone, the former of whom was born at Rhinebeck, New York, in June, 1825, and died at Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1904; while the latter, born at Ithaca, New York, in 1837, died at Minot, North Dakota, in 1918. They were married at Delavan, Wisconsin, in 1857, and had six children, of whom four sons and one daughter survive, Robert M. Rathbone being the sixth in order of birth.

Robert B. Rathbone was a brick and stone mason, who came west to Sparta, Wisconsin, in 1857, and was just becoming well established when he felt called upon to offer his services to the Government because of the outbreak of hostilities between the North and the South, which he did by enlisting in Company I, Twenty-fifth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, in 1861, and serving until the close of the war, participating in all of the skirmishes and battles of his command, including the memorable "March to the Sea" with General Sherman, and being mustered out as a corporal. Returning to Sparta, he resumed work at his trade and developed into a contractor and builder and remained at Sparta until 1883, when he went to Aberdeen, South Dakota, filing on government land his soldier's claim. There he was engaged in farming until 1891, when he moved to Redwood Falls, Minnesota, and was there engaged in farming and raising Aberdeen and Holstein cattle of full blood strain, his produce becoming well known over a wide territory. In 1896 Mr. Rathbone retired and located at Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he spent his last years. He was a man who devoted himself to his own affairs and did not care for public honors. In 1857 he was made a member of Sparta Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and later became a member of Sparta Chapter, Royal Arch Masons. Subsequently he demitted to Minnehaha Lodge at Minneapolis. In politics he was a democrat.

Robert M. Rathbone was educated in the public schools of Sparta, Wisconsin, and Brown County, South Dakota, and the high school of Aberdeen, South Dakota. In 1893 he left home and engaged with a mercantile company for about a year, leaving it to go with the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad as a worker in the Minneapolis freight house. He remained there until the spring of 1897, when he went to New Orleans, Louisiana, to engage with the McClellan Dry Dock Company as timekeeper with the idea of making that city his place of residence, but was driven away in the fall of that same year on account of an epidemic of yellow fever, and he returned to Minneapolis and his old road, where he was made a locomotive fireman, and held that position until May, 1901, when he came west to Havre. In June of that year he became a brakeman for the Great Northern Railroad, and has served it as switchman conductor, trainmaster and passenger conductor, still continuing to hold the latter position. Mr. Rathbone belongs to the Order of Railroad Conductors; Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons, of which he is past high priest; DeMolay Commandery No. 15, Knights Templar; and Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana. He is also a member of Havre Chapter No. 30, Order Eastern Star.

On July 30, 1900, Mr. Rathbone was married to Bessie M. Davis, born in Redwood County, Minnesota, a daughter of George I. and Ellen Davis, the father born in Michigan and the mother in Maine.

JAMES GRIFFIN. One of the old settlers of Blaine County is James Griffin, who has been a resident of the locality in and about Chinook since 1888, when, in May of that year, he came here, a youth who had not yet attained to his majority. Since that time as he has increased in prosperity he has participated in the development of this region and cannot help but have a proprietary interest in it. His services to his district as well as his immediate home community has received recognition and he has represented it in the State Assembly, and he has held other offices of a public character.

James Griffin was born in Renfrewshire, Scotland, on the River Clyde, November 9, 1868, a son of James Griffin, also a native of Renfrewshire, the home of the historic William Wallace. The mother of the James Griffin of this review was prior to her marriage Elizabeth Christie, a daughter of Andrew Christie, a merchant tailor of Port Glasgow, Scotland, and she bore her husband the following children: James, who was the eldest; John, who is of the Orpheum Theatre of Chinook, Montana; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Frank Thibedeau, of Chinook; and Andrew, who is a resident of Liverpool, England.

James Griffin, of whom we write, was reared and educated in his native place, and was brought up without any knowledge of physical labor, for he was educated for a profession, but did not follow it, and he has never regretted his action. What he lacked in a practical training he received on the plains of Montana, and the result of his efforts show that he has rendered a pretty good account of himself.

Deciding to leave the old world for the new, Mr. Griffin sailed from the port of Greenock, Scotland, aboard the "Anchoria" of the Anchor Line, landed at Castle Garden, New York City, without incident, and passed through it and went on to Hamilton, Ontario, Canada. There he entered the employ of Henry & Company, which firm owned a racing stable at the old Crystal Palace, and he remained with it for a year and then returned to the United States in 1887, stopping first at Helena, Montana. For a year he worked in a racing stable in that city, and then came overland with a four-horse wagon loaded with a few farming implements, household effects and a chicken coop, which with a very few dollars comprised his assets. When he reached Yantic, his destination, although his purse was almost empty, he possessed an extra supply of courage, and his first act was the construction of a "dugout" on the homestead on which he "squatted" until he was able to enter it when the land was opened up, and this he proved up. His "dugout" was little better than a hole in the ground and was anything but comfortable, and his nearest neighbor was on the Fort Belknap Reservation three miles away. As a means of obtaining a little ready money he went to work for Main & Moran, merchants at Yantic, and was their clerk for two years, and during that time did the work required by the government for proving up his homestead. He plowed the ground and put in his first crop, and threshed his first harvest of oats with a cradle and flail, making the latter from wood secured from a willow tree During his youth he had seen the farmers in Scotland use this primitive method of separating the grain, and as far as he could remember, carried out the same process in his first efforts at farming.

About 1890 the community became interested in irrigation, and T. C. Burns, who had in the meanwhile become one of its homesteaders, took the lead in providing a way to get the water on the land through artificial means. After exhausting his own capital he organized the Belknap Ditch Company, the stockholders of which were, many of them, landowners adjacent to the ditch, and they "worked out" their stock in completing this ditch, Mr. Griffin being one of them. For some time he used water from this ditch, and then took an active interest in a pumping proposition, privately owned. He now owns the steam plant which furnishes the water for his farm, and has been operating under it ever since it was installed.

Mr. Griffin engaged in diversified farming and continued it for twenty-eight years, leaving the farm in 1916 and locating his home at Chinook. The ranch developed by him consists of 800 acres, and includes both his own and Mrs. Griffin's homesteads and other land. The original "dugout" was succeeded by a log cabin, in which he and his bride began their housekeeping, and it forms the basis of the present ranch house, now occupied by the tenants.

Having been convinced of the need of the farmers for better social and educational development Mr. Griffin long ago identified himself with the Patrons of Husbandry, of which organization he became state master in 1916, and held the office for almost three years, when he resigned on account of his affiliation with the Federal Land Bank.

As soon as he could get his papers, Mr. Griffin became a naturalized citizen of the United States. His first papers were taken out at Helena, his second at Fort Benton, and from the time of his casting of his first ballot to the present day he has been a republican. His first official service was as representative for Blaine County in the lower house of the State Assembly, to which he was chosen in the fall of 1916 as successor to Jo Ostle of Harlem. Mr. Griffin entered the Fifteenth General Assembly and served under Speaker O'Connor of Livingston. He was placed on the Committee of Appropriations and seven others, and was one of a committee of three called the "sub-committee on appropriations," which consisted of Eilel of Beaverhead County and Harold Blake of Deerlodge County in addition to him: During the session of this body Mr. Griffin was interested in remedying the mortgage laws relative to foreclosure without proper notice; and in the passage of a stream-pollution bill for the prevention of the pollution of streams, and the consequent killing of the fish, bills covering both of which subjects passed and became laws.

Mr. Griffin made such a record for himself in the house that he was returned without opposition, being supported by the two old line parties and the nonpartisan league, which was just about as strong an endorsement as any man could ask, and proof that the people of his district wanted him to continue as their representative. The Sixteenth Assembly had him, therefore, as a member, and a republican, Oliver Belden of Lewistown, was made speaker. Mr. Griffin was placed on a number of committees, the most important of them being those on public utilities, railroads and transportation, agriculture, fairs and expositions and employes of the state. During this session Mr. Griffin fathered and had passed a bill providing for the eradication of the barberry bush, the great enemy to the wheat, causing it to "smut" on the stalk. He sat in both special sessions of the House, and in the "war session" he participated in the legislation passed for the elimination of enemy propaganda and seditious utterances, and stood with the administration in all patriotic legislation.

In the spring of 1917 Mr. Griffin was appointed appraiser of the Federal Land Bank of Spokane, with Montana as his territory. Among his first duties was to assist in organizing local national farm loan associations for the appraisement of lands and the making of loans through the Federal Farm Loan Bank.

For fourteen years Mr. Griffin has been actively interested in the Montana State Fair, and at present is superintendent of the dry land division. During the San Francisco Fair he won the gold medal for the best display of alfalfa, and two silver cups for the best collective exhibits, which cups were presented by J. J. Hill of the Great Northern Company.

On February 15, 1896, Mr. Griffin was married at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, to Miss Agnes Agnew, born in that city November 23, 1872, a daughter of Dr. Agnew, a native of Aberdeen, Scotland, who died in the prime of young manhood. He was the father of two daughters, Mrs. Georgiana Sharp, of Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, and Mrs. Griffin. The latter was reared by Mr. and Mrs. James Brown, retired farmers of Hamilton, and she attended the country and high schools of the neighborhood. During the World war she was very active in the local branch of the Red Cross, and was the leader of one of its drives for funds.

MANSFIELD A. DANIELS played a large and prominent part in connection with the development and upbuilding of Scobey—both the old and new towns—and his vigorous and well ordered activities made him a citizen of more than local influence. He became one of the representative men of Montana, where high honor and recognition have been accorded to his memory in the naming of a county for him. He was a pioneer of marked initiative and constructive ability, and of equal value to the splendid work which he accomplished was the influence which he exerted in community sentiment and action. His name merits high place in the history of Montana, to which great commonwealth his loyalty was unbounded, and within the border of which he continued to reside until his death, on the 15th of April, 1919.

Mr. Daniels was born at Addison, Pennsylvania, April 2, 1858, the eldest of the six children of John and Lavina (Turney) Daniels. He was but ten years of age when his parents became pioneer settlers in the State of Iowa, where both passed the remainder of their lives, their remains being there laid to rest in the Village of Albion. The father was a carpenter by trade, but aside from service at his trade he assisted in other ways in the furtherance of the development of the Hawkeye State.

Mansfield A. Daniels gained his youthful education in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Iowa, and at the age of fourteen years became a clerk in Mr. Wheeler's general merchandise store at Marshalltown, Iowa. While thus engaged he also took a course in a correspondence school, and after four years of service in the Wheeler store he was for four years associated with his father in work at the carpenter's trade. For the ensuing ten years he was a traveling commercial salesman in the handling of cigars, and in the meanwhile he married, his ambitious wife giving her attention to conducting a hotel and rooming house while he was "on the road." After retiring from the vocation mentioned he engaged in a mercantile business at Albion, where also he conducted a small plumbing establishment. Those were years of struggle, as his capitalistic resources were very limited, but even under these conditions he profited fully by his experience, as did he also in his later and essentially progressive business career. While he was gradually making advancement in his business affairs in Iowa his health became impaired, and finally he determined to come to the West. In 1896 he and his wife arrived, via the Great Northern Railway, at Poplar, Montana. Concerning this stage in his career the following estimate has been given: "Being of the sturdy pioneer type that seems to grow restless under the influence of civilization and ease, Mr. Daniels moved, in April, 1896, to Poplar, Montana, where he was destined to do his share in the carving out and making of a new empire. There he became identified with the Government service and became a fast friend of Major Charles Richardson Anderson Scobey, who was then Indian agent for the Fort Peck Reservation—the man for whom the Town of Scobey is named. Mr. Daniels became the official carpenter at the Fort Peck Agency, and his wife served as Government nurse for the agency, and finally he received appointment to the position of United States land agent at Poplar. In 1901 Mr. Daniels made his first trip north to the present site of 'Old Scobey,' which is located on the west bank of the Poplar River, about two miles southwest of the present Town of Scobey. Here he conceived the idea of starting in the farming and ranching business, and also of establishing a small country store. That was nineteen years ago, and we call this a pioneer country today. Settlers were extremely few, and consisted almost entirely of stock ranchers, who lived many miles apart. It was the day of cayuse and lariat, bachelors and flapjacks—a time when the worst and best traditions of westerner, now gone forever, were in full evidence the year 'round."

In that pioneer section of Sheridan County Mr. Daniels became the fifth settler, and those whom he found there when he came were Frank Crone, John Manternache, Joseph Bonnes and Charles Woodley. Mr. Daniels was accompanied by his brother-in-law, J. C. Timmons. The public domain had not yet been surveyed and opened for entry, and he was at first a squatter. He bought from Mr. Crone a relinquishment, to which he subsequently acquired title, as did he also to the desert land, and through his energy and the earnest assistance of his wife he continued to purchase lands from nearby settlers, and his accumulation of land continued until at the time of his death the Daniels ranch embraced an area of 2,260 acres.

On the 20th of January, 1909, Mr. Daniels contracted a second marriage, when Miss Mabel E. Brooks became his wife, she having been at the time a teacher in Vermont. In that year Mr. and Mrs. Daniels removed to Scobey and settled on a ranch, which still continues to be the home of Mrs. Daniels. Scobey postoffice had just been established by the late Joseph Bonnes, another of the honored pioneers of this section, and was located about two miles south of "old" Scobey. Mrs. Charles Woodley became postmistress after the resignation of Mr. Bonnes, and when Mr. Daniels started his little general store Mrs. Woodley resigned and was succeeded by Mrs. Daniels, who held the office until it was discontinued, about 1916.

Worthy of perpetuation in this connection is the following data concerning the career of the honored subject of this memoir:

"'Mannie' Daniels, as he was known to his more intimate associates in those days, started in to build the foundations of his future home, and he built them well. After starting his store and getting the postoffice, he at once became the financial and business leader and the strong man of the community. Mr. Daniels was one of those big-hearted frontiersmen who were eternally ready to give or lend to those who needed. And he had his hands full—for they borrowed, they begged and they stole from Daniels. He was their storekeeper, their banker and their counselor—he was everything but the minister or priest, and in a large measure he was that. In partnership with Mr. Daniels was his brother-in-law, Jacob C. Timmons, who shared equally in the trials and hardships of building up the community and who eventually became chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Sheridan County.

"In 1912 Mr. Daniels began the erection of a beautiful home on a cozy little hill overlooking the west bank of Poplar River, and this cost him about $20,000. This house was made modern throughout and is one of the best in this part of the state, notwithstanding that every bit of material had to be freighted sixty miles overland, from Poplar. These were the days when Mr. Daniels wore himself out physically. A man of great physical stature and strength, he never thought of a breakdown, and he gave unreservedly of his body and mind to his manifold duties. He was a staunch republican in politics, but repeatedly refused to enter the arena as a contestant for political office. He always said that he thoroughly believed that all a man gained by entering politics was a host of enemies. In regard to enemies it is truthfully said that he had very few. In the winter of 1919 Mr. Daniels suffered a paralytic stroke, from which he never recovered. He retained all of his faculties, but realized that the end had come, and gave evidence of this in many ways. The first move for the creating of a county bearing his name was started at this time, and he showed unmistakable signs of deep feeling when informed of the project. Mr. Daniels passed away April 15, 1919, while seated in a chair. We have always held in great esteem and veneration the deeds and lives of that class of God's noblemen who pioneer and blaze the trails into a new and unknown country. Of this class of men was Mansfield A. Daniels. He came, he hewed and he won. We can not call him back, but we have done a fitting thing in his honor—we have placed a new county on the map of Montana and have named it in his memory, Daniels County."

Mr. Daniels was affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic Fraternity, under the auspices of which his funeral was held, and he was a member also of the lodge of Elks at Helena. His religious faith was that of the Lutheran Church. His old friends testify that he excelled as a conversationalist and that had his inclinations so directed he might have developed splendid powers as a public speaker.

April 6, 1880, Mr. Daniels married Adele M. Timmons, a sister of Jacob C. Timmons, of Scobey. Her death occurred July 26, 1907, and she was not survived by children.

Mr. Daniels met his second wife at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, New York, in 1901, she having been a friend of his first wife. Her maiden name was Mabel E. Brooks, and she was born at Royalton, Vermont, June 3, 1878, a daughter of Selden Smith Brooks and Mary (Corbin) Brooks. Her father was born in the same house and same room as was Mrs. Daniels, and was a son of Austin and Susan (Smith) Brooks. The Brooks family is of colonial New England stock, formerly identified with Hancock, Vermont. The family furnished soldiers in the War of the Revolution and the War of 1812, and representatives of the name were numbered among the first settlers of Royalton, Vermont. Mrs. Daniels' father is still living in the Royalton locality, but her mother passed away April 13, 1919, Mrs. Daniels having been doubly bereaved, as her husband died only two days later. Her only sister, Mrs. Sarah Flanders, remains as companion of the venerable father. Mrs. Daniels was graduated in the high school at Bethel, Vermont, and thereafter completed the teachers' training and preparatory course at Barre, that state. Thereafter she was for nine years a successful and popular teacher in the schools of her native state—until her marriage to Mr. Daniels in 1909.

Mrs. Daniels took an active and appreciative part in all that her husband planned, and to her encouragement was due much of his success, as well as the prolongation of his life. She is one of the highly esteemed residents of the old Scobey locality. She was reared in the faith of the Congregational Church and has been active in various departments of church work, including the Sunday School. Mr. and Mrs. Daniels became the parents of three children, all of whom survive the father—Marjorie A., Maydene A. and Selden Mansfield. S. Mansfield Daniels is the one male survivor of the immediate family of the subject of this memoir, save the latter's brother, Ross Daniels, now in charge of the Scobey ranch.

Hon. George E. Fuller. One of the interesting personalities of Blaine County, Montana, is George E. Fuller, mayor of Chinook and a man of business prominence here for almost twenty years. Although comparatively a young man, Mayor Fuller has had a wealth of experience, tending to the development of character and self reliance, and may well be numbered with the stable, representative men of this great section.

George E. Fuller was born at Lavalle, Sauk County, Wisconsin, August 7, 1870. His parents were Riley B. and Nancy (Bailey) Fuller, natives of the State of New York, where the ancestry can be traced many generations back. Their marriage took place at Groton, New York, and in 1850 they moved to Wisconsin and settled on a pioneer farm in Sauk County, near Reedsburg. When the Civil war came on Riley B. Fuller volunteered for service in the Union army, but was rejected because of physical disability, but his two brothers, Harvey and Jack Fuller, served through the war in New York regiments. Mr. Fuller devoted the rest of his active life to agricultural pursuits, and both he and wife survived into a peaceful old age, his death occurring in 1913, at the age of eighty-three years, and her death five years afterward, when aged eighty-four years. He was a republican in his political views. Their family consisted of two sons and two daughters, namely: John, who was a railroad man, died at Reedsburg, Wisconsin, leaving a daughter and two sons; Hattie, who was the wife of Eugene Stafford, died at Duluth, Minnesota, leaving one son; Charity, who is the widow of Edwin Briggs, resides at Lavalle, Wisconsin; and George E., who has long been identified with the business and public interests of Chinook, Montana.

George E. Fuller had country school privileges while growing up on the home farm, and possibly it was the monotony of rural surroundings that led the high-spirited youth to leave the farm when eighteen years old and enlist at St. Paul in the United States army. He became a member of Company B, Twentieth United States Infantry, Captain McCaskey and Col. Elwell S. Otis commanding, the latter becoming General Otis and after the United States acquired the Philippine Islands served as governor-general of the same. Private Fuller was sent with his regiment to Fort Assinniboine at once, and remained there until he was discharged as sergeant of his company in April, 1894.

In 1894, after his marriage, Mr. Fuller went to Reedsburg, Wisconsin, and for one year afterward was employed as instructor of the Reedsburg Military Band. In June, 1895, he returned to the Chouteau region of Montana, and entered a homestead located twenty-five miles south of Havre, and moved on it with the determination to live there until he had secured his claim, and this determination he carried out, although it often entailed much hardship and self denial. Practical farm life had never appealed to him, and he soon had plans under way by which he could turn his attention in another more congenial line that would enable him to hire a competent farmer while he was otherwise engaged. It was indicative of the decision of character that has always marked Mayor Fuller that this plan was successfully carried out through his perseverance in studying at night and perfecting his knowledge that his earlier country school training only touched, and this pertinacity resulted in his securing a teacher's certificate at Fort Benton and his appointment as a rural school teacher, with a salary of $45 a month. For five years he and his family lived in the log cabin of two rooms on his claim, Mr. Fuller providing family necessities by teaching and also clerking for the Montana Supply Company at Havre.

Late in the fall of 1900 Mr. Fuller came to Chinook, and became associated with the Bogy Mercantile Company in March, 1901, as bookkeeper. He continued in this relation until 1912, when he was made manager of the company, also vice president for a time, when public interests more or less claimed him. This concern, in which Mayor Fuller is a large stockholder, is one of the T. C. Power associated stores, extensive business combinations of this section

At Fort Assinniboine Mr. Fuller was married to Miss Annie Herron, who was born at Fort McPherson, Atlanta, Georgia. Her parents were Sergeant Frank and Mary (Larkin) (McCarthy) Herron, the latter of whom was born in Ireland. The father of Mrs. Fuller was born in North Carolina. He served under General Custer in the Seventh United States Cavalry at Fort Meade and Fort Lincoln, and went to Fort Assinniboine as company sergeant in 1881. His death occurred while on a visit to his old home in North Carolina. Mrs. Fuller had four brothers, one of whom, James Herron, died in the army while serving in the Philippine Islands. Mrs. Fuller was educated at St. Cloud, Minnesota, her marriage taking place shortly after she left college. Mayor and Mrs. Fuller have two daughters, May and Margie, the latter of whom is a student in the graduating class of 1921 in the high school at Chinook. The older daughter is the wife of Peter Motts, who is a graduate of Notre Dame University, South Bend, Indiana. During the great war he went to Europe with the American Expeditionary Forces as a lieutenant in an army engineering corps, and at present is with the engineering department of the State Highway Commission at Great Falls, Montana.

The first official service Mayor Fuller gave Chinook was as city alderman, and during his two terms as such his public spirit was evidenced and his business ability emphasized by the influence he brought to bear in bringing about such desirable improvements as concrete walks and elaborate electric lighting system. On April 5, 1920, he was elected mayor of Chinook, succeeding Hon. D. C. Kenyon, and is immensely popular with the people. It is promised that his administration will be careful and economic as becomes the times, and in this he will have the hearty support of the best element. He is one of the wide-visioned, forward-looking men of the state, believing sincerely in the great future that awaits Montana, and is serving as local chairman of the Montana Development Association.

During the great war Mayor Fuller was prominent, although unassuming, in all the patriotic movements inaugurated for the country's welfare and defense, accepting many responsibilities and serving gladly and freely, and during the greater part of the time was county chairman of the food administration department. To the extent of his ability he forwarded the sale of war bonds, and both he and Mrs. Fuller were leaders in Red Cross activities at Chinook.

HERMANN J. LEHFELDT, secretary and treasurer of the Lehfeldt Company of Chinook, is one of the substantial men of Chinook, with which he has been identified since 1899. He was born in Crawford County, Iowa, October 18, 1875, a son of Julius Lehfeldt, and grandson of Hans Lehfeldt

Julius Lehfeldt was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Denmark, February 1, 1854. His father, Hans Lehfeldt, was a wool grower who had extensive interests in the sheep industry not far from Hamburg, Germany, but in 1870 he brought his three sons and six daughters tot he United States so as to save his sons from the obligatory military training in the German army, and to let them have the use of the time they would otherwise have to spend in military duties. Julius Lehfeldt, the youngest of the three sons, was liberally educated, and learned to use fluently the French, German and English languages, with the intention of engaging in the revenue service.

When the Lehfeldt family arrived in the United States they prospected from St. Louis, Missouri, through Kansas, Missouri and Iowa, and finding conditions in the last named state better suited to their purposes, located twelve miles north of Denison, Iowa. Later Hans Lehfeldt died at Denison. His widow survived him for some years, but when she died in California her remains were brought back to Denison and laid beside his in the cemetery of that city.

When he attained to his majority Julius Lehfeldt became a citizen of the United States by naturalization at Denison, Iowa, and has been identified with the republican party ever since, although he has never taken an active part in politics. For some years he was in an implement business at Denison, and in 1890 came to Montana and located twelve miles south of the Big Sandy on a sheep ranch which he conducted for 9½ years, and although his location was not a desirable one, understanding the sheep industry so thoroughly he made it pay him good returns. However, in 1899 he disposed of it and took over the Lohman mercantile interests at Chinook, conducting the business under his own name until February 1, 1915, when the Lehfelt Company was incorporated, with him as its president and his son Hermann J. Lehfeldt as secretary treasurer. The company carries on a retail department store with a large implement department separate from the main store. Up to January 1, 1918, this company did a large credit business, but then changed its policy, and a practically spot cash basis was adopted, which has proven more satisfactory to all concerned. Since the incorporation the capital stock has been increased by $72,500.

Julius Lehfeldt was married to Adele Mundt, a daughter of Claus Mundt, a native of Germany, who came to the United States in young manhood and located near Davenport, Iowa, where Mrs. Lehfeldt was born on July 10, 1857. She was the third in a family of three sons and three daughters. Her girlhood was spent on her father's farm and she was about eighteen years old when she was married. Mr. and Mrs. Lehfeldt became the parents of the following children: Hermann J., who was the eldest born; Augusta, who is the wife of Ernest Ward, a ranchman of the vicinity of Chinook; Mrs. Hortense Morton, of Chinook; Mrs. Melvina Martens, of Cleveland, Montana; Herbert, who is also with the Lehfeldt Company of Chinook; and Mrs. Sylvia Johnson, of Chinook, whose husband has charge of the implement department of the Lehfeldt Company.

Only a youth of fifteen years when brought to Montana by his parents, Hermann J. Lehfeldt has since made this state his home, and all of his interests are centered in it. Up to the time he came to Montana he had attended the public schools, but his only schooling since then was a year's course in a business college. His father then interested him in the ranch, and when removal was made to Chinook he rendered an active service in the store and was rewarded by his present appointment as secretary and treasurer when the company was incorporated. It was capitalized at $50,000. The other official of the company is Mrs. Adele Lehfeldt, who is vice president, this being a close corporation. With both sons and a son-in-law, together with Julius Lehfeldt, at the head, there is little danger of the business being neglected or the requirements of the customers being overlooked. This is one of the most reliable mercantile houses in the county, if not in this part of the state, and the progress is steady and natural.

On June 24, 1903, Hermann J. Lehfeldt was married at Avoca, Iowa, to Miss Emma Stoltenberg, born in Scott County, Iowa, a daughter of Henry Stoltenberg, a farmer of German birth. Mr. and Mrs. Lehfeldt have the following children: Robert, Roberta, Henry and Arthur. Like his honored father Mr. Lehfeldt is a republican, and he, too, has never aspired to political honors.

VERNON BUTLER. Not only has Vernon Butler of Chinook proved his dependability as county clerk and recorder of Blaine County in such a manner as to win approval from his constituents, but he has the distinction of being one of the progressive ranchmen of the Milk River Valley. He was born in Eaton County, Michigan, October 2, 1877, a son of Edwin D. Butler.

Edwin D. Butler was born in Livingston County, Michigan, where his father had established the family, going to that locality during its pioneer epoch from his native state of New York. Entering a farm from the Government, the grandfather there rounded out a useful life. In his family were three sons, of whom one was Edwin D., who volunteered for service in the Union army during the war between the two sections of the country.

The service of Edwin D. Butler in that conflict took place in connection with Company E, Twenty-sixth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, as a part of the Army of the Potomac. He participated in several battles, in one of which he was wounded, a bullet passing through his thighs, and on account of this injury he was mustered out of the service. With the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic he associated himself with his local post, and has taken an interest in it through life. Except for voting the democratic ticket he has taken no active part in politics.

Edwin D. Butler was married to Fannie E. Cunningham, a daughter of James Cunningham, and they became the parents of the following children: Charles, who lives at Diamondale, Michigan; Minnie, who is the wife of L. A. Saunders, of Lansing, Michigan; and Vernon, who was the youngest born.

Vernon Butler came into the Milk River Valley in April, 1899, and established himself at Harlem, being then only twenty-two years of age. He and his companion, Len T. Bateman, made the trip to Montana direct from Eaton County, Michigan. Mr. Butler had learned to be a practical farmer at the same time he was securing a common school education, and remained at home until he attained his majority, at that time beginning to work out by the month for neighboring farmers. As he only received $17 a month with board, this neighborhood ceased to attract him and he resolved to go somewhere else where the prospects were better. Having put everything in order at home, including the cutting of a large amount of cord wood and laying in a store of ice, he started out on his travels, embarking at Diamondale, Michigan for Harlem. He and Mr. Bateman chose that locality because of the favorable reports of the region they had received from a former associate who had come west to Harlem a year or so before.

When he reached his destination Mr. Butler sought employment, and found it with R. M. Sands on the latter's ranch, receiving $28 a month and board, but he left that ranch after four months and went to work for George Cowan, tieing hay on his hay press. Late in the fall he engaged with Fairbanks, Morse & Company to assist in the construction of water tanks at Savoy, Montana, for the Great Northern Railroad, and when that job was completed he went to Havre and became an engine wiper in the roundhouse of the railroad. In a short time the Great Northern replaced eight white men with Japanese, and so Mr. Butler lost his job, and he left Montana and went into the Orofino country of Idaho, on the Clearwater River, and his employment there was "swamping," that is cutting roads in a "tie" camp. This work did not suit him and a month later he returned to Harlem and went to work for W. E. French, a merchant of that place. On April 1, 1900, he changed to the Harlem Mercantile Company, and on July 6, 1901, became manager for George L. Bowles & Company at Landusky, Montana, a mercantile firm. Here he remained until September, 1902, when the business was closed out and he returned to the Harlem Mercantile Company, and remained with that concern until he went on his ranch in the fall of 1906.

Mr. Butler exercised his right of homesteading when he entered his claim at Savoy, Montana, in 1904, and when he occupied it as a ranch he engaged in the cattle and horse business, remaining on it until 1911. He then returned to the Harlem Mercantile Company, with which he remained until March 2, 1912, on which date he located at Chinook and assumed the duties of county clerk and recorder of Blaine County.

As ranchmen Mr. Butler and his partner, Mr. Bateman have accumulated 783 acres of land in the Milk River Valley near Savoy, which includes each of their respective homesteads, all under fence and improved with two, two-story log houses. They are the successors of the pioneer shacks which sheltered the young men while they were proving up their claims. The ranch is partly irrigated from the flood waters of Savoy Creek, and is a hay ranch and stock farm.

Brought up under democratic influences, it might have been but natural had Mr. Butler given his support to the candidates of that party, but he found upon reaching mature years that he still held to the sentiments he has had since boyhood, and cast his first presidential vote at Harlem in 1900 for William McKinley, and has continued in the republican ranks ever since. In February, 1912, he was elected, without opposition, first county clerk and recorder of Blaine County, was re-elected that fall, also without opposition, and has been continued in office ever since by the voters of the county. During the World war he served as secretary of the local Selective Service Board, and was one of the most generous contributors to the various war drives.

On September 15, 1905, Vernon Butler was married at Harlem, Montana, to Anna Louella Colegrove, a daughter of Herman L. and Gittie Colegrove. Mr. Colegrove came to Harlem, Montana, from Lenawee County, Michigan, in 1902, and has since been a farmer of this locality. Mrs. Butler was born near Morenci, Michigan, June 20, 1886. After she was graduated from the Morenci High School she was engaged in teaching in the Harlem schools for a few months prior to her marriage. She was the fifth born in the family of six children of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Butler have one son, Clyde R.

The career of Mr. Butler is one which points an excellent lesson. It demonstrates what can be accomplished through earnest, steadfast and honorable endeavor. Thousands of young men came to Montana and were offered quite as good, if not better, opportunities as he found, and yet they have drifted out of sight because they were looking for something "easy," jobs which did not require any exertion on their part. He has always been a worker, and has carried into his official life the same painstaking industry which has always characterized him, with the result that he has been returned again and again to office, and is held in the highest esteem by his fellow citizens.

GEORGE W. COWAN is one of the early settlers of the Fergus County locality of Montana. He came here in the fall of 1889, reaching his destination on the 5th day of that month. He had then just reached the age of maturity and came to join his brother at Box Elder, Fergus County. The brother was a member of the stock firm of Grant & Cowan, prominent sheep raisers, and it often fell to the lot of young George to serve as a sheep herder. He continued in this first employment until the fall of 1891, and then began work for the ranchman David Hilger, with whom he remained during the winter of 1891-2. In the meantime his brother, W. S. Cowan, had sold his interest in the ranch, and the two brothers then located on Woody Island Creek on the Canadian line and engaged in the sheep business, the association continuing 2½ years. George W. Cowan then sold his interest to his brother and returned to New York.

He had resided in Montana nine years when he returned to his native commonwealth. He had come into this state with a cash capital of nine dollars, and returned to New York with a capital of $2,700. Once more in the East, he engaged in running a stage and mail line and also in farming, and remained in the state for 2½ years, marrying in the meantime. But the call of the West and the free and open life of Montana finally lured him again to this state, and he became a resident of Harlem in 1899 and formed a partnership with W. E. Franch in farming, stockraising and the livery business, this association continuing for about two years, but the venture was not successful and instead of making money Mr. Cowan was $2,700 worse off than nothing. At this juncture the firm dissolved partnership, Mr. Cowan retaining the livery business, and in nine months he was $3,000 ahead. He dealt in horses as a part of his business and continued the industry for about nineteen months, and on selling out realized a capital of about $4,000.

He then resumed the sheep industry, buying out W. A. Howard on Savoy Creek, and continuing the business until the fall of 1912, having a ranch of unlimited range and running at the height of the industry 16,000 sheep. Before leaving the ranch he sold an interest in the sheep to Lachapelle Brothers, and with Mrs. Cowan he spent the winter of 1910 in California. Leaving the ranch, he came to Chinook and engaged in the livery and feed business, leasing the old Bear Paw barns and continuing the business there until buying the Ryan barn, better known as the City Stables, removing thereto in the fall of 1917. The City Stables is a concrete building erected by the Ryans, is 140x60 feet in dimensions, with mow room for 100 tons of bailed hay and with a capacity for ninety-six head of horses.

Mr. Cowan is also interested in and identified with farming. He entered his homestead on the Bear Paw Mountains, sixteen miles south of Chinook, on Snake Creek, and he is now proving it up. In 1916 he planted twenty acres of flax and twenty acres of wheat, with the result of an acre yield of fourteen bushels of flax and twenty-seven bushels of wheat. In 1917 he farmed sixty acres, forty of which were devoted to flax and the remainder to wheat, but on account of the drouth that year he harvested practically nothing. In the following year he sowed eighty acres to wheat, but another dry year caused him almost a total loss. In 1919 he sowed 400 acres, 360 to wheat and forty to flax, and threshed the total sum of twenty bushels of flax as his entire return.

Mr. George W. Cowan was born in Schoharrie County, New York, in the town of Fulton, August 27, 1868, a son of William and Mary (Watters) Cowan, both natives of the North of Ireland. They passed their lives as farmers and in conducting a boarding house for tourists in the Catskill Mountains. Mrs. Cowan died in the Catskills in 1897, and two years afterward Mr. Cowan sold his interests in the East and came to Montana to be with his sons. He spent the remainder of his life here and died in 1903 at Harlem, when he had attained the age of seventy-eight years. The following children were born to William and Mary Cowan: Winfield S., a business man of Harlem; Jennie, who married Jerry Whitbeck and resides in Columbus, Ohio; Elizabeth, who married George Banta and resides in Brooklyn, New York, being now a widow; James Arthur, of Harlem, Montana; Eugene Everet, who died in Nantucket, Connecticut, in 1898; George William, of this review; Charles Alexander, of Schoharrie County, New York; and Minne, a ranchman north of Harlem, Montana.

On the 13th of April, 1899, George W. Cowan was married to Miss Edith Fancher, who was born near Summit in September, 1880, the sixth of the seven children of Seth Fancher, of Summit, New York. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cowan, Florence Louisa, a student in the Valley City Normal School of North Dakota, George Perry and Arthur Edward.

When he reached the voting age Mr. Cowan cast a republican presidential ballot, although his father was a democrat, and he has continued to uphold the principles of the republican party since that time. He has received the junior degrees in Masonry and is a subordinate in Odd Fellowship.

SAMUEL SIMMS is an old timer of Great Falls, where he arrived and began work at his trade as a bricklayer over thirty years ago. For a number of years past he has been one of the leading breeders and raisers of Hereford cattle in that section.

Mr. Simms was born in Lancashire, England, May 5, 1863, next to the youngest in the large family of sixteen children of John and Mary (Pennington) Simms. Seven of these children are still living. His parents spent all their lives in England, where his father died in May, 1886, and his mother in 1894. His father was a mining contractor, and lived for the most part in Lancashire. He was a member of the Church of England.

Samuel Simms was educated in Manchester, and as a boy learned the bricklaying trade. On May 20, 1886, he arrived in New York, worked for a time at Buffalo, and on June 1, 1887, arrived at Great Falls, Montana. His first employer was Hon. Paris Gibson, who gave Mr. Simms work at his mines in Sand Coulee. For a number of years Mr. Simms employed his skill at his trade and industry for the upbuilding of the City of Great Falls. In 1902 he engaged in ranching. His fine farm of 486 acres is ten miles east of Great Falls. He makes a specialty of beef cattle, principally Herefords, and also has a small herd of Jerseys. Mr. Simms has never cared for office, and in politics has voted for the best man in local affairs and in national campaigns has voted the republican ticket. He attends the Presbyterian Church.

At Helena, October 9, 1894, Mr. Simms married Miss Susan Heher. The ceremony was performed by Rev. L. L. Love. They have two children, Susan and Frederick. Susan is the wife of Edward Kelton, and has two children, Gladys and Pert. The Keltons are a very talented family, all of them being skilled musicians, and they make a very effective combination and are professional entertainers of great repute. The son Frederick Simms married Edith Forest and lives at San Diego, California. He and his wife have five children, Mazie, Jewell, Frederick, Junie, and an infant not yet named.

JOHN MCLAREN has played an important part in the early and subsequent development in this northern central part of Montana both as a citizen and rancher. He was born in Perthshire, Scotland, a son of a sheep farmer, John McLaren, and was educated in the country schools. The McLaren family have been a part of that locality in Scotland for many generations, and their chief vocation has been farming.

John McLaren came to the United States in 1887, stopping first in California, and although he spent over a year in that state he did not engage in business there. In the spring of 1889 he came to the Milk River Valley, purchased a team and wagon at Fort Assiniboine, also a camping outfit, and took up a claim one mile north of Yantic, now known as Lohman. His worldly wealth at that time consisted of $400, but in the following year he fell heir to enough money to enable him to buy a small band of sheep, beginning the business with 800 ewes. Later on he increased his flock with an additional 300 ewes, and from the first he was assisted in the enterprise by his nephew, William McLaren, who was then but a boy. They at first lived in a tent, but in a short time built a log cabin, and there they lived for one year, when the cabin was replaced by a small frame house, the cabin being then used for other purposes.

Yantic was at that time an Indian reserve. The Indians camped in the brush quite near to the McLaren home, but they proved very friendly neighbors and frequent borrowers. The squaws made daily rounds among the herd looking for dead sheep, and when one was found they cut out the choicest morseis with their small hatchets. The cabin was never locked, but the Indians were strictly honest.

As the years passed Mr. McLaren succeeded in his business interests in Montana. The one incident to which he attaches much of his success was a visit he paid to Fort Benton for the purpose of cashing a check at the First National Bank of that city. But the cashier refused the check, Mr. McLaren having no one to identify him, and he later presented it at the Stockman's Bank, of which Charlie Duer was then the cashier but later was made the president of the bank. Mr. McLaren asked the cashier for $70, until the validity of the check could be ascertained, when he was to be sent the remainder due him. Mr. Duer complied with this request, returning him all but $5, which he said he kept that Mr. McLaren might open an account with the bank, which he did, sending to the bank all the surplus money he had at that time. During the very severe winter of 1892-93 Mr. McLaren found he had made a friend that did not fail him in all his subsequent years of business.

The few hundred ewes with which he engaged in the sheep business was increased until the flock numbered over 20,000 sheep, but the drouths made it necessary to decrease the number. They also increased their holdings of land both by purchasing and renting, and at the present time they have about 8,000 sheep and a limited number of cattle. The nephew, William McLaren, is now in charge of the sheep and ranches. They still own the old homestead ranch 1½ miles north of Lohman.

John McLaren was united in marriage with Christina Robertson, and six sons and five daughters were born to this union, three of whom came to the United States: John, mentioned more at length below; P. L., who is engaged in ranching in Blaine County; and Susan, the widow of John Thibedeau, who was a prominent sheep man in Blaine County. Mrs. Thibedeau is now the companion and housekeeper of her brother John.

John McLaren became identified with the banking business in 1910 as vice president of the First National Bank of Chinook, and he succeeded to the presidency of this banking house in 1915. He served as chairman of the different Liberty Loan drives of Chinook, was a member of the Blaine County Council of Defense, and was a member of the executive board of the local Red Cross. As a national voter he affiliates with the republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison, but with the exception of casting his ballot he has had no part in the political life of his community. His only society is his church, remaining true to the Presbyterian faith in which he was reared.

ALBERT W. ZIEBARTH, clerk of the District Court of Blaine County, is among the settlers who came to Montana in 1889, just before it was admitted to the Union. He is a contribution from the State of Minnesota, and came as a railroad man in the station service as train-operator for the Great Northern Railroad.

Born in Wright County, Minnesota, January 11, 1868, Albert W. Ziebarth is a son of William Ziebarth, of Delano, Minnesota, born in the Province of Posen, Germany, February 2, 1838. When he was about eighteen years of age he came to the United States, stopped briefly at Chicago, Illinois, where his father died, and then the family moved to Minnesota, where later on the mother passed away. William Ziebarth was one in a family of two sons and six daughters, but he and his brother Edward A. are the sole survivors.

William Ziebarth was educated somewhat liberally in Germany, and was a country school-teacher for some time in Wright County, Minnesota. When war broke out between the North and the South he and his brother were in perfect accord with the former section, and both wanted to offer their services, but it was decided that one of them must remain and look after the family, so they drew lots and Edward A. was the one who secured the winning one and enlisted in the Union army. He served until he was wounded and taken prisoner and confined in one of the Southern strongholds.

From the time he secured his papers of citizenship William Ziebarth was a democrat, and he has always been active in his party. He served as commissioner of his county, a republican section, and was a candidate for representative and county auditor, but was defeated, although running ahead of his ticket on account of his personal popularity. He has always been identified with the Lutheran Church, and he belongs to the Patrons of Husbandry.

William Ziebarth was married to Sophie Boerner, born in the Province of Brandenburg, near Berlin, Germany, a daughter of Frederick Boerner, and they became the parents of the following children: William, who is a resident of Herman, Minnesota; Albert W., whose name heads this review; Sarah, who is the wife of Joseph Rummel, of Saint Paul, Minnesota; Alvina, who is married and lives at Delano, Minnesota; and Frederick, who is operating the old homestead near Delano.

Albert W. Ziebarth spent his boyhood and youth on his father's homestead, and his only educational training was that afforded by the country schools and a three-months' course in a commercial college. He learned telegraphy and did his first work as an operator at Waverly, Minnesota, from which place he was sent to Montana as train-operator. For six months he ran between Great Falls and Minot in this capacity, and was then sent to White Earth, North Dakota, as station agent and operator. It was two years before he came back into the Treasure State, but in the fall of 1891 was made cashier of the station at Fort Benton, from whence he was transferred to Assiniboine, and remained at the latter point for two years, when he was returned to Fort Benton as agent. Two years later he resigned that position and left the railroad service.

Coming to Chinook in 1897, Mr. Ziebarth embarked in a mercantile business and continued it until 1907, and from then until the spring of 1912 he was actively engaged in handling real estate. While he was still a merchant he tried to interest the people of this locality in the best industry, and took up the matter with the sugar beet people of Colorado, making trips to that region and doing the preliminary work for securing capital. His idea was to use the water from the Milk River for irrigation of the beet lands of this valley. He had matters in such condition that this industry would have been established had it not been for a suit instituted by the Indian agent at Fort Belknap against the people of the valley, to secure to the Indians prior right to the water. This suit was decided in favor of the Indians, and this killed the beet sugar project.

In the fall of 1919 Mr. Ziebarth headed a movement to organize an irrigation district extending from Lohman to the Dodson Dam, so as to bring this intervening region of thirty-five miles under water. There were so many small ditch companies and conflicting interests that the project was abandoned, and another taken up for the merging of the several private companies south of Milk River into a single company, and this was put through to completion, funds raised for the construction of a dam across the river, the building of a head-gate and five miles of main ditch. All of this was done promptly and well with a total outlay of about $40,000, and by this system about 13,000 acres are watered, instead of only one-third of that amount as was originally proposed. The men who put this through, headed by Mr. Ziebarth, are landowners of the district affected.

In 1912 Mr. Ziebarth was appointed clerk of the Court of Blaine County, having served as deputy for the first clerk named, and has been doing the work of the office since a date three months after the county was established. In November, 1912, he was elected to the office, and has been re-elected every four years since. He cast his first presidential ballot for Grover Cleveland at Havre, Montana, and has supported the democratic party ever since.

Mr. Ziebarth is vice president of the Lohman State Bank of Chinook, and is one of its original stockholders. He was chairman of the Four Minute men of Blaine County during the war period, and gave much of his time to producing food on his farm.

On April 6, 1892, Albert W. Ziebarth was married at Delano, Minnesota, to Julia H. Strauch, a daughter of Theodore and Helen (Epply) Strauch. Mr. Strauch was born in Hesse, Germany, from whence he came to Minnesota, and was there engaged in farming until his death, which occurred in 1919. He was one of four brothers educated for the specific purpose of manufacturing piano forte action, but only two of them followed out the plans of their father. They are Peter D. and William Strauch, of Strauch Brothers Piano Forte Action Company of New York, the second largest concern in the United States that is engaged in this industry. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Strauch became the parents of the following children: Theodore, Louis, Frank, Fred, Mrs. Louisa Wagner, Mrs. Ziebarth and Mrs. Anna Buri, the latter having been a resident of Annandale, Minnesota, at the time of her death.

Mrs. Ziebarth was born in Wright County, Minnesota, July 1, 1807, was there educated in the public schools, and married when she was twenty-two years of age. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Ziebarth are as follows: Harold, who was born at Assiniboine, Montana, 1893, is engaged in farming near Chinook, enlisted for service during the World war, in the Veterinary Corps in June, 1918, and was overseas until July, 1919; Dorothy, who was born at Fort Benton, Montana, April 30, 1896, was educated in the College of Agriculture at Bozeman, Montana; Edgar T., who was born at Chinook, Montana, in December, 1898, was educated in the city high school and enlisted for service during the late war, in November, 1917, in the aviation branch of the army, was sent to England, where he served until within ten days of the signing of the armistice, when he was sent to France, and was there for a few months before he was ordered home, and was discharged in July, 1919, and is now shipping clerk with the Heintz Company of Seattle, Washington; and Julia, who is attending the Chinook High School. They lost a daughter, Helen, who died when five years of age.

Mr. and Mrs. Ziebarth are members of the Presbyterian Church, and she has always taken an active interest in church affairs. Since a girl of fourteen years she has been church organist and has served the different churches in the several communities in which she has lived. Both she and Mr. Ziebarth are very popular. They have a fine family, and are justly regarded as being among the most representative people of the county.

Edward Stubban. To Edward Stubban belongs the distinction of being one of the founders of Medicine Lake and one of its pioneer merchants and business men. His identification with this locality dates from the 20th of June, 1906, when he came to Sheridan County seeking a location. His first act toward the establishment of a home here was the location of his claim. This portion of the region had not yet been surveyed, and by the rotation of his wagon wheel from the closest Government line he determined quite accurately where his land lines would eventually be drawn, and he thus settled about where his filing and entry were afterward made. He built himself a one-room shack at old Medicine Lake, which town he founded, and there he soon engaged in mercantile pursuits, building a one-room store room against his shack. Although his capital was small, the demand was also small. A postoffice was established at this location in the fall of 1906 and given the name of Flandrem, which has changed to Medicine Lake in 1908.

This pioneer business man of Medicine Lake, one of the town's first four merchants and one of the three still identified therewith, is a native of Trondjem, Norway, born March 23, 1876, a son of Arnt and Marie Stubban, both of whom were also born at Trondjem and are still living there. Their seven children are all living, and three are residents of the United States. Samuel was the first of the family to come to the United States, and he is now a resident of Minneapolis, Minnesota. He was followed by his brother Edward, the sixth born of the children, and finally Louie left the Norway home and is now in Spokane, Washington.

The early home life of Edward Stubban was spent on the farm. He attended the public schools of his native locality, and pursued a preparatory course for entering a military training school, but upon examination for entry was rejected for physical defect in one finger. Deciding then to come to the United States, he sailed from Trondjem on a cattle boat bound for Halifax, continued on to Minneapolis and there joined his brother, who was and still is a mechanic in that city. Mr. Stubban soon secured a place in a factory at a wage of 12½ cents an hour, later worked in a furniture factory, and then spent three months in the woods salvaging timber after a big fire. At this time he was being paid from $12 to $14 a month, which proved barely sufficient for living expenses, and at the end of the month he returned to Minneapolis and entered night school to learn English spelling, for he found it much harder to spell than to write the English language.

After a time Mr. Stubban secured employment in the Pillsbury "A" Mill, where he made his first real money. Business conditions were much improved at this time, the panic which had been sweeping over the country having subsided, and with the small capital he had saved from his earnings he engaged in the furniture and undertaking business in Triumph, Minnesota, but soon disposed of this business and returned to Minneapolis September 6, 1901, a day made memorable on account of the assassination of President McKinley. Mr. Stubban resumed work with a milling company as a wheat scaler, thus beginning life again at the bottom round, and after three months he moved his family to Turtle River in Northern Minnesota and found work in a saw mill. In the spring of 1912 he removed to Cass Lake and continued as a wage worker there until October 1st following, when he went to Bemidje, Minnesota, and obtained work on the construction of a large saw mill during that winter. With the coming of spring he had saved sufficient money to open a little store at Aure on the old Red Lake Reservation. While there he took out his citizenship papers and cast his first vote. Business was then good among the lumber camps of that region, and he left Aure with more capital than he had taken there. He sold his business there to go to Newburg, North Dakota, whence he came to Culbertson, Montana, enroute to his final location at Medicine Lake.

Mr. Stubban drove his own team into this locality, bringing his family. His team was a pair of western bronchos, with which he broke sod and began the active work of farming on his claim. He proved up his land and followed farming and teaming until he disposed of his homestead. During the year 1912 his wheat crop averaged about thirty bushels to the acre, that having been his banner grain year, and the market price ranged from 65 to 85 cents a bushel.

Leaving the claim, Mr. Stubban came to the new townsite of Medicine Lake and entered upon his career as a merchant, a career that has brought him success and recognition. The panic of 1907 seriously interfered with his mercantile progress, and he lost his capital and for a time was obliged to discontinue the business. In the fall of 1908, believing in the future of the locality and from the proceeds of a small crop which he had raised, he purchased another stock of goods and resumed business in the old building, continuing there until the railroad came, when his store and contents were moved to the new site of Medicine Lake and to the lot upon which his store now stands. His original store was a building 20 by 24 feet, and it still does duty as the front part of his present building. He carries a general stock of merchandise.

Mr. Stubban was appointed the first postmaster of Medicine Lake, continuing in the office until August 1, 1913. The cancellations when the office was established amounted to about 50 cents a week, but when he turned the office over to his successor it was of the third class, with a salary of $1,400. Mr. Stubban was one of the organizers of and a stockholder in the Farmers Telephone Company, the Farmers Elevator and the Medicine Lake Flour Mills.

In Minneapolis, Minnesota, October 5, 1898, Mr. Stubban was married to Miss Hanna Fossum, who was born at Lansdale in Rice County, Minnesota, March 24, 1877, a daughter of Johannes Fossum, a Minnesota pioneer from Trondjem, Norway. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stubban: Minda, wife of Dewey Wigmore, of Minneapolis; Johnnie, a first-class private in the Seventh Field Battalion of the Signal Corps, Fort Bliss, Texas; and Margaret, Gina, Norman, Ivan, Esther and James.

Mr. Stubban took an active part in raising war funds at Medicine Lake, and was a committeeman in every drive made. He was the head of the committee for the sale of War Savings Stamps, and the school district to which he was assigned raised more than $3,000 in one day. On June 5, 1917, in the first drive made for selective service men, he was head of the committee for the sale of War Savings Stamps for voting precinct No. 36 of Sheridan County.

Elzeor De Mers of Eureka has been more than a pioneer of Montana in the sense that he has lived here nearly forty years. He has been a part of the constructive development which has transformed a large section of the northwestern country. He has put his shoulder to the wheel when progress was needed, and possessed of the characteristic vigor and industry of his French ancestry has contrived to grow in wisdom and in resources and influences with passing years.

Mr. De Mers, who is a rancher and vice president of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Eureka, was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, a son of Alexander De Mers. He acquired his education in his native country, and in 1882 first came to Montana. Subsequently he traveled extensively over the United States and in 1888 settled on land near the present site of Eureka. At that time this was a very wild country, only sixteen white men and one white woman being in the entire valley. Indians and wild game abounded, and Indians were exceedingly troublesome during the first year or so Mr. De Mers was here, breaking into the homes of settlers, destroying property, killing and running off livestock.

At Columbia Falls Mr. De Mers married Miss Amine Dewey. Two children were born to their union, Lela and Albert, now students in the public schools of Eureka, and formerly in school at Los Angeles. Mrs. De Mers died in April, 1917. She possessed many lovable qualities, was a kind neighbor, a good wife and a devout Christian, being active in the Methodist Church. The daughter, Lela, is now active superintendent of her father's home and Albert is also with his father.

Mr. De Mers has spent his life in stock raising and ranching and has acquired the ownership of about 1,200 acres, including the site on which Eureka was built. He is an ardent republican in politics, and has always been counted upon to support every progressive measure in his section of the state. When Lincoln County was created from Flathead County he was appointed one of the first commissioners, and helped inaugurate the business of the new county. He also has served as a school director, and fraternally is a member of the Masonic Order. Eight years ago Mr. De Mers erected a home fitting his financial position and constructed a beautiful modern bungalow on top of one of the hills overlooking Eureka. This home is supplied with electric light, running water and every modern facility. Mr. De Mers has traveled extensively and seen much of the United States, Canada and other portions of America, including Old Mexico, but no country has ever seemed to fulfill so nearly the demands of his critical judgment as does Montana. He spent a year in California in 1919 with his children, while giving them the educational opportunities of Los Angeles. Mr. De Mers is especially able to appreciate the astounding progress of Montana, since he knew Helena, Bozeman and other splendid cities when they were mere villages or mining camps.

John Dailey is the postmaster of Medicine Lake, and he has been identified with the life and interests of this portion of Sheridan County since 1907. At that time he was appointed a United States commissioner, entered upon his duties, and continued in the office until 1915, refusing a renewal of his commission at that time to enter upon his duties as postmaster. He was first appointed to the office of postmaster in 1913, was re-appointed in 1918, and succeeded in office Edward Stubban, who is still a business man of Medicine Lake.

In his office as postmaster Mr. Dailey was brought into close association with the war work which was carried on at Medicine Lake and vicinity, and he was also a member of the Sheridan County Council of Defense.

Mr. Dailey is a native of Bourbon County, Kentucky, born January 8, 1857. William Dailey, his father, was born in County Limerick, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1848. Locating in Kentucky, he was engaged in the construction of the Big Sandy Railroad as a contractor, and from that state subsequently moved to St. Louis, Missouri. He was ill at the time of the removal, and his death occurred soon afterward. William Dailey married Johanna Kelly, who was also born in County Limerick, Ireland, and she died at Pierce City, Missouri, in 1898, at the age of sixty-seven. Their children were: Mary, who married John Fitzgerald, of Pierce City, Missouri; John, of Medicine Lake, Montana; and James, who died at Joplin, Missouri, in 1918.

John Dailey moved with his parents to St. Louis, Missouri, in 1859, and there he grew to years of maturity and received his educational training. After leaving the schoolroom he began learning the ship carpenter's trade, but the wages he received at that work proved insufficient to support himself, his mother and his brother, who were under his care, and he went to work at the packing plant of Fagan McQueen & Company. After ten years there he went to Southwestern Missouri, and from 1880 until 1887 made his home at Pierce City. During those seven years he was engaged in railroading and farming, and when the railroad division moved to Monett, Missouri, he followed it and upon the recommendation of Congressman Charles H. Morgan was appointed postmaster of that town and served in that office four years. From Monett he went into the mining district of Joplin, where he spent the accumulations of his former years of work and in Montana he began the battle of life anew.

In this state Mr. Dailey entered a homestead 2½ miles northeast of Medicine Lake, where he erected a shack home of the pioneer period, and this rude dwelling sheltered him while he was acquiring his title to the land. He subsequently proved up a desert claim, and this he still owns.

In Pierce City, Missouri, November 7, 1894, Mr. Dailey was married to Miss Alice O'Brien, who was born in Chicago. To them have been born the following children: Mary, whose home is in Springfield, Missouri; William, a prominent breeder of Poland China hogs and a resident of Pierce City; Dorothy, a student in the Pierce City High School, as is also her sister Hilda; and John, who is attending school at Pierce City.

Leonard A. Brown. The necessity is clear that the administration of the law should be accessible to all not only in name but also in deed, and that the people be protected by the enforcement of the law and the conviction of those who have violated it. In order to secure these rights it is proper and right to place these matters in the hands of carefully trained professional men who not only themselves understand the proper interpretation of the law, but can explain its manifold ramifications to others, and so secure justice to the accused and the victim. One of the able members of the legal profession now located at Froid is Leonard A. Brown, who has been established here since May, 1916.

Leonard A. Brown was born in Faulkner County, Arkansas, on November 1, 1890, a son of William A. Brown, born at Conway, Arkansas, on December 18, 1866. He was married there to Miss Almyra J. Hale, a daughter of William Hale, formerly from Mississippi, from which state the paternal grandparents also came in their migration to Arkansas. During the war between the states the two grandfathers of Leonard A. Brown, Granville A. Brown and William Hale, were soldiers in the Confederate army and fought bravely for the "Lost Cause." With the close of the war conditions were so discouraging in Mississippi that they sought different surroundings and other opportunities in Arkansas and found them as farmers. William A. Brown and his wife became the parents of eight children, namely: Leonard A., of Froid, Montana; Weaver W., of Oklahoma; and Norman E., Homer B., Marvin, Adris, Alma and Clara, all of Blue, Oklahoma.

When he was seventeen years old Leonard A. Brown went with his parents to Oklahoma and located with them at Blue, Bryan County, they, like the former generation, seeking broader opportunities for expansion, and looking for it in a less developed part of the country. Having completed his eighth grade school work in his native county, Leonard Brown continued his studies at the Central Normal College of Danville, Indiana, and then took a legal course in the law department of that institution, from which he was graduated with his degree. For a year thereafter Mr. Brown was engaged in teaching school at Perryville, Arkansas, following which he was at Durrant, Oklahoma, for a time, and then going to Parker, Colorado, he resumed teaching. When he came to Froid he established himself in an active practice and was just nicely started when this country entered the World war. He had tried his first lawsuit in Froid, although he was admitted to the bar at Perryville in 1914. This suit was a civil one for wages, tried before a justice of the peace, Mr. Brown appearing for the defendant, and he won it by appealing to the statute of limitation. He soon displayed an order of ability that secured him recognition, and he formed a partnership with David F. McLaughlin under the firm name of Brown & McLaughlin, which continued until Mr. Brown's enlistment for service.

In December, 1917, Mr. Brown enlisted in the army at Great Falls, Montana, and was sent to Spokane, Washington, and thence to Waco, Texas, and was there assigned to the One Hundred and Sixtieth Aero Squadron. He was then sent to the Wilbur Wright Field, Ohio, and on November 8, 1918, was assigned to the Field Artillery Officers' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, where he was stationed when the armistice was signed. At that time he was given his choice of being discharged or continuing in the service, and he chose the former and received his honorable discharge in December, 1918, and returned to Froid in January, 1919.

Mr. Brown comes of a democratic family and he cast his first presidential vote for Woodrow Wilson in 1912. He was secretary and treasurer of the Woodrow Wilson Club of Froid in 1916, but aside from that his part in politics has been that of a layman.

On August 29, 1917, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Lucile Alpha Ryburn, born in Hood County, Texas, on August 8, 1894, a daughter of J. A. and Jennie (Middleton) Ryburn. Mrs. Brown is the second of the four surviving children of her parents, namely: Murray Ryburn, of Dillon, Montana; Lawrence J., a marine stationed in Cuba; and "Buster," stationed at Fort Worth Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have no children. Mrs. Brown belongs to the Methodist Church and was an active participant in the local Red Cross work during the World war.

Mrs. Mattie Donaldson, postmistress of Froid and one of the most highly respected residents of Sheridan County, has held her present position since April, 1916, although she has been in the postoffice since December, 1914, when her late husband was appointed postmaster. She was born in Wabasha County, Minnesota, and was reared in the vicinity of Weaver and Plainview, that state. She is a daughter of William and Louise (Painter) Nicholson. William Nicholson was born in Oho and became an early settler of Wabasha County, Minnesota, going there from Indiana in the '60s. He was married in Indiana, where he had been taken in childhood, and several of his children were born in that state. Later in life he located at Dawson, Minnesota, where he and his family were engaged in the restaurant business, and there he died in November, 1908, aged eighty-six years, his widow surviving hm until 1913, when she also died at Dawson, aged eighty-one years. Their children were as follows: George and John, both of whom live at Dawson, Minnesota; and Mattie, who is Mrs. Donaldson of this article.

Mrs. Donaldson attended the country schools of Minnesota and became a rural school teacher when only sixteen years old. Unlike a number of women, she did not abandon her work with her marriage, but was engaged in teaching in both Minnesota and Montana after she became Mrs. Donaldson, she and her husband being in the schoolroom at the same time. Her last term of school was that taught in the Zich District near Froid in 1915. When her husband was appointed postmaster she became his assistant, and at his death she was appointed his successor.

On April 26, 1893, Mattie Nicholson was married to George Donaldson at Dawson, Minnesota. He was born at Chicago, Illinois, on August 26, 1868, a son of Robert and Alice (McGuire) Donaldson. Robert Donaldson was born in Canada, near the New York State line, and early in life came to the United States and spent some time in New York State. All of his mature years he was a farmer, and he became successful in that calling. A strong democrat, he adhered to his party lines, and he was equally faithful in religious matters, having been a life-long Roman Catholic. His father, who was Scotch by birth, came to Canada in young manhood, thus establishing the family in the new world. Alice McGuire was of Irish stock, and, like her husband, was a strong Roman Catholic. Their children who who reached maturitv were four sons and five daughters, of whom George Donaldson was the eldest. Mr. and Mrs. George Donaldson became the parents of three children, namely: Floyd, who died at Bainville, Montana, when almost thirteen years of age; and Paul and John, both of whom are students in the Froid schools.

George Donaldson was reared in Lacquiparle County, Minnesota, and attended first the common schools, then Caton's Business College at Minneapolis, Minnesota, following which he became a student of the Normal School at Mankota, Minnesota. In order to earn the money to continue his studies he taught school before he completed his normal school course, and subsequent to his graduation was principal of the Froid school, but resigned from the schoolroom to accept the office of postmaster. It was not, however, as a school teacher that Mr. Donaldson came west, but as agent for the Imperial Lumber Company, first at Overly, North Dakota, from whence he was transferred to Mondak, Montana, in the spring of 1906. Still later Mr. Donaldson, together with his brother and some other stockholders, formed the Bond Lumber Company, which had a yard at Fairview, Montana. In the meanwhile Mr. Donaldson had purchased a relinquishment claim adjacent to Bainville, Montana, and there Mrs. Donaldson and the children resided until Mr. Donaldson sold his interest in the Bond Lumber Company and joined them. After several years' residence on this property Mr. Donaldson sold it at a fair compensation for the improvements made on it and moved to Froid. From December, 1914 until his death on February 23, 1916, he was postmaster of Froid, and, as before stated, was succeeded by his widow. In the meanwhile the Donaldsons had so expanded the business of the office that it became an appointative one and Mrs. Donaldson was appointed postmistress by President Wilson in April, 1916.

Mrs. Donaldson was brought up in a republican household and taught to think for herself, so that when she was given the right of suffrage by her state she exercised it and intends to continue to do her duty as a citizen. During the late war she was very active in Red Cross work. Her pleasant six-room residence was planned and constructed under the supervision of her and her husband.

Mrs. Donaldson is a remarkable woman, typical of the spirit of the enfranchised sex in the best sense of the term. Unusually intelligent, she has developed her natural talents and capabilities, and has been successful in every line of work in which she has been engaged. No less the devoted wife and mother or capable housewife, she won laurels as an educator, and is now handling the business of the postoffice in a manner which wins for her the commendation and respect of all who come in contact with her. Taking as she does an active interest in civic matters, she wields a strong influence in the community, and is never afraid to stand back of her convictions, for she never takes a stand unless she is sure that she is well informed on both sides of the question. It is such as she who are proving the wisdom of giving to women the ballot and taking them out of the submerged class and placing them on a level with male citizens. There are of course some women who will abuse the right of suffrage, but so do some of the men, and the influence of a woman like Mrs. Donaldson will do much to educate the incapables of her sex and bring home to them the importance and dignity of the new privilege accorded them, so that they will join her in striving to prove in every way worthy of it, and to aid in the general uplift of humanity and the betterment of politics.

Sidney J. Dorothy, proprietor of the Froid Auto and Oil Company, is one of the progressive young business men of this part of the county, and although one of the newcomers, has firmly established himself in public confidence. He was born in Chisago County, Minnesota, on November 1, 1882, a son of Frank B. Dorothy, who practically spent his life at St. Croix Falls, Wisconsin, but was a native of St. Lawrence County, New York, where he was born in 1846. Graduated from a New York college, he entered the legal profession and devoted himself to it. During the war between the states he enlisted in a New York regiment, was assigned to the Army of the Potomac and participated in the famous surrender at Appomattox. During his service as a soldier he was wounded. While he voted the republican ticket, he was not otherwise associated with politics. In religious faith he was a Baptist and his wife was a Congregationalist. She was a Miss Julia L. Murdock, a daughter of a physician, prior to marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Dorothy had the following children: Sidney J., whose name heads this review; Mrs. Walter B. Davison, of River Falls, Wisconsin; Mrs. Edwin L. Burnham of St. Croix, Wisconsin, and five who are deceased. Mr. Dorothy died at Minneapolis, Minnesota, in April, 1916.

Reared amid the most favorable environment, Sidney J. Dorothy attended the public schools of St. Croix, Wisconsin, completing the high school course. He then became an employe of the sterling Electric Company of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and after five years spent with them he went to work for himself, building his first plant at Ray, North Dakota, from whence he went to Williston, that state, where he spent four years and became owner of the Williston Electrical Construction Company, and he also built plants at Bainville, Montana, and all of the electric plants from that point to Scoby, Montana.

In March, 1916, Mr. Dorothy came to Froid intent upon organizing his present company and installing a string of electric plants along the branch line of the Great Northern Railroad. His first work upon establishing himself in Froid was the construction of the building in which his plant is located, which is 50 by 100 feet, two-stories in height and frame in material. In it is the city electrical plant, a garage and a wholesale oil station.

Sidney J. Dorothy was married at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on August 28, 1907, to Miss Rose A. Lewis, born on February 5, 1881, one of two children, her sister being Mrs. T. C. Chalmers of Duluth, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Dorothy have no children. Mr. Dorothy belongs to the board of trustees of the Congregational Church of Froid, and he is teacher of the adult Bible class. Mrs. Dorothy is president of the Ladies' Aid Society. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dorothy were very active in the work of raising funds for carrying on the war during 1917, 1918, and 1919, and are in every way representative citizens and delightful people socially.

William Sibbits. Of the great life of the West during the past half century the full panorama has been unfolded in the experience of William Sibbits of Wolf Point, who has been a soldier, Indian fighter, engaged in countless expeditions in the service of the Government, army and civilian departments, and for forty years his experiences have been largely in Montana.

He was born at Dublin Gap, Pennsylvania, July 17, 1852. The name of his father was William "Siebert," and he was of Holland Dutch stock. The father died before the birth of his son William. The mother was Mary Jane McDonald, one of the numerous children of James and Mattie (McDonald) McDonald, the former a native of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and of Scotch-Irish parents, while the latter was of Irish lineage. William Sibbits had a twin brother, John A., who was serving in the United States Marines when last heard from in 1876. The mother of these boys became the wife of John Weaver, and had a son, John Weaver, now of Cumberland County, Pennsylvania. Her last husband was William McCoy, and by that marriage there was a son, Harvey McCoy, who was in Montana as early as 1879. Mrs. McCoy died at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1861.

William Sibbits had some meager educational opportunities at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and at Milltown in the same state, and was a little past fourteen years of age when he left the East and found an opportunity in the army. He first came West in 1867 as a trumpeter with the Third United States Cavalry. The headquarters of that regiment was at old Fort Union in New Mexico. He was with the Canadian River expedition against the Kiowa and Comanche Indians in old Indian Territory, and fought the Indians in the Wichita Mountains on Christmas morning of 1869. The soldiers destroyed part of the Indian camp, but due to exhaustion were unable to follow up their victory. The troops had lived on three hard tacks a day until they captured the Indian camp, where plenty of buffalo meat was found. In fact buffalo were on the plains in great abundance and had to be driven out of the way as the troops passed, though the leaders of the expedition did not permit shooting for fear of alarming the Indians. After this expedition the troops were returned to Fort Union, and the next fall Mr. Sibbits was transferred from Troop I to Troop L, stationed at Fort Wingate, and went to Camp Hualpai, Arizona. He was under General Crook on the latter's first expedition against old Chief Cochise of the Apaches, the predecessor of the famed Geronimo. The Chief's warriors were never corralled. Barring a few trips between Camp Hualpai and Prescott Mr. Sibbits remained in the camp until discharged in 1871.

When the paymaster's escort came by he accompanied it to Los Angeles, then a small Spanish town and now one of the greatest cities of the Pacific Coast. The following year he rented a farm in Los Niates Valley, and that fall worked with a corn-sheller. The epizootic broke out in the spring of 1873, and after killing several of his horses Mr. Sibbits decided to go to Texas. He was in the northern part of that state, then a pioneer district, and at Decatur burned lime and brick and built the first brick flues in the town. At Jacksboro in the same section of Texas he finished the public well in the court square, and dug other wells and put up hay on contract. In 1875 he went to the Red River station and engaged in swimming herds of cattle across the river bound for the North over the old Chisholm trail. This was an uncongenial task, and he soon left it and went to Fort Sill and thence to Caddo, and for two years was employed by the firm of Marchand and Finlon trading between Caddo and Fort Sill.

It should be remembered that all the localities spoken of were at that time part of the great and unclaimed West, remote from civilization, exposed to hostile tribes, and all the experiences of white men were rough and arduous. Leaving old Indian Territory Mr. Sibbits proceeded north to Fort McPherson, Nebraska, spending that winter as a trapper and hunter on the Platte River, and in the spring of 1877 moved farther north to Sidney, and engaged in freighting to Red Cloud Agency and into the Black Hills for Pratt and Ferris. Two years later he removed to the Red Cloud Agency, and was employed by old Todd Randall, a squaw man and stock raiser and trader. While there he perfected his knowledge of the Sioux language. Later buying some steers, he used them as a team in furnishing Fort Robinson with wood on contract, and followed that until 1878, when he sold his outfit and went into the Black Hills, spending the winter working for the Quartermaster on the construction of Fort Meade.

With a mule team and in charge of the outfit in the spring of 1879 he proceeded to Bismarck and with others boarded a Rosebud steamer for Coal Banks Landing on the Missouri River, and thence up to Assiniboine, where he had some part in the construction of this Montana post. He was employed by the Government contractor and freighter Sam Pippin, but the sun was too hot to shovel sand in July, and leaving there he went into the Gallatin Valley and worked with a threshing outfit. That fall he went to Fort Custer, and in the spring of 1880 was employed by the Quartermaster, making a trip into the Yellowstone National Park, driving the first six-mule team that ever went into the Upper Geyser Basin.

Mr. Sibbits first came into the vicinity of Wolf Point in the fall of 1880, being on a rather historic errand. He was with a troop of soldiers as teamster, part of the Government forces engaged in bringing old Sitting Bull and his followers to Poplar from Woody Mountain in Canada, whither the old Chief had fled after the Custer massacre. Sitting Bull after some negotiations with the Government had consented to return to the United States, and he was brought to Poplar to join Chief Gall and his followers who had recently been captured on Red Water and brought into the Agency for final sentence at the Standing Rock Agency in Dakota. The warriors, squaws and children were divided into squads and taken down to Fort Buford, and Mr. Sibbits accompanied about a dozen of these outfits.

That winter he made twelve trips between Poplar and Buford, and was out under the skies during most of the extreme cold of that time. The mercurial column registered at Frenchman's Point, near Brockton, 63½ degrees below zero on one of the trips. This extreme cold was reported from Poplar by the United States Weather Bureau, marking the place as the coldest point in Montana, although Havre seems to have the distinction as a result of the removal of the signal station from Poplar to Havre later on. In this miserable cold weather the Indians were moved across the Plains region and some of them actually froze to death on the way, although the major in command ordered his horses unblanketed and the blankets divided among the Indians to protect them.

Mr. Sibbits remained in the employ of the Government until the summer of 1881, and then went to work for G. H. Fairchild and W. B. Shaw, Indian traders at Poplar, as a clerk in their store. Here his knowledge of the Sioux language stood him in good stead. In 1883 he spent part of the summer in Canada working on the Canadian Pacific Railroad. Returning to Montana, he accompanied "Flopping Bill" from Gilpin to the Judith Basin country and freighted from Junction City to Fort McGinnis for Jo Rhoades, taking care of the latter's cattle that winter. The following spring he worked in the saw mill and logging camp of Ben Dexter at Alpine. The next fall he married, and the following winter trapped and hunted on the Judith River, hauling his venison and pelts to Maiden, where he found a good market.

The next spring brought a change of operations, when he took a contract for building irrigation ditches for G. R. Norris at Claggett. With the approach of winter he returned to Maiden and cut and delivered wood to the town that winter. The next spring he joined the "P. W." cattle outfit at Claggett, and in the autumn, October, 1886, came to old Wolf Point, and his home and work have been in this section of the Missouri River practically ever since, almost thirty-five years.

His first work here was at Poplar putting up cord wood for the contractor who furnished the soldiers with wood. He also made a trip up Milk River Valley as a freighter for Chief Engineer Roberts of the Great Northern Company. He was a carpenter for the United States Quartermaster at Poplar, but spent that winter in Glasgow, and for a couple of winters trapped on the Porcupine at Nashua, employing his summers in putting up buildings for a sheep outfit. The military garrison was withdrawn from Poplar about 1893, and its authority turned over to the Indian Department. At that time Mr. Sibbits entered the Indian service under Captain Sproule, and was chief of police, stable man, Indian farmer and finally Indian butcher. In 1907 he resigned his post as sub-Indian agent at Wolf Point, and for a time was employed by B. D. Phillips as sheep man, as a "go-between" to preserve the peace between the sheep men and the Indians, a diplomatic post he handled very successfully. That was his last employment as a wage earner, and until he retired a few years ago he was exclusively engaged in the stock business.

Mr. Sibbits married a full-blood Sioux woman, Kokandiahewei, meaning "bright woman" but the white people gave her the name Kittie. Her father, Four Horns, was a warrior of the Assiniboine tribe. Mrs. Sibbits was born at Browning on the Milk River in Montana in 1866 and died at Wolf Point on August 23, 1915. Her children were: Mrs. Minnie Thompson, who is now housekeeper for her father and has a son, James; William, who is a soldier in the regular army; Edward and Harry, both in school at Rapid City. Rosy Shipstead, wife of Oscar Shipstead, a ranchman near Scobey, Montana, also grew up in the Sibbits home, being a daughter of Mrs. Sibbits' sister.

This is only a brief and outlined sketch of one of the careers filled with the romance of the great West. Mr. Sibbits has had an active and eventful life and his adventures and ramblings have made him widely acquainted with Montana. He has entered into the spirit and the civilizing movements of the Sioux tribe and has taken a modest part in the civil affairs of his home community. He voted the republican ticket for many years, subsequently supported the socialist party, and until recently, when he resigned, held the office of justice of the peace.

James W. Anderson, assistant cashier of the First State Bank of Froid, has held his present responsible position since coming to Montana in June, 1911, and is recognized as one of the stable financiers of his county. He was born in Steel County, North Dakota, in the vicinity of Sherbrooke, on July 22, 1889, a son of Thomas G. Anderson. The birth of Thomas G. Anderson took place in Canada near the New York State line, and his parents were natives of Scotland, who came first to Canada and later to New York State and were farming people. With the outbreak of the war between the states Thomas G. Anderson enlisted for service in the Union army, and while he was not wounded, his health was so impaired that he never fully recovered and received a pension from the Government on account of his disability. With the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic he became an active member and never lost his interest in it throughout his life. In politics he was a republican, and he held the office of registrar of deeds of Steele County, North Dakota, for some years, being noted as a penman. In earlier years he taught penmanship, both in a business college and to private pupils, and to the day of his death his writing was as smooth and even as when he was in his full vigor. There are many specimens still treasured of his exquisite Spencerian designs. While both the Dakotas were still Dakota Territory Thomas G. Anderson went to Steele County and entered a homestead, which he held the rest of his life. A druggist by profession, he conducted drug stores at Portland and Hope, North Dakota, but during his later years he confined himself almost exclusively to farming. The Congregational Church was his religious home. Thomas G. Anderson was married in Missouri to Miss Bessie G. Hildebrand, who survives him and makes her home at Fargo, North Dakota, Mr. Anderson having died in 1916. Their children are as follows: William J., who lives at Fargo, North Dakota; Samuel V., who lives at Pickert, North Dakota; Earl, who lives at Hope, North Dakota; Wendell, who lives at Minneapolis, Minnesota; James W., whose name heads this review; and Howe, who lives at Wahpeton, Minnesota.

After attending the public schools of Steele County, North Dakota, James W. Anderson became a student of the State Agricultural College at Fargo, North Dakota, and then, although only eighteen years old, was prepared for a business career and received a position in the office of registrar of deeds at Sherbrooke, North Dakota, where he remained for six months. He then went into the banking business, first as bookkeeper of the Tioga, North Dakota, State Bank, but after a few months was made assistant cashier of the Mohall State Bank of Mohall, North Dakota, and remained with that concern for two years, and at the expiration of that period he came to Froid. He began his political activity as a republican, casting his first presidential ballot for William Howard Taft in 1912. In March, 1913, Mr. Anderson was elected the first treasurer of Sheridan County, installed the work of the office and continued to hold that office until March, 1915, when he turned it over to his successor. When Froid was incorporated in 1915 Mr. Anderson was elected its first mayor, and gave such universal satisfaction that he has been continued in office ever since by his constituents. He is responsible for securing the street grading, sidewalks and street lighting improvements, and he has other plans for further beautifying and developing the little city.

On December 24, 1912, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage at Storden, Minnesota, with Miss Anna J. Smested, born in Cottonwood County, Minnesota, on September 20, 1888, a daughter of E. E. Smested. Mrs. Anderson was educated in the public schools and completed the high school course. She is the only daughter in the family of four children born to her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have two children, namely: Robert W. and Anna Jean. The family residence of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson is a comfortable stucco bungalow of six rooms of modern design which Mr. Anderson had built for them after their own plans.

Mr. Anderson was made a Mason at Culbertson, Montana, and has not demitted. He also belongs to the Odd Fellows, and is a past grand of Froid Lodge. Both he and Mrs. Anderson are deservedly popular in a congenial social circle.

John Curran, assessor of Roosevelt County, is one of the earliest settlers of Eastern Montana, and came into the state as a resident of Culbertson when it was still a trading post with only two saloons and a hotel, both built of logs, as the places of business. From then on he has maintained his residence in Montana and has developed with the state. He was born at Chicago, Illinois, on December 19, 1873, a son of Archibald Curran. The birth of Archibald Curran took place in County Antrim, Ireland, on December 24, 1840, and when he was seventeen years old he came to the Dominion of Canada and became a sailor on the Great Lakes. In 1883 he left the water and took up farming, although he had become captain of a vessel. Saskatchewan, Canada, attracted him and he secured land in that province. He was married near Kingston, Ontario, Canada, to Miss Jane Reid, and located his home at Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Curran was born in the north of Ireland, and her death occurred in November, 1893. She and her husband became the parents of the following children: Eliza, who married John Bailey, was drowned in Lake Michigan, and left two sons, Archie Bailey, a machinist of the United States navy, now stationed at Brinnon, Washington, and John, a locomotive engineer of Havre, Montana; James Curran and Robert Curran, both of whom are residents of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Minnie Wild, who is a resident of Spokane, Washington; Sarah, who married William McBride, of Culbertson, Montana; Archie, who was drowned, with two of his children, in the Missouri River, July 14, 1900, lived at Brockton, Montana; John, whose name heads this review; Selina, who is Mrs. George McTaggart, of Stetler, Alberta, Canada; Annie, who is Mrs. Eli Francis, of Moosejaw, Saskatchewan, Canada; and Carrie, who married James Forsythe, of Pasqua, Saskatchewan, Canada.

When John Curran was ten years old the family moved to Saskatchewan, Canada, and there he was reared and attended school. After the death of his mother, John Curran, then a young man of twenty years, left home and came to Montana to join a brother and sister who had already left Moosejaw for this state. He completed his educational training after he had come to Montana, attending the graded schools of Bottineau, North Dakota.

Upon his arrival in Montana he secured employment as a stationary engineer at Blair, Montana, and then engaged in farming and ranching south of the Missouri River, in what is now Richland County. When the land was opened for settlement he entered a homestead twelve miles east of Red River on the Missouri River, and his claim formed the nucleus of his ranching domain. That continued to be his home from 1900 until 1915, and he ran his cattle and horses under the brand "WG," although other brands were represented among his stock. He bred, raised and marketed the range beef cattle, and the Chicago markets received his stock through his own shipments. His wife's claim and his own constituted the patented and deeded land he owned. In the years following 1910 he developed some farming, mainly as a feed proposition. When he abandoned the ranch he took up his residence at Brockton, Montana, and engaged in farming on the Fort Peck Reservation leased lands. His home is still there and he still has substantial interests in and about Brockton.

Mr. Curran's participation in local affairs began with his assisting in establishing district No. 17, while he was living on his old ranch, through a petition he presented, and he served as a school director of this district for a dozen years. At Brockton he was also a member of the school board for two years, and was one of the first to be elected to that office. In 1896 Mr. Curran cast his first presidential vote in Montana for William McKinley, and he has continued to give his support to republican candidates ever since. In 1919 the county board of commissioners of the new county of Roosevelt appointed Mr. Curran assessor, and he opened his office in April of that year. In making his valuations of the county he found a total property valuation for the county of $19,000,000. He is making a record in his office which inclines the people of his community to look favorably upon him for future political preferment, and all recognize that he is a man of exceptional ability and high standing with all classes.

On October 28, 1896, Mr. Curran was married at Culbertson, Montana, to Miss Lucy A. Isbell, who came to that place from Kearney, Nebraska, in 1892, when she was about fifteen years old, having been born on April 28, 1877. Her object in coming to Kearney was to join a sister, Mrs. T. T. Armstrong, and she was given the advantages offered by the public schools of that place to complete her education. Mr. and Mrs. Curran have the following children: Dale D., was graduated from the Northwestern Business College at Spokane, Washington, enlisted for service in the World war at Fort George Wright, Washington, was sent to Vancouver Barracks, later transferred to Camp Lewis with the prospect of going overseas, but was disappointed, as he was kept at this camp until the signing of the armistice, and he is now editing the Brockton "Bulletin"; Esther L., who is a student of a Seattle (Washington) business college; and John M., who is attending the Mondak High School.

Mr. Curran was made a Mason at Poplar, Montana, and has been raised to the master degree. He also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, Poplar Camp, and helped to organize the Farmers Elevator Company at Brockton, in which he is still a stockholder. He was one of several men who built and operated the first ferry across the Missouri River at Brockton.

Since the day when Mr. Curran arrived at Culbertson many are the changes which have taken place not only at that point but all over the state. Much of the land in Montana was then public domain, and cattlemen ran their stock on the open range. There were few settlers of small means, for as yet the inducements to them had not been offered. All of the old names connected with the region about Culbertson have passed with the exception of those borne by William McBride and Tom Courchene. Many new ones are now there, and the business of the place has been increased a hundredfold. Mr. Curran belongs to the type of man who makes good wherever found. Had he turned his energies in any other direction he would in all probability have been just as successful, but considering the weight of his influence in this community it is fortunate for Roosevelt County that he did not do so, but chose the calling in which he has prospered as he has. Mr. Curran's friends are numbered by the legion, and all of them appreciate his many virtues and are proud of his record both as a cattleman and public official.

JOHN SEEL. There are some people who think that the pioneers of the more recently developed western states were very fortunate and came into possession of their land and other holdings without undue exertion, but these are ill-informed. Contrary to their ideas, these pioneers have earned by hard labor and much endurance all that they have acquired, and they are at the same time entitled to much consideration from later settlers for what they had already accomplished in wresting this region from the wilderness and the hands of the savage Indians. One of the substantial men of Mondak who has borne a very important part in the growth and development of Roosevelt County is John Seel, who is entitled to much consideration for his endurance and bravery during pioneer days in the upper Missouri country.

John Seel was born at Saint Ingbert, Bavaria, on the French border of Germany, April 11, 1861, a son of John and Appolonia (Becker) Seel, both of Bavarian birth and German stock. They died at Saint Ingbert, and of their six children, John, who was the fifth, and his younger brother, Jacob, were the only ones to come to the United States. Jacob Seel is also a resident of Mondak.

According to the regulations of his country John Seel was forced to give his military service to the German government, and was attached to the hospital unit. The high-spirited young man rebelled at the cruelties and unreasonable exactions of the army and so he deserted and made his escape to the United States, sailing from Antwerp to Liverpool, and thence by re-shipment to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on the "New Zealand." He made the trip alone, and was in fear all the while that he would be captured and returned to his command, where severe punishment awaited him as he well knew. However, his fears were not justified and after his landing he made his way to an uncle then living in Kentucky. Mr. Seel made this uncle a little visit and then went to Cincinnati, Ohio, for it was not his intention to be idle, and he did not find employment suited to his capabilities in the south. After a winter at Cincinnati he joined the First Cavalry of the regular United States army and was sent to Fort Bidwell, Oregon, and from there to Walla Walla, Washington. Mr. Seel as a member of his regiment helped to construct the Coeur d'Alene road, which was the pioneer trail for the cavalry. They constructed their own road on to Missoula, Montana, and thence over the "Frenchman's" trail to Helena and Fort Shaw, Montana. From that point the command was ordered to Fort Assiniboine, which they built, and which continued the headquarters of the regiment from 1883 until it was moved down the river to Fort Buford. Not only did this regiment do duty in subduing the Indians, but also served to guard the international frontier from an invasion of fugitives from the Riel rebellion in Canada. Mr. Seel was a member of the camp to which a Riel leader and son surrendered as fugitives from British justice.

During the period that Mr. Seel was a member of the First Cavalry the Sioux Indians were very troublesome, and had it not been for the protection afforded the white settlers by this little band of intrepid soldiers the majority of them would have been massacred without mercy. On one occasion, at the present site of Havre, the big Indian chiefs started the Sun dance in direct disobedience of governmental orders, and while it was in progress made arrangements to go off the reservation on a murderous escapade. They were prevented from carrying out their plans through the intervention of the troops of whom John Seel was one. This ancient practice of the Indians was the only one Mr. Seel ever witnessed, and he says that the one experience was enough for him, that he never wanted to witness another. In order to select a new chief the aspirants to the honor were forced to endure the most horrible torture and the one best able to stand these cruelties was chosen chief. Because of the atrocities the Government found it necessary to forbid the practice. The selection of a new chief was usually followed by a raid upon white settlers in order to give him an opportunity to prove his prowess.

Not long after the regiment was ordered to Fort Buford John Seel's term of enlistment expired and he received his honorable discharge from the service after five years in the army. He then became a cow puncher and worked for different cattle and horse outfits for several years, and then established his own outfit in the valley adjacent to the present town of Sidney, where he remained for six years and then moved to the Snowden locality and entered his homestead on the south side of the Missouri River, where he maintained his ranch headquarters until he proved up and acquired title to his land. Having done this Mr. Seel came to Mondak and became the pioneer liveryman of the city, which business he followed for four years. In the meanwhile the automobile was coming into its own, and with his usual foresightedness Mr. Seel built a garage and went into the automobile business, which he still owns, he and his son conducting what is the only garage in the place.

On April 26, 1897, Mr. Seel was married at Copenhagen, Denmark, to Olivia Hansen, born in that city, a daughter of Peter Hansen, and she is the only one of her parents' children in the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Seel have one son, Frank P., who was born at Williston, North Dakota, although the family home was in Montana. He was educated in the public schools and the military school at Bozeman, Montana. He was trained in camp at Bozeman for active service in the World war, but the signing of the armistice prevented his being sent overseas.

Mr. Seel has always been ready and willing to lend his aid to forwarding any enterprise which promised to better his community, and his donations have been many and generous.

Contrary to his understanding, his military service did not make him a citizen of the country he was fighting to defend, although he had been voting for some time before he discovered this fact by having his vote challenged. However, when he found out what was necessary he took out his papers and since then has supported republican principles and candidates in national matters, although locally he oftentimes prefers to vote for the man he deems best fitted for office.

The story of his part in the taming of Montana if space would permit of its relation in this work would afford intensely interesting and exciting reading. It would deal with a service full of exposure and physical suffering on long marches and still longer campaigns. It is gratifying to know that after having rendered such a faithful and efficient service to his adopted country. Mr. Seel has been rewarded by a prosperity in his later years, and accorded the confidence and respect of all who know him. The brave Indian scout and former soldier shows the effects of his hard campaigns, but these scars are honorable ones and set him apart as one who has won distinction through military service. Although he had the opportunity of acquiring a homestead, so did many others who never availed themselves of the privilege, letting slide what to him was the beginning of a future prosperity. He did not shrink from the hard work of developing this homestead, nor did he rest content wiith acquiring it, but pressed on to other lines, and, as stated in the beginning of this sketch, deserves everything he has acquired, for he has earned it by strenuous endeavor, much of it beyond the strength of the ordinary person.

Francis Earl Blodgett. From the days when Alexander Hamilton, Patrick Henry and other men trained in the law exerted their genius in behalf of the Government down to the present day the best legislators and statesmen we have had to represent the interests of the people have been drawn from the profession of the law. It is but natural that intellects so carefully trained should turn to public matters, and that those who understand the law should become lawmakers. Certain it is that Montana has called upon many of its leading attorneys to devote their talents and give of their time to the transaction of its business in the State Assembly, and one of them who, although still in the very prime of vigorous young manhood, has made a name for himself not only in his profession but also in the Legislature is Francis Earl Blodgett of Butte, Montana.

Francis Earl Blodgett was born at Butte, Montana, September 23, 1893, a son of Frank Blodgett, a resident of Butte. Frank Blodgett was born in Illinois in 1864, and was reared in his native state. He is a son of William H. Blodgett, born in Ohio and who died at Chicago, Illinois, in 1905. William H. Blodgett was a pioneer in Illinois, leaving that state in the fall of 1869, for Colorado, and in the fall of 1881 he came to Butte, Montana, where he was one of the earliest business men of the city, at one time owning all of Big Butte. His death occurred when he was on a business trip to Chicago. In both Illinois and Colorado he was quite active as a farmer.

Frank Blodgett was educated in Colorado, and accompanied his father to Butte, where he became a stationary engineer, and he is still engaged in that line of work. He is a democrat, but has never sought office. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. He married Annie O'Shaughnessy, born in Ireland in 1869, and the following children were born to them: Francis Earl, who was the first in order of birth; and Mary, who lives with her parents.

Growing up at Butte, Francis E. Blodgett attended the parochial and public schools of that city and was graduated from the Central High School in 1913. In the meanwhile he studied law during his spare time, and was admitted to the bar on December 31, 1914. He began the practice of his profession at Butte, in both criminal and civil law, where he is still engaged in a general practice, with offices in the Rialto Building. Like his father he is a democrat, and was elected a representative to the Legislature in the fall of 1916, and served during the Fifteenth Session. He was chairman of the journal committee, and a member on the judiciary committee, the educational committee and the new counties and divisions committee. While in the Legislature Mr. Blodgett introduced a teachers' pension bill which passed the Lower House and was defeated in the Senate, but which met with the approval of educators. Among the many measures before this Assembly was an eight-hour law for women, which Mr. Blodgett strenuously fought for and succeeded in passing.

Mr. Blodgett is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and belongs to Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a Third Degree Knight. He also belongs to the Montana State Bar Association and the Silver Bow County Bar Association. As yet Mr. Blodgett is not married. He maintains his residence at 1253 West Aluminum Street, Butte. His ability and worth have been proven upon innumerable occasions, and few men of his years, either in Montana or elsewhere, have accomplished as much.

WINFIELD S. COWAN, a Harlem merchant, is one of the pioneer settlers of the Fergus County region of Montana. In March of 1882 he made the journey over the Northern Pacific Railroad from Duluth and reached Miles City, traveling only during the day. His final destination was Fort McGinnis, and his first work there was for James Fergus, for whom Fergus County was named, and with whom he spent four summers at ranch work. On leaving that service Mc. Cowan purchased a band of sheep from Mr. Fergus, drove them a short distance and established a sheep business of his own in association with J. D. Grant. Four years later this partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Cowan then came over to the Milk River country and began sheep ranching on Woody Island, a few miles south of the Canadian border. He entered a homestead there, and in association with his brothers George W. and Arthur continued in the business some five or six years with good success, the partnership being then dissolved, but Winfield S. Cowan continued on in the business until settlers began taking up the land. He then sold out his stock and removed to Harlem, where he embarked in the mercantile business. His homestead and the desert claim of Mrs. Cowan constitute the ranch they still own in that locality.

Winfield Scott Cowan was born in Greene County, New York, May 29, 1856. The history of his father, William Cowan, and his ancestry is given more fully in the sketch of George W. Cowan on other pages in this history. Winfield S. was reared as a farmer boy, was educated in the country schools, and started out in the business world for himself when but thirteen years of age as a farm hand at $7 a month. He continued on at that kind of labor while he remained in the State of New York, working during the summer months and attending short terms of school in the winters. When he reached Montana his capital amounted to $300, and his subsequent ranch wages of $40 a month added but slowly to his savings. During the winter seasons he hunted buffalo for their meat, the hides and also for the sport of the hunt. A tanned skin of a buffalo which he killed is now on exhibition in his Harlem shop as a souvenir of his early Montana experience.

When Mr. Cowan embarked in his mercantile business at Harlem he bought out A. B. Duke and Company and formed a partnership with Robert Corbett in the Harlem Saddlery. This firm continued in existence for ten years, Mr. Cowan then buying out his partner's interest and has since carried on the business alone. He is one of the stockholders and the vice president and a director of the First National Bank of Harlem, is interested in the electric light plant of the town and one of its board of directors, and assisted in promoting the movement toward prospecting for oil in this locality, and is vice president of the temporary organization. During five years he served Harlem as a councilman, has served two years as mayor of the town and has been re-elected for another two year term. Plans have recently been matured for repairing the water system of the town, the outlay for which will reach $60,000. Mr. Cowan has also served as a school trustee during much of the time he has lived in Harlem, and during the last two years of his service the new school house was built at a cost of $35,000.

At Malta, Montana, October 18, 1893, Mr. Cowan was married to Miss Margaret E. Payne, who was born in Schoharie County, New York, in 1866, a daughter of John Payne and his wife, Eliza Cropser. In their family were four daughters and two sons who grew to years of maturity, and five of the children are still living, the sister of Mrs. Cowan being Mrs. Arthur Cowan of Harlem. To Mr. and Mrs. Winfield Cowan three children have been born: Harold E., who was a World war soldier in the aviation service, and spent almost two years overseas. He served as cook for his outfit, and was in France when the armistice was signed, reaching home in June, 1919. Winfield S., Jr., the second son, was for a time a teacher of manual training in Harlem, and completed his education in the state school at Bozeman. Grace Shirley, the youngest child, is a student in the North Dakota Normal School at Valley City, a member of the class of 1922.

In his political affiliations Mr. Cowan is a republican, casting his first presidential vote for General

W. S. Cowan

Garfield in 1880. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a past noble grand and a past deputy grand master of the order.

THOMAS R. FORBES is clerk of the court of Roosevelt County, Montana, and has the distinction of being one of the old settlers of this section of the Missouri River country. He identified himself with Mondak in its infancy and established the first store in the place for Hedrich Brothers & Company, and remained with them until the business was closed. He was born in the family homestead at St. Paul, Minnesota, on February 11, 1859, a son of Capt. William H. Forbes, who went from the Island of St. Ann, Canada, to St. Andrews, where with his father he established himself and became quite prominent. The father was connected with extensive boating interests in that region, and was accidentally killed. He married Catherine Donley, and Captain Forbes was the elder of their two children, his sister being Mrs. Catherine O'Neil.

Capt. William H. Forbes left Montreal, Canada, in 1834 and came to the vicinity of Mendota, Minnesota, at Fort Snelling, as a representative of the American Fur Company, and remained with it for a number of years. Subsequently he with N. W. Kittsen opened a line of Indian trading posts throughout Minnesota, and entered from the Government part of the land now occupied by the City of St. Paul. The present Ryan Hotel is on the site of the old Forbes homestead. Where the Union Depot now stands was a lake in which the lads of the age of Thomas R. Forbes used to go swimming, and he has pleasant recollections of their aquatic sports.

During the war between the states Captain Forbes was commissioned a captain and was sent with General Sibley against the Indians in 1862, when the Sioux Indians tried to destroy all the whites of Minnesota. Following this service Captain Forbes went south and was with General Thomas' command in the commissary department until the close of the war. While riding on horseback through the guerrilla country of Missouri someone shot him, and this wound subsequently caused his discharge and placed him on the pension rolls.

In 1872 Captain Forbes was appointed by President Grant to establish the Indian agency at Fort Totten, and after he had accomplished this he served as its agent until 1876, when he died. He was a very well educated man, speaking both French and English, and could read and write very well in French. In addition he had an excellent working knowledge of German and the Sioux and other Indian dialects. Reared in the Catholic faith, he held it all his life. Although a democrat, his special fitness for work among the Indians caused a republican president to give him an important appointment. He also served as the first postmaster of St. Paul, and was the first speaker of the first territorial legislature of Minnesota.

Captain Forbes was united in marriage with Amanda B. Cory of St. Paul. She was a daughter of Holder Cory and was born at Cooperstown, New York. Mrs. Forbes survived her husband for nearly forty years. The children born to Captain and Mrs. Forbes were as follows: Jean, who served with the French Red Cross during the World war, is with the National Catholic Extension Bureau of France; Thomas R., whose name heads this review; and Edna, who died when sixteen years old.

Thomas R. Forbes was educated in the public schools of St. Paul, Minnesota, which was then a city of 200,000, and following his completion of their courses he entered the Jesuit College of Montreal, Canada, where he remained for two years. Having by this time exhausted his financial reserve he began working as a clerk in the wholesale house of Aubaugh, Finch & Schaefer, leaving them for Averill, Russell & Carpenter, paper manufacturers. In 1880 he became purser on a steamboat plying between Bismarck, North Dakota, and Miles City, Montana, and in the fall of that year took charge of the mercantile establishment of Layton & Jordan at Miles City, and subsequently had charge of a store they opened at Buford, Montana, for five years. Mr. Forbes then operated the first steam ferryboat on the upper Missouri River, and while running it he opened the store for Hedrich Brothers, which brought him to Mondak. He has also been quite active in developing agricultural interests in this section, and has owned and conducted several mercantile concerns.

Mr. Forbes was connected with the county division movement which led to the creation of Roosevelt County by the Legislature, and was named in the bill as court clerk. A democrat, he began his connection with that party by casting his first presidential vote for Grover Cleveland in 1892, but has never supported Mr. Bryan. The fraternal connections of Mr. Forbes are with the Loyal Legion, the Sons of Veterans and the Odd Fellows. Ambitious to follow in his father's footsteps in military matters, he tried to enter the Spanish-American war but was rejected for physical reasons, but he has been a member of the Governor's Guard, the second military organization in Minnesota, with rank of first duty sergeant.

In 1914 Mr. Forbes took a contract for installing some machinery in the Lake Side elevator, and while engaged in the work was caught on the lineshaft and whirled so rapidly as to be almost whipped to pieces. His right leg was beaten to a jelly, the muscles of his left arm were badly torn and the nerves separated and his neck was broken. He was unconscious for a month after the accident and confined to Williston Hospital, but in spite of all his injuries he recovered and is but little the worse for his terrible experience.

In May, 1903, Mr. Forbes was married at Minot, North Dakota, to Miss Elizabeth Windisch, a daughter of John and Sophia (Fiock) Windisch. Mrs. Forbes was born in Indiana on February 2, 1875, and she has a brother, William, who is a resident of Mondak, and a sister, Mrs. Anna Saylor, of Dundas, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Forbes lost their only child just after birth.

LEWIS E. NEWLON is known to the public as the promoter and chief builder of the Town of Fairview. But his reputation also extends beyond that of a town builder and classes him among the leading business men and public spirited citizens of Richland County.

Although Mr. Newlon has been identified with Montana almost from its infancy, he was born in Nebraska, his parents coming into the northwest when he was a year old and stopping for a brief time at old Fort Buford before locating in the Yellowstone Valley, at the point where Newlon Junction has since been built. During their stay at Fort Buford the father's first work, and perhaps his most important work, was supplying the place with buffalo meat during one winter, he having killed and delivered more than eight hundred animals. Newlon Junction was named in honor of William W. Newlon, the father, and he established his ranch there and continued its conduct until the memorable hard winter of 1886-7, when as a consequence of having lost heavily thereby he moved his stock industry far south and established his residence on the Gulf of Mexico in Louisiana, where he spent ten years. Returning at the close of that period to Montana, he took up land near Fairview, and spent the remainder of an active and successful life as a ranchman there.

William W. Newlon was born at Peoria, Illinois, in 1841, and he grew to manhood's estate in his native commonwealth, receiving in the meantime a common school training. He enlisted for service in the Civil war, entering the Eighty-fifth Ohio Infantry, and was made a member of Sherman's army. He was wounded in the battle of Missionary Ridge, near Chattanooga, which incapacitated him for further service, and for this wound he afterward drew a pension. From his native state of Illinois Mr. Newlon subsequently removed to Colorado, where for a brief time he was located at Leadville, from there went to Lincoln, Nebraska, and subsequently came into the northwest and established his home in Montana. Before leaving Illinois he had married Sarah Lawler, who was born in that state and is now a resident of Portland, Oregon. The children born of this union are: Mattie, wife of Frank Cannon, of Wibaux, Montana; Robert C. and Lewis E., both of whom are at Fairview; Ellis E., whose home is in San Francisco, California; Flora, the wife of George C. Jensen, of Kalispell, Montana; and Jesse L., of Portland, Oregon; Mr. Newlon, the father, always gave a staunch allegiance to the republican party, and he served Dawson County as one of its first commissioners. He was a charter member of the Masonic Lodge at Glendive.

Lewis E. Newlon was born in Lincoln, Nebraska, December 15, 1878, but he knows no other home than Montana. He was a factor on his father's ranch until past his majority, and was twenty-five years of age when he entered a claim in section 8, township 24 north, range 60 east, beginning his activities there by building a shack, erecting this cabin before the land had been surveyed. It was built of sawed logs, dirt covered, and was a comfortable abode of five rooms and had the distinction of being the first house built on the townsite of Fairview. Even in that early day Mr. Newlon had in mind the building of a town on this location, for the lay of the country was such as to encourage railroad building. In 1903, about the time he erected his residence, he also established himself in the mercantile business, thus performing the first act toward the building of a town. The store, which was really finished before the Newlon home, was also built of logs and is now doing duty as the Farmers Store in Fairview. His first stock of goods was a small one of general merchandise, and he was without a competitor until 1905, when a second store was established. Two years after this, in 1907, Mr. Newlon disposed of his business interest and turned his entire attention to the development and growth of Fairview.

He platted three blocks on the east line of his homestead, bordering on the Dakota line, as a townsite, and gave it the name of Fairview. This was in January, 1904, and he offered a business lot for one dollar to any one who would erect a business house. The offer stimulated building to some extent, several lots having exchanged hands on this basis, and the town's growth continued slowly. Various lines of industry were represented before the real impetus was given the town by the coming of the railroad. A gift of ninety-six acres of land to the railroad company, to be used as right-of-way, shops and round houses, was made as an inducement, and January 4, 1912, the first steel was laid into the village and within a week traffic with the outside world was carried on by rail instead of by freight as before.

At the time Mr. Newlon gave up his mercantile interests to become a town promoter he erected an office and platted his first addition to Fairview, May 15, 1909. A second addition was filed February 12, 1913, and upon this the greater part of the town has been built. Mr. Newlon also erected one of the business houses, first occupied by the Maxson Mercantile Company, and became a stockholder in the establishment of the Security State Bank and in the Delaney Brothers Bank, now the First National Bank of Fairview. He also became a stockholder in the Albert Hotel Company. In the year 1913 Fairview was incorporated, and Mr. Newlon was elected the first mayor of the little city. During his administration the principal streets were graded and some sidewalks were laid and other important interests were effected. After three terms as Fairview's first mayor, he was succeeded in office by Doctor Perkins.

Among the conspicuous homes of the town the most noticeable perhaps is that of L. E. Newlon. It stands upon an elevation west of the town, and from it a birdseye view of the entire city may be had. This home was built in 1913-4. It faces Fourth Street, and stands about forty feet above the town. It is stucco finished, contains eight rooms and a basement, and is completely and modernly equipped in every detail.

In Dickinson, North Dakota, April 8, 1907, Mr. Newlon was married to Miss Clementine Dundas, who was born in Bismarck, North Dakota, March 13, 1889, a daughter of Lewis and Mary (O'Loughlin) Dundas. Her father, a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, came to the United States when eighteen years of age, and spent the remainder of his life as a rancher in Montana, owning a large amount of land at Wibaux. He married at St. Paul, Minnesota, a native daughter of that state, born at French Lake, and both are still living and residents of Missoula, Montana. The five children of Mr. and Mrs. Dundas are: Mrs. Newlon; Harold F., whose home is in Fairview; Miss Marion, of Missoula; Ronald, a student in the Montana University; and Wallace, who is attending the Missoula schools. Two sons have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Newlon: William Gifford, whose birth occurred August 21, 1915, and Lewis Edson, born September 4, 1919.

Mr. Newlon began voting as a republican, giving his first presidential ballot to William McKinley in 1900, and Mrs. Newlon also gave her first presidential vote to a republican representative, voting first in 1916. She is the vice president of the Woman's Club of Fairview, and served on a committee of the Red Cross during the country's participation in the World war. Two of Mr. Newlon's brothers offered their services to their country as soldiers in that recent conflict. Ellis E. Newlon served as foreman of the shipyards at Portland, Oregon, and Jesse L. Newlon was a soldier of infantry overseas for sixteen months. He was in the heavy artillery, and participated in some of the engagements which started the Germans back toward home. He was twice wounded in the service, and brought as many scars home as a reminder of valorous and honored service in his country's cause.

Clark A. Brooks is the senior member of the mercantile firm of Brooks and Patterson at Savage, and his name has also appeared prominently in connection with the gricultural development of this community. He arrived in Glendive on the 31st of March, 1891, seeking employment, which he found in the shops on the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and later as a brakeman in the train service. But after eight months of railroad employment he turned his activities into an entirely different direction and became an employe of the Douglas Mead Company. Subsequently he was in the employ of Mr. Hollecker as a bookkeeper until the spring of 1910, when he came to the then newly organized Town of Savage and established himself in business as a member of the firm of Brooks and Patterson.

As their initial movement toward urban development Brooks and Patterson built for their use a business house in Savage, and about the 16th of May, 1910, opened the general store which they have since conducted without interruption. Mr. Brooks in time identified himself with farm development near Savage, acquiring a tract of valley land which he has since placed under a splendid system of irrigation. He obtained possession of this ranch when it was in its virgin state, covered with grass and untouched by the hand of man. His improvements have been substantial, constituting the best of the region, and 154 acres of the tract are irrigated and have demonstrated the adaptability of growing alfalfa in this section of the country. During the dry year of 1919 Mr. Brooks' yield of this crop was very large, and he received splendid profits for his labor expended. A bunch of milch cows graze this pasture, and his cream has returned also large values.

Mr. Brooks came into Montana from South Dakota, where in the vicinity of Iroquois as a child he had spent a number of his years on a farm. His birth, however, occurred in Fayette County, Iowa, May 21, 1871, and he is a son of David Brooks, a native of Canada. The father spent his life as a farmer. His death occurred at Iroquois, South Dakota, and his wife died at Glendive, Montana. She bore the maiden name of Lucretia Hendrickson and was born in Ohio, a daughter of Samuel Hendrickson. The children born of this union are: Mrs. J. C. Brooks, who died near Intake, Montana; Mrs. John Kennedy, whose home is in Glendive; Milo A., who was a ranchman at Intake, Montana, until his death on March 3, 1919, left two children by his wife, nee Lydia Berry; and Clark A. is the youngest of the children.

Clark A. Brooks was married in Savannah, Andrew County, Missouri, January 3, 1903, to Julia C. Powell, who was born in that county. Her father, Clarence Powell, was an Englishman who was chiefly identified with the real estate business. Mrs. Brooks is the only surviving child of her parents. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Brooks has been blessed by the birth of four children, Donald, Charles, Lois and Florine. When Mr. Brooks' father reached the age of maturity he gave his political allegiance to the democratic party, and continued to support the principles of that party for many years. Clark A. Brooks supported Mr. McKinley in the presidential race, and since then has been a republican voter.

WILLIAM B. GIBBS, well and favorably known to the community of Savage as a ranchman, farmer, bank official and as a public spirited and progressive citizen, was born in Hancock County, Illinois, September 22, 1854, a son of Elias Gibbs, who came from his native State of New Jersey when a young man and located near Carthage, Illinois, where he spent the remainder of his active and vigorous life. His death, however, occurred in Pasadena, California, where he spent the last ten years of his life, passing away in 1897, at the age of seventy-seven years.

Elias Gibbs married Sarah Bader, who was born in Preble County, Ohio, a daughter of Jere Bader. She also passed away at Pasadena, California, but survived her husband. Of the seven children of this marriage to reach years of maturity six are still living, namely: Henry, of Schuyler County, Illinois; Smith J., of Fresno County, California; Carl, whose home is in Old Mexico; William B., of Savage, Montana; Mrs. Libbie G. Cook, also a resident of Fresno; and Mrs. Nettie Coke, who is in Spain at the present time. She is a lawyer-traveler. During the Boer war she was living in South Africa, and for ten years had a law office at Johannesburg. On returning to the United States she established an office in San Francisco.

William B. Gibbs spent the early years of his life on a farm, remaining at home with his parents until he reached the age of eighteen, when he went to Southern Texas and began work on a cattle ranch. He was employed at different periods by Tony Day, Burke Burnett and John Slaughter on Big Elm in Cooke County, spending seven years in all in the Lone Star State. From there he went into the Indian Territory and became foreman of the "Circle R" ranch at Skyatook, his employer being the well known Governor Rogers, governor of the Cherokee Nation, and leaving there made his way to the Cherokee Strip and worked for the Comanche Pool outfit. From the Indian country he went to Cedar County, Missouri, where he farmed and handled cattle for several years.

It was in August of 1900 that Mr. Gibbs became a factor in Montana's history. He settled in the region of Wibaux, between that place and the Blue Mountains, assuming charge of the "DK" ranch for Kansas City men. It was a cattle ranch, and Mr. Gibbs continued its management for one year, after which he moved to the Savage community in Richland County, and exercised his homestead right by entering a claim in the Yellowstone Valley, two miles south of where Savage now stands. His financial standing was at that time at the lowest ebb, and he worked for wages as a general rancher, two years passing by before he became able to maintain himself financially at his own enterprise.

On his claim Mr. Gibbs built a cabin of cottonwood logs from the Yellowstone, and he moved his family into this four-room dwelling, dirt covered, and it continued to shelter the household for some years. He entered slowly into both the raising of horses and cattle, first purchasing a cow and calf, representing an outlay of $35, and his first team comprised two yearling colts, valued at $15, and from this small nucleus he gradually became recognized as one of the community's important stock raisers. His cattle were merged into the Black Galloways and White Faces, and his horses were of the Percheron stock. Mr. Gibbs adopted the brand "Ill." on the right ribs for his cattle and the "Lazy YK" on the left jaw of his horses. The cattle brand represented his native State of Illinois, but there was no special significance in his brand for horses.

Both the property and stock interests of Mr. Gibbs grew rapidly in volume and importance and spread over much territory adjacent to his own. He purchased an adjoining section, 240 acres of which are now under cultivation and irrigated. During his years spent in Montana he has had abundant opportunity to compare dry land farming with irrigation, for a ditch was not built through this region for some years after he located here. He has found that under the old regime, when rainfall was depended upon entirely, he obtained probably one crop out of four planted, while under the system of irrigation he has harvested a crop each time it was planted. There is also a vast difference in the acre yield of crops in the two systems of farming, the irrigation method outdoing dry land farming very materially.

In 1904 Mr. Gibbs left the ranch in the care of his two sons and moved into Savage. He is connected with the First National Bank of Savage as its vice president. This institution was established as a state bank in 1911, and in the following year Mr. Gibbs became a stockholder therein and was a member of its organization when it was chartered as a national bank. Its capital is $25,000, its surplus $5,000 and its deposits reach $90,000. The president of the bank is George E. Towle, of Minneapolis, and S. L. Hood is the cashier, the officers constituting a part of the board of directors, which include as its other members John S. Tucker, of Minneapolis; John T. Neese, of Savage; and A. S. Newcomb, of Mondak, Montana.

Mr. Gibbs was a member of the first Board of County Commissioners of the newly organized County of Richland, serving with John Bawden and C. P. Collins, and much business came up before this first board, including the institution of the business of the county, the establishment of a place for the county records, and supplying equipment for the county officers. They also placed the contract for the transcribing of the records of the old counties from which Richland was drawn. Mr. Gibbs served as a member of this pioneer Board of Commissioners from May until the 1st of January, when he retired from the office. He has always been a republican voter, stanch in his adherence of the party's principles, and his first presidential vote was cast for Rutherford B. Hayes in 1876, and he has never missed a presidential election since that time.

Mr. Gibbs was married in Bates County, Missouri, to Miss Ella McCoy, a daughter of Lewis McCoy, and they became the parents of the following children: Dora D., wife of Warren Lane, of Englewood, California; Lucien M., a ranchman near Savage; and Clyde E., who is associated with his brother in the Savage ranch. This younger son enlisted for service in the World war at the first call made for troops by the United States, and trained at Camp Lewis, Washington. He became a member of the Ninety-first Division, and was sent overseas with his command in June, 1918. He took part in the famous battle of Argonne Forest, where for eighteen days he was under the fire of the German guns. He later served in Belgium, and was in that country when the armistice was signed. Although his services carried him into the heaviest fighting of the war, where for days bullets fell faster than hail, he was never wounded in battle or otherwise injured.

William B. Gibbs married his present wife in Chicago in 1911. She was Miss Isabel G. Stevens, a native of Wisconsin, and before her marriage she was both a trained nurse and teacher. Mr. Gibbs was made a Mason in Sidney, Montana, and is now a member of the Blue Lodge there, a member of the Glendive Chapter, Commandery and Council, and is also a member of Helena Consistory and of Algeria Temple. He completed this work in Masonry in 1917.

Charles C. Tubbs has been prominently identified with the business interests of Harlem and its vicinity for a number of years. He was born at Buffalo, New York, December 18, 1875. His father was Henry Charles Tubbs, who spent the final years of his life with the Erie Railroad Company as depot master at Buffalo, and died when his son Charles was eleven years of age. He was born at Conneaut, Ohio, and was married at Buffalo, New York, to Susan E. Guild, who was born in Massachusetts, a daughter of Harrison Guild. The children of this union were: Hattie Belle, who married J. E. Hitchcock and resides at Long Beach, California; Charles C., the Harlem business man; Sarah A., the wife of Bert Bernard, of Buffalo, New York; Olive, the wife of Charles Sneider, a resident of Palo Alto, California; Harrison C., who died on the ranch at Woody Island, Montana, and who married Elvira Balentine and, at his death, left a daughter, Sarah.

Charles C. Tubbs spent the early years of his life in his native City of Buffalo, and when but twelve years of age began working and contributing to the family treasury. At the age of fourteen he left the parental home and drove a milk wagon in the city for Charles Mayers, and was later in the employ of dairyman Wiedmann. During all this time he gave his wages to his mother and when he left Buffalo for the West he had little more than enough to bring him to Montana, arriving at Glasgow with a cash capital of but 50 cents and with one exception with no acquaintance in the place.

It was on the 1st of March, 1893, that Mr. Tubbs left the train at Glasgow. He was then a youth approaching his majority, and he first secured work with Mr. McVey, and remained in his employ until he came to Harlem. He had no intention of locating permanently in Harlem when he stopped here on his way to the mountains with a companion, but while resting their horses they heard of work to be had on the irrigation dam then being built by Mr. Everett, and taking advantage of this opportunity for work Mr. Tubbs became a resident of Harlem. He spent three years with Mr. Everett, and then entered upon an independent business career.

Entering a homestead on the river near Harlem, he secured a patent for it, exchanged it later for thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle and took up a ranch on Woody Island Creek, where for a time he was engaged in breeding blooded cattle, but during the winter of 1906-07 had the misfortune to lose more than half of his herd. In the following year he disposed of the remainder of his cattle and continued the raising of horses until 1911, when he sold his ranch and stock interests and bought the Charles Reed livery barn at Harlem, and has since been engaged in the livery, feed and dray business.

In addition to being the drayman and the popular liveryman of Harlem Mr. Tubbs also spent several years as agent of the Mutual Oil Company here, and in 1920 established the Tubbs Oil Company, a station for the sale and distribution of petroleum products. In this enterprise he is associated with the following stockholders and representative men: F. J. Lake, of Minneapolis; E. P. Ekegren and A. E. Boe. Mr. Lake is the president of the company, Mr. Tubbs is its manager, and Mr. Boe holds the office of secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Tubbs was married at Chinook, Montana, August 28, 1898, to Miss Maloney McDaniel, who was born on Rogue River near Medford, Oregon, February 23, 1877, a daughter of John and Priscilla E. (French) McDaniel. The father went from Iowa to California during the gold rush to that state, and finally settled on Rogue River in Oregon. From there he came by wagon to Montana in 1892, and is now a resident of Harlem. The following children were born to John and Priscilla McDaniel, namely: Mrs. Polly Gates, who is now deceased;

Chas. L. Tubbs

William, of Spokane, Washington; Mrs. Julia Buckley, wife of Mike Buckley, of Harlem; Mrs. Tubbs; Frank, a farmer on Woody Island Creek in Blaine County; Isabel, wife of David McConnell, of Canada; Andrew, who resides at Great Falls, Montana; Charles P., of Harlem; Elva, who is Mr. Tubbs' bookkeeper; and Zora, who is the youngest of the children. Mr. and Mrs. Tubbs have one daughter, Susan E.

Mr. Tubbs is a republican voter in national politics. For a number of years he has served Harlem as an alderman, and this has been his only official service. He has taken all the degrees in Masonry in both branches, save the thirty-third and honorary degree, and is also a member of the fraternal order of Odd Fellows.

Joseph H. Nevins. During the past ten years Joseph H. Nevins has stood at the head of the Sidney schools, and in this time the educational system of Richland County has gained a high order of efficiency. When he assumed charge of the Sidney schools a four-room building occupying the site of the present high school served as the temple of learning, and three teachers in addition to the superintendent were employed. In the following fall Superintendent Nevins introduced the first year of high school work, five pupils responding and enrolling their names: Florence Vaux, who is now the schools home economics teacher; Gwendolin Staffanson; Marjorie Cravath, now the wife of Jack Gordon, of Bozeman; Luella and Estella Blake, sisters, the former now Mrs. McDonald and the latter Mrs. Hayden, of Carlyle, Montana.

During the second year of Mr. Nevin's supervision another teacher was added to the faculty and the second year of high school work installed, but on the 5th of December, 1912, the schoolhouse burned and during the remainder of the year the high school occupied the basement of the Congregational Church and the grades were distributed about the town. In the fall of 1912 the board erected a temporary five-room building, Mr. Vaux furnishing the lumber and carpenters, Earl Varco one-half of the roof and Doctor Beagle the other half, Lossie Dawe furnished the teams to haul the lumber to the site, and Walter D. Kemmis donated the land, located across the street west of the Gem City Garage. The lumber reached the lot on Friday morning, the carpenters beginning work about nine o'clock, and on the following day the school furniture was moved to the building and the school was all but ready to begin work. On the following Monday morning the neighbors came with brooms and swept out the building and school was called at nine o'clock. School was regularly maintained in this structure until the 5th of November, 1914, when the central part of the present brick building was occupied.

The autumn of 1914 marked the third year of the superintendency of Joseph H. Nevins, and at that time B. B. Brown and Miss Ribble were employed as assistants in the high school, the former introducing athletics and the latter taking charge of the music. In March, 1915, it became necessary to furnish one room in the basement for grade purposes, and during the following summer the remaining basement rooms were furnished and occupied by the grades. In the fall of 1916 a four-room annex was built to accommodate the increased enrollment, while two years later two wings were added to the high school building, and that year also marked the addition to the high school curriculum of courses in domestic science, manual training and normal training. These additions completed the Sidney high school building as it stands at the present time and provides twenty-nine rooms available for school work. In 1919 the school board further added a Smith-Hughes agricultural course, ten pupils enrolling for the work of the course, and near the holiday season a three-day farmers short course was held with an enrollment of 350 from among actual farmers and with a total attendance upon the sessions of 750.

In 1911 the high school enrollment aggregated but 11 pupils, in 1912 it increased to 22, in 1913 16 enrolled for the work, in 1914 there were 45 pupils who placed their names upon the high school rolls, in 1915 this was increased to 60, in 1916 to 81, in 1917 to 118, in 1918 to 117, in 1919 to 130, and the total enrollment in the middle of the year was 508 pupils. In 1916 the first class graduated from the high school, the class consisting of George Ahlquist, who lost his life as a soldier in France October 20, 1918, as a second lieutenant; Enid Dawe, now deputy county treasurer of Richland County; Eulalia Blake, now the wife of a professor of Hamlin University, St. Paul; Nina Hanchett, a teacher in Kalispell, Montana; and Gwendolin Staffanson, the wife of Walt Jorgenson, of Missoula, Montana. The total number of graduates in May, 1920, reached the number of fifty-two.

The Sidney schools furnish employment to twenty-three teachers, nine of whom give full time to high school work, and for grade work it is required that teachers shall be advanced normal graduates, and all high school teachers of academic subjects must be college or university graduates. For the wonderful progress which the schools of Sidney have made in this comparatively short period of time much credit is accorded the superintendent, Joseph H. Nevins. He has been indefatigable in his efforts to place the school in the forefront of the educational system of the country, and his diligence and skill have been rewarded.

His birth occurred far from the scene of his successful endeavors, for he first saw the light of day at Williamsfield, Ohio, October 22, 1882, and he is a son of Richard M. Nevins and a grandson of Joseph Nevins. But it was his great-grandfather who founded the family in the United States, coming here from the north of Ireland. The family is originally of Scotch-Irish stock, the remote Scotch forefathers having settled in Ireland sometime following the reign of Cromwell.

Richard M. Nevins, the father, was born in Crawford County, Pennsylvania, May 18, 1853, and his industrial efforts were given first to shoemaking and afterward to farming. In 1909 he moved his family to Montana, and exercising his right of homesteading and proving up his claim he is still identified with this community as an agriculturist. He married Inez M. Heath, a daughter of William L. and Philetta Heath, who were cousins. The father, who was born in Williamsfield, Ohio, in 1819, spent his entire life there as a farmer. His people came from Massachusetts in an ox cart in 1816, and a chair they brought with them on that journey is now a treasured heirloom in the home of Mrs. Nevins. There is also Revolutionary history connected with the Heath family, an ancestor having fought as a Continental soldier from Connecticut in the war for national independence. The union of Richard and Inez Nevins was blessed by the birth of the following children: William L., whose home is in Sidney; Joseph Homer, the Sidney superintendent of schools; Gilbert H., a farmer at Dare, North Dakota; Frank R., engaged in the same occupation at Three Butes, Montana; and Iva M., who is a member of the family with which she has lived since infancy and now a junior in the Sidney High School.

Joseph H. Nevins attended the district schools of his native City of Williamsfield, Ohio, supplementing this training in the high school at Andover, and he then taught two years in his home district. In 1904 he entered Hiram College, from which he graduated four years later, and since then has been identified with educational work, coming from Andover to Montana.

On the 24th of July, 1912, Mr. Nevins was married to Ella C. Dates. They were married at Merrillan, Wisconsin, the native place of the bride, who is a daughter of Charles and Mary (Cure) Dates, both of whom came from New York to Wisconsin. The father was engaged in the hotel and livery business at Merrillan. Mrs. Nevins was born March 8, 1883, and was educated in the high school of her native town. She lost her mother in early life, and being the oldest of her parents' six children she afterward proved a real mother to her younger brothers and sisters. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Nevins, a daughter, Mildred Inez, who was born on the 12th of December, 1913.

During the World war and when sentiment for the cause of liberty was being stimulated by speeches and arguments everywhere Mr. Nevins was selected as one of the "Four Minute" speakers of the community, and in this and many other ways he demonstrated his active interest in the cause.

Albert S. Hier. As a result of the enterprise of Albert S. Hier the Bainville community of Roosevelt County has enjoyed the services of a first class newspaper for twelve years, the Valley Tribune. The Tribune is a real institution, ranking alongside the banks and industries, and again and again has helped to bring the people together and cooperate in movements for the local welfare and advancement.

Mr. Hier learned the printing trade when a boy, and has made journalism his life work. He was born in Brown County, Minnesota, March 26, 1884. His father, William F. Hier, was a native of Watertown, Wisconsin. At Cairo, Illinois, he enlisted in the Union army and saw some active service during the last year of the Civil war. Following that he took up railroading, and a few years later moved into Southern Minnesota as an employe of one of the first railroads penetrating that country. He filed on public lands, became a farmer, and subsequently moved to Kandyohi County, where he engaged in the real estate business at Raymond. He died August 30, 1914, at the age of sixty-eight. His wife was Caroline Larsen, who was born at Copenhagen, Denmark, and was brought to the United States when a child. She is still living at Raymond. Her children were: Albert S. and Frank, Arthur, Mrs. Lillian Feig and Anson, who live at Raymond.

Albert S. Hier spent his early boyhood on a farm, but from the age of twelve lived at Raymond, where he attended the local schools. At the age of fifteen he took his first lessons in the office of the Raymond News, where he practically learned the printer's trade. As a journeyman he worked on different papers over the country for about two years before coming West. Most of the time he did job work, and the little capital he invested in his first enterprise was what he had saved from his earnings. His first office contained a Washington press and a hatful of type.

At the age of twenty-one he homesteaded at Tagus in Western North Dakota, proved up a claim, and was there about five years. He also owned and conducted the Tagus Mirror. Leaving that locality, he worked on a paper at Williston for a short time and then at the Zahl ranch in the wilderness north of Williston. He began the publication of the Mixer, the first and only attempt to start a newspaper there. The plant is now being used for publishing the Cottonwood Lake Mixer. Mr. Hier did little more than establish the Mixer, and then returned to Williston and after a short time came to Montana and located at Bainville.

Here he bought the Valley Tribune, which had been established in 1808 by L. W. Wells, the first issue coming off the press in May of that year. It has always been republican in politics. The Tribune is the pioneer paper and has been alone in the field ever since. It is a six-column quarto issued on Thursday of each week and is devoted to current news of the locality, to the interests of agriculture, to the development of the community and is a household paper. Some of the best job work in Montana has come from the Tribune office, showing the skill and artistic quality of Mr. Hier's work as a printer.

Mr. Hier grew up in a republican home, and cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Taft in 1908 and has exhibited a genuine loyalty to that party ever since. He took his first degrees in Masonry at Mondak, and is a past grand of Bainville Lodge of Odd Fellows. During the World war he took special responsibility at Bainville for the success of the Thrift Stamp campaign, and saw to it that the community raised its quota in that direction.

The movement to divide old Valley County and create Sheridan County originated in Bainville, and Mr. Hier not only went about over the country lining up friends for the new county, but ably argued the case in the columns of the Tribune. He also supported the movement for Roosevelt County. Mr. Hier is unmarried.

Andrew Ueland, who with his family has enjoyed the comforts of a modern town home at Outlook since 1916, is of the class of pioneer homesteaders, homemakers, ranch and farm developers in Northeast Montana. He came here sixteen years ago, and occupied a "squatter's right" until the Government completed the survey of lands in this part of the state.

Mr. Ueland is of rugged Norwegian stock and was born in Webster County, Iowa, September 17, 1876. His grandfather Andrew Larson was a native of Norway, an early settler in Vernon County, Wisconsin, and is buried at Viroqua in that state. L. A. Ueland, father of Andrew, was born in Vernon County, Wisconsin, spent many years as a farmer in North Dakota but since 1911 has lived retired at Roseburg, Oregon. L. A. Ueland married Anna Hetland, who was born in Norway. Their family consisted of the following children: Andrew; Justice, a pioneer Montana rancher who died in 1918; Annie, wife of Oden Lutness of Sheridan County, Montana; Laura, wife of Ed A. Berstler of Streeter, North Dakota; Alice, who lives in Chicago and was a first aid nurse for wounded soldiers at Camp Sheridan during and after the war; Arthur who has extensive farming interests near Outlook; Emma, teacher of Domestic Science at Roseburg, Oregon; Cora, who is engaged in prophylactic work at Bangor, Maine; Grace, who has completed a three-year training course as a nurse and is living at Roseburg, Oregon; Edith, who is a graduate and is now taking a post-graduate course in the University of California.

Andrew Ueland was twelve years of age when his parents moved to North Dakota and he grew up in Lamore County, that state. He finished his education with a term in the Minnesota State Agricultural College and from his early career to the present his chief interest has been in farming.

He had married before leaving Lamore County and he came into Montana from Minot, North Dakota, his wife driving the prairie schooner, while he trailed his cattle behind. Passing by all the landmarks of civilization he finally rested on the site that he desired to enter. This location was seventy-five miles from Culbertson, the nearest trading point, and twenty-five miles from the postoffice at Plentywood. He was there some five or six years before the Government ran the section lines and two years more elapsed before the country was opened to settlement. In the meantime he ran his cattle on the open range. The first home of his family was a small frame house of two rooms, and after three years he began adding to it room by room to provide for his growing household. His stock sheds were constructed of posts and forks gathered from the coulees of elm, ash and other native trees. Prairie hay was used for roofing of the sheds, and his first home was shingled with sod, later being properly sheeted and shingled with the sod roof left intact.

Mr. Ueland and his few neighbors laid out the first trails. One of them extended southeast twenty-five miles to his nearest neighbor, another leading off from his ranch southwest until it joined the stage road to Culbertson and still another was made west into the breaks where he gathered timber for the construction of his sheds. These trails subsequently became main highways and were used for a number of years. All this region fifteen or sixteen years ago contained a bountiful supply of game animals and fowls, antelope, ducks and geese, and the frontiersmen obtained much of their food from this source.

Mr. Ueland's homestead was in sections 23 and 26, township 37, range 57. He remained in the locality for some years after acquiring his patents, and developed a section as a ranch and farm. As other settlers came in and peopled the country the range industry was curtailed, and it was necessary to depend more and more upon cultivation to produce stock feed. Ambrose sprang up on the Soo line and became the trading point for the Ueland community, though thirty-five miles away.

The story of the Ueland family also throws light on early educational advantages. Mr. Ueland's oldest child was eleven years old before she was enrolled in a school. In the meantime Mrs. Ueland had performed the functions of a teacher, and kept the children up in their studies so that they were qualified to make the grades appropriate to their age. The Ueland school was built about two miles from the home ranch, and Mr. Ueland was a member of the first school board.

Mr. Ueland took an active part in promoting the interests of the proposed Sheridan County. There was no serious objection to dividing the old Valley County for this purpose, though the selection of the county seat aroused the usual community jealousies and controversies. Plentywood was finally awarded the honor of the seat of government of Sheridan, and that brought the county offices within twenty-five miles of the Ueland ranch.

The most rapid development of the country followed the construction of the Soo Line Railway, new towns springing up all along the line. Mr. Ueland as an old settler gave his means and his personal influence to various enterprises in the towns of Westby, Dooley and Outlook. He was a director and vice president of the Farmers State Bank at Westby, was a stockholder and director of the Citizens State Bank at Dooley, and became identified with the organization of the State Bank of Outlook and is still president of that institution.

Mr. Ueland was a young married man when he came to Montana. September 29, 1900, Miss Delia Croswell became his wife. Her parents were Leonard G. and Delia (Rosencrans) Croswell, both natives of New York State. Her father was born May 20, 1836, was married near Rochester, and the Croswells were early settlers in Wisconsin, living on a farm in Columbia County that state until 1886, when they removed to North Dakota. Leonard Croswell spent his last years as a farmer in Lamore County and died in 1914. His wife passed away in 1890. The Croswell children were: Irene, who was married to David McLeod and died at Belfield, North Dakota; Emily, wife of Clay Kuntz of Lamore County; Mrs. Ueland, who was born in Columbia County, Wisconsin, July 10, 1874; Lois, wife of H. C. Croswell of Stratton, Ontario; and Sibyl, wife of Albert Oyhus of Medora, North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Ueland have three children, all attending public school at Outlook, named Elsie, Florence and Ralph.

The Ueland family removed from their ranch to Outlook in 1916, where Mr. Ueland built a modern home with ten rooms and full basement and has all the modern facilities including steam heat. During the war the Ueland home was busily engaged in various war activities, the women knitting socks and sweaters for the soldiers, and financially they participated in the purchase of bonds and contributed to Red Cross and other funds.

Mr. Ueland's father was a republican until recent years but Andrew Ueland cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Bryan and has continued to be identified with the democratic party.

As one of the older settlers Mr. Ueland's efforts and experiments serve as an indication of the possibilities of both agriculture and fruit growing in this part of Montana. One of his early efforts was to adorn his ranch home with trees. His first efforts were in gathering native cottonwoods from a nearby lake front and transplanting them close to his residence; they grew and became a veritable forest of shade trees. He also set out fruit trees, his best success being with plums. The shrub fruits such as gooseberries, strawberries, raspberries, june berries and currants all proved well adapted to the soil and climate, and there were few years when Mrs. Ueland did not fill the cellar with an ample supply of canned fruit for the winter needs.

Mr. Ueland was accompanied to Montana by his brother, Justice Ueland, and they were associated together in the stock business for a number of years. Justice took up land near Andrew and they were neighbors and successful farmers until the death of the brother in 1918. He developed a splendid farm and home, and after his death this estate was sold to the Decker brothers of Dooley who have maintained it as a profitable grain ranch and farm.

S. Lawrence Kleve is a busy banker of Wolf Point, and that is the line of work in which he has been engaged ever since coming to Montana four years ago. He is a banker of wide training and experience, and is also known as an exceedingly public-spirited resident of his home town.

Mr. Kleve was born in Kandyohi County, Minnesota, March 25, 1885. His father, Lars Kleve, was born in the District of Hardanger, Norway, July 2, 1848, was a country boy and grew up and acquired his education in Norway. When about twenty-seven years of age he came to the United States, and worked as a track layer on the Great Northern while it was being built, also got out logs in the pineries of the North, and did something at his trade as a carpenter. Buying a farm near Willmar, Minnesota, he finally settled down to its cultivation and improvement, and for many years was actively identified with grain and stock raising. He retired in 1914, and spent his last days at Willmar, where he died in July, 1919. He was a plain citizen of the people, voted as a republican after becoming an American citizen, and was a Lutheran. He married Gertrude Fixen, from the same district in Norway as he, and she is now living at Willmar, Minnesota. Her children are: Thea, wife of P. G. Thorpe, of Spy Hill, Saskatchewan; Edward T., of Willmar; S. Lawrence; Elick O., of McClusky, North Dakota; Julia, wife of Rex Oliver, of McClusky; Nellie and Leonard, of Willmar.

S. Lawrence Kleve spent his boyhood days on a farm and lived in the country to the age of seventeen. In the meantime he had attended rural schools and a high school, and for a year was a student in Willmar College, Minnesota, and Humboldt College, Iowa. At the age of eighteen he went to work with the First National Bank at Twin Valley, Minnesota, a year later went with the Hope State Bank of Hope, North Dakota, and for three years was teller of the Second National Bank of Minot. He was next chosen assistant cashier of the German-American State Bank at Balfour, North Dakota, and on April 1, 1910, left that institution to become cashier of the Flasher State Bank at Flasher. For a year and a half before coming to Montana he was connected with banking interests at Kenmare, North Dakota.

Arriving in Wolf Point October 6, 1916, Mr. Kleve entered the service of the Farmers Bank as cashier. This bank surrendered its state charter and became the First National Bank in 1917, with Mr. Kleve as its first cashier. In September of the same year he became active vice president. The present First National Bank is a result of a subsequent consolidation with the Citizens National, and Mr. Kleve remains as vice president of the larger institution.

The activities of the Wolf Point district in financing the Government during the war were a part of the daily program of Mr. Kleve, and he responded to the demands of the occasion from whatever source. His service to Wolf Point both privately and officially has commended him, and won the confidence of the community. He is now serving his first term as a member of the Wolf Point Council. He has been a republican since casting his first presidential vote for Mr. Taft in 1908. Mr. Kleve is a Master Mason, and is affiliated with the Royal Arch Chapter at Bowbells, North Dakota. He and his wife are Presbyterians. They have given Wolf Point one of its modern homes, a seven-room bungalow.

At Balfour, North Dakota, July 19, 1909, Mr. Kleve married Miss Elizabeth Parmenter. She was born in that state January 14, 1885, and after graduating from high school and the Cedar Falls Normal School of Iowa became a teacher, being connected with the schools of Panoma, Iowa, and at Balfour, North Dakota. She was the youngest of three daughters and two sons born to Almon W. and Elizabeth (Sea) Parmenter. Mr. and Mrs. Kleve have two sons, Almon Lawrence and Horace Edward.

SHERMAN T. COGSWELL has been identified with the Wolf Point locality of Montana for over a third of a century. He was a teacher and merchant through the period when the community had its chief distinction as an Indian agency, and for the past seven years no one has devoted himself more liberally both with time and means to the modern growth and prosperity of Wolf Point than he.

Practically his entire life has been spent in two states, Michigan and Montana. He was born near Adrian, Michigan, January 24, 1865. His father, Richmond S. Cogswell, a native of New York State, moved out to Lenawee County, Michigan, about 1851, and lived on a farm in that county until 1875. He then moved to Tennessee, establishing a home at Danville. His first wife was Lydia Stretch, who was born in Genesee County, New York, a daughter of John Stretch. The Cogswells were also from Genesee County, New York. Lydia Stretch Cogswell died about 1882, at the age of forty-eight, while visiting in Michigan from her home in Tennessee. She was the mother of four children. Ida, the oldest, became the wife of Dr. Dayton Parker, and for several years when a boy, her brother Sherman lived in her home and attended school. She died in Petosky and is buried beside her mother in Blissfield, Michigan. The second of the children is Mrs. Hugh Campbell, of Adrian, Michigan; Miss Alma Cogswell has for many years made her home with her brother at Wolf Point; Sherman T. is the youngest. Richmond S. Cogswell after the death of his first wife, married in Tennessee, Minerva Thurston. In 1893 they moved out to Kansas and settled at Wallula, between Leavenworth and Kansas City, where Mr. Cogswell died at the age of eighty-three. His widow survived him only a few years, and both are buried near that little Kansas village.

Sherman T. Cogswell lived on the farm near Adrian to the age of ten years, and when his parents went South he made his home with his sister at Blissfield. The education he received there was all the formal schooling he ever got. He was about twenty years of age when he accepted an invitation from Maj. Burton Parker, then Indian agent at Poplar, Montana, to come West and take charge of a little school among the Indians at Wolf Point. It was in October, 1885, that he completed his journey and began what has proved a permanent residence at this place. T. C. Powers and W. B. Shaw, the old Indian traders, both had stores at Wolf Point. Mr. Cogswell witnessed the last stages of the tribal relations of the Assinniboines, and has been a witness and factor in all the developments of this region for thirty-five years.

He reached Wolf Point by way of Poplar after 2½ days of travel from Glendive to Poplar by Government team and wagon. His little party stopped the first night at the Lovejoy ranch and the second night at Ed Moran's ranch on Red Water, and at Day's ranch they parted with Milt Henderson, Day's foreman, and the first cowboy young Cogswell had ever seen. Henderson was a character and a likeable fellow and subsequently engaged in the saloon business at Great Falls when that was a mere village. Aside from Lovejoy, Moran and Day there was not another evidence of white settlement between Glendive and Poplar, except perhaps the Lindsay sheep outfit at Glendive. This journey, being Mr. Cogswell's introduction to Eastern Montana, was accomplished without special incident, though it gave him his first glimpses of the wild life of the Northwest. The party saw numerous deer, antelope and coyotes.

Mr. Cogswell succeeded Mr. Massey in charge of the Indian day school at Wolf Point. The school was then held in the end of one of the log stables belonging to the agency. About a year previously the schools had been taken over by the Government from the Presbyterian Missionary Board. Attendance at school was purely a voluntary matter on the part of the children. However, about thirty-five of them presented themselves every morning to the new teacher, though their chief incentive was the free dinner served by the Government from the commissary. This dinner was prepared by a detail of the larger girls from the school. It was a period of hard times for the tribe, and they took advantage of every opportunity to keep soul and body together. Mr. Cogswell remained at his post as a teacher less than a year, and on leaving the "stable" school went to the store of T. C. Power as a clerk.

He therefore began his experience as a merchant at Wolf Point in 1886. Mr. Power soon sold his business to Mr. Shaw, and Mr. Cogswell remained with the latter, under the name of H. M. Cozier & Company, and was with the Poplar branch of the concern during the winter of 1886-87. In the latter year he returned to Wolf Point, and in February, 1891, bought out the business, and his title and responsibilities as agency merchant has been with him ever since. In 1886 Mr. Cogswell was appointed postmaster of Wolf Point by Postmaster General Vilas, and he served continuously in that office until he retired in 1915.

Mr. Cogswell was in this region early enough to know some of the historic chiefs of the Sioux and Assinniboines. He has some interesting reminiscences of old Redstone, whose favorite wife, Redfish, still survives here. Redstone was a strong man, the big man of his tribe, was rather a serious minded chieftain, and though totally unlettered and without the use of a word of English he fell in with the plans of the Government to educate his people, encouraged agricultural industry, and while he was always garbed in the native costume, he seemed pleased with the tribal change to civilized clothing for both men and women. It is believed that he was born on White River in Minnesota, and he was selected chief of his tribe because of his bravery. He was a popular leader, and at his death in 1897 he left numerous posterity by his several wives. He was afflicted with total blindness the last six years of his life, and died at the age of about eighty.

While his early interests were largely identified with the Indian population around Wolf Point, Mr. Cogswell has always been a leader in the modern era of commercial development on the part of the white settlers. With the building of the Great Northern Railway he gave his influence toward the growth of Wolf Point as a modern town, and moved his postoffice to the new Wolf Point in 1913, finishing his service as postmaster there. In 1913 he established an implement business, and that is still one of his chief interests. It was he who took the lead in the movement for the erection of the Sherman Hotel, one of the conspicuous hotels of northern Montana, and named in his honor. The hotel is a building far in advance of the period in which it was constructed, and all Wolf Point and the region about it regard it with justifiable pride. Mr. Cogswell is vice president of the Hotel Company, and also took an active part in the establishment of the First State Bank, of which he is president.

Mr. Cogswell has never married. In politics he is a republican, having cast his first presidential vote in Montana in 1892 for Benjamin Harrison. He is affiliated with Loyalty Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Wolf Point, and with Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, having been a member of the Shrine since 1904. While a member of no church, he is a believer in its work and acts as a trustee of the Presbyterian organization at Wolf Point.

WILLIAM POWERS is one of several men of that name who have founded and directed two or three substantial banks in Eastern Montana and have given their financial and executive service to the industrial, stock raising and civic enterprise of that section of the state.

Mr. Powers, who is cashier and executive head of the Farmers State Bank of Bainville, was born at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, November 7, 1883. His father and uncle, Richard and John, have for many years been closely associated in banking and other business lines, and they established the first creamery in North Dakota, at Havana in 1893, a plant that is still in successful operation. John Powers is a pioneer of Dakota Territory, having located in Sargent County in 1883. He helped frame the present constitution of North Dakota as a member of the Constitutional Convention.

Richard Powers, father of the Bainville banker, was born at Lake Geneva in 1850 and is still a resident of that attractive city of Southern Wisconsin. For a number of years he was identified with farming, and has extensive banking and landed interests. He is vice president of the Farmers National Bank of Lake Geneva, has banking and land interests in Sargent County, North Dakota, and other interests that will be noted in Sheridan and Roosevelt counties, Montana. He married Bridget Cassin, who was born in County Kilkenny, Ireland, in 1852. Their children are: Mrs. Oliver T. Cody, of Chicago; Miss May K., of Lake Geneva; William; Edward S., of Medicine Lake, Montana; and John D., a rancher at Havana, North Dakota.

William Powers grew up at Lake Geneva, attended high school there, and at once began banking, spending five years in learning the business with the First National Bank of Lake Geneva.

On leaving Wisconsin he came to Montana and identified himself with the locality of Bainville in December, 1908. At that time he took over the Bank of Bainville, a private institution, and it was four months before he could secure a safe or vault. In 1909 he organized the Farmers Bank of Bainville, another private institution, with John Powers as president, Richard Powers as vice president, William Powers, cashier, and Edward S. Powers, assistant cashier. This bank was incorporated as the Farmers State Bank in July, 1911. It has capital stock of $20,000, surplus and undivided profits of $17,500, and deposits averaging about $200,000.

Mr. Powers is also president of the First State Bank of Medicine Lake, of which his brother Edward S. is cashier and of which his uncle is vice president. Mr. Powers made the first farm loan recorded in Valley County. He is a stockholder in a number of elevators along the Great Northern Railway, three of which he practically organized. He was instrumental in locating the Jennison Mills Company of Bainville, the largest flouring mill in Northeastern Montana.

Mr. Powers is vitally interested in homestead and agricultural development. He proved up a homestead of his own near Bainville and owns a section of land devoted to farming and stock-growing. He is half owner of the Mar Car Shorthorn herd, one of the select herds in the state and bred on the farm of Senator Lowe near Culbertson. Semi-annual public sales of the animals of this herd are held at Williston, and for several years past the prices bid and paid for at these sales range from $750 to $1,200 for each animal. This industry has done splendid pioneer work in fine cattle breeding in Eastern Montana, and is adding yearly to the state's standing as a prize cattle region.

When Mr. Powers came to Montana Bainville was in Valley County. He has been interested in the movements which have resulted in dividing up that county twice. He suggested the name of Sheridan County, and was a leader in the movement, securing about a third of the signatures necessary for the calling of an election. He was equally interested in the movement for Roosevelt County, and spent some time in behalf of that proposition at Helena, interesting various members of the Legislature.

Mr. Powers was reared in a democratic home, cast his first presidential vote for Judge Parker, and has been aligned with the party ever since. He was a United States commissioner at Bainville, serving four years by appointment from Judge Carl Rash. Mr. Powers is affiliated with Williston Lodge of the Elks. He served as local chairman of the Red Cross and of the four Liberty Loan drives, and had the satisfaction of seeing Bainville go over the top each time. He is of a Catholic family and has been identified with that church in Bainville.

Mr. Powers married at Libby, Montana, October 3, 1917, Miss Corinne DeMers. She was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, December 13, 1892, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip DeMers. Mrs. Powers is one of a large family, and finished her education in the St. Paul High School. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Powers has been born a daughter, Margaret O., and a son, James A.

William Franklin Rhea came into Eastern Montana twenty-five years ago, rode the range for five years, began ranching with a few cattle of his own, was one of the first stockmen to engage in agriculture, and has seen his pains and labor with the soil requited with a number of remarkable crops. Farming and ranching is still his business, though he is also a banker, being president of the First National Bank of Bainville.

Mr. Rhea is one of the few Montanans who came into the state from the West rather than from the East. He was born in Umatilla County, Oregon, October 30, 1874. He belongs to a family of Oregon pioneers. His grandfather, Elijah Rhea, who was probably a native of Scotland, was an early settler in Missouri and in 1854, with his family, crossed the plains with ox teams, passing through the Piute Indian country and making settlement in the Willamette Valley of Oregon. He became a wheat grower and stock raiser in that valley and in later life moved to Eastern Oregon and conducted a hotel at Arlington on the Columbia River, where he died about 1884, when past sixty years of age. He married a Miss Milliron, of an old Pennsylvania Dutch family. She died at Junction City, Oregon. Their children were: Columbus A., of Portland; Frankie, who became the wife of James Luper, of Hepner, Oregon; Lizzie, who died at Hepner in 1892 as the wife of Thomas Morgan; Thomas A.; James P., of Hillsboro, Oregon; and John, who died in early manhood near Eugene in the Willamette Valley. By a second wife Elijah Rhea had three children, and by a third marriage was the father of four daughters.

Thomas A. Rhea, father of the Bainville banker, was born in Missouri in 1849 and was but five years of age when the family caravan wended its way through hostile tribes and hostile lands to the Pacific Coast. He acquired his education in the pioneer schools of Eugene and Junction City, and was identified with stock raising in Eastern Oregon until that region settled, after which he sold his ranch and established his home at Hepner, later on lived at Portland, and is now a resident of Hillsboro. He married Henrietta Cecil. Her father, William H. Cecil, was another Oregon pioneer, crossing the plains from Illinois in 1862. Henrietta, then a child of seven, was born in Adams County, Illinois, in 1855, and died at Oroville, California, in November, 1916. She was the mother of four children: Iona, wife of J. W. Widrick, of Pasco, Washington; William F.; Cora, a resident of Hillsboro, Oregon, widow of Harry T. Bagley; and Walter E., who died in childhood.

William F. Rhea was reared in Oregon, acquired his education in that state, and had something more than a theoretical knowledge of ranching and farming when he came to Eastern Montana in the spring of 1895. For five years he lived the rough and tumble life of a cowboy on the range, working with one of the outfits of Henry Sieben. Mr. Sieben was a pioneer stockman of Montana, coming into the country in 1872, and eventually had his ranch interests widely scattered over the state. Mr. Rhea was with the Sieben ranch headquarters at Culbertson until 1900.

Going still further East, he became a squatter in the community of Bainville. No town of that name had yet been thought of, nor had the Scobey branch of railway been considered as a possibility. The only occupants north along the Big Muddy were a few stockmen. Mr. Rhea bought a few cattle in the spring of 1900, and with his brand, the "4 reversed R," ranged them anywhere east of the Dakota line and north to Lake Creek.

For ten years the ranchhouse and home of Mr. and Mrs. Rhea was a three-room log building, and they left it for a more convenient and modern seven-room frame residence. The first half dozen years Mr. Rhea did little else than look after his stock and its increase, and his pioneer effort in agriculture was made about 1907. The Rhea farm is regarded as one of the best in that region today, and has grown many successive crops of wheat. Mr. Rhea entered the site of his log cabin as a homestead as soon as the government gave him the opportunity, he also entered a desert claim, and with the claims of Mrs. Rhea there was constituted 640 acres. This became the nucleus of the farm and ranch, and since then 880 acres have been purchased, all comprised in a solid body, all fenced, and with about 500 acres under cultivation.

There is no special secret in Mr. Rhea's methods which have had such generous results in crops. He has done what practical and scientific agriculturists advocate, plowed his ground well and thoroughly prepared the soil before seeding, and his experience makes him a strong believer in the summer fallow. In 1912 no farmer near him produced on the same acreage the average yield of grain that he had. His average for wheat was a trifle over 35 bushels to the acre, while his oats crop averaged 124 bushels machine measure, equalling better than a 142 bushels by weight. His flax gave him 23 bushels. He has never had a total failure, though his experience has encountered several extremely dry seasons.

Mr. Rhea has never abandoned his farm as a residence, even with the dignity and responsibilities that have come to him as a banker. In June, 1917, he became interested in banking, opening the First National Bank of Bainville. His associates in that enterprise were Senator Henry Lowe of Culbertson, John Shaw, president of the First National Bank of Williston, and A. W. Springhorn and R. E. Gustafson of Bainville. Mr. Rhea has served the institution from its organization as president, A. W. Springhorn is cashier, and Mr. Lowe and Mr. Shaw are vice presidents. The working capital of the bank is $25,000, its surplus and profits $5,000, and average deposits $100,000. The bank paid a dividend of $2,500 in January, 1920.

Though reared in a democratic household Mr.

Rhea gave his first presidential vote to William McKinley in 1900. He supported Judge Parker in 1904 and other presidential candidates of the democratic party. He became a Mason at Culbertson, is affiliated with Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite, and is a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

At Williston, North Dakota, March 27, 1900, Mr. Rhea married Miss Ella A. Bruegger. She was born at Watertown, Wisconsin, September 10, 1878, and is of Swiss ancestry, a daughter of Nicholas and Minnie (Heiz) Bruegger. Her mother was born in Switzerland and her father was a native of Watertown and of Swiss parentage. Mrs. Rhea was the third in a family of eight children and acquired her education in her native city, living there until she came out to Williston in 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Rhea have two sons, William T. and David E., the former a student of the Montana Wesleyan College at Helena and the latter a grade pupil at Bainville.

Richard H. Sweetman has been identified with Eastern Montana for nearly a quarter of a century and as a rancher and farmer has developed a part of the old Fort Buford Reservation at Lakeside in Roosevelt County. He is a brother of Luke D. Sweetman, the first Montana settler on the old Fort Buford Reservation, whose career as a maker of history in this locality has been described elsewhere.

Richard H. Sweetman was born in Iowa October 23, 1862, son of Thomas D. Sweetman. As a boy he was taken by his parents to Montgomery County, Kansas, where he grew up on a farm and acquired a country school education and attended the Coffeyville High School. When about twenty-one years of age he left home and went out to California and for about 1½ years was employed as a street car conductor at Los Angeles. He then returned to Kansas and operated his grandfather Hollingsworth's farm there until he came out to Montana in 1896.

On coming to this state Mr. Sweetman joined his brother and was foreman of the latter's ranch. During the next several years he also acquired a personal interest in the stock business and then established a modest ranching enterprise at the locality where he is found today, Lakeside, and with lands adjoining those of his brother. His ranch is also along the right of way of the Great Northern Railway. He entered a half section of the old Fort Buford Reservation, and has developed the lands which from time immemorial had never produced anything but wild grass. The log cabin which sheltered him as a bachelor for several years is still a part of his more commodious home. Mr. Sweetman has done both farming and stock raising, his chief interest as a farmer being the raising of grain and hay. His only financial connection outside of his ranch was as a stockholder at the time of the organization of the Farmers Elevator Company at Lakeside.

His ranch for some years was noted for its splendid horses, and he took pride in the development of the heavy draft Percherons and bred them up to a high state of perfection. The horse market suffering a serious decline at the close of the World war, his individual enterprise in that field has also been allowed to pause. His cattle are the Red Poll and Shorthorn strains, and a feature of his industry is shipping cream from Mondak.

Mr. Sweetman has been satisfied to take a private citizen's part in community life. He is a republican of more than thirty years' standing, and cast his first vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1888.

At Glasgow, Montana, April 20, 1911, he married Mrs. Aurora Burneau. She was born at Montreal, Quebec, in 1888, daughter of Joseph DuFresne, now a resident of Fairview, Montana. She lived at Montreal to the age of sixteen, and then accompanied the family to North Dakota. Her people moved into Montana in 1910 and settled on a homestead in Richland County, not far from the Sweetman locality. Miss DuFresne became the wife of Theophile Burneau at Rolla, North Dakota. She has one son by that union, Theophile Burneau. Mr. and Mrs. Sweetman are the parents of four children: Pearl, Richard, Chester and Frances.

Luke D. Sweetman came into Montana Territory from the south as a cowboy thirty-five years ago, and has been actively identified with the ranching interests ever since. For a quarter of a century the sphere of his business has been in the country immediately adjacent to the point where the Missouri River leaves Montana. He is proprietor and developer of the Lakeside Ranch, which is a part of the old Fort Buford Reservation.

Mr. Sweetman was born at West Branch, Iowa, January 12, 1867. His father, Thomas D. Sweetman, was a native of Maryland, went to Iowa as a young man, and during the infancy of his son Luke moved to Southern Kansas and was one of the early settlers around Coffeyville. He lived in that state many years and then returned to Maryland, where he died. He married in Iowa Miss Margaret Hollingsworth, whose father, Richard Hollingsworth, was a native of Ohio, a pioneer in Iowa, and also an early settler and farmer in Montgomery County, Kansas, where he and his wife are both buried. Mrs. Thomas Sweetman died at Coffeyville, Kansas, in 1916. She was the mother of three children: Richard, who has a ranch adjoining that of his brother Luke; Mrs. Anna Robertson, of Coffeyville; and Luke D.

Luke D. Sweetman grew up in the vicinity of Coffeyville, attended the rural schools and the town schools, and as a boy made frequent excursions over the line into old Indian Territory. At the age of fourteen he began riding the range along the Oklahoma-Kansas line within what was then known as the Cherokee Strip. For three years he was connected with some of the big cattle outfits operating in that region. It was as an employe of the Comanche Pool that he helped on one of the big drives over the trail to Montana, and for two years he was with the Ray Cattle Company, which held its stock on the range north of the Yellowstone at Miles City.

Mr. Sweetman left the cattle outfit in 1887 and in the spring of that year came into the eastern region of Montana and engaged in the business of buying Montana horses and driving them overland for market to the Red River Valley of North Dakota, although his headquarters were at Miles City. He continued the business actively for some twelve or fifteen years, even after he had made his settlement on the Lakeside Ranch.

When Mr. Sweetman came to his present ranch the land had never been occupied by white men. Old Fort Buford had been abandoned and there was a current opinion that the land would be surveyed and opened to settlers. In anticipation of such a move he introduced his cattle and horses into the region in 1896. His horse brand was "16" and his cattle brand "7." During eleven years of residence in Montana he had progressed from a wage earning youth to a modest ranchman and with reliable prospects for a still better future.

His first improvement was a small log cabin on the banks of the Missouri, which with additions served him while he was a bachelor and also during the first years of his married life. In those early years he had his brother and others as companions in his house and in the work of the range. When the old Reservation was thrown open for settlement both Mr. and Mrs. Sweetman filed on a homestead and desert lands, their tracts adjoining, and Mr. Sweetman also located other land with soldier scrip. He now has 1,100 acres devoted to both farm and stock. Through the ranch winds the Missouri River, and recently much of the lowland has been seeded to alfalfa, which Mr. Sweetman considers an appropriate crop for the soil and climate. While getting the soil in readiness for grass and hay he also used it to raise a few crops of grain.

The Lakeside Ranch today is in great contrast to the broad open prairie when Luke D. Sweetman first saw it. The log cabin home has given way to a splendid modern residence of ten rooms, watered from cellar to garret by his artesian well. In place of the old stables is an immense barn for his horses, still a prominent feature in his stock enterprise.

Perhaps of even greater interest is the private irrigation project which he has developed. He began work on it in 1901, using at that time a dam and headgate about 1½ miles above the mouth of the Little Muddy. Since then he has built a pumping plant on the bank of the Missouri with a capacity of 4,500 gallons a minute. There are four miles of main ditch and laterals sufficient to water nearly all the bottom lands. Thus he has an irrigated ranch, developed entirely at his own expense.

Mr. Sweetman has little use for scrub stock, and his cattle are of the Poll Angus breed and his horses are Percherons. For over thirty years he has been sending stock to market. At first he drove them out of Montana, and with the coming of the Great Northern has been a shipper over that route. His cattle market has been in Chicago, and the Rosenbaum Brothers, to whom he consigned his first shipment, are still a prominent firm at the stockyards.

At the birth of the village of Mondak Mr. Sweetman was interested in the townsite and was one of the town promoters, and for a time was financially concerned with the local store. He took stock in the Farmers Elevator Company when it was organized at Lakeside, served it as president for a time, and he also favored the movement for county division when Sheridan County was set off from Valley, and later when Roosevelt was constituted a new county in the south part of Sheridan.

At Milton, North Dakota, January 25, 1899, Mr. Sweetman married Miss Alice Waterman. Her mother was Harriet Elmer, a daughter of Orrin Elmer. Her father was born at Beloit, Wisconsin, and her mother at Millard's Prairie in the same state, and came out to North Dakota and homesteaded near Milton in 1884. They finally moved to Montana, and Mrs. Waterman died at Scobey in 1918, at the age of seventy-four, and her husband is still living there. The Waterman children were: Herbert, of Mossbank, Saskatchewan; Mrs. Sweetman, who was born August 29, 1881; and Mrs. Frank Robinson, of Scobey. Mr. and Mrs. Sweetman have a family of five: Corma, a teacher at Froid, Montana; Lawrence and Merrill, students in the Bainville High School; and Alice and Donald.

Mr. Sweetman gave his first presidential vote to Major McKinley and has always supported republican candidates. Mrs. Sweetman grew up in a republican home and cast her first presidential vote for Mr. Hughes in 1916. The Sweetmans were earnestly interested in the success of the war, were contributors to the Liberty Bonds and other campaigns, and did much work in their home, Mrs. Sweetman being a member of Mondak Chapter of the Red Cross, and for several months was diligently engaged in knitting.

Roy H. Johnson, who has been prominently identified with the business life of Plentywood since its formative period, is the manager of the Sheridan County Abstract Company and a member of the Roosevelt County Abstract Company. The former corporation has transcribed the records of the county, and has its books to date for the making of a complete showing as to titles to all lands within the county. It is a bonded company for the sum of $5,000, a safe and reliable institution for the transaction and sale of Montana's lands.

Mr. Johnson was born in Dexter, Iowa, January 30, 1892, but when he was a lad of seven years he was taken by his parents to Minnesota, where he grew to mature years on farms near Hancock and Alexandria, gaining his education in the meantime in the public schools and a business college at Alexandria. He was a youth of nineteen when he embarked upon his business career, and at the same time became identified with the life and interests of Montana.

Charles F. Johnson, his father, was a native of Sweden, but left his native land for the United States when nineteen years of age. For a time after his arrival he was employed as a wage earner in the Rock Island Arsenal and at Galesburg, Illinois, later was a railroad brakeman, and finally learned the mason's trade and followed that occupation until failing health caused him to give up the work and retire to the farm, depending upon his sons to carry on its work. He became a naturalized citizen of his adopted land, voted with the republican party, and always proved himself a thorough American, in sympathy with its institutions and government. His death occurred at Alexandria, Minnesota, in January, 1916, when he had reached the age of sixty-nine. He had married in Dexter, Iowa, Miss Clara A. Samuelson, who was also a native of Sweden, and they met for the first time at Galesburg, Illinois. She survives her husband, and is the mother of the following children: Albert, who is engaged in farming near Clontarf, Minnesota; Gus F. and Walter R., both residents of Northwood, Iowa; Roy H., of Plentywood, Montana; and Marie C., the deceased wife of R. E. Johnson, the originator of the Johnson interests in the Valley County Abstract Company of Glasgow.

In 1913 Roy H. Johnson arrived in Montana, a young and enthusiastic lad of nineteen years, and he established himself in the embryo Town of Glasgow and entered upon the duties of a clerk and stenographer in the office of R. E. Johnson, the founder of the Valley County Abstract Company. When Sheridan County was created two years later R. E. and C. C. Johnson of Mondak and Roy H. Johnson organized the abstract business in Sheridan County, and in November of that year, 1913, Roy H. Johnson assumed the management of the business and has continued to transact its affairs ever since, save when he wore the uniform of his country as a soldier in training for the World war. The partnership in the Sheridan County Abstract Company was dissolved upon the death of the senior member of the firm, R. E. Johnson. C. C. and Roy H. Johnson are also the owners of the Roosevelt County Abstract Company at Mondak.

With the exception of always casting an intelligent and patriotic ballot and working for the upbuilding of his community Roy H. Johnson has never been an active participant in political affairs. His first presidential vote was given to Colonel Roosevelt, and he became a member of the progressive party in 1912, while in 1916 he supported Hughes for the presidency and is a believer in republican principles. He entered the ranks as a soldier April 23, 1918, enlisting in the United States Marines. He was sent to Mare Island, California, where he remained until June 11 following, when he was transferred to Galveston, Texas, and remained at that camp until discharged in February, 1919. He is a charter member of the Plentywood Post of the American Legion, also its post commander.

Mr. Johnson is unmarried. He was made a Mason in Plentywood in 1915 ,and he belongs to the Blue Lodge and Chapter of that city, to the Commandery at Glasgow, to the Shrine at Helena, and took the work of the Consistory at Galveston, Texas, in 1918, and belongs to the Scottish Rite bodies there. He is also a member of the Eastern Star in Plentywood. As a Blue Lodge Mason he held the office of secretary, and at the present time he is serving as secretary of the Chapter.

RICHARD E. (DICK) JOHNSON was born at Norcross, Minnesota, September 6, 1881, and died at Glasgow, Montana, December 25, 1916.

Mr. Johnson moved to Kensington, Minnesota, in 1888 with his parents, and his early education was obtained in the public schools of Kensington and Minneapolis. Later he attended the Glenwood Academy at Glenwood, Minnesota, where he completed a course in business.

Mr. Johnson first came to Montana in 1899, when he accepted a position with the Lewis-Wedum Company Store at Glasgow, but after a short time returned to Minnesota, where he accepted a position with the Wilcox & Wells Store at Hancock, Minnesota. This proved an important step in his life, as it was there that he met Marie C. Johnson, and the acquaintance formed blossomed into one of the most beautiful and affectionate love stories that we are privileged to see in life. After a few months at Hancock he again returned to Glasgow and reentered the employ of the Lewis-Wedum Company, for which firm he served as bookkeeper and assistant postmaster. This position he held until he was appointed cashier of the Lewis Brothers Bank (later the First National), at Glasgow, which position he held until he resigned in March, 1904.

April 5, 1904, he was married to Marie C. Johnson at her home near Hancock, Minnesota, and there began what was, as near as earth can give, an earthly paradise. At first the young couple lived at Glenwood, Minnesota, where Mr. Johnson engaged in the real estate business, but in the fall moved to Flaxton, North Dakota, where he and associates established the First State Bank, and he was its cashier. The following year they moved to Rolette, North Dakota, where Mrs. Johnson had the distinction of being the first woman in the town. At this place Mr. Johnson was cashier of the First State Bank, and remained in Rolette until January, 1909, when he disposed of his banking interests.

January, 1909, found Mr. Johnson back in Glasgow, this time to stay, as he purchased the abstract of title records of W. J. Pierce and formed the Valley County Abstracting Company, which he later incorporated as the Valley County Abstract Company and became its president. In June, 1910, Charles C. Johnson became associated with him and in April, 1911, Roy H. Johnson came, both of whom were constantly associated with him until his untimely death on Christmas Day, 1916. The firms owned and established by the three Johnsons have always been and still are more popularly known as "Johnson THE Abstractman."

In March, 1913, the Sheridan County Abstract Company was incorporated by the above men, and Mr. Johnson became its president. In March, 1915, a deal was consummated whereby the Johnsons disposed of their interests in the abstract of title records of the Valley County Abstract Company, retaining, however, the farm loan and insurance business, which they incorporated into the Johnson Farm Loan Company, and Mr. Johnson also became its president. Just prior to his death he was instrumental in organizing the Farmers-Stockgrowers Bank of Glasgow, of which he was to have been interested.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were active in the welfare of the community in which they resided, and were especial boosters for Montana and Glasgow. Mrs. Johnson preceded Mr. Johnson in death, she passing away on September 26, 1914. No children were born to this happy marriage.

Mr. Johnson took a keen interest in public enterprises as well as in politics, but he never held an office. He was a great admirer of "Teddy" Roosevelt, and was a delegate to the National Convention of the progressive party in 1912 at Chicago. Otherwise he was always identified with the republican party.

Mr. Johnson was confirmed in the Lutheran Church, but attended the Congregational Church in Glasgow for a number of years. Prior to his death, however, he became interested in Christian Science. He belonged to the several Masonic bodies, the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Eastern Star in Glasgow and the Scottish Rite bodies and Shrine in Helena, Montana, his funeral being in charge of North Star Lodge No. 46, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Glasgow. He also was a member of the Modern Woodman and Yeoman lodges.

Mr. Johnson's father, Erick H. Johnson, was born December 27, 1842, at Ahus, Sweden, and received his education in Sweden, coming to America in 1863. During the Civil war he served with Company H, 132nd Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and later was a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was postmaster at Kensington, Minnesota, at the time of his death in October, 1903. He was married December 26, 1867, to Miss Ingri Ringhdahl, who preceded him in death in the spring of 1889. Three children were born to this union: Edward H., the eldest, who was accidently killed while displaying fireworks in Fargo, North Dakota, in June, 1899; Richard E., now deceased; and Ebba V. (Bee) Halgren, of Watertown, Minnesota.

FREDERICK S. SLEIGHT has been a factor in the business enterprise of the Town of Froid since March, 1916, being a member of the Froid Auto & Oil Company. He has been a resident of Montana for seven years, and before coming to the state acquired a scientific training in agriculture and practiced that profession in North Dakota.

Mr. Sleight was born at Lansing, Michigan, December 29, 1876. His grandfather, Frederick Sleight, was born near Poughkeepsie, New York, of a pioneer family of that section. He married Mary Ann Paulding, of Scotch ancestry and a descendant of John Paulding, one of the captors of Major Andre, the noted British spy.

The father of the Montana business man was Stephen H. Sleight, who was born at Staatsburg, New York, July 2, 1839. As a young man he enlisted in the 150th New York Infantry, was in the Army of the Potomac and his first battle was Gettysburg. Later his command was under Sherman, took part in the march to the sea, and he was with Sherman's forces through the Carolina campaign until the surrender of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston. After his discharge he returned to New York, and in 1871 moved West with his family to Michigan, locating near Lansing. He was a farmer in that state, and some ten years later moved to North Dakota, where he continued farming and died at Fargo in 1889. The only political office he ever held was as county commissioner of Dickey County, North Dakota, for a term of four years. He was a Presbyterian, a republican, and his funeral was conducted under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Masons.

He married Susan O. Cleveland, daughter of Frederick W. and Elizabeth (Harris) Cleveland. Frederick W. Cleveland, a nephew of Rev. Mr. Cleveland, was pastor of one of the churches of Caldwell, New Jersey, when his son Stephen Grover was born. Frederick W. Cleveland was therefore a cousin of Grover Cleveland, mayor of Buffalo, governor of New York, and later president. Frederick W. Cleveland moved from Sharon, Connecticut, to Michigan, and spent the rest of his life at Ypsilanti. His business was chiefly dealing in real estate. His daughter Susan was one of two children, the other being Mrs. C. C. Hoyt of St. Paul. Mrs. Susan Sleight was born August 2, 1850, and died at Ann Arbor, Michigan, in 1913. Her children were: Frederick S.; John Henry, of Tappan, North Dakota; Carrie Eugene, wife of O. M. Wismer, an attorney at Detroit; and May Elizabeth, wife of P. B. Harding, a furniture merchant at Ann Arbor.

Frederick S. Sleight was in his seventh year when his parents moved out to Ellendale, North Dakota, where he lived to the age of sixteen. He acquired a high school education, and in 1902 graduated with the degree Bachelor of Science in Agriculture from the Agricultural College at Fargo. The following two years he remained with the State Agricultural Department, establishing state experimental schools. He then took up farming for himself in Kidder County, North Dakota, and operated a grain and stock farm along scientific lines. His success was not altogether favorable in that arid country, but he persisted until 1908, and since then has followed business lines.

He was a merchant at Tower City, North Dakota, until the automobile rose to a high tide of popularity. For the next three years he covered the Dakotas as a traveling salesman for Moore Brothers of Fargo. Leaving the road, he was connected with the bank of New England, North Dakota, for a year, and then came out to Montana in 1913.

He first located at Redstone in March, 1913, was appointed United States commissioner and was one of the first business men in the life of the village. He handled lands and also built and operated the first garage in Redstone. In March, 1916, he removed to Froid, and has since been associated with Sidney Dorothy in the Froid Auto & Oil Company. This firm has also built up an electric business, and in addition Mr. Sleight is indulging his former activities as a grain raiser and farmer on a modest scale. He owns the lands which he operates.

Mr. Sleight cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley. He is affiliated with the lodge of Masons at Culbertson and has been secretary of the Odd Fellows' Lodge at Froid since it was organized. He was a member of the local draft board during the war and did a good citizen's part in behalf of the various patriotic causes.

December 31, 1902, at Chaffee, North Dakota, he married Miss Myrtle A. Archbold, who was born at Ionia, Michigan, June 27, 1880, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Thursk) Archbold. Her parents were natives of England and her father became a homesteader in Brown County, South Dakota, and is now living at Pingree, North Dakota. Mrs. Sleight was the second of four children, the others being residents of North Dakota, Frank of Fargo, John of Chaffee, and Ida, Mrs. J. C. Akin, of Pingree. Mr. and Mrs. Sleight are the parents of six children, named Stephen J., Jesse H., Caryl, Elizabeth May, Frederick A. and Beryl Idabel.

JOHN C. DWYER, the county clerk and recorder of Roosevelt County, belongs to the older generation of Montanans. He has lived both the intensive and extensive life of the plainsman and knew this region nearly forty years ago, when the great buffalo herds, other wild game and Indians gave a grudging consent to the occupancy and use of the land by the cattle outfits. Through all the years he has been one of the stout, upstanding characters over a large region in both Eastern Montana and the Dakotas.

Apparently John C. Dwyer had the pioneer impulse born in him, and from his earliest years he craved the free life of adventure and experiences in the far reaches of country where men are only an incident to nature's works. He was born at Dayton, Ohio, December 19, 1863, and his family is a very prominent one in that Ohio city. His father is the venerable Dennis Dwyer who came to the United States as a youth from Tipperary, Ireland, about 1848. After a short period of rambling through Iowa and Illinois he located at Dayton, where he is one of the oldest residents. He learned the trade of cabinet maker, and while working at it studied law and after his admission to the bar was elected judge of court and spent twenty-seven years on the bench. For a number of years he has been a prominent capitalist and promoter. He was promoter of the enterprise which resulted in the building of an interurban railway between Dayton and Cincinnati. He also formed a company and as its head drilled the first gas well opened in the St. Mary's field, the gas being piped to Dayton. He still has interests in interurban lines and electric light plants in Texas, Kansas and Ohio. Dennis Dwyer is a familiar figure at Dayton today, although ninety years of age, and would regard it as an affront to offer him a walking stick. He has always been a democrat and was engaged in the duties of an office during the Civil war. He has been a devout Catholic and is a member of the Knights of Columbus.

At Richmond, Virginia, Dennis Dwyer married Mary Childs, daughter of John Childs. She died in 1868, mother of the following children: George, who was killed while a passenger conductor in Mexico; Nettie, widow of Webster Corse, of Dayton; John C.; Katie, living with her father at Dayton; and Albert J., a Dayton lawyer.

John C. Dwyer lived at Dayton to the age of sixteen and acquired his education there. Even during his school days he became restive and wanted to see the world. His father evidently sympathized with or at least appreciated his attitude, and volunteered to pay his way to any point "as far as the railroad went." Accepting the offer, he journeyed to Texas, as far as Baxter Springs of that state. But he was soon dissatisfied with the southwest and returned home. His next tour of adventure was made to Bismarck, North Dakota, then a frontier town and the terminus of the Great Northern Railway. From Bismarck he came on west to the Little Missouri, reaching Medora in 1881. While he has gone in and out of Montana a number of times, his residence has been permanent in the state for more than twenty years, and most of his connections have been as a rancher in the region of Roosevelt County. He was familiar with the Little Missouri country and with Medora and its early history in the days of Roosevelt, Marquis DeMores and the Ferrises. Colonel Roosevelt did not go into that region until several years after Mr. Dwyer. The fame of the place then known as Little Missouri was made by others. The town name was changed to Medora in honor of Medora von Hoffman, the wife of Marquis DeMores, and its chief history was made following the change in name. Mr. Dwyer came to know Colonel Roosevelt personally, though he was not connected with any of his cowboy enterprises. He also knew the plainsmen Johnny Goodall and Sid Wills, strong and unique characters of the Little Missouri country. Another pioneer acquaintance was Vic Smith, the buffalo hunter and guide, who spent his vigorous days on duty around Medora.

After a brief stay at Medora Mr. Dwyer returned to Bismarck, where he was joined by his father, who secured for him a bunch of horses. These were taken to Long Lake Creek, where the son engaged in the horse business until 1886. Then leaving his own ranch he came into Montana and at Glendive was employed as a ranch hand for Colonel Hodson, remaining there through the hard winter of 1887. Returning to Long Lake Creek, and rounding up his horses, he took them to the mouth of the Little Missouri and began ranging them around Fort Berthold. That was his general headquarters until 1895. By that time horses had practically no market, and he sold out his interests and moved into the eastern part of Montana, resuming here his business as a rancher with horses and cattle. His ranch was sixteen miles northeast of Bainville. As the farmers began crowding him he sold his stock and removing to Bainville engaged in the land business. He still maintains an open office as the John C. Dwyer Company, though most of his time is taken up with his duties as a public official at Mondak.

Mr. Dwyer can paint a very accurate picture of this section of Montana thirty-five or forty years ago. The plains were still crowded with buffalo, while other big game consisted of the brown bear of the Little Missouri, the mountain lion, elk and deer. Strange to say Mr. Dwyer never killed a buffalo, though he did some trapping of the fur-bearing animals such as beaver, otter and mink. Mr. Dwyer says the Indians were never formally on the warpath in his experience, though many of them decked in war paint traversed the region and would willingly have committed mischief if they could have done so without trouble to themselves. Mr. Dwyer encountered Indians in an ugly mood only once, and then by quick action with his six-shooter drove them off and protected himself and a skiffload of provisions of which he was in charge.

Mr. Dwyer is still interested in farming and is a modest stockman with his holdings near Bainville. He has made a study of the oil and gas resources of Montana, and his accumulations of works on the subjects of oil and gas give him perhaps the best library on that subject in the state. Thirty years ago he predicted that Montana would yield oil in commercial quantities, and his forecast is being made good by recent discoveries at Roundup and elsewhere. He is a member of the Pioneer Oil & Gas Company of Montana, which is now sinking a well at Williston to test that region for oil, and also of the Midwest Oil and Refining Company, which is testing the dome at Poplar.

Mr. Dwyer cast his first vote at Bismarck during territorial days. He also voted in the first national election in that state, supporting Mr. Cleveland in 1892. He missed his vote in 1896 and in 1900 and in 1904 gave his hearty support to Colonel Roosevelt. At the beginning of the Spanish-American war Mr. Roosevelt had written John C. Dwyer requesting that the latter raise a company for the Rough Rider Regiment. The time allowed did not permit Mr. Dwyer to meet the request, though he did raise a company of men from Eastern Montana and Western North Dakota, and they rendezvoused at Williston and were ordered to Fargo, where they remained until disbanded.

It was Mr. Dwyer's pioneer acquaintance with the region and his recognized personal ability and integrity that caused his name to be put into the bill creating Roosevelt County in connection with the office he now holds.

At Riblake, Wisconsin, December 22, 1914, Mr. Dwyer married Mrs. Lillie A. Merrill, who is one of the nine children of Joseph and Sophie Yell. Her father was a native of France and spent his active life as a farmer at Stetsonville, Wisconsin. Mrs. Dwyer was educated in the common schools, graduated as a nurse in the Twin Cities, and in 1892 went out to Fort Buford as a Government nurse. While there she became the wife of Horace F. Merrill, a rancher. By that union she has a son, Horace Merrill, who was in the United States Marines and saw overseas duty during the World war. Mr. and Mrs. Dwyer have an adopted daughter, Helen.

David Jasper Bedford. While his interests as a stockman in Eastern Montana have been centered around Medicine Lake for twenty years, making him a pioneer in that section, Mr. Bedford has a much more generous claim to a position among the pioneers of the older Montana, having lived in the territory and state for upwards of half a century. He is a veteran stockman and rancher. His chief business has been running livestock over the range, and as most of his years of usefulness have been spent in that industry he has never taken decidedly to the newer work of farming.

Mr. Bedford was born in Hancock County, Illinois, May 14, 1848. His grandfather was a native of Wales emigrated to Canada at a very early time, during the eighteenth century, and spent fourteen years of his life as a prisoner and captive among hostile Indians. He became a farmer, and reared a family of about fourteen children, the youngest being David, father of David J. David Bedford was born on the River Thames in Canada about 1800. He was a boy when the battle of the Thames was fought within six miles of his home, where old Chief Tecumseh was killed during the War of 1812. He remembered seeing General Harrison's army pass by his father's house. He grew up in a time when it was hardly possible to secure an education from schools, and he married his first wife in Canada. He had a son, Robert, by that union. Leaving Canada he settled in Illinois, and married Mrs. Mary Knapp at Peoria. He lived in that section of Illinois for a time, and about 1840 moved to Western Illinois, to a farm in Hancock County. He spent his last years near Carthage, where he died in 1886. He and his wife had three children: David J., Jane, a resident of Idaho, and Mrs. Mary McArthur, of Medicine Lake, Montana.

Mrs. Mary Bedford, the mother of these children, was a very remarkable woman, and played a pioneer's part in the history of Montana. She was born near Zanesville, Ohio, March 4, 1820. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Moffett, were natives of Ireland, and her father was a participant in the Irish rebellion of 1798. They were of the Protestant faith. On coming to the United States they established their home in Ohio, where they spent the rest of their days on a farm. Mary Moffett, youngest of her parents' children, had very little opportunity to attend school, since she grew up in the days of log cabins, hard cider and maple molasses. Her first husband was Jerome Knapp, and by that marriage was born a son, Lauren B. Knapp, who also became a pioneer of Montana.

Lauren B. Knapp came to Montana at the age of twenty-three, and was identified with Alder Gulch when that was one of the chief centers of mining activities. He developed a mining claim, but abandoned the business about 1870 and turned his attention to farming in Missouri Valley, in Jefferson Valley and in Judith Basin, where the last years of his active life were spent. Becoming enfeebled, he returned to Illinois and died unmarried at Stillwell, that state, in February, 1913.

David J. Bedford grew up in Illinois, attended some of the primitive schools of that state, and had very ordinary advantages. In April, 1864, when he was sixteen years of age, he joined Company K of the One Hundred and Thirty-third Illinois Infantry under Captain Summers and Colonel Moore, and spent his four months in the army on duty at Rock Island, being discharged without reaching the front. He then resumed his place on the home farm, and continued in that way until he came to Montana in 1873.

Mr. Bedford and his mother and his sister started West from Quincy, Adams County, Illinois. They traveled by railway as far as Corinne, Utah, from which point many of the early settlers in Montana diverged, completing the journey by wagon. The Bedfords came to Montana when mining was the chief industry and stock raising a good second. They located near old Centerville in the Missouri Valley, at what is now the City of Townsend. Mrs. Bedford was fifty-three years of age when she came to Montana and was in a way a chaperon to her children. She became an active factor in the affairs of several communities and even homesteaded and proved up the claim where her son David Jasper now lives. She was his companion and housekeeper until her death at Medicine Lake in November, 1916. During thirty years she had witnessed many changes in Montana social, business and industrial life, and went through the frontier experiences common to early settlers. She saw the wild man in paint and feathers, and in her life she had had many experiences and trials common to the humble poor. She possessed a good memory of past events and incidents, and it was a pleasure to visit with her and listen to the stories of early Montana days.

After two years at old Centerville in the Missouri Valley the Bedfords moved to Jefferson County, at Radersburg, where David bought land and ran his stock until 1882. He then moved to the Judith Basin, continuing in the stock business. The family home was about twenty miles from Lewistown. His stock had access to a wide range of country now divided among wheat fields. In 1899 the Bedfords drove their stock into Eastern Montana, to Valley County, and located near the site of old Medicine Lake.

When asked what was in this country before he came Mr. Bedford replied "mosquitoes." He was the first to build a house north of Culbertson, the house which has sheltered him ever since. In the absence of government surveys he was a squatter, and subsequently filed on a desert claim included in his present ranch. He developed his stock industry here, and, as noted above, has never taken kindly to the business of actual farming. While in the Judith Basin his stock brand was the "row lock," and after coming to Sheridan County he recorded the brand "Y bar lazy M." The principal reduction in his stock raising came in the fall of 1919, on account of the shortage of feed.

Mr. Bedford is one of the stockholders of the Farmers Elevator and owns a rooming house in that town. As an old soldier he has been identified with the republican party, casting his first presidential vote for General Grant in 1872. The only order he ever joined is the Grand Army, and while not a member of any church he believes in them and all other things which contribute to the betterment of a community.

Mr. Bedford has never married. He lived with his mother and for her until she passed away, and was then too old to think of forming an alliance and establishing a different home. His niece, Mrs. Etta Polson, formerly Miss Etta McArthur, has lived in his home for twenty-six years. Her husband, Albert Polson, has been associated with Mr. Bedford in ranching for twelve years. Mr. and Mrs. Polson have a son, whom they named in honor of Mr. Bedford, David Jasper.

DANIEL CHARLES KENYON. Blaine County has no more representative man and good citizen than Daniel Charles Kenyon of Chinook, who after an exceptionally successful career along several lines has entered the profession of law, and has achieved even more noteworthy results in this calling than before. He has served in several important public offices, including that of mayor of his city, and in every way has proven himself most able and enterprising.

The birth of Daniel Charles Kenyon took place in Orleans County, New York, March 21, 1868, and he is a son of Charles W. Kenyon, also a native of Orleans County, New York, where the family was established many years ago by Samuel Kenyon, who came to the Empire State from Rhode Island. He marreid Anna Eggleston, and one of their sons married Julia Chaffee and became the father of Charles Kenyon. The Kenyons, Egglestons and Chaffees all were established in the American colonies at an early day and had representatives in the Revolutionary war. Charles Kenyon was one in the family of five sons and six daughters born to his parents, and was the third son.

During the war between the North and the South Charles Kenyon enlisted in the Union army in 1862, in the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, but was later transferred to the Twenty-fifth New York Infantry, and served until the close of the war, as corporal of his regiment. He was wounded at the battle of Chancellorsville and taken prisoner. After a period of confinement in Libby Prison he was exchanged, and it was while he was home on a furlough that General Lee surrendered. Following the close of the war he connected himself with the Grand Army of the Republic, and was a member of Tomah Post, Tomah, Wisconsin. He always voted the republican ticket, was postmaster of Tunnel City for several years, and also held the offices of justice of the peace and township assessor. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Charles Kenyon was married to Adelaide F. Purdy, a daughter of Daniel C. Purdy, and they had the following children: Louie A., who is a resident of Tomah, Wisconsin; Daniel Charles, whose name heads this review; Cora, who is the wife of William Heser, of Tomah, Wisconsin; and Edward W., who is a resident of Unity, Wisconsin.

When he was four years old Daniel C. Kenyon was brought as far west as Greenfield, Monroe County, Wisconsin, and spent his youth up to his twenty-second birthday on the farm, acquiring during this time a public school education, completing it in the Sparta High School. While he was attending school Mr. Kenyon was preparing for a business career by learning telegraphy from an old telegrapher named S. P. James, who was at Tunnel City, Wisconsin, so that when he left the farm he was able to secure a position as station agent and telegraph operator for the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad at Dexterville, Wisconsin. He remained there for three years, and at Junction City, Wisconsin, for five years. Failing health then forced him to enter another field, and for some months he was a solicitor for life insurance.

In May, 1898, he came to Montana and entered the service of the Great Northern Railroad at Malta, but six months later he left the employ of the road to become proprietor of the Malta House, and conducted it for wo years. On January 1, 1900, Mr. Kenyon bought the Malta Enterprise and edited it for over three years. In the meanwhile he had entered a homestead near Malta, and occupied it while he was in newspaper work, so he was able to prove it up. Selling his paper Mr. Kenyon returned to the service of the railroad, and after a short time in the station at Malta he was made relief agent and worked all over this division. In the fall of 1906 he was offered and accepted the position of traveling freight agent of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, in the live stock business in the territory of the Great Northern Company of this region. With the closing of his first season, Mr. Kenyon went to Spokane, Washington, and for nearly a year was identified with the real estate business of that city. Returning to Montana, he re-entered the service of the Great Northern Railroad as station agent at Dodson, and held that position for four years, and he was also agent for the Ruby Gulch Mining Company, handling its business at Dodson in the matter of gold bullion shipments.

When the County of Blaine was created in 1912 Mr. Kenyon was elected its first treasurer, and he was elected again in 1913, serving two terms. Brought up a republican, he followed Colonel Roosevelt in 1912 into the progressive branch of that party, and as such was elected to office. While he was serving as county treasurer he studied law, and on July 5, 1915, was admitted to the bar at Helena, Montana, by the Supreme Court of the state.

In that same year Mr. Kenyon opened an office as United States land commissioner and began the practice of his profession. His first district court case was in defense of a Turk, George Tom, charged with forgery, and he won it, although there was no doubt of the guilt of his client. He has carried on a general practice and has never had a partner.

In 1916 Mr. Kenyon was elected mayor of Chinook, and succeeded B. F. O'Neal. He was re-elected, and during the time he was in office street improvements and the liquidation of some water works bonds formed the principal achievements of his administrations. Had it not been for the calls to the people for contributions to the war activities he would doubtless have pursued a more aggressive policy with reference to public improvements, but realized that it was more patriotic to economize in every way, both in labor and money. Personally he did his full part in war work, serving on the Legal Advisory Board, was a Red Cross director, and was appointed a member of the committee in charge of the Liberty Bond sales. He became one of the Four Minute speakers of the county, belonged to the American Council of Defense and was fuel administrator for Blaine County.

On December 14, 1896, Mr. Kenyon was married at Stevens Point, Wisconsin, to Miss Anna Elizabeth Scott, who was born at Stevens Point in 1872. After graduating from the high school there she became a teacher and taught school for six years in Portage County, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon have the following children: Lloyd Scott, who is assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Chinook; Grace, who is attending Chinook High School; and Dorothy Ann, who is the youngest. Lloyd Scott Kenyon was the first young man to enlist at Chinook for service during the great war, going into Company L, Second Montana Infantry, immediately following the entry of this country into the conflict. He was trained at Fort Harrison, Helena, and sailed for France on the transport Leviathan in December, 1917, as a member of the One Hundred and Sixty-third Regiment, American Expeditionary Forces, and was at Bordeaux, France. He was made corporal of his company, then sergeant, and finally sergeant major. His service abroad consisted of training soldiers around Mont Richard.

Mr. Kenyon belongs to Malta Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Malta Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is junior warden. He also is a member of Malta Chapter, Royal Arch Masons. A man of unusual capabilities, Mr. Kenyon has known how to make use of them and in developing them has made himself a more valued member of society, as well as a producer of additional income. Having been so intimately connected with the history of Blaine County, he is naturally intensely interested in its further growth and development and can always be depended upon to give his full support to it and its well being.

JAMES Q. LASWELL. Whatever may be the real cause, about which political economists and philanthropists and social workers widely differ, in every community there exist certain individuals so determined on lawlessness that restraint is necessary in order to protect the innocent. Hence laws have to be formulated and officers elected to carry them out, and in the choice of these officers lies in great part the efficacy of the laws. This is particularly true in the selection of the men to fill the dangerous and responsible office of sheriff of a county, and comparatively few men possess every desirable requirement for such a position. Physical strength and endurance must be combined with calm judgment, a high order of personal courage, a keen intellect and dexterity and adroitness that will enable him to meet any possible advantage taken by the lawless, with which class much of his duty is concerned. Thus endowed is James Q. Laswell, sheriff of Blaine County.

Sheriff Laswell was born at Berryville, Arkansas, February 14, 1875, a son of Elijah Laswell, born in Indiana. Early in life Elijah Laswell was a school-teacher, but later in life became a farmer, and went into Carroll County, Arkansas, and died on his farm at Berryville when he was about sixty years of age. He married Elizabeth Baker, and they had the following children: Samuel H., who lives in Brown County, Texas; Lentie, who married

B. S. Tate of Water Valley, Texas; William A., who is a resident of Kalispell, Montana; and James Q., who was the youngest born. After the death of his first wife Elijah Laswell was again married, and by this union had a daughter, Mertha E., who is married and lives near Fort Smith, Arkansas.

Only three years old when he lost his mother, Sheriff Laswell was entirely orphaned two years later when his father died, and when he was seven years old he was taken to Texas by his brother Samuel and was reared in that state. He never went to school further than the fourth grade, and he began to be self-supporting when only fourteen years old.

At that youthful age James Q. Laswell went to work as a farm hand in Fannin County, Texas. Cotton was the staple crop of that region, and wages ranged from $9 to $20 per month, and he received the lower one. Remaining there until after he reached his majority, Mr. Laswell then sought better opportunities and went to the Choctaw and Chickasaw country of Oklahoma, and from there into Indian Territory. For a time he worked around Coalgate and Lehigh as a ranch hand, and then returned to Texas, and back again to Indian Territory for several years. During this period he was married, but lost his wife soon afterward and then went into Pottawatomie County, Indian Territory, rented land and farmed it for a time. Subsequently he bought a farm near Chouteau, that state, but in the winter of 1905 sold his substantial interests and came to Montana.

Upon his arrival in this state Mr. Laswell established his home at Harlem, and for a time was a laborer about the village, subsequently becoming a ranch hand on a sheep ranch. Mr. Laswell then went into the draying business, and conducted it until the village was incorporated, when he was made its first marshal, assuming the duties of that office in October, 1910.

In August, 1911, he frustrated an attempt of three robbers to hold up the First National Bank of Harlem in broad daylight. Quoting from the Chinook Opinion on his action, we have the following:

"Three men rode into Harlem from the South Monday morning. They dismounted at the side of the First National Bank, where they were practically unobserved. Two of them went in while the third man stayed and held the horses. While inside one of the men held up the cashier and the bookkeeper, Messrs. Hatch and Rassmussen, with a gun, while the other proceeded to the office of attorney Collins, who has rooms on the same floor, and compelled him and another gentleman to line up with the others. While one of the men held the four with his gun, the other emptied the till. He had laid his gun on the floor while doing the work, but returned and picked up the gun and in so doing discharged the weapon accidentally. He rushed into the vault and looted it of the gold and paper money to the amount of $8,000, placed it in a sack and started out of the vault. Marshal Laswell was across the street in front of the New England Hotel, and, hearing the shot, he started over to investigate. He entered the bank at the door leading into Collins' office, and as he got near the vault door he heard steps inside, and was waiting for the robber when he came out. The robber pulled his gun and began action, but the Marshal's gun spoke first and sent a bullet through his body, which passed through his heart and dropped the man.

"The smoke of both guns obstructed the view of the Marshal so that he had to duck to see what the robber was doing, and, under the smoke of battle, he saw the bandit preparing to continue the fight and he sent other bullets into him and finished him without any injury to himself. The robber holding the people in front saw his pal go down in front of the vault door, fired a shot or two toward Laswell, and then fled toward the horses, and the two live ones fled the town without further casualties.

"When the Marshal fired his last shot and was satisfied that the robber was lifeless, he came out the door he had entered the bank and came up the walk toward the front loading his pistol. At the corner of the bank he met the cashier, who threw his gun into his face, believing him to be one of the robbers, and as the Marshal ducked he slipped and rolled off the sidewalk, and may thus have escaped the vengeance of the gun in the hands of the cashier."

When the inquest was held over the body of the slain bandit nothing was found by way of identification. Some time later the bandit who had held the officials of the bank lined up was captured, a jury convicted him and sent him to the penitentiary, but the third one was never caught.

When Mr. Laswell retired from the marshal's office in October, 1912, he found that the fame of his bravery and coolness had gone over the state, and he was appointed a guard at the penitentiary at Deer Lodge, and served there for two years. In January, 1915, he was appointed under sheriff by James Buckley, and served as such during the four years of Mr. Buckley's administration, and was the logical candidate of the democratic party for the office of sheriff, and was elected by a majority of over 400.

Sheriff Laswell took over the responsibilities of his office at the beginning of the nation-wide prohibition era, and his administration so far has been marked by nothing more important than the serving of papers in local jurisprudence. He feels that the effects of the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment have been very beneficial, for it has tended to make pacific the locality and to prevent the occurrence of many disturbances which used to be of almost daily happening.

Sheriff Laswell was married to the present Mrs. Laswell at Wanette, Oklahoma, in 1903, she having been Miss Julia Ann West, a daughter of W. I. West, and a native of Arkansas, where she was born in 1877. She is one of seven daughters and two sons born to her parents, and is the only one of them living in Montana. Sheriff and Mrs. Laswell have the following children: Cecil E., Pearl L. and Beulah.

During the World war Sheriff Laswell was chairman of the local selective service board, and was especially active in looking after the propaganda-promoters and the rounding up of "slackers," and he spent many hundreds of gallons of "gas" in the performance of this duty alone.

ALBERT C. BERRY. There are several distinct periods in the history of Montana, the opening up of the public domain overthrowing the supremacy of the state as a cattle producing commonwealth, but when the readjustment had taken place the new era was found to bring to it just as much distinction. Some of the men who are now towering figures in the agricultural life of the state lived here in the days when the open range afforded unlimited pasturage to great herds of cattle, and took part in the transformation of these ranges into individual ranches. One of them is Albert C. Berry, who has been associated with the Bebee locality of Custer County since 1908 and Montana since 1893, progressing during the more than twenty-six years he has been in the state from cowboy to owner of a 7,000-acre ranch and cattleman of state-wide reputation.

Albert C. Berry was born at Saco, Maine, July 10, 1865, a son of Seth and Ellen (Rhodes) Berry, both of whom were born, reared, married and died at Saco, Maine, he passing away at the age of eighty-seven years and his wife when seventy-nine. Their children to reach maturity were as follows: John, who lives at Saco, Maine; Lucy, who is the wife of Alonzo Kimball, of Saco, Maine; Seth, who was killed by the caving in of a gravel pit in which he was working; David, who also lives at Saco; Richard, who is a machinist of Saco; Abbie, who married Albert Swett, of Saco; Albert C., whose name heads this review; and William, who is engaged in farming at Saco. Seth Berry was a democrat, but aside from exercising his right of suffrage took no part in politics. All of his life he was engaged in farming on a small scale.

Albert C. Berry grew up at Saco, and obtained a limited education in its schools. Opportunities were few in that neighborhood and the ambitious lad found that the best he could do was chopping cordwood in the woods or farm work, for which he received wages ranging from $8 to $15 per month. This outlook so discouraged him that he determined to strike out into a broader field, and borrowing the necessary amount of money for the trip from a friend who had already gone west to River Bend, Colorado, where he owned a ranch, he joined him and worked out his indebtedness as a cowboy. This ranch was eighty-five miles east of Denver, and he remained on it until he was out of debt, and then went to what is now the "O W" Ranch of Sheridan, Wyoming, on the Hangingwoman. After a year there as a cowboy Mr. Berry, who was then twenty-five years old, came to Montana and went to work for Charley Daly, herding sheep along the Little Pumpkin, being thus engaged for two and one-half years. He then spent a winter at Vickers Sawmill on Greenleaf Creek, driving a team and hauling logs of pine from the mountains surrounding the mill. The next spring he became a shepherd for George Horkan, and for fourteen months renewed his acquaintance with the sheep wagon. During all of this period of hard work Mr. Berry saved his earnings and when he left Mr. Horkan he was able to buy a few head of cattle and began running them on Lost Soldier Creek, squatting on land there on which he erected a log shack shelter. At the beginning his bunch of cattle numbered but eighty-five, and he ran them on the open range under the brand capital "C" on the left shoulder. After a few years in that region he disposed of his improvements and changed his location to Big Pumpkin Creek in the vicinity of Bebee, buying the Clarence Bebee entry, deeded land and improvements, and the old log shacks now standing served him as a home and for other purposes during the subsequent four years. He then dropped down the creek and entered 160 acres of land, built a log house and subsequently proved up his claim. This log house he ultimately moved to Bebee and put it at the site of the road ranch of Bebee, and it is now the chicken coop of the Bebee ranch. After living in it for four years Mr. Berry erected on his present site, 1½ miles below Bebee, his handsome and modern seven-room frame house, with full basement and laundry-room, bathroom and hot and cold water, which is lighted by the Main system of electric light. About this home he has developed a ranch of 7,000 acres which he uses for the production of beef with range cattle. Having sold his pioneer brand, Mr. Berry is using the AP brand on the left ribs. He became a shipper early in his career as a cattle grower and is in the zenith of his business life in this industry. His stock is graded up much beyond that of the pioneer cattle he handled, and the blooded Whiteface males are introduced into his herd every year. His force of men varies from two to five, with extra help in the house during the heavy work of the summer.

In addition to his ranch Mr. Berry has invested capital in the Miles City Flouring Company, of which he is a director; is a stockholder of the Miles City National Bank, of which at one time he was a director; and he is also a stockholder of the Billings Mortgage and Loan Association. At one time Mr. Berry invested in sheep, and for three years was in this business on Pumpkin Creek, but hard winters and lack of winter grain brought about losses which so discouraged him that he abandoned that industry and centered his attention on raising cattle, his present success proving the wisdom of his action, although no doubt if he had gone into the business of raising sheep as extensively as he has that of raising cattle he would have prospered, for he is a man who accomplishes things when he sets his mind to it.

On March 27, 1897, Albert C. Berry was united in marriage with Miss Eva Burns, of Custer County, Montana, a daughter of Mrs. Mary (Kelley) Burns. The children in the Burns family were as follows: Alexander, John, Samuel, Neal, Mrs. Jennie Harvey and Mrs. Berry, and she was born at Latrobe, Pennsylvania, September 8, 1865, where her girlhood was spent, and where she obtained a common school education. Mr. and Mrs. Berry have no children of their own, but have adopted a son, Albert, now six years old, to whom they are giving the love and devotion that would have been accorded offspring had such been vouchsafed them. Under their fostering care the little lad will receive a training that will fit him for any position in life to which he may be called. Mr. Berry cast his vote in Colorado for republican candidates, and has followed this custom ever since, but aside from voting, like his father, does not participate in public matters. His record is one deserving of more than offhand mention, for he has prospered more than the usual ranchman, and yet all of his success has come of his own effort. It is a far cry from cowboy to ranchman, and yet Mr. Berry has thus risen, and has made his ranch and brand known all over this part of the West.

William Skillen is numbered among the Montana pioneers who came into the state as a soldier and after leaving the army remained in the commonwealth as a settler. He was drawn into the locality of the Little Rockies by the gold excitement of that locality in 1884, and was a placer miner there for three years, years that were profitably spent.

History relates that the bandit element of the North Moccasin country and of the adjacent localities was the indirect cause of the discovery of gold in the Little Rockies. Just prior to this discovery a number of thieves were dispatched by the aroused and exasperated citizens of the genuine type, and as Dutch Lewis had harbored this bad element about his ranch he felt himself unsafe because of the recent action of the vigilanters and left his ranch and went into the Little Rockies, where with Pike Landusky and Frank Aldrich he began prospecting the gulches for gold. They sifted the sands of the creek in what they dubbed Alder Gulch, and the sands appeared to be fabulously rich. Pike Landusky carried the news to North Moccasin and Maiden, and a party was formed at North Moccasin and outfitted at once for a stampede into the new diggings, William Skillen being among the number.

Everywhere the news of the find spread people left their work and made a rush for the spot, and by the following fall about 2,000 people were scratching and panning for gold over the mountains. The heaviest gold find was at the mouth of Alder Gulch, on the high rim, by Nigger Shelby, and quite a quantity of ore was taken out. The richest gold find in the region was made by William Skillen in Rock Creek, running $17 an ounce and $83 plus for the largest nugget found. The rich nugget which he panned was sold for $199. Pike Landusky discovered quartz gold in Montana Gulch, and Bob Orman discovered gold in the August Mine.

Mr. Skillen remained in the locality until the easy diggings had been worked, and then turned in the direction of something less exciting and more reliable as a reward for his labor, thus coming over to Milk River and joining Tom O'Hanlon. The Thomas O'Hanlon Company store was situated just across the river from the home of Mr. Skillen, and the ruins of this pioneer store are yet standing. Mr. Skillen subsequently removed with the store to Chinook, and continued with the firm there until 1893, when he built a livery barn and embarked in that business. He was the second liveryman in the town, getting into the field when that business was good and continuing it until 1899, when he left Chinook and its affairs and in 1900 moved to his ranch 1½ miles southwest of the city, where he has since devoted himself to stock raising and hay and grain farming. This tract of land is the homestead which he entered the year he came out of Chinook, and he has developed a ranch of a half section.

Mr. Skillen was born in Belfast, Ireland, July 9, 1859, and in the following year was brought to the United States by his parents, who established their home in the City of New York. In that metropolis the lad grew to mature years, but the education he acquired came through his own efforts later on and not as a student in school. His early years were given to labor before he entered the army, and its rewards went into the family treasury. The old home which he left when he enrolled as a soldier for the West has never been visited, and he has never been out of Montana save on a short journey since he came into the state.

His father was Andrew Skillen and his mother Maria McGimpsey, and he was the older of their two children and the only one to grow to years of maturity. Andrew Skillen showed his intense patriotism for the United States soon after he reached its shores by joining the army and helping to fight the battles for the preservation of the Union. He served in the army three years, was badly wounded, and suffered ever afterward from the effects of his wounds and his service. His wife died while he was in the army, and he survived until 1908, when he passed away at the age of seventy-two years.

As above noted, William Skillen came to Montana with the army. He was a member of Troop H, Second United States Cavalry, and was sent here from the City of New York as a recruit. He joined the command at Fort Keogh in the spring of 1879, this date marking his entry into the then Territory of Montana. He came up the Missouri River from Bismarck, North Dakota, then the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and thence up the Yellowstone to Miles City, then in its infancy, when the business centered about the Hubbell Place, who, with the old Jew Kahn, were the pioneer traders of the locality.

Taking up his duties as a private, Mr. Skillen served at that fort, also at Fort Custer, Fort Ellis and Fort Assinaboine, thence back to Fort Custer, and was discharged there in 1884. He saw field service every year of his connection with the army against the Sioux and other tribes troubling the settlements, but no pitched battles were fought during the time.

On leaving the army Mr. Skillen went to work with the government Indian allotters who allotted homesteads to the Crow Indians on their reservation, and helped in that work during the summer of 1884. In the following fall he went into the Moccasin Mountains and engaged in logging for the North Moccasin saw mill people, and while there stampeded with others to the Little Rockies and became one of the early miners of that region.

Mr. Skillen began his political career as a voter in Montana, his first presidential ballot having been cast in 1892, and it went to the republican candidate Benjamin Harrison. He has served as deputy sheriff at times, under Sheriff O'Neal, Sheriff Tom Clarey and Sheriff McLaughlin, and at that time Chouteau County extended over this entire region. Mr. Skillen's only fraternal connection is with the Modern Woodmen.

At Chinook, Montana, in the spring of 1896, he was married to Miss Mary E. Kellerman, who was born in Missouri and came to Montana in 1893. She died in October, 1911, the mother of four children: Mima, who is in training in Butte as a Red Cross nurse, Andrew, Minnie and William, Jr.

JOHN R. PROSSER. To John R. Prosser belongs the distinction of being one of the early pioneers of Montana, a liveryman of Chinook in the early days, and one who has been identified with what is now Blaine County since 1893. The Chinook region at that time was only a cow pasture and occupied by several large ranchers. The region had just been thrown open to settlement, and it had previously formed a part of the Grosventre and Assiniboine reservations. This was also about the beginning of the sheep industry in this locality, but Mr. Prosser chose the vocation of horse raising.

He was born near Penyan, New York, August 26, 1846, and his childhood was spent on a farm there and he was instructed in the country schools. He was a son of David and Margaret (Youngs) Prosser, the mother a daughter of Benjamin and Sallie (Hedges) Youngs. The first American ancestor of the Prosser family came to the United States from Wales, and was the grandfather of John R. Prosser, the Montana pioneer and business man. He settled at Dresden, New York, and died there in early life. His sons were David, Andrew and Albert, twins, and Lewis. The last named was killed in the battle of Chickamauga as a Union soldier during the Civil war. There were no daughters in this family.

David Prosser spent his life chiefly as a farmer. His part in community affairs was a modest one, he affiliated with the democratic party, and was a Master Mason. He died in the year 1904 in Helena, Montana, whither he had come in 1880, and his life's span covered a period of eighty-three years. His widow passed away in Chinook in 1917, when she had attained the age of eighty-nine years. Their children were as follows: Celia, who married Henry Gelder and resides in Chinook; John R., of this review; Horace, whose home is in St. Louis, Missouri; Fred A., a farmer near Chinook; and Mart, the youngest of the children, resides in Helena.

John R. Prosser arrived in what was then the Territory of Montana in December, 1878, when he came by one of the old stage routes through Utah, having left the Union Pacific Railroad at Ogden, and traveling by stage the few hundred miles between that point and Helena, his destination, when he completed a journey of more than 2,000 miles from Gates County, New York, near Penyan. His stage trip was his first experience with the wild and romantic West, and in the stage with him was I. S. G. VanWart, with whom he became acquainted, and who was afterward a man of some note about Helena and now a wealthy citizen in Saskatchewan, Canada.

Mr. Prosser came into Montana to settle and to fashion a career which would be a credit to him as a citizen and contribute to his financial standing. His first employment was as a wood chopper at the Penobscot Mine, and at this labor he believes he earned his first dollar in this state. Soon afterward he bought a ranch in the Prickly Pear Valley, and continued as a farmer there for some fifteen years, his hay ranch and his cattle proving quite remunerative. On leaving there he came to the Milk River country in old Choteau County and purchased a relinquishment near Chinook, which he proved up, improved and utilized as a hay farm until March, 1920, when he disposed of the property. He contributed very substantial buildings to the land and made the place one of the productive farms of the community.

In 1914 Mr. Prosser engaged in the livery and feed business in Chinook, in which he is still engaged. He is a member of the City Council, having held that office for four years, and his political affiliations are with the democratic party.

In Chinook, Montana, in 1904, Mr. Prosser was married to Miss Lottie White, who was born at Black Rock, near Niagara, New York, but came to Montana from Michigan, where she had grown to years of maturity at Bass River and where she had taught school. She was teaching in Montana at the time of her marriage. Mr. Prosser is a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter in Masonry, and also affiliates with the Odd Fellows fraternity.

Fred A. Prosser is numbered among the early developers and pioneers of the Milk River Valley, and since 1889 his home has been in the vicinity of Chinook. He is a brother of John R. Prosser, who is mentioned on other pages of this history, and both were born in Yates County, New York, Fred A. on the 29th of June, 1853. Both were reared amid farm environments, were educated in the neighborhood rural schools, and Fred A. Prosser remained at the parental home until past his majority, beginning then a career as a tenant farmer and continuing as a renter while he remained in the State of New York.

The presence of two brothers in Montana was the prime cause of his becoming interested in the Northwest, and severing the ties of his boyhood, he made the long and tiresome journey into what was then the Territory of Montana and which remained a territory during the first nine years of his residence here. Journeying by rail to Ogden, Utah, he went from there to Beaver Canon over the narrow gauge road through Pocatello, Idaho, and from Beaver Canon the little party went by stage coach, walking or riding as the situation demanded, until reaching their destination at Helena, where they arrived on the 29th day of March, 1889.

Mr. Prosser's first work in Montana was with pick and shovel in the construction of the old Ming Opera House, and subsequently he went into the pine woods of Marysville and engaged in cutting cord wood for the mines, while still later he worked for a couple of months in a placer mine in Lewis and Clark County. Returning then to Helena, he entered the employ of a blacksmith and remained there until the following spring, next worked on his brother's ranch by the month, later was employed as a ranch foreman by the year, and continued as a ranch foreman for two years, at a wage of $599 a year. He and his mother then purchased the same ranch of Black Brothers, known as the old Van Wart Ranch, and he continued in that region until coming to the Milk River country at Chinook.

Establishing himself near Chinook, Mr. Prosser filed on a quarter section of the old Fort Belknap Reservation, the quarter on which he still resides and which he has most substantially improved and successfully cultivated, developing it into one of the best hay and grain farms of the region. His pioneer cabin was constructed of logs, a single room, and there he and his wife and their three children lived until better quarters could be provided. He brought his cattle and horses with him from the West, and continued in the stock business for several years.

During its infancy Mr. Prosser joined the movement for the irrigation of the valley and became interested in the Belknap Ditch Company, which constructed ditches and laterals and did the pioneer work of irrigation here, and he has been a member of the board of directors of the company for many years. The company, however, has since been absorbed by the Milk River Project of the Government and is being operated under Reclamation Service.

During the years of his residence here Mr. Prosser has given of his time to public service. For two and a half years he held the office of county commissioner, having been first appointed to that position by Judge Tatten and then elected, and his colleagues on the board were John Acher and James Clarridge. The attention of this board was given chiefly to road work. During a period of more than twenty years Mr. Prosser served as one of the trustees of the Chinook School. In his political affiliations he is a democrat, the principles which his father also upheld, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Prosser was married at Helena, Montana, September 20, 1884, to Miss Josephine Healy, who was born in Rockford, Illinois, and whose parents lived in the country surrounding Elgin and Carpentersville in that state. Mrs. Prosser came to Montana with the C. J. Broadwater family and settled first at Assiniboine and later at Helena with them, and it was at the latter place she met Mr. Prosser. Her death occurred on the 16th of June, 1910, at the age of fifty-six years. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Prosser: Carrie M., who died as Mrs. Daniel Wolf in Los Angeles, California, leaving four children, Donald, Margaret, Norman and Mildred; and Albert Ray and Agnes May, twins, are the other children of Mr. and Mrs. Prosser. Albert Ray is farming at the old home. He married Florence Benson, and they have four children, Albert, Lester, Mabel, and an infant daughter. Agnes May married Clyde Warrington and died in 1910, without issue.

Andrew Christensen is the present county assessor of Blaine County and a citizen who has been identified with the Chinook locality since 1904. He came to the state in April of that year from Crawford County, Iowa, wither he had gone with his parents when a youth of seventeen years from his native Schleswig.

Mr. Christensen was born near Husum in the old

Danish province of the German Empire, June 2, 1883, and his surroundings during his boyhood was a village community. His father, Jacob Christensen, a farm laborer, was born near Tondern, Province of Schleswig, and was also the son of a laboring man. Jacob Christensen married a Schleswig lady, Catherine Hansen, whose people were of the farmer class and laborers for generations back. Jacob and Catherine Christensen left their native land in 1900, sailing from Hamburg on the steamer Patricia and landed at Hoboken, New Jersey. Continuing their journey to Manning, Iowa, Mr. Christensen was a resident of the Town of Aspinwall until his death. His widow is now a resident of Blaine County, Montana, she having come to this state in 1915.

To Jacob and Catherine Christensen were born the following children: Henry, whose home is in Dexter, Iowa; Carl, who has never left his native Schleswig, Germany; Peteris, a farmer near Zurich, Montana; Andrew, the subject of this review; Guste, who is now Mrs. Strong and a resident of Denver, Colorado; and Amelia, who married Henry Benson, of Clinton, Iowa.

Andrew Christensen continued in school from the age of five to sixteen years, and his work as a child was herding cows and doing something at farm labor. After reaching the United States he became a farmer near Manning, Iowa, and at times was in school learning the English language, doing his last school work at Aspinwall when he had reached the age of twenty years. In the spring of 1904 he came to Montana, and here among strangers he began his career as a ranch hand on the Miller Brothers ranch in the Bear Paw Mountains. His wages were much better than those prevailing in Iowa, an increase for him from $21 to $40 a month, while in the following year he was advanced to $50 a month. On leaving the Miller ranch he began work on the Great Northern Railroad as a train brakeman, but after a year he gave up that work and came to Chinook in 1908. Here he engaged in the real estate business, associating himself subsequently in this work with W. I. Hoover.

Mr. Christensen was first elected to the office of county assessor in November, 1913, and remained therein for six years, now serving his third term. He succeeded Arthur Lewis in the office. While handling real estate Mr. Christensen made it a part of his work to advertise this region of the Northwest, and made trips East with grain samples and with literature setting forth the value of this region to prospective settlers, thus causing many to locate in this country. He also got into communication with the land man of the railroad company, and through him won some favors which also aided him in bringing settlers this way. While still interested in the development of local resources he encouraged the forming of a home company to lease lands and prospect for oil, and is a stockholder in the Blaine County Oil and Development Company. Mr. Christensen has made six assessments of Blaine County, and has witnessed the gradual advancement of property values until instead of a five million dollar valuation the valuation is now double that, as per the old method of listing property. Under this new method the total valuation in 1920 is $28,000,000.

In his political affiliations Mr. Christensen is a democrat, having cast his first presidential vote in Montana, when he supported Judge Parker, this having been before he was legally a citizen of the United States, although he believed in his right to vote owing to the efforts of his father in Iowa to become a naturalized citizen. Andrew Christensen's final papers were given him by Judge Tatten in 1912. In the very next year he was elected to office in Blaine County, a record unusual and difficult to parallel.

Mr. Christensen was married at Great Falls, Montana, May 15, 1913, to Miss Tillie Holm, a daughter of Christ Holm. Mrs. Christensen was born at Pearley, Minnesota, January 31, 1894, and was educated in the public schools of North Dakota. She was the third born in a family of four sons and two daughters. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Christensen, Andrew Curtis, Woodrow Lloyd and Virginia Adaline.

JOHN DAUT. The record of John Daut of Little Powder River, reads like fiction and contains accounts of struggles against adversity and cupidity, the gaining of several fortunes, and the losing of them through no fault of his own, and the final development of a permanent home amid peaceful surroundings. Mr. Daut was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at No. 528 East Girard Avenue, on June 26, 1865, a son of Henry and Julia (Weaver) Daut, both natives of Bavaria, Germany. Upon locating in the City of Brotherly Love, Henry Daut established himself in a confectionery business, but after moving to New Bloomfield, Pennsylvania, he engaged in farming, and there his son John was reared, and there both he and his wife passed away. Their children were as follows: Frank, who died near New Bloomfield; Henry F., who is in the American Railway Supply Company at No. 24 Park Place, New York City; Leonard, who is a saddler and farmer of Harrison, Nebraska, owns a ranch along Jim Creek; John, who was the next in order of birth; Anna B., who is the wife of Robert R. Thebes, of New Bloomfield; and Lucy, who married Eugene Powell, lives near the homestead of her parents.

John Daut amassed his first fortune handling sheep and with it began merchandising and conducting a livery stable at Crawford, Nebraska, but owing to reverses he lost his capital and went further west to get a new start. He found employment with Charles Barney at Clearmont, Wyoming, becoming foreman of one of his sheep camps, and when he had once more acquired some money he came to Montana, arriving at Miles City December 28, 1896, and was made foreman and general manager of the ranch owned by R. R. Selway on the Upper Big Pumpkin, holding this responsible position for three years. He then took 5,500 ewes on shares to Bear Creek, Montana, a cattle region, and his advent was attended by exciting events. The cattlemen objected to the entrance of sheep and did so in such a forceable manner that after 2,013 of the sheep had been killed Mr. Daut relinquished his determination to remain, and signed an agreement not to bring sheep into that country during the ensuing fifty years. With the remnant of his flock he came to his present location at the mouth of the Little Powder River, and he has since remained. He ran sheep until October 1, 1910, when an epidemic attacked them and Mr. Daut lost thousands of dollars and was forced to close his transactions in that industry. Once more he had to turn his energies into a new channel, and took up farming, acquiring a title to 1,380 acres of land. This he has improved into a valuable property, erecting suitable buildings and developing artesian wells, and now has nearly 200 acres in alfalfa, which crops seem suited to his land and requirements.

While in the sheep business Mr. Daut was a conspicuous figure in building up the stock interests of the Little Powder River region, not only looking after his own flocks, but assisted as far as lay in his power others interested in developing the industry. He concerned himself with the public affairs of his locality, and has always been a firm friend of the public schools, contributing toward their advancement from his purse and his time. He began voting the republican ticket, casting his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison after he located in Nebraska, but now is inclined to support the candidate he deems best suited for the office under consideration. While living at Harrison, Sioux County, Nebraska, Mr. Daut was elected assessor of the county, but that is the only public service he has rendered, although as a private individual he was very active at Harrison, and not only erected the livery stable which he used for his business but also a substantial butcher shop.

On November 26, 1891, Mr. Daut was married to Miss Lillian E. Maine, a daughter of Edward P. Maine and his wife, Henrietta B. (Ayres) Maine. Mr. Maine was a farmer in Valley County, Nebraska, where Mrs. Daut was born on October 6, 1871, the elder of the two children of her parents, her brother, LeRoy R. Maine, now being engaged in hopgrowing in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Daut have no children. The patience and perseverance with which he has kept steadily at work in spite of misfortune has won him the confidence of his community, and there are few men in all this region who are held in higher esteem than he.

JAMES A. RASMUSSEN. One of the well known and substantial banking houses of this section of Montana is the First National Bank of Chinook, of which James A. Rasmussen is the cashier. He has been prominently identified with the business life of this community since January, 1919, but his connection with what is now Blaine County began much earlier, for he was but a school boy when in the spring of 1893 his parents established their home in Harlem. His father, Soren C. Rasmussen, brought his family to Montana from Minnesota in 1890.

James A. Rasmussen was born in Ottertail County, Minnesota, April 7, 1881, and the first three years of his life were spent on a farm near Luce in that county. His father settled there as a homesteader about 1879, proved up his claim and developed a farm, and when he disposed of it he came to North Dakota and near Minot secured a preemption and proved up a second farm. Soren C. Rasmussen spent about four years in that region, and while there was elected a member of the Board of County Commissioners for Ward County and was made chairman of the board. Disposing of his interests in that locality, he returned to Minnesota and spent another two years farming, and then made his second trip into the West, this time crossing the State of North Dakota and landing almost in the middle of Montana, where the active years of his life were afterward spent.

Soren C. Rasmussen is a native of Denmark, spent the early years of his life in that country, and left it for the United States while still young and single, and landed in the City of New York. He came to this country without capital and without a knowledge of any trade, and went to work in the woods of Ottertail County, Minnesota, cutting cord wood. From a common laborer he went to a homestead there, but continued his practice of working out, and occupied himself as a wage earner when he had little to occupy him at home. The sale of his farm brought him a little capital, but it was necessary for him to still economize when he established himself in North Dakota. However, the dry years which followed in that locality forced him to leave there, and he returned to Minnesota, not much improved in finances. He spent the last two years of his residence in Minnesota as a renter, and he arrived in Montana without capital. During the first five years here Mr. Rasmussen was section foreman for the Great Northern Railroad Company, and the section boarding house was one of the chief sources of the family income during that time, and from the two sources he accumulated sufficient capital to buy two carloads of Minnesota cattle, which he brought to Montana and ranged over the hills and valleys around Harlem. He and his wife each took a desert claim, which served as the beginning of a ranch, and they are still in the family. Mr. Rasmussen became a rancher and farmer six miles west of Harlem, and the entire tract is under a system of private irrigation from a coulee, which has proven advantageous over the dry-land method of farming.

After achieving a liberal amount of success on the ranch near Harlem, Soren C. Rasmussen disposed of his stock and engaged in the hotel business in Denbigh, North Dakota, which he conducted for four years with good results and then returned to Montana, established his home in Harlem and continued as a retail liquor dealer until the national prohibition amendment went into effect. During those years he was one of the organizers of the mill and elevator and the electric plant at Harlem, was also a merchant in association with his son-in-law, G. Mac Wedge, and still continues as a stockholder in the electric light plant and the mill and elevator, and his ranch has been increased to 720 acres. In 1919 he removed to Long Beach, California, where he is a property holder and engaged in the real estate business.

Soren C. Rasmussen has always affiliated with the republican party, and he is a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity. He was married to Katie Moore, who was born in Brooklyn, New York, a month after the landing of her parents from County Cork, Ireland. Her father was James Moore and her mother was an Englishwoman by birth but of Irish parentage. Mrs. Rasmussen was born in February, 1855, and was married before she was fifteen years old. They became the parents of the following children: James A., the Chinook banker; John D., a successful rancher at Harlem, Montana; Ida, the wife of G. M. Wedge, of Long Beach, California; and Oscar, who is also at Long Beach.

James A. Rasmussen attended both the public schools of Burlington, North Dakota, and in Minnesota, was later for three years a student in the Glasgow, Montana, schools, and completed his school work with a course in telegraphy in the Great Falls Commercial College. After spending a summer at home on the ranch he began his railroad work at Kulm, North Dakota, where he finished his telegraphy training and learned station work under his uncle. He then became station agent at Ransom, North Dakota, worked at many points on the Soo System between Minneapolis and Portal, also during that period served the Great Northern as station agent, and in the spring of 1907 took charge of a lodging house and also served the station there as agent. He went next to the Fort Belknap Reservation and took charge of the Fort Belknap Trading Company's store for a year, returned then to railroad work at Harlem, and was agent there until July 16, 1911, when he went into the First National Bank at Harlem as assistant cashier, and on the 15th of January, 1919, came to the First National Bank of Chinook as cashier.

During his residence in Harlem Mr. Rasmussen served as a member of its Board of Aldermen, and also served as trustee of his school district. He joined the Masonic order in November, 1909, and has taken the junior degrees of that order.

He was married at Minot, North Dakota, September 28, 1903, to Miss Helen Warchow, of Stanley, North Dakota, where Mr. Rasmussen was then serving as station agent. She was born near Britt, Iowa, July 11, 1882, and was given a public school education. She is one of a family of five sons and five daughters, and her mother was Mrs. Julia Warchow. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rasmussen, Alvin, Vera, Kenneth and Viva.

JOHN F. BUTLER. On the 9th of May, 1881, there arrived in Montana a young man seeking employment. He had been born and reared upon a Minnesota farm, and although his training from early youth had been received in a rural community he had been given a somewhat liberal education, mastering the common branches of learning and then receiving instruction in a business college. The youth who thus made such an unostentatious advent into Glendive has since developed into one of the community's most progressive citizens, substantial business men and civic upbuilders, John F. Butler, the postmaster of Glendive.

Mr. Butler arrived in Montana without anything definite in view in the way of employment, but looking about he found work with a relative, N. W. Comfort, who was supplying the Northern Pacific Construction Company with beef. It was the duty of the young employe to butcher and deliver the beef, and to collect and account for the money. This work continued during the summer and fall, after which he began hauling buffalo hides from the range for any hunters who had them to sell, and while thus employed he had the good fortune to meet and become acquainted with some of the well known buffalo hunters of the early days, including Oscar Brackett, Doc Zahl, Vic Smith and Charley Rock. Mr. Butler picked up the hides where the hunters' camps were established, brought them to Glendive and delivered them to Comfort & Kinzie, who were shippers at this point.

In February, 1882, Mr. Butler withdrew from that work, sold his teams and built an ice house at Glendive, being the pioneer in the business of storing commercial ice here, but in the following April he also disposed of that industry and turned his attention to the dairy business, but after a few months he disposed of that interest to engage in ranching five miles west of Glendive. All a stockman had to do in that early day of Montana's history to engage in the cattle business was to settle upon a tract of land which he deemed favorable for his undertaking, erect such meager improvements as were required for personal shelter and stock protection, and select a mark or brand for his cattle. Mr. Butler selected as his brand "44," and he spent about fifteen years in the cattle business. His stock were the common range cattle of that period. His experience as a cattleman carried him through the disastrous winter of 1886-7, for he had some feed in reserve and came out with a trifling loss whereas other cattlemen lost almost their entire herds.

Mr. Butler gave up ranching in 1897 and moved into Glendive, where for a year or so he engaged in teaming. He then started a water wagon in the town and subsequently established a dairy, the two industries absorbing his time for several years, he having continued the water business for seven years and his dairy for nine, and he left the latter industry to become a member of the police force of Glendive, being one of a trio of peace officers of the town. This official service of perhaps seven years covered an area of peace and order save for the minor hold-ups and other small disturbances which occurred as a result of the shifting element which flowed into this town following the building of the Sidney branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. Butler retired from the police department to assume his duties as the postmaster of Glendive. He has always taken an active interest in local politics, upholding democratic principles, and has performed service as a delegate to county conventions and as a committeeman in his county. He was selected from three competitors for the office of postmaster. His commission for the office was dated February 16, 1916, and he assumed charge of the office on the 16th of March following, following his successor, J. C. Sorensen. During his tenure of office the receipts have increased 100 per cent, and notwithstanding this immense increase and the consequent additional work Mr. Butler and his one assistant performed most of the work attendant upon the office during the country's participation in the World war, other efficient help not being available. At the present time the office force, now comprising six clerks, is 50 per cent larger than when he assumed the duties of the office, representing an increase of one city carrier and one additional star route. It has also been made a central accounting place, sixty-five district offices reporting their accounts to the Glendive postoffice.

Mr. Butler has given the best years of his life to Montana and her interests, but he is a native son of Minnesota, where he was born in Rice County September 23, 1859, and his early boyhood days were spent in both Rice and Steele counties of that state. His father, James Butler, had come from the State of New York, near Ithaca, but he was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, and was a young man when he came to the United States. In this country he was married to Miss Kate McDonald, who was born in the City of New York, and while they spent the most active years of their lives in Minnesota, they came in 1883 to Montana and lived out the remainder of their lives in Glendive.

James Butler was always a farmer, and on account of a crippled limb he was unable to serve his adopted country in the Civil war. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Butler comprised the following: Mrs. Mary McBratney, of Mandan, North Dakota; Elizabeth, who married N. W. Comfort, and both died at White Earth, North Dakota; John F., the Glendive postmaster; Addie, who married John O'Brien, of Savage; Edward, of Burns, Montana; Charles, who died in Alberta, Canada; Thomas, whose address is unknown; Mrs. Clara Frizzle, of Glendive; James, a resident of Sidney, Montana; and Kate, who is the wife of John Denney, of Dawson County, Montana.

John F. Butler married in Pittsville, Wisconsin, November 30, 1884, Miss Theresa Kehoe, a daughter of Gerald and Mary (Kelley) Kehoe. The father was born in Ireland and came to the United States some time during the '40s, and his vocation was that of a farmer. Late in life he moved to Missouri, and his death occurred in Knox County of that state, and Mrs. Kehoe died in Wisconsin. Their family of children numbered three sons and seven daughters, and the entire family have passed away, the death of Mrs. Butler occurring on the 12th of March, 1912. She had become the mother of a large family of children, as follows: Marcella, who has charge of a hospital in Portland, Oregon; Theresa, widow of Eb Powers and a resident of Glendive; Albert, of Bismarck, North Dakota, married Bertha Todd and has two children: William, whose home is in Glendive; and Arthur, of Tacoma, Washington. Arthur Butler volunteered for service in the World war in 1917, was sent overseas, and performed military duty in England, Ireland and France, and also in Germany, where he was with the Army of Occupation. He went into the army as a private, but left the ranks at the close of the war as second lieutenant of his company, receiving his discharge in September, 1919.

In Glendive, Montana, in July, 1916, John F. Butler married Mrs. Elizabeth Ford, who came from her native State of Minnesota to Montana in 1912. Mr. Butler also performed his full share of war work during the recent conflict, not only personally but he also added his office force to the war drives for Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association and other auxiliary work, and entered actively into the field work outside of Glendive. He was a member of the Council of National Defense, and helped create the marked enthusiasm for war benefits in this locality. He has also performed his full share in the work incident to the growth and upbuilding of Glendive, and has added two residences to its number of dwelling places.

FRANK G. ARNETTE will soon be able to measure his residence in Montana by four decades. He came into the old territory as a range and ranch worker. As an employe and partner he was associated with some of the prominent livestock outfits of the state. He is a pioneer of the Culbertson locality, has operated in that section of Eastern Montana for twenty years or more, and has performed a notable part in developing the agricultural resources and showing the possibilities of crop growing in this region.

Mr. Arnette, who is also president of the Citizens State Bank of Culbertson, was born in Henry County, Illinois, August 8, 1865. His people in the earlier generations came from Alsace, France. His grandfather Arnette was a typical Frenchman, small of stature, wiry, and was a pioneer farmer of central Illinois. George Arnette, father of the Culbertson banker, was born in Warren County, Pennsylvania, on June 6, 1833. He came to manhood in Illinois, had only the advantages of a pioneer school, and as a young man he helped haul his father's wheat over 169 miles of rough road from the farm to Chicago. He spent his active life as a farmer and died February 22, 1913. He married Margaret Sieben, a native of Loraine, France, who survived him four years. Their children were: Harriet, who married William Hudnal and died at Helena, Montana; Julia, who died at Laverne, Minnesota, wife of W. A. Rowe; Frank G.; Mrs. P. W. Kempster, of Prophetstown, Illinois; Perry, of Luverne, Minnesota; and Dr. F. H. Arnette, of Whittier, California.

Frank G. Arnette spent his early life in a country district of Illinois, acquired his education in a district school around Sharon and was only a boy when he came to the Northwest and took a man's part in the cattle country.

He was not yet sixteen when he arrived at Fort Benton, May 18, 1881. He had come out to the country alone and joined his uncle, Henry Sieben, one of the prominent Montana ranchers. He went to work on the Sieben ranch at Ulydia, now Cascade, and the following year accompanied some of the Sieben cattle to the Flat Willow country. That fall he returned home to Illinois, attended school during the next winter, and then in the spring was back in Montana and resumed his employment with his uncle at Flat Willow. He had charge of the Sieben outfit there until the fall of 1888.

At that time Mr. Arnette decided to make some independent ventures. He did some speculation in livestock, shipping in horses and selling them. He had some other enterprises, including mining, but that proved disastrous to his financial resources. After six years, having lost his capital, in the spring of 1894 he went to Malta and entered the employ of Conrad Kohrs and associates, who were then removing their cattle to the Sweet Grass hills. He had charge of their outfit until the spring of 1897, when he was made the Oregon and Idaho buyer for the company. That year and the following he bought and shipped cattle into Montana.

In the meantime he had bought some cattle of his own and sent them into the Culbertson locality to run with the stock of Henry Sieben and P. O. Brewster. That was his first business connection with Eastern Montana. Leaving the Kohrs outfit in 1898, Mr. Arnette came to Culbertson to take charge of the Sieben and Brewster outfit, and continued with them as foreman until Mr. Brewster retired from business in Montana. A copartnership was then formed of Beach, Sieben and Arnette, and they were the founders of the noted Diamond Ranch. The firm owned some 1,600 acres of deeded land along the north bank of the Missouri and also had ten sections of state land under lease. The Diamond Ranch was a cattle proposition, its chief brand being the "bar diamond" on the left ribs. The Diamond Ranch was one of the larger enterprises in the cattle country until the settlers began crowding the stockmen from the range. For a number of years cattle from the Diamond Ranch were shipped to the Chicago market, and Mr. Arnette has some interesting memories of prices. At one time he says the firm shipped 750 head of four-year-old black Poll Angus steers, averaging 1,399 pounds, without a blemish or mark, and the best price at the top of the market was only $3.75 a hundred. Considering the war prices for beef, such a sale seems almost beyond belief.

Even before he abandoned his prominent connections with the livestock industry Mr. Arnette had made some serious efforts toward farming. While the cattle were still grazing on the ranch he broke up some of the sod, sowing grain for hay as winter feed. His first experiences proved a grateful surprise. His oats crop could not be harvested green enough for hay because of wet weather, and the grain had matured before it was cut. As there was too much waste in feeding from the stack, it was decided to thresh the grain, and the yield was approximately seventy-five bushels to the acre. With that evidence before their eyes the owners concluded that the country was much better adapted for farming than they had supposed, and this remarkable oat yield was one of the reasons that turned Mr. Arnette to agriculture.

Since becoming a farmer Mr. Arnette has had seven crop years, and has had some harvest every season, though hail has been very destructive. No complete failure has been experienced, and even in 1919 his poorest wheat yielded five bushels and his best seven and a half. In 1919 this region proved fine for corn, and the Arnette crop, though small in area, matured and yielded almost as in a genuine corn country. The Arnette farming operations comprise about 1,000 acres. Mr. Arnette was the pioneer in this end of the state in sowing alfalfa, and in spite of the phenomenal drought in 1919 he secured three cuttings from his crop.

Mr. Arnette saw the Village of Culbertson when all its houses except one store were of logs, and has had some influential part in the developments that have occurred since. He was one of the organizers of the Brooks Mercantile Company. When he sold out his interests there he joined other men of Culbertson and bought the Citizens State Bank, of which he has since been president. He also established a 1,200-acre ranch in Richland County tributary to Culbertson, and is using that as a mixed stock ranch and farm. On this he has constructed a system of irrigation which waters about 500 acres.

Mr. Arnette cast his first vote in Montana as a republican. He was elected from Valley County and served as a member of the Eleventh General Assembly in the democratic house under Speaker McDowell. He was a member of the livestock, state lands and agricultural committees, and tried to get through some legislation providing for seed liens and threshermen liens. Since then he has had the satisfaction of seeing such bills become laws.

During the war he served as a member of the Sheridan County Council of Defense, was county committeeman on several of the bond drives, was chairman of Sheridan County in the Salvation Army fund drive. It should also be noted that the Citizens State Bank took more Government securities during the war than any other bank in that section of Montana.

Mr. Arnette is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, being affiliated with Helena Consistory No. 3 and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of Trowel Lodge No. 67 at Culbertson.

The Arnette home is one of the fine bungalows of Culbertson and was built by Mr. Arnette in 1908. He married in the State of Washington, June 6, 1900, Miss Elma J. Brockman. Mrs. Arnette was born in Kansas and her father was a native of Missouri. Her mother's maiden name was Mary Ruhl and she was a native of Ohio. Mrs. Arnette was reared in Washington, is a graduate of the Western Dental College of Kansas City, Missouri, in the class of 1899, carrying off the honors for operative dentistry. She practiced her profession in Spokane and met her husband while on a professional trip as the pioneer dentist at Culbertson. Doctor Arnette was the first resident dentist in eastern Valley County, and one of the class that attended the first meeting of the Montana State Dental Examiners. She has been prominent in social life in Culbertson and is a past matron of Wild Rose Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star. During the war she served as recruiting agent for army nurses, was a member of the committees on the Red Cross, Bond, and Salvation Army drives, and later served as county chairman of the Home Nursing Activities of the American Red Cross.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnette believe in the slogan "See America First," having traveled extensively in thirty-three states and in Canada and Mexico. They have two daughters, Rowene and Wilma, born August 8, 1907, and April 13, 1910, respectively.

George K. Dick, who came to Montana in 1889, just before the territory merged into the state, has had a business experience of wide variety, in earlier years was a cowboy, is a former railroad man, and also served some of the large mining corporations around Anaconda. In later years his chief business has been banking, and he is now cashier of the State Bank of Culbertson.

Mr. Dick was born in Cambria County, Pennsylvania, February 5, 1872. His grandfather was a native of Ireland and came to the United States in 1797, establishing himself in Pennsylvania, where he built up a splendid industry as a tanner, the business being started by his father. He was also a farmer. His last years were spent in Indiana County, Pennsylvania. He married Miss Brandon. Two of their sons served in the Union army, Stewart Dick, who died in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, and Thomas W. Dick.

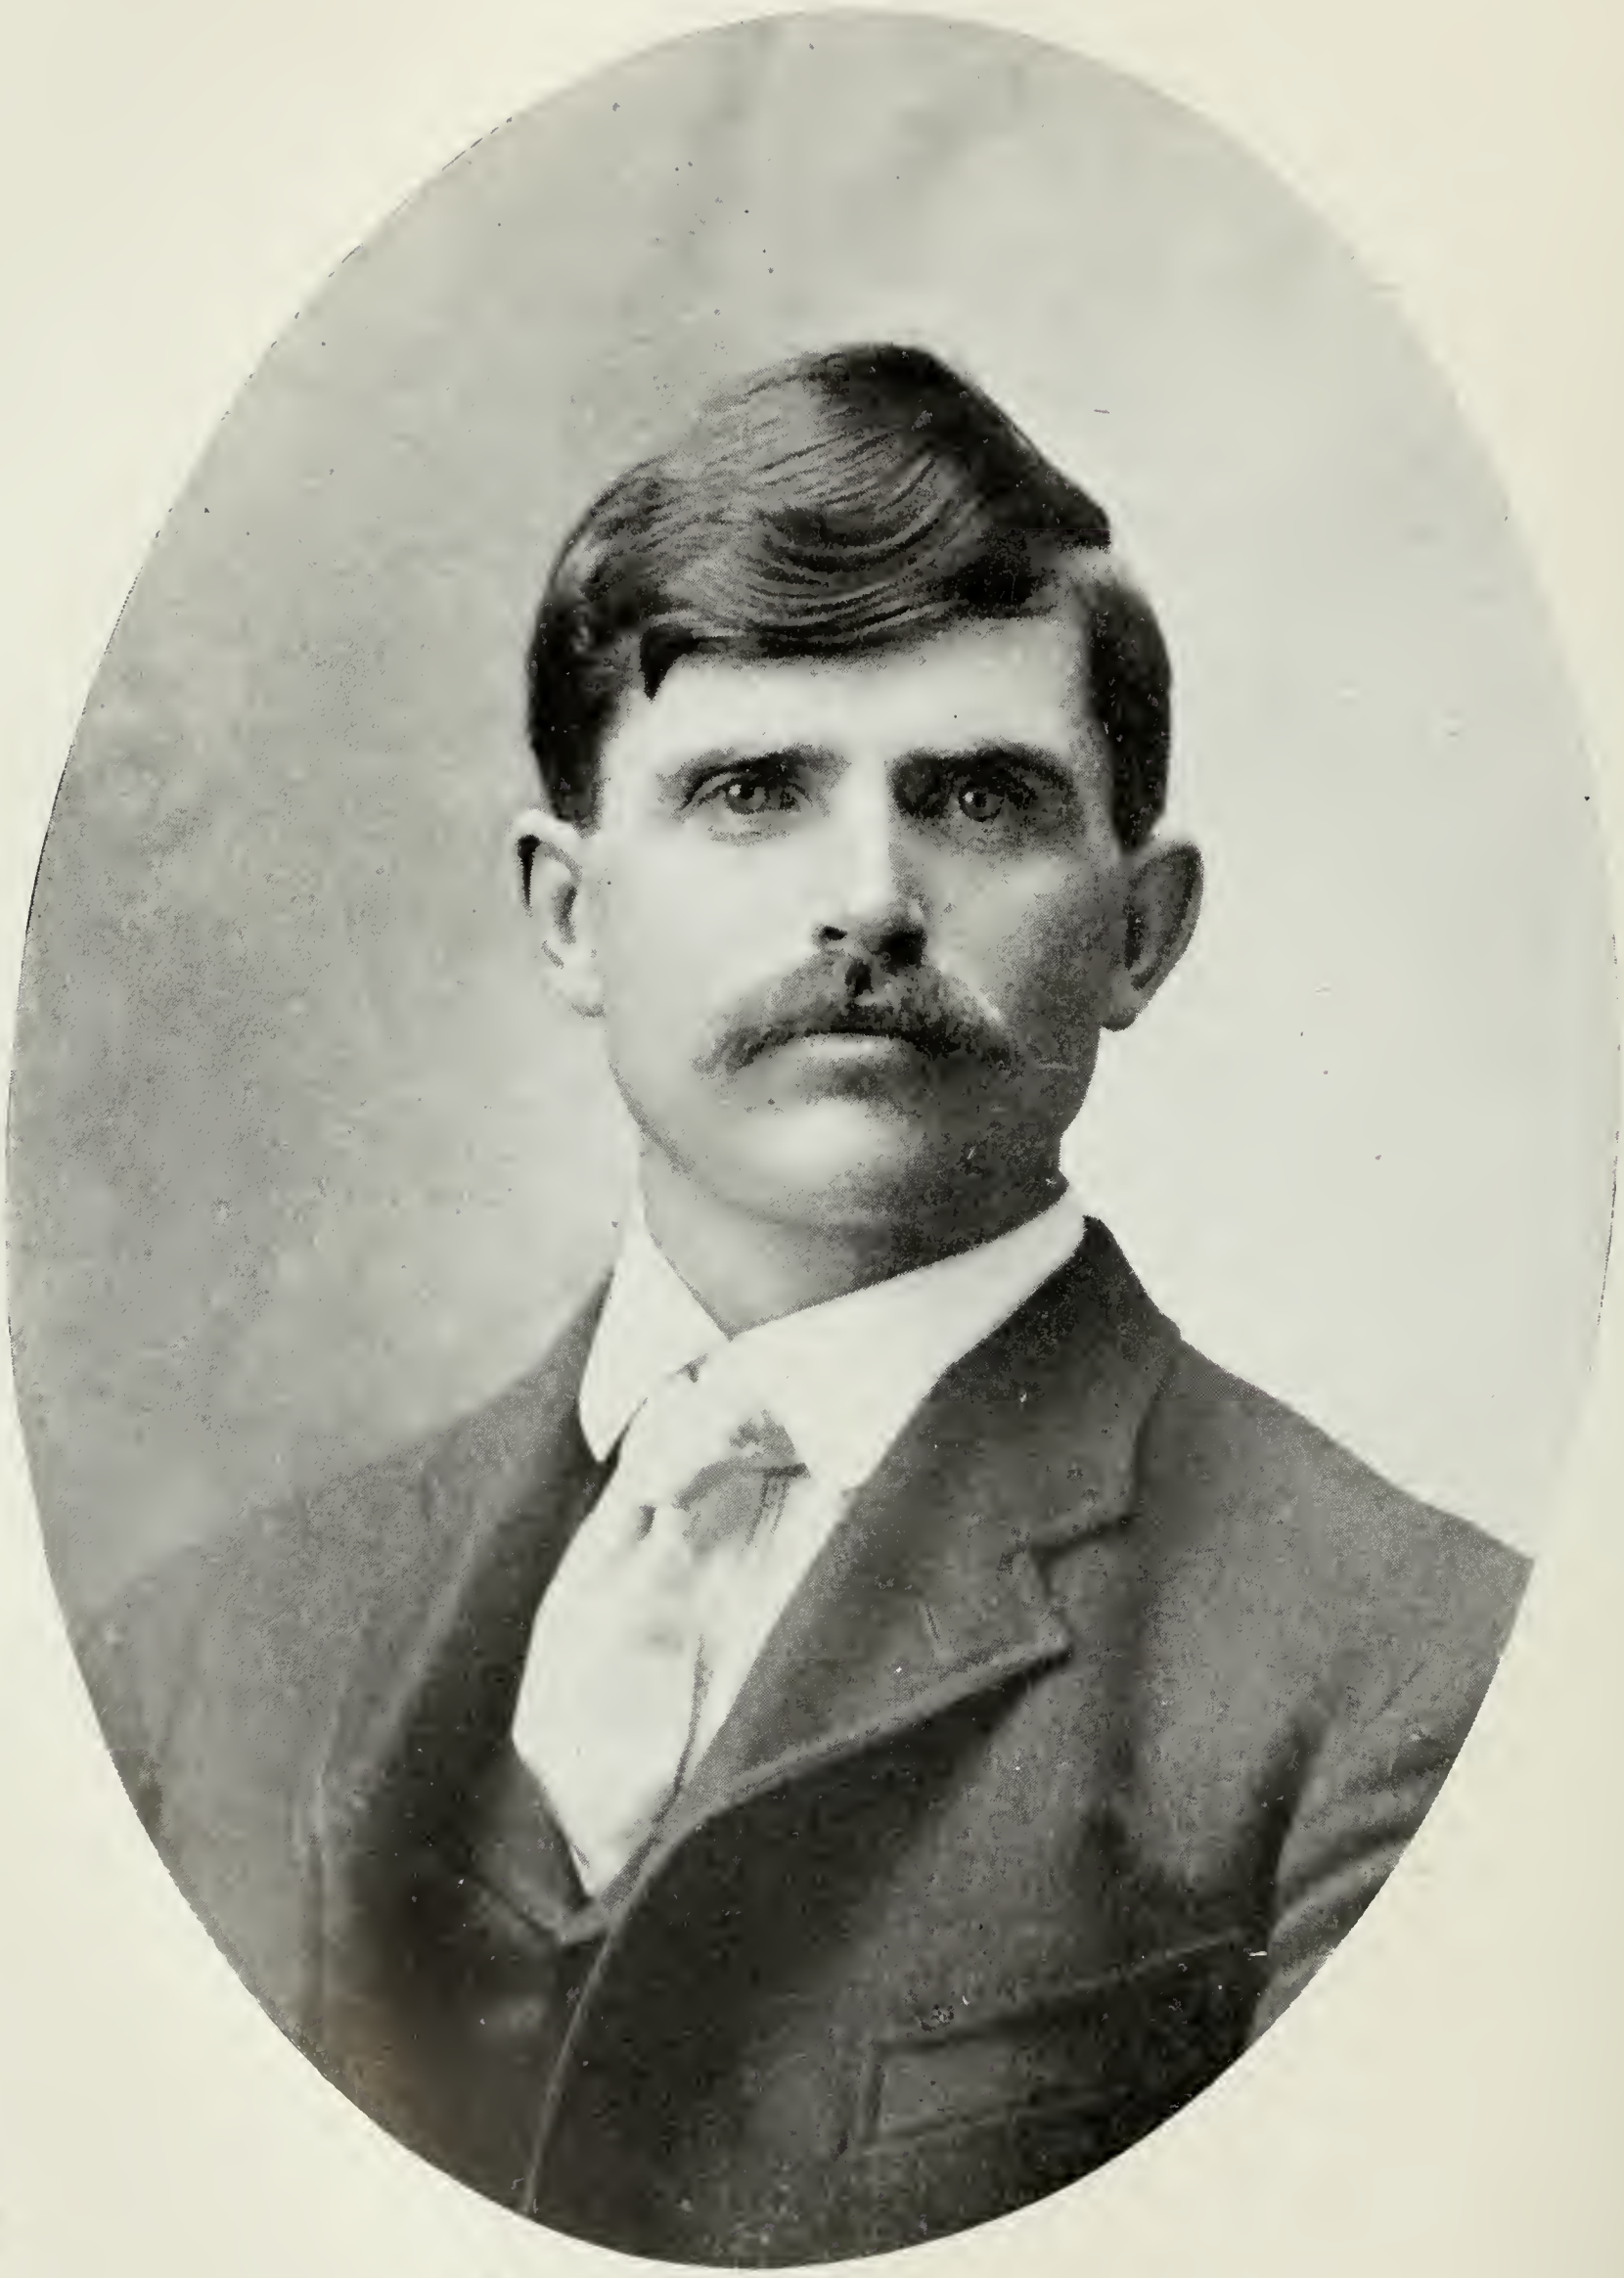
Thomas W. Dick, father of the Montana banker, was born in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, and enlisted in 1862 as a private in Company H of the Twelfth Pennsylvania Reserves. He was promoted to a sergeancy before the end of the war. In the Army of the Potomac he was a participant in numerous engagements, including the battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg and the Wilderness, and during all his service was only once wounded, a slight injury to the shoulder. He has always cherished in his memory the fact that he was present on the Gettysburg battlefield when President Lincoln made his famous speech.

Thomas W. Dick prepared himself for the law, and has spent a long and honorable career in the profession. He is now past eighty-six years of age, but still attends his office regularly and takes a great deal of pride in being on duty. He has always given his political influence to the republican party and had personal friendships among many of the noted leaders in the Keystone State, including Matthew S. Quay. For many years he served as an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

Thomas W. Dick married Lucy E. Kern, a daughter of George W. Kern. Her maternal grandfather was a soldier under General Washington and was one of those who suffered the horrors of winter in Valley Forge. Thomas W. Dick and wife had the following children: John B., who died as a result of an accident in 1908 in Cambria County; George Kern, of Culbertson; Madge, wife of John I. Bowman, of Indiana County, Pennsylvania; James S., of Ebensburg, Pennsylvania; Carl W., who died at Ebensburg in 1918; and Bessie, who died at Ebensburg in 1901.

George Kern Dick spent the first fourteen years of his life in Cambria County, and while there attended grammar and high schools. He then tried the fortunes of the world on his own account, and journeying out to Nebraska alone, he spent about a year and a half as a cowboy on the range in the summer and hotel boy in winter at Kearney and Ogalalla. He then returned home and spent a winter before coming to Montana in 1889, at which time he was seventeen years of age.

Arriving here he found himself among strangers, though he had a recommendation to a party at Glendive. Through this party he located his first work in the state. He was at that time without much business experience and found employment as clerk in the Northern Pacific freight office at Glendive. That was only temporary, and his next employment was on the cattle ranch of the H. S. Cattle Company of Red Water. Following that he alternated, riding the range and punching cows in summer and fall, and working for the Northern Pacific at Glendive. He so continued until January, 1891, when he became a clerk in the railway mail service from Miles City to Helena. In December, 1893, he went further west to Anaconda, became a concentrator man with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and then was employed in the office of the corporation. After two years he went into the freight office of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway Company at Anaconda, and for five years he was in the service of that company, being chief clerk of the freight office when he retired. Rejoining the Northern Pacific, he became rate clerk in the freight office at Missoula, and several months later returned to the Anaconda Copper Mining Company in the purchasing department, and after three years was transferred to its lumber department, with headquarters at Hamilton.



A. W. Rowe

That post he left in September, 1906, and since then his business has chiefly been in banking lines. He became assistant cashier of the Ravalli County Bank, and for nine years was with that institution, leaving it as cashier. In November, 1915, Mr. Dick came into Eastern Montana and accepted the post of cashier of the State Bank of Culbertson.

The State Bank of Culbertson was founded in 1911 as a private bank by the Slette interests, later was the First National Bank, and finally rechartered as the State Bank. It has $25,000 capital, surplus and undivided profits of about $9,000 at the close of 1919, and average deposits of $200,000. Mr. Dick served as local chairman for the Fourth and Fifth Liberty Loan drives at Culbertson, and for the work he did at that time was presented with a medal by the Government. He was one of the men most actively concerned in the promotion of the new Evans Hotel, the leading hotel of Culbertson and the pride of the town and region. He is vice president and a director of the hotel company.

Mr. Dick is also the present mayor of Culbertson. Politically he has always contributed his influence to the success of the republican party, casting his first presidential vote for Major McKinley. He is chairman of the Roosevelt County Republican Central Committee and has attended a number of county conventions as a delegate. He is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge at Culbertson.

At Helena, Montana, April 5, 1893, Mr. Dick married Miss Celia McHugh, daughter of Cornelius and Sophie (Hayes) McHugh. Her father, a native of Ireland, was one of the early gold seekers to California, and came into Montana in 1863, when the chief industry of the territory was mining. He was associated with the early fortunes of Alder Gulch, and was still interested in mining when he died at Helena. Mrs. Dick is the oldest of four children. To Mr. and Mrs. Dick were born two children: Madge C. and Robert H. Madge is a graduate of the Hamilton High School, finished her education in the University of Pennsylvania, and is now assistant cashier of the State Bank of Culbertson. Robert graduated from the Culbertson High School in 1919, and is now pursuing his higher education in the University of Montana.

Alfred Welch Rue is a ranchman in the vicinity of Broadus on the Little Powder River, and has been identified with this region since his advent into Montana on April 4, 1900. He was born November 23, 1882, in Fort Pierce, South Dakota, a son of Lewis and Elizabeth (Huntington) Rue. Lewis Rue was born in Minnesota, but went to Greene County, Iowa, after he had served his country as a soldier during the war between the states, as a member of Company C, Third Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. This company had the misfortune to be captured by the enemy, was paroled and sent home, but was later sent by the Government to quell the Sioux uprising. A millwright by trade, Lewis Rue set up the first wagon ever built in Iowa and continued to work at his trade when he moved to South Dakota. He lived at Vermilion, Fort Pierre and Spearfish in the above mentioned state, dying at Spearfish in 1898 when only fifty-six years old. His widow survives him. She was born in Canada in 1843, a daughter of Zebulon Huntington and great-granddaughter of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Zebulon Huntington was born in New England, but spent some time in Canada, where he was engaged in the cattle business, before he located permanently in Iowa, and there he met his death in a tornado. His son James Huntington was one of the soldiers to enlist from Iowa for service in the war between the states. Lewis Rue and his wife had the following children: Lillie, who is Mrs. D. P. Green, of Greenleaf, Idaho; Jasper S., who is a ranchman on the Little Powder River; Fred W., who is also a ranchman of the same region; George H., who owns a ranch near that of his brother Jasper S.; Alfred, whose name heads this review; Walter J., who is an automobile dealer of Seattle, Washington; and Birdie, who is the wife of Frank Stratton, of Caldwell, Idaho.

Alfred W. Rue was seventeen years old when he came to Montana from Spearfish, South Dakota, and his educational training was limited to the advantages offered up to the eighth grade of the common schools, which he did not complete. His first work in the state was secured as a sheepherder for Myrt Edwards on the Little Powder River, for which he was paid $35 per month, and as he had never had that much money before he was entirely satisfied with the compensation. Six months later he engaged with Link Wilson for the same kind of work, and he was also employed by James Daly, in the meanwhile assisting his brother Fred Rue in developing a ranch on the Little Powder.

Finally he and his brother Fred went into partnership, holding sheep as well as cattle, and remained together until 1907, when they separated, and Alfred W. Rue moved to his present location, buying the improvements of John Anson on the "Roan Mule" Ranch, subsequently called "Alfalfa Meadows." The name "Roan Mule" was rather a misnomer, for the place resembled little more than the roached mane of that animal when Mr. Rue took charge of it. His first shelter was a three-room log house, which he later enlarged by the addition of several rooms, and this made the family a comfortable home for seven years, when Mr. Rue erected his present modern nine-room bungalow, one of the few along the Little Powder River. It is of stucco, after Mr. Rue's own design, and is furnished with Delco lights, artesian water supply and an electric motor for performing all heavy domestic labor. There are not many rural homes in the state which are so complete in every respect, and the Rue residence serves as a model.

Mr. Rue brought both cattle and sheep to his ranch, but has specialized on the latter. During the early part of his experience he sold wool as low as 15 cents per pound, but in 1918 was rewarded by receiving 63 cents for his clip. Owing to his care of his sheep he has had remarkable results. While the ordinary production is from six to eight pounds per sheep, he averages ten pounds per fleece from his ewes and thirteen pounds from his yearling lambs, and as high as nineteen pounds from his bucks. During 1919 general farmers suffered from the great drouth, but sheep growers like Mr. Rue profited, as their wool production was not affected by the lack of rain.

Mr. Rue's ranch comprises 800 acres of land, all fenced, through which Little Powder River winds its way. An artesian well with a flow of thirty gallons a minute was sunk five years ago, and this combined with a reservoir fed by a dam across a canyon, furnishes ample irrigation for all purposes and gives plenty of water for the house and stock.

On February 28, 1907, Alfred W. Rue was married at Terry, South Dakota, to Miss Helen Estes, a daughter of Charles and Susie (Dunlap) Estes. Charles Estes was born at Carroll, Arkansas, and became one of the pioneers of the Black Hills region, where he was engaged in mining during the greater part of his active life, but his last years were spent at Goldfield, Nevada, National, Nevada, and Montana, he dying at the home of Mrs. Rue on July 28, 1915, at the age of fifty-seven years. During the time he spent in Nevada he was a high grade miner. His father, Isaac Estes, was a soldier in the Union Army during the war of the sixties, enlisting from Arkansas, and was killed by bushwhackers while home on a furlough. Isaac Estes married Tempa Hulsey, and their children were as follows: Mrs. Emily J. Lee; Charles, who was the father of Mrs. Rue; Mrs. Mary D. Chambers, of Reading, California, widow of Robert A. Chambers, a Montana pioneer, who during his career as a scout for the United States Government gained the nickname of "Kid" Chambers; and Isaac J., who was the youngest born. Charles Estes and his wife had the following children: Mrs. John H. Vincent, of Pittsburg, Kansas; Mrs. Rue, who was born July 4, 1883; and Roy C., who lives at Broadus, Montana. Mrs. Estes was the widow of William Boyd when she married Mr. Estes, and had borne her first husband three children, namely: Mrs. Alice Johnson, who is now deceased, Rose and William.

Mr. and Mrs. Rue have the following children: June Iola, Illene Elizabeth, Alfred Estes, Roland Reginald and LeMoyne Charla. The second child, Keith Royal, was drowned in childhood. In their family is Robert Raymond Rue, an adopted son of Mrs. Elizabeth Rue. Mr. Rue cast his first presidential vote for Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, but now both he and Mrs. Rue vote the democratic ticket on national issues. They are people of more than ordinary ability, and owing to their progressiveness are looked upon as leaders in their neighborhood.

HERBERT DAVID EDMONDS first became acquainted with the Culbertson locality of Eastern Montana more than twenty years ago, when Culbertson was only a trading post for the immense cattle range. He has been permanently identified with the town since 1907 as a merchant, and has been one of the stanch friends of every enterprise launched for the improvement and upbuilding of the community.

Mr. Edmonds was born at LeMars, Iowa, January 18, 1875. He is of Welsh ancestry, and the name in Wales was spelled Edmund. David R. Edmonds, his father, was left an orphan at an early age. He was born at Marietta, Ohio, in 1850. Being too young to get accepted into the army during the Civil war at home, he slipped across the Ohio River and joined Company A of the Thirty-fifth Kentucky Regiment as a drummer boy. When his first term expired he re-enlisted in the Fifty-sixth Ohio Infantry, and was only fifteen years of age when the war closed. He was under General Grant in the early campaigns around Fort Henry and Fort Donelson, also at Shiloh and in the Vicksburg campaign. He was shot in the leg at Shiloh and was also run over by an ammunition wagon. At the close of the war he went to Cincinnati and served a four-year apprenticeship as a tinsmith. When that was completed he moved out to Sioux City, Iowa, and went to work for Groniger Brothers, hardware merchants, but a few months later saw an opening for himself at LeMars, and was steadily engaged in a growing and prosperous hardware business there, from 1869 until he retired at the age of sixty-five. He has done his part as a citizen in keeping with his patriotic record in the Civil war, is a democratic voter, a Methodist, and is affiliated with the Masonic Order. At LeMars David R. Edmonds married Miss Emma Louisa Herman, a native of Detroit, Michigan, and daughter of the Reverend and Frederica Herman. Her father, a native of Germany, was a German Methodist preacher at Detroit when the Civil war broke out, went south as chaplain in the Union army and died during the service. The children of David R. Edmonds and wife are: Herbert D.; Charles W., a physician and surgeon at Omaha, Nebraska; Jennie, wife of Oscar J. Theilen, of Los Angeles; Raymond C., assistant postmaster of LeMars; Mrs. Clair Ewers, of Halbrite, Saskatchewan; Mrs. Roy Cooper, of LeMars; Richard S., of Needles, California; David H., of San Francisco; Esther and Elsie, of LeMars.

Herbert D. Edmonds acquired his education in the public schools of LeMars, taking a commercial course and in 1898, at the age of twenty-three, he came to the Northwest, to Williston, North Dakota. He became a clerk for the pioneer merchants of that locality and the post traders at Fort Buford and other frontier points, Hedrick Brothers and Company, but originally the firm was Leighton, Jordan and Hedrick. As clerk and confidential man of the firm Mr. Edmonds was sent to different points where the firm had business houses, and in these outlying posts he frequently performed the burden of clerical work. At different times beginning with 1899 he visited Culbertson. Mr. Edmonds is able to draw from memory a quite accurate and interesting picture of Culbertson as it was twenty years ago and when its only importance was as a trading post. There were two firms then selling goods, the Hedrick Company and the Bruegger Mercantile Company. Old "Tom" Evans-Winfield Scott Evans—had just moved one of the officers' quarters from Fort Buford to the locality, had remodeled it and converted it into a hotel. The hotel was subsequently destroyed by fire. Liquor dispensaries were in evidence as in all frontier localities. The railway station on the Great Northern was a box car, and William Shoemaker of Glasgow was probably agent at that time. All the country was devoted to stock growing, with numerous bands of horses, cattle and sheep. Culbertson served as a place to get supplies for all the region to the Canadian line and east to Fort Buford. Farming enjoyed no prestige with the stock men, and it was only about 1906 when Bill Jackson brought the first binder into the country to harvest his crop of oats that the success of his efforts attracted others to agriculture and proved the grain growing possibilities of the district.

During his early years in this frontier country Mr. Edmonds cherished an ambition to become a physician. With money he had earned as a clerk in Montana he went East and entered St. Louis University, performed the duties and carried on the studies of the medical curriculum for four years, and received his M. D. degree in 1904. As further preparation he took a post-graduate course in 1905 at Rush Medical College and the Chicago Lying-in Hospital. He was thoroughly qualified by training for the profession, but had hardly begun it when he abandoned it and in 1907 returned to Culbertson and took up merchandising. The house in which he first worked as a clerk at Culbertson is the one now occupied by the Farmers Mercantile Company. The store in which he established his own stock of goods in 1907 was located next door to Tanner and Bests on Main Street. During the winter of 1907-08 the block of wooden buildings across the street burned, and was rebuilt with a brick block and he became one of the first tenants and has been at that location ever since. Mr. Edmonds began business here with a stock of clothing, shoes and men's furnishings, and has continued his service as a merchant along the same lines.

He not only became a local merchant but has shown at all times and seasons his thorough devotion to the town and has lent his helping hand to whatever appealed to the public for encouragement and support. He is a stockholder in the company that built the New Evans Hotel, is a director in that company, and is a "director emeritus" in practically every other community affair. He is a former mayor of Culbertson, was active as a leader in two of the bond drives and the Young Men's Christian Association drive during the war, was a member of the Sheridan County Council of Defense, one of the Four-Minute men, and chairman of the Home Service Department of the Lower Missouri River Chapter of the Red Cross. He is a trustee of the Culbertson Presbyterian Church. Recently he has built a comfortable home of five rooms as an addition to the town's housing facilities.

At Fergus Falls, Minnesota, in June, 1907, Mr. Edmonds married Miss Lillie McFadden. She was born at St. Peter, Minnesota, July 4, 1876, daughter of William and Annie McFadden. Her parents were married in St. Paul. Her father was of Irish birth and an Ulster Presbyterian, and spent his active life in charge of Minnesota state farms and hospital work, and is now a resident of Mercer, North Dakota. Mrs. Edmonds, one of a family of three sons and four daughters, finished her education in the high school at Fergus Falls, took a course in stenography, and was employed as a stenographer in Minneapolis before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have two children, Dorothy L. and Harold K.

James L. Atkinson, M. D. The experiences of Doctor Atkinson of Poplar, one of the early Fort Peck Indian Reservation physicians, might well furnish material for a long chapter illuminating many of the conditions involved in the process of civilizing the Indians of Eastern Montana.

Doctor Atkinson, who for thirty-one years was government physician at Fort Peck Reservation, was born in Southern Illinois September 17, 1856. His grandfather, James Atkinson, was a slave-holding planter in Tennessee, but left that state and became a pioneer of Illinois, abandoning his slaves when he moved to a free state. He spent many years near Mount Vernon, Illinois, where he died about 1870, at the age of seventy. He married Winnie Bonner. Their sons were Calvin, Russell, Ezekiel, Millard, Elihu, Willis, Grundy and James, and the daughters were Mrs. Tennie Mofield, Mrs. Jennie Casey, Mrs. Venie Fulton, Mrs. Amanda Richards and Mrs. Tennessee Martin. Most of the sons were farmers, though Russell was a merchant at McLeansboro, Illinois.

Ezekiel Atkinson, father of Doctor Atkinson, spent his life as a plain farmer in Southern Illinois, and was a small boy when he accompanied his parents from Tennessee, where he was born, to Jefferson County, Illinois. He had little opportunity to acquire an education, voted as a democrat and was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. He married Jane Richards, daughter of Henry Richards and a native of Tennessee. Ezekiel Atkinson died about 1897 and his wife in 1885. His children were: Alice, who became the wife of William Rogers and died in St. Louis in 1917; Dr. James L.; and Winnie F., wife of Louie Bozin, of Los Angeles.

Doctor Atkinson spent his boyhood on a farm, attended country schools, and secured his medical education in the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, where he graduated in 1879. He was in private practice at Mount Vernon until he entered the government service as a physician in Montana.

Doctor Atkinson came to Montana and reached the Agency at Poplar November 1, 1887. At that time Col. Lloyd Wheaton was commander and the Indian agent was D. O. Cowan. Other successive agents were C. R. A. Scobey, Captain Sproule, Scobey again, C. B. Lowmiller, and then Agent Modsman, who is still on duty there.

When Doctor Atkinson came to Montana the Sioux Indians were concentrated on the reservation as a result of a treaty with the government, providing an annual payment for the tribe. However, practically nothing as yet had been done toward civilizing the red men. Not half a dozen wagons had reached the reservation and no progress had been made toward the establishment of homes, cultivation of farms and other permanent improvement such as the tribe now enjoys. Doctor Atkinson knew the Sioux when they were still possessed of their nomadic and restless habits, living in tepees in summer and log shacks in winter. They were rationed by the government and also killed some game now and then.

Doctor Atkinson's office was established at the agency in Poplar and he tells many amusing incidents of the early relations between the members of the tribe and the "pale face" doctor. He had little prestige among them at first, though in the course of fifteen or twenty years he was so busy that he required an assistant to meet all the demands made upon his professional services. In the early years the chief disease he had to combat was tubercular, and then the common ills of white men followed, and more and more the cases were referred to the government doctor. He voluntarily visited the various camps of the tribe, and wherever he found sickness he prescribed and left medicine. The Indians seldom administered this in the early years, though if they liked the taste of the compound they would consume it with little regard for quantity of dosage, while if it was disagreeable they threw it aside as of no value. Doctor Atkinson gained his real influence with the Indians by successfully treating some cases of chiefs or leaders, and in time there was a rush to the "pale face" doctor rather than the old medicine man.

Doctor Atkinson retired from the government service in 1918, but still has a large private practice in the community of Poplar.

At Mount Vernon, Illinois, in June, 1885, about two years before he came to Montana, he married Miss Nellie Bawden, oldest of the children of William and Hannah Louise Bawden. Her father was a native of Cornwall, England, and her mother of the Isle of Man. Mrs. Atkinson was born in 1858 and had a public school education. Doctor and Mrs. Atkinson have an interesting family. Their first child, Dale Earl, was the first white child born on the Fort Peck Reservation and was drowned at the age of eight years. Audrew L. is the wife of Edgar Manley, of Poplar. Iva V. was married to David Willoughby and died at Poplar in November, 1918. Vivian L., the youngest of the family, is a student in the Ward-Belmont College at Nashville, Tennessee.

Doctor Atkinson is a member of the Medical Reserve Corps, belongs to the Eastern Montana Medical Association, and is affiliated with the Masons and Woodmen of the World. The Atkinson home at Poplar erected by Doctor Atkinson in 1917 is a modern bungalow, with basement, hot water heat, and its fourteen rooms comprise a generous home for a hospitable family.

Charles B. Lohmiller, an ex-service man who was with the regulars in some historic Indian campaigns in the Northwest, for many years an Indian agent, and both he and his son were with the colors during the World war, resigned as superintendent of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation about three years ago and is still busily concerned with a number of private business interests at Poplar, a town with which he has been actively identified for over a quarter of a century.

Mr. Lohmiller was born at Davenport, Iowa, July 17, 1866. His father, John C. Lohmiller, was born in the Province of Wuertemberg, Germany, and came to the United States in 1861. He died in 1912, having been a resident of Davenport, Iowa, for half a century. He was a carpenter in that city. He married Miss Catherine Aberlie at Davenport, though she was reared in the same community in Germany as her husband. She survived him two years. Their children were Anthony, Charles, John C. and Lena, all living at Davenport except Charles.

Charles B. Lohmiller acquired his early education in the schools of Davenport, though his best education came from his experience as an army man and Government employe. At the age of sixteen he enlisted in the regular army at Davenport. One of his first posts of duty was Fort Sam Houston in Texas. He was with the regulars during the Geronimo campaign of 1885-86 in Arizona, and assisted in the capture of the old warrior. In 1888 he was sent to Fort Buford with his command, was also on duty at Fort Keogh at Miles City and later at Fort Meade in the Black Hills. While at Fort Keogh in 1890 he had an experience in the Sioux outbreak known as the Ghost Dancers outbreak, and was one of the regulars engaged in the battle of Wounded Knee in South Dakota. While he was at Fort Buford there occurred a rising of the northern Cheyennes, who attempted to leave their reservation, but were checked before they had gone far by the troops of which Mr. Lohmiller was a part. In June, 1889, he also helped restrain Chief Black Moon and his band, who had gone on the war path in protest against the execution of the treaty with the Sioux, throwing open the Black Hills land to settlement. Chief Black Moon was held in check at the mouth of the Little Missouri River.

Mr. Lohmiller was in the regular army almost eleven years and was then transferred from the war department to the interior department and given duties at Fort Meade, South Dakota. While in the regular forces his command was the Eighth United States Cavalry.

Mr. Lohmiller came to what is now Poplar, Montana, September 6, 1893, being sent from Fort Meade as chief clerk of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. He continued to discharge his duties as chief clerk until February 1, 1905, when he was made superintendent of the agency. He was superintendent until February 28, 1917, a month more than twelve years, the longest incumbency of any superintendent at Fort Peck. His superintendency makes a notable chapter in the history of the reservation. During that time the tribal relations were dissolved, the lands were allotted to individual Indians, an irrigation system established and partly developed, the schools were made instruments for the practical education of Indians in technical and industrial lines, and every encouragement was afforded to the Indians to farm their allotments. Also during his superintendency ten townsites were opened on the reservation and the remainder of the lands thrown open to white settlement and citizenship was granted to a number of the more competent red men.

In the meantime Major Lohmiller had also identified himself with various enterprises in the Town of Poplar and when he retired from the Government service he found these interests to include banking, drugs and the land business. He is a director of the Traders State Bank, was the first president of the First National Bank of Brockton, and for a number of years was active in the cattle business. He was organizer of the company which constructed the Gateway Hotel of Poplar, and is still the company's president. As an old army man he heeded the patriotic call at the time of the World war, and on September 14, 1918, was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Quartermaster's Corps. He was promoted to captain of the Corps and discharged at Camp Stewart, Virginia, May 21, 1919. Mr. Lohmiller is a democrat and his important connections with various affairs have made him one of the widely known citizens of the state.

Major Lohmiller married at Sidney, Montana, December 12, 1895, Miss Mary K. Obergfell. She is a daughter of Matthew Obergfell, and a sister of the several Obergfell brothers of the Sidney locality who are mentioned elsewhere in this publication. Mr. and Mrs. Lohmiller have one son, Matthew, associated with his father in the drug business. Matthew Lohmiller volunteered in May, 1917, joining B Troop of the Three Hundred and Twelfth Cavalry at Fort D. A. Russell in Wyoming. He was sent to the officers training camp at Camp Pike, Arkansas, and three months later was commissioned a second lieutenant. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Custer, Michigan, in June, 1919, and at once returned to Poplar and began his business career with his father.

HARRY T. MARTIN, of Poplar, is one of the leading ranchers and farmers on the Fort Peck Reservation. He is a member of the firm Martin and Beiseker, who, during the past three or four years have operated on a large scale, cultivating hundreds of acres, and producing some of the bonanza yields of grain and flax in this country.

Mr. Martin was born at Carthage, Missouri, February 24, 1878. His father, Thomas Martin, was born and reared on the Isle of Man, and was the only member of his family to come to this country. He became a farmer in the rich Illinois corn belt around Champaign, where he was married, and later moved to Missouri, to Jasper County, and concluded his active career as a farmer near Carthage. He spent his last days at Bainville, Montana, where he died in November, 1911, at the age of eighty-nine. His wife was Catherine Trumen, born at Champaign, Illinois, and the daughter of a farmer. She died in November, 1901. Their children were: Lucy, who died unmarried at Carthage; Horace, a farmer of Sedan, Kansas; Maude, who died as Mrs. S. P. Mitchell at Culbertson, Montana; Arthur, of Great Falls, Montana; Percy T., of Bainville; Blanche, who died at Bainville, the wife of George M. Stephenson; and Harry T.

Harry T. Martin spent his early years on a farm near Carthage, Missouri, had a country school education, and left home about the time he attained his majority and came to Montana.

His first location in the state was at Great Falls. He was then unmarried, had no capital except his hands and his intelligence, and secured work as a ranch hand with H. H. Nelson. He remained in the Nelson service for six years, and then went to Miles City and for four years was foreman of the Hogg and Miller ranch on Tongue River. Leaving that locality he came to Bainville and was associated with his brother Percy T. Martin in farming operations until 1916, when he moved to Poplar and joined C. J. Beiseker.

The Martin-Beiseker firm are doing agriculture in a scientific way. Their chief crop has been flax. Of three plantings there have been three harvests, and in the banner year of 1918 they threshed 30,000 bushels of wheat 12,000 bushels of flax, giving an acre yield of wheat of 10 bushels and of flax 9 bushels. Another feature of their industry is wool growing, and this has also proved profitable.

Mr. Martin was growing to manhood when the People's party flourished in Missouri and Kansas. His father left the republican party to become a populist and later gravitated into the democratic fold. Harry T. Martin cast his first presidential vote for William J. Bryan in 1900, and has since supported the national candidates of the party. He is affiliated with the lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Glasgow, Montana.

The Martin home is one of the splendid modern bungalows of Poplar, comprises eight rooms, was built in 1917, and stands on the hill west of the little city. Mr. Martin married at Bainville July 10, 1917, Miss Margaret Mitchell. Her father was the late Sterling P. Mitchell, a Montana pioneer, who came from Licking, Missouri, in 1878, when a boy of seventeen. He was born in Licking in 1861, son of Spencer Mitchell, a Missouri farmer and a Confederate soldier of the Civil war. Sterling P. Mitchell's first experiences in Montana were around old Fort Buford. At Culbertson he married for his first wife Mamie Hurley, a native of Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, who had come to Montana in 1891. She died in January, 1900, her children being Mrs. Martin, who was born near Bainville June 17, 1894; Spencer Hurley, of Bainville; and William J., of Bainville. Sterling P. Mitchell married for his second wife Maude Martin, mentioned above, and by that marriage there is a son, Harry Mitchell, of Poplar. Sterling Mitchell died at Culbertson in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have a daughter, Maxine, born May 26, 1918.

WILLIAM L. YOUNG has given Wolf Point one of the best equipped and most progressive retail meat and cold storage houses in Northeastern Montana. He has been in this line of business for many years, though he only came to Montana on March 1, 1918.

Mr. Young was born at Berlin, Wisconsin, March 25, 1877. His grandfather, Alexander Young, was a native of Scotland and in 1850 established his family at Muskego Center, Wisconsin, taking up a homestead. He spent the rest of his active life as a farmer and died at Berlin. He married Agnes Lyall, a distant relative of Edna Lyall, the noted Scotch writer. Their four children were: William L., James E., of Deadwood, South Dakota, George E., of Berlin, Wisconsin, Mrs. John Ferguson, of Berlin, Mrs. Agnes Crawford, of Berlin, and Mrs. Mary Peck, of Rhinelander, Wisconsin.

William L. Young, Sr., father of the Montana merchant, was born in Edinburg, Scotland, April 30, 1842, and was eight years of age when brought to the United States. He grew up and received his education in the country near Waukesha, Wisconsin, and in the first year of the Civil war enlisted in Company G of the Twenty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry. He was under the command of General Grant, at first in the Arkansas campaign, then in the siege of Vicksburg, and after the fall of that city went East and finished his service in Virginia. He was in the Grand Review at the end of the war, and was discharged as a non-commissioned officer. Though in the army for three years and nine months and without once being off duty, he was never wounded. He spent a number of years as a farmer and then engaged in the real estate business, but is now living retired at Waukesha. He has always been a consistent republican and has had great faith in that organization. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and a Methodist.

William L. Young, Sr., married Libbie McKowen. Her father, John McKowen, came from the North of Ireland and first established himself in Erie, Pennsylvania, where his daughter Libbie was born. In the fall of 1845, a few months after her birth, he moved to Wisconsin, operated a sawmill on the Janesville and Milwaukee road, and during the Civil war left his home one night to go a few blocks and was never seen nor heard of again. The children of John McKowen and wife were: William, who served in the same company and regiment as William L. Young and returned after the war; Libbie; Ellen, who became the wife of John Thompson, of Milwaukee; Mrs. Bert McGowan, of Lake Mills, Wisconsin; Joseph and John McKowen, the former of Milwaukee and the latter a farmer near Waukesha. William L. Young and wife had the following children: Ernest A., who was born August 30, 1872, and is with the Metropolitan Construction Company of Milwaukee; Lydia E., wife of Francis Cannon, of Madison, Wisconsin; William L., of Wolf Point; and James E., of Chicago.

William L. Young grew up at Milwaukee, acquired a grammar and high school education there and also took a business college course. At the age of twenty he went to work as a stenographer with the Cross Eclectic Medical College at Milwaukee, but 1½ years later moved to Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, where he engaged in the meat and grocery business. He laid the foundation of his success during the fifteen years he spent there, and in the meantime established another store at Gays Mills. Hard work and close attention to business told on his health and he started westward to recuperate, again engaging in the meat business at Granville, North Dakota, where he renewed his health, and then came to Montana.

Mr. Young's business in Wolf Point is on Assiniboine Avenue. He erected a cold storage house with a capacity of ninety tons of ice and space for forty carcasses of beef. Tracks support a carriage for taking the heavy loads of freight into the basement of the building, facilitating the ready transfer of the beeves to the cutting block and for mounting upon the strings of hooks. In the basement is the sausage and rendering room, and also facilities for smoking and seasoning of cured meat. A scientific testing station is a department of the plant for the proper handling and grading of cream. His retail department is arranged conveniently in the center of his store, with his meats exposed behind glass cases, and customers pass around his counters as they order their good without interfering with the clerks or with each other. The whole plan and arrangement of the Young Market and Storage Plant is ingenious and serves to mark the progress made over the meat market and grocery of the olden times.

Mr. Young has also gained other interests in Montana, being one of the directors of the Security State Bank, for a brief time was proprietor of the Arcade Restaurant, and in every way is strictly business. No official service has been thrust upon him. He is a charter member of the Commercial Club and became one of its directors in 1920.

Mr. Young became affiliated with the Masonic Order at Granville, North Dakota, and is a member of Loyalty Lodge No. 121 at Wolf Point. In 1919 he also took his consistory work and became a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He was reared a republican, cast his first presidential vote for McKinley in 1900 at Soldiers Grove, and has voted at every national election since.

He supported Colonel Roosevelt in 1904 and as a progressive in 1912.

At Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, April 23, 1901, he married Miss Jennie T. Smith, who was born in that town March 15, 1882, and was educated there. After completing her education she was associated with her father in the drug business. Her grandfather, George A. Smith, was one of the first settlers of Wisconsin at a time when Indians were still numerous, and he had to travel forty miles to reach the most important market town, Prairie du Chien. The Town of Soldiers Grove obtained its name from the fact that it is the site of the last battle with the Kickapoo Indians. Ross L. Smith, father of Mrs. Young, married Isabel Dinsdale, and their three children were: Mrs. Young, Loraine, of Marmouth, North Dakota, and Bertha May, a teacher at Alpena, South Dakota. Three children have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Young: Marlyn Russell, a junior in the Wolf Point High School; Isabel, also in high school; and Marshall, born in 1915.

Charles W. Waite represents a family of settlers of Powder River County who came into Montana in 1902 and located along the Little Powder River. The family comprised Charles W. Waite, his brother William T. and their father, Charles B. Waite. The latter was born at Kalamazoo, Michigan, on October 4, 1841, but in young manhood migrated to St. Joseph, Missouri, and was there engaged in outfitting the plainsmen or freighters crossing the plains. Subsequently he went by steamer to Council Bluffs, Iowa, and there offered his services to the Union during the war between the states, but was rejected. He then established himself in a wagon and implement business and continued to conduct his store, the first of its kind in the city, until he left Iowa for Wyoming. In his political convictions he was a republican, served as commissioner of Pottawatomie County, Iowa, and on the school board of Council Bluffs for a number of years. His purse strings were always loosened in behalf of church work and the spreading of church influence, and he attended the services of the Congregational Church, of which his wife was a member. On November 22, 1869, Charles B. Waite was married at Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Miss Emma Wilbur, a daughter of Albert E. and Sarah E. (Thurston) Wilbur. The Wilburs were married on September 18, 1844, and Mrs. Waite was born in the State of New York on November 29, 1845. Charles B. Waite and his wife became the parents of the following children: Charles W.; William T.; and Emma May, who is Mrs. L. H. Cutler, of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Charles W. Waite was born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, June 21, 1873, and his brother was born in the same city. After his graduation from the Council Bluffs High School Mr. Waite entered a wholesale jobbing house as clerk, remaining with it until in 1900 he, his brother and father went to Wyoming and for two years were engaged in prospecting and handling horses and cattle. They had expected to locate in Wyoming, but did not find conditions to suit them, so came on into Montana. At that time the land was public domain and unsurveyed, with here and there a squatter, one of them being the old pioneer John Stringfellow, from whom Charles W. Waite bought his squatter right, and when the Government survey was completed entered the land upon which Mr. Stringfellow's log shack stood. He and his brother continued to live in this pioneer home, their parents being with them, for several years, all being willing to endure privations in order to get well established. They had brought a small bunch of cattle with them from Wyoming and turned them loose on the range under the brand "MB." More cattle were brought in later and added to the herd, and for fifteen years all three men were associated together in the ownership of the cattle run under this brand, but in 1917 Charles B. Waite withdrew, moved to Long Beach, and there he and his wife are now residing.

Charles W. Waite now owns the old homestead, his brother dropping down the river four miles and buying a ranch at the mouth of East Fork. The primitive log shack which served the family at first was later replaced by a more commodious building, erected by Charles B. Waite. He also built the barn of galvanized iron in 1914. It is 40 by 40 feet, and is one of the conspicuous improvements of the valley. The development of shade was a matter which claimed the attention of the Waites early in their period of residence, and when they secured flowing wells they were able to carry out their ideas with reference to beautifying their premises. Now a forest of shade surrounds the homestead, and is a refreshing and comfortable spot on his 2,446-acre ranch and for the surrounding country, few of the settlers being so forehanded. The lowlands on the ranch have been mainly devoted to grain growing until recently, when Mr. Waite has put in alfalfa with gratifying results. Hay is grown on 210 acres, all of it and the other feed produced being consumed by the large number of cattle with which the ranch is stocked.

On November 20, 1911, Charles W. Waite was married at Belle Fourche, South Dakota, to Miss Minnie Henderson, born in Texas, January 4, 1892. She is a daughter of Charles E. Henderson, a farmer of Perkins, Oklahoma, who became the father of six sons and five daughters, of whom Mrs. Waite and Mrs. Lat Osgood, of Powder River County, live in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Waite have two daughters and a son, namely: Helen Louise and Winnie May, and Charles, Jr. Mr. Waite was very active in war work during the great war, and was one of the most liberal subscribers to the Liberty Loan issues of his district. A man of intense Americanism, he proved his patriotism then, as he has always done in his every day method of living, and is rightly numbered among the desirable citizens and typical ranchmen of Montana.

Albert John Isachsen. The fourth business enterprise started in the new Town of Wolf Point was the firm of Johnson and Isachsen, general merchants, and the members of this firm, Ole C. Johnson and Albert John Isachsen, have been continuously associated in business here for eight years, and came here after several years of partnership in North Dakota.

Mr. Isachsen, who as an early settler has played a spirited part in the development of Wolf Point, was born at Furra, District of Ofoten, in Northern Norway, June 14, 1877. His father was Isaac Anderson and his mother, Sophie Peterson, a daughter of Carl Peterson, a Norwegian farmer. Isaac Anderson spent his life as a farmer and fisherman in Furra. He was the father of six children: Conrad, in Norway; Nellie, wife of Jens Andreson, in Norway; Engstrom, a farmer near McVelle, North Dakota; Albert J.; and Amandus, of Boulder, Colorado.

Albert John Isachsen lived in Norway until he was about twenty-seven years of age. He secured a common school education, took a business course at Bode, was employed as clerk in a store for a time, and for three years was in the Government postoffice at Norway.

C. W. Waite & Wife.

September 14, 1904, Mr. Isachsen sailed from Trondhjem on the Parisian bound for Quebec, reaching that city October 9th, came into the United States at Detroit, and continued his journey to Lakota, North Dakota, where he joined an uncle. He remained in the country there for about seven months and earned his first dollar as workman with a threshing outfit the day after he arrived at Lakota. He continued threshing for two months, and the following winter picked up a knowledge of English while attending a term of country school. When he left school he went to work in Lakota as clerk for A. J. Gronna, now prominent as a national legislator and congressman from North Dakota. He was with the Gronna business as a clerk for 3½ years, and then moved to Ray, North Dakota, where he was a clerk for Linville Nason for about four years.

In 1912 they shipped their stock of goods to Wolf Point and established one of the pioneer enterprises of the town. About a year ago the firm sold their general stock, and has since been partners in the exclusive men's clothing and furnishing store known as "The Fad." Mr. Isachsen was also one of the founders of the Citizens National Bank of Wolf Point, subsequently merged with the First National Bank, and is a stockholder in the latter. He is a stockholder in the Wolf Point Electric Light and Power Company, the Wolf Point Herald Company, the Equity Elevator Company, and the Sherman Hotel Company. Some of his capital went into the construction of the Johnson and Isachsen store, and besides his own bungalow home of five rooms he erected another residence of five rooms.

Besides the benefits of his private enterprise he has been an active worker with his fellow citizens in the Commercial Club, of which he is a charter member. Through the miscarriage of some of his early efforts in that direction, largely due to residence in different localities, Mr. Isachsen did not complete his American naturalization until recently, and he cast his first presidential vote in 1920. He and his wife were both reared in the Lutheran faith, and are members of that church.

At Glasgow, Montana, Mr. Isachsen married on May 30, 1916, Miss Josephine Hanson. She was born in Grand Forks County, North Dakota, April 25, 1885, a daughter of Jacob and Jacobine (Anderson) Hanson. Her parents came from Ibestad in Northern Norway, lived in Michigan and Wisconsin, and later became farmers in North Dakota. They are now living at Stanwood, Washington. Mrs. Isachsen is a sister of Charles M. Hanson, the Wolf Point postmaster. Mr. and Mrs. Isachsen have two children, Harold Irvin and Alvin Marselius.

Ole Erickson. The first real hotel at Wolf Point was the Wolf Point Hotel, opened by Ole Erickson. Mr. Erickson is a veteran in hotel management, and has not only given his house at Wolf Point a well justified popularity but has shown a high degree of public spirit in every phase of the town's development.

Mr. Erickson was born at Honnefas, about sixty miles west of Christiania, Norway, December 25, 1867. His parents were Eric and Maren (Helgeson) Erickson. His father owned a small grain farm in Southern Norway, cultivating it in summer, while winters he spent in logging camps of the North. On one of these trips in charge of a logging outfit he died in Russian Finland. His widow followed her son Ole to the United States, coming over about 1889, and kept her six children together and brought them up on a farm in Ashby, Minnesota. She came to Montana with her son Ole in 1912, and is still living in his home at the age of seventy-six. Her children are: Elias, a farmer near Fergus Falls, Minnesota; Lizzie, wife of John Cannon, of Tacoma, Washington; Annie, who was married to Frank Barney, of Minneapolis; Tille, wife of William Harms, of Seattle, Washington; and Olive, who died in Norway as Mrs. Nels Wickhammer.

Ole Erickson acquired his early education and some knowledge of farming in Norway. He left his native country at the age of eighteen, sailing on the Hecla from Christiania, and came to the new world alone. He passed through Castle Garden bound for Ashby, Minnesota, where his oldest sister lived. Mr. Erickson earned his first American dollar by pitching hay for his uncle at $15 a month. After a few months as a farm hand he found employment in the flouring mill at Ashby, spending two years there. For three months he worked only for his board in order to learn the English language. His wages in the mills were the same as on the farm, and his next business experience was learning the butcher's trade at Ashby. Though wages were low he economized severely and saved enough to send for his mother and younger sisters.

For eleven years Mr. Erickson lived at Mayville, North Dakota, where he worked in a meat market at wages of between $20 and $25 a month. Capital was saved slowly, but in time he had something to entice him into business on his own account. At Minneapolis he bought an interest in a market on Crystal Lake Avenue, and after 1½ years has expended his capital. Returning to North Dakota, he again began at the foot of the ladder and for three years lived on a homestead near Norwich. While proving up he kept bachelor's hall in a little shack 10 by 12 ft. After acquiring title to his land he sold it, and that was the capital with which he engaged in the restaurant and hotel business at Velva, North Dakota. He remained there for seven years, and at that point really laid the foundation of his business career. Coming from North Dakota to Montana, he opened the Wolf Point Hotel, and all the early commercial men and other travelers have interesting and grateful memories of Mr. Erickson as a landlord. His hotel was the fourth business place in Wolf Point.

Mr. Erickson is one of the charter members of the Wolf Point Commercial Club. That club was founded in his hotel by half a dozen local business men who started the movement. Mr. Erickson is one of the stockholders and directors of the First National Bank of Wolf Point, and is affiliated with the Odd Fellows Lodge, holding his membership at Velva, North Dakota. He took out his first American citizenship papers at Elbow Lake, Minnesota, and his final papers at Hillsboro, North Dakota. His first presidential vote went to Major McKinley in 1896, and he has been a stanch republican ever since. He was one of the first aldermen of Wolf Point, and gave his influence and advice in the organization of the municipal government.

July 1, 1903, Mr. Erickson married at Velva, North Dakota, Mary Skarison. She was born at Calmar, Iowa, August 25, 1875, daughter of Mathias and Thora (Christopherson) Skarison. Her father was born in the ancient Norwegian Town of Tonsberg, and her mother at Odallen in the same country. Her parents were married at Calmar, Iowa, where her father was a painter, and the family afterward lived at Mayville, North Dakota. Mathias Skarison served in the Forty-fourth Missouri Infantry during the Civil war, and was in General Thomas' Corps and General Smith's Brigade. Though he was a faithful soldier for 3½ years he escaped wounds. After the war he was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. The children of Mathias Skarison and wife were: Albert, of Mayville; Mrs. Erickson; Louise, wife of Pete Krislock, of Velva, North Dakota; Clara, wife of William Selk, of Velva; Lottie, who married Fred Neuhalfen, of Velva; George, a Velva merchant; and Aleda, wife of Ed Wisland, of Velva. Mr. and Mrs. Erickson have three children: Marguerite T., Edwin O. and Harold L.

Fred E. Rathert, whose active business service in Montana has been as a banker at Wolf Point and who during the past five years has been closely allied with the progressive citizens of the community, is a native of Iowa, but gained his banking experience in South Dakota prior to coming to Montana.

He was born at Cresco, Iowa, September 7, 1886. His father, William Rathert, born in Indiana in 1856, went to Iowa as a boy and is one of the old residents of Cresco, where he is still active in the fuel business. He married at Cresco Miss Sarah Price, a native of Wisconsin. Their children are: Clara, wife of Asa Farnsworth; and Maude, wife of J. J. Clemmer, both of Cresco; Fred E.; Don and Raymond, still at Cresco.

Fred E. Rathert after finishing a high school education at Cresco went out to North Dakota and at Fessenden was employed for three years in abstract work by M. E. Wilson and Company. That company gave him also his early training as a banker, sending him to Chance, South Dakota, with the Perkins County State Bank, owned by the Wilson and Company. Mr. Rathert was with that institution almost six years, and finally resigned as cashier to come to Montana.

In March, 1915, he located at Wolf Point to assume the duties of cashier of the First State Bank, succeeding Charles E. Roblin. He has since been the active manager of the institution and one of its directors.

The First State Bank of Wolf Point was founded and opened for business in May, 1913, with a capital of $20,000. The first officers were S. T. Cogswell, president; H. T. Smith, vice president; and Mr. Roblin, cashier. These officers remained the same today except Mr. Roblin as cashier and G. H. Flint as another vice president. The capital stock is now $30,000, surplus and undivided profits $12,000, and average deposits through the year are $475,000.

Mr. Rathert is an able young banker, and his vigor and enterprise have extended to other movements in the history of Wolf Point. He is a stockholder in the Sherman Hotel Company and the Herald Publishing Company, has served on the school board of the town, and was one of the first aldermen. He is a republican in national politics and is a Scottish Rite Mason, being affiliated with the Consistory and the Shriners Temple at Helena, and is a member of Loyalty Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Wolf Point. During the war he was chairman of the local committees raising funds for the prosecution of the American cause, and was treasurer of the local Red Cross Chapter.

In 1916 Mr. Rathert built one of the modern homes of Wolf Point, a seven room cottage. He married at Fessenden, North Dakota, March 12, 1908, Miss Mary Scharf. She was born at Spencer, Iowa, July 1, 1889, daughter of Charles W. and Annie (Jepson) Scharf. She finished her education in the high schol at Spencer and was married soon afterward. Mr. and Mrs. Rathert have two sons, Charles W. and George Kenneth.

Frank J. Tyner. A resident of Montana seven years, Frank J. Tyner of Oswego is a grain man of much experience and training, and is one of the firm of the Smith-Tyner Company, operating an elevator and doing business as a grain merchant in this part of the Missouri Valley.

Mr. Tyner was born on a farm, but since early manhood his work has been in commercial lines. He was born at Canton, New York, August 2, 1866, son of Richard and Louisa (Van Waltenburg) Tyner. His parents were natives of New York and farming people of that state. Richard Tyner, who died about 1870, when forty-five years of age, was the son of a New York State farmer who came from Ireland. The sons and daughters of grandfather Tyner were James, Robert and Richard, Sarah, Mary and Betsey. Richard Tyner's wife died when about sixty-two years of age. Their two sons and two daughters are all living in the far West: John, of Randolph, Minnesota; Mrs. R. L. Perry, of Valley City, North Dakota; Frank J.; and Mrs. Major Hunt, of Valley City, Oregon.

Frank J. Tyner graduated from the Canton High School at the age of nineteen, and the following year completed a course in the Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie. After a year of business experience in his native city he came West to Minnesota and acquired his early training in the grain business in the southern part of that state. For four years he was a resident of Northfield, connected with the Northfield National Bank. From there he removed to Minneapolis and was in the great flour city for ten years, most of the time being in the grain business with the McCall-Dinsmore Company.

On leaving Minneapolis Mr. Tyner came to Oswego, Montana, in the fall of 1913, and had charge of the building of the elevator, which has a capacity of 25,000 bushels. Practically all his time has been required by the local grain business, but he is also interested in the Smith-Tyner Company as stockholder and vice president, operating a flour milling business at Scobey, and also in the Smith-Tyner Company at Frazer.

Mr. Tyner began voting as a republican, supporting Benjamin Harrison for President in 1888 while at Canton. While at Northfield, Minnesota, he became affiliated with the Masonic Order. Mr. Tyner served as chairman of three of the Liberty Loan campaigns at Oswego. During the war Mrs. Tyner was chairman of the local chapter of the Red Cross.

At Northfield, Minnesota, June 12, 1905, Mr. Tyner married Miss Lucy Ella Smith, who was born in that city March 2, 1876, oldest of the three children of Reuben and Charlotte (Ames) Smith. Her parents were natives of the State of Maine. Mrs. Tyner's brother and sister are Jesse D., in charge of the Smith-Tyner Company at Scobey, and Mrs. Earl Boley, of McCone County, Montana. Mrs. Tyner was educated in the Northfield High School, also attended Carleton College of that city, and was a successful school teacher before her marriage.

Charles F. Huckins. Properly placed among the pioneer settlers along Powder River, and accepted as a representative of the best type of cattlemen of Montana, Charles F. Huckins belongs in a work of this high class. He was born in Kankakee County, Illinois, March 26, 1857, a son of Samuel and Louesa (Redford) Huckins, natives of Ontario, Canada, and Michigan. Samuel Huckins came to the United States when fourteen years of age, accompanying his parents, Joseph and Malinda (Sawyer) Huckins, who located at Momence, Illinois, and there spent the remainder of their lives. They had three sons and four daughters, and all of their sons served in the Union Army during the war between the states. Samuel Huckins enlisted in Company G, Sixteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, serving in General George H. Thomas' corps, and participating in the battles of Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, and the campaign in Georgia with General Sherman, completing his military experience at Goldsboro, North Carolina. His period of service extended over nearly three years and he escaped being wounded, as did his two brothers, but his wife's four brothers were all killed in service. Samuel Huckins and his wife had the following children: Andrew, who lives at Vancouver, Washington; Lucius, who is also a resident of Vancouver; Charles F., whose name heads this review; and Mrs. Clara Ryan, who lives at Vancouver.

When still a child Charles F. Huckins was taken to Iowa and lived near Cresco, Howard County, for six years, or until his parents moved on to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, and there he remained until he was seventeen years of age, completing his educational training in the public schools of that locality. When he was seventeen years old he began to be self-supporting, leaving home and joining the Red Cloud Agency of Nebraska to "whack bulls" for Pratt & Ferris. He hauled freight from the Rosebud landing on the Missouri River to the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies in Nebraska, and was so occupied until two years later, when he became infected with the mining fever, stampeding with the rest and going into the Black Hills expecting to find gold lying in the creek beds by the shovelful. Of course he was bitterly disappointed and used up his grub and money trying to locate "color." Disillusioned, he sought another job "bullwhacking," and found it with Hornick & Evans, plying from Sidney to the Black Hills. Later he met Perry Wisdom, and the two resolved to break away from their old associates and old habits and engage in another line of work. They took up trapping, and while engaged in that industry they came into Montana in September, 1879, with a span of little ponies and a "trap wagon." Being so equipped they were recognized as trappers. They had netted all the fur-bearing animals of the region, including the wolf, bear, beaver and bob-cat, but as a money-getting venture it was not a success, and once more they were "looking for a job." Realizing that there was much more demand for beef than for furs, they became cowpunchers, but indulged in hunting as a recreation and killed a number of buffalo, elk, deer and other animals. Until 1885 Mr. Huckins continued his partnership with Mr. Wisdom, but they then separated, the latter going into Wyoming, since which time Mr. Huckins has had no definite information relative to his movements.

Mr. Huckins then went to work for the "Fifty-four" outfit on Pumpkin Creek, on the present site of the ranch of Dan Gaskill, operated by C. B. Strauss, a native of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and rode the range for him for two years, when he changed to the "C Dot" horse outfit, also called the "969" cow outfit, located on the same creek. The place is now occupied by the ranch of J. D. Viall. After three years of active service Mr. Huckins left this outfit and forming a partnership with Nate Williams, who later founded Terry, Montana, returned to his occupation of buffalo hunting. Messrs. Huckins and Williams joined other outfits hunting the bison, and they made "buffalo circle" their camping place. As a result of the prowess of these mighty hunters they chased the last band of buffalo to the Porcupine and other points north of the Yellowstone River, and then lay in wait for the animals to pass them so that they could slay them by the hundreds and then skin them, as the profit to the hunters was from the sale of the hides. Mr. Huckins took a hunting horse with him, but he used him only to find the herd and get within walking distance of them. He would then leave his horse and crawl upon them and do his execution from the ground. In this hunting he used a 45-90 Sharps rifle, and his kill from a herd ranged from one to twenty-one animals. This gun is still in the community in which he lives and is an object of interest. For three years he followed up the hunt and of course became an expert rifle shot. The last stand made for the buffalo was on the Big Dry, where Jordan now stands, and it was while waiting for the animals to drift back to them that the hunters found that the buffalo had fled the locality and was rapidly leaving the state. Hunters had been too numerous and skillful, and the buffalo sensing the danger abandoned the old grazing grounds, crossed the Missouri River, which they swam, at the mouth of the Big Dry, and followed up the Milk River to its crossing the Canadian border, and there the pursuit of the last band of buffalo in Montana was abandoned and the end of buffalo hunting came in September, 1882.

Turning then to another line of activity, Mr. Huckins decided to engage in railroad construction work on the Montana Central Railroad, which was being built between Great Falls and Butte. He bought some teams and took a contract for the grading of some of the line at Alhambra Springs, securing twenty-three sections of the road, completing his work according to contract, but because he refused to build bridge abutments higher than specified the general contractor and engineer refused to pay for his work, and he never recovered on it. Mr. Huckins then took his teams to Basin, Montana, and put in a cordwood camp and furnished wood to the Boston and Montana Consolidated Copper Mining Company's smelter for two years, and although he made money he contracted rheumatism and had to leave that region and come to the ranch he had located on Pumpkin Creek. For a time he ranched in the summer, shearing sheep, putting up hay and bought some stock, and made enough improvements upon his property to command a price that netted him considerable profit when he found a buyer at his figure.

Mr. Huckins then came to Powder River, bringing with him a bunch of mares of Percheron strain which he had picked up while with the "Three Dot" outfit. For several years after coming to the Powder River district he bred Percheron horses, and no others of like quality went out of the state. He shipped them far and wide and they always attracted attention and everywhere advertised the Huckins ranch from which they came. At the first horse sales established in Miles City he "topped" the market with his stock. In time, however, he found that his sheep and cattle were crowding his horses off the range and gradually went out of the horse business.

As a cattle man Mr. Huckins adopted the brand "YD," but subsequently sold it and then recorded the "R-Bar block" which he also sold, since then running under the brand "LS." He was in the sheep business for a dozen years, but his profits from it did not justify his continuing in it, and he gave up sheep for cattle. Mr. Huckins homesteaded on Powder River, where his improvements now stand, and he has developed a ranch of 1,100 acres, of which 200 acres are in alfalfa. He has always given reasonable attention to farming, but has never raised but one crop in all of his farming, and that was of oats. Notwithstanding his preference for cattle raising he has made a record of 75 bushels of wheat and 125 bushels of oats per acre. He declares that if anyone will give him as many bushels of seed as he has planted to various crops he will donate as many bushels of grain as he has ever harvested from his land.

Charles F. Huckins was married in Custer County, Montana, to Miss Leonora Henning on July 13, 1893. She is a daughter of Frederick Henning, a pioneer on Tongue River, who came to Montana in 1880 and entering land was among the very first to try to farm in the vicinity of Miles City. Mr. Henning was a native of Hamburg, Germany, a soldier during the Franco-German war, and immigrated to the United States soon after the close of that conflict, locating in Minnesota, where he was married. While living there he assisted in putting down an Indian uprising which had resulted in a massacre. In 1869 Mr. Henning made his first trip to Montana, prospecting in the region around Helena and located the "Drum Lomand," a quartz mine, but never followed its development. After two years spent in the territory he returned to Minnesota, but came back to Montana in 1880 to make it his permanent home. During the last years of his life he was engaged in the wool industry on Lilscomb Creek, where he died in 1892, aged sixty-four years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Dorothy Mensing, was also a native of Germany, her birthplace being Hanover. She died in Minnesota. Their children were as follows: Mrs. Regina Suepke, of Stacy, Montana; Julius, who lives at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Frederick, who died on Powder River in 1916; Emil, who is a farmer near Stacy, Montana; Emma, who lives at Miles City, Montana, is now Mrs. Chauncey Weaver; Mrs. Huckins, who was born June 8, 1876; Mrs. Fannie Tyler, who is the wife of Riley Tyler, of Stacy, Montana; and Mrs. Minnie Tetters, of Custer County, Montana.

Mr. and Mrs. Huckins became the parents of the following children: Gladys, who is the wife of Roy Geer, of Powder River County, Montana; Carrie, who is the wife of James Geer, a farmer on Butte Creek, Powder River County, has a daughter, Edith; McKinley; Charles A.; Clifford I., who holds diplomas in electrical work for the Sweeney Automobile School of Kansas City, Missouri, as well as a diploma as a graduate in auto work from the same school; Lloyd A.; and Forra F.

Although so busy a man Mr. Huckins has never neglected his duty to his county and country. His first presidential vote after the admission of Montana as a state in 1892 was for Benjamin Harrison, and he has continued in the ranks of the republican party. In 1909 Mr. Huckins was elected county commissioner of Custer County on the issue of good roads. He made the plea that the buffalo trails the people of Powder River were using were entitled to the distinction of being made public highways and that if he were elected to the county board he would accomplish that for his county. Taken at his word, he was placed in office by a large majority, and he immediately began working to make good on his promise. Although it was two years before he could get favorable action, he made up for the delay during the remaining two years by building excellent roads in his district. His associates on the board were Commissioners Stith and Bateman. The value of his services in this connection received tangible recognition by his being sent as a delegate to the first Good Roads Convention of Montana, held at Billings, and there he gave expression to his views as to the benefits accruing from good roads.

Mr. Huckins' activities have been many, and in addition to those already mentioned he has served his district as school trustee, and he is a director of the Powder River Telephone Company and also its president. While on the county board he made a fight for the establishment by the county of a county hospital, and won it against a bitter opposition led by Miles City. The result of his efforts in this connection is the fine modern hospital of Custer County, which gives indigent people first-class treatment without expense to them. Social by nature, Mr. Huckins finds congenial connections in his membership with Miles City Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. There are few men more representative of Montana's best element than Mr. Huckins. During the formative period of this great commonwealth he engaged in almost every industry specially typical of it, gradually developing into a large landowner and man of affairs. His early experiences have made him big of brains and warm of heart. He can never forget his struggles against adversity, nor close his door upon those in need. Having been one of the pioneers of this region and participating in its development he takes a natural and healthy pride in further improvements and is willing to make almost any sacrifice to bring them about, both as a private individual and public official. As before stated, his work with reference to the Good Roads movement is exceedingly valuable and his name will always be associated with it in this section, although he is not yet through with it, having many plans for an extension of the improvements, devoting much time to working out his ideas and securing the co-operation of other men of influence.

MATHIESON MURRAY. In the career of Mathieson Murray, vice president of the Farmers and Stockgrowers Bank of Glasgow, is shown what can be accomplished by a man provided he knows how to make use of his talents and is willing to work with a definite object in view. He was born at Woodstock, Ontario, Canada, March 27, 1876, a son of Robert Murray.

Robert Murray was born in Sutherlandshire, Scotland, and was brought by his parents to Canada when he was eight years of age. He was reared in the vicinity of Woodstock, Ontario, Canada, and developed into a farmer and sheep raiser on a small scale, being known as a "crofter." His death occurred about 1886, when he was seventy-four years old, and from the time he was eight he lived in and about Woodstock. Robert Murray was married to Annie Mathieson, a daughter of George Mathieson, and she, too, was born in Sutherlandshire, Scotland. Her death occurred several years before that of her husband. They had the following children: John, who is a resident of Stratford, Ontario, Canada; Jean, who is the wife of Columbus Ross, of Embro, Ontario, Canada; George, who is a resident of Drayton, North Dakota; Doctor Gilbert, who is practicing medicine at Scranton, Pennsylvania; Margaret, who married Daniel Murray, of Woodstock, Ontario, Canada; Jessie, who married Crandall Monroe, of Embro, Ontario, Canada; and Mathieson, who is the youngest.

Mathieson Murray had but few educational advantages, but he was given a practical training by his careful father, and has since found these lessons of value to him. When he was seventeen years old he left home and came to the United States, and for a year was employed at driving sheep from the docks at Buffalo, New York, to the Stock Yards at Chicago, Illinois, for Swift & Company, and then was transferred to Chicago by that same company, and finally became one of the buyers of sheep, and when he left the employ of Swift & Company it was to come to Montana and go into the sheep business for himself.

In order to gain a practical knowledge of conditions in this region Mr. Murray engaged for a time with J. B. Long of the Judith Basin, one of the best known sheepmen of Montana, and was with him from 1899 until 1914, rising from the position of herder to that of partner. Leaving Mr. Long in 1914 Mr. Murray formed business connections with Gordon Jamieson, under the name of Jamieson & Murray, and they became one of the most important firms of sheepgrowers in the county, running when in their prime as many as 35,000 head, but with the closing of the range they have been forced to curtail their production and now have only about 7,000 head under their brand.

In the winter of 1917 Mr. Murray joined his partner in organizing the Farmers and Stockgrowers Bank at Glasgow, capitalized at $35,000, and officered by J. R. Jamieson as president, Mathieson Murray as vice president, and E. D. Button as cashier. Other members of the board of directors aside from these officials are: W. W. Hurd, Henry Shipstead, W. A. White and Roy Billingsly. The capital of the bank is now $40,000, and the average deposits are $270,000.

Mr. Murray took out his citizen papers at Great Falls, Montana, in time to cast his first presidential vote for William McKinley in 1900, and he has continued to vote the republican ticket in national affairs. He served as a member of the City Council for one year before he was elected Mayor of the City of Glasgow in 1917, and he was re-elected to that office in the spring of 1919. During his occupancy of the office as a successor of P. E. Kent and himself he has achieved remarkable results in the development of a system of sidewalks, the extension of sewers and water lines and other improvements, which were made possible by the issuance of special improvement bonds for the districts affected.

Glasgow Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, made Mr. Murray a Mason, and he maintains membership with it, and also with the Consistory and Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana.

On February 22, 1907, Mr. Murray was married at Helena, Montana, to Miss Alice McKay, a daughter of Alexander McKay and his wife, Maria (Smith) McKay, farming people, who resided on a farm adjoining that of the Murrays, and on it Mrs. Murray was born. She is the eldest of six children born to her parents, and the only one of the family living in the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Murray have the following children: Julia Ann, Margaret Ross, Mathieson and Donald Graham. The Murray residence at Glasgow was erected in 1913, and is a ten-room, story-and-a-half bungalow, with full basement, the latter being equipped with a laundry. The house is thoroughly modern in every respect, and is in Murray's Addition to Glasgow, the addition platted by Mr. Murray in 1913.

During the Great war Mr. Murray was very active in the work of the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, was one of the Four Minute speakers, and a member of the Glasgow Home Guards, in every way endeavoring to assist the administration in carrying out its policies. He has always had the good of the community at heart, and has found in it his inspiration, and has been able to give to it the full force of his unusual abilities. A man of broad vision, technical experience and business ability, he has exerted his will and brought into play his resourcefulness in the administration of the duties of his high office, and has handled with tact and success a number of difficult problems.

CHARLES C. SARGENT. There are few men still actively engaged in the affairs of his community and state who can trace their connection with the history of Montana as far back as can Charles C. Sargent of Nashua, an early merchant of this place and the original homesteader of the present site of the village. He came into the Treasure State soon after it was made a territory, as a soldier in Company C, Thirty-first United States Infantry, and as such assisted in the building of Fort Buford. The American Fur Company Post was then at Fort Union, on the Montana-Dakota line, and the company of soldiers to which he belonged came up the Missouri River on the boat Mary McDonald and landed from it at the fort June 12, 1866. Mr. Sargent helped to cut the first timber used in the construction of the new fort. He also helped to dig the first grave there for a victim of Indian atrocity. During the three years of his service Company C fought the Indians, who became so savage in their attacks that the soldiers were forced to abandon their practice of going to the river for water, and dug a well inside of the fort to supply their needs during mid-winter.

After his discharge from the army Mr. Sargent became a civilian scout, and served the Government as such for five years. In this service his duties were to detect smugglers and illicit traders and prevent them from supplying the Indians with whisky and ammunition. This was before the tide of immigration began to flow into the state. The only immigrant train that came through while he was connected with the fort that could be regarded as belonging to this class was that which brought in the Fisk brothers, who were subsequently engaged in the newspaper business at Helena, Montana, for years.

Mr. Sargent was scout for the party that went up the Yellowstone River on the steamboat Far West to Terry's Landing with a boatload of supplies under Col. O. H. Moore, and from that place he was detailed to go in search of General Custer's command coming out from Bismarck. He met the command near the present site of Medora, Montana, where it joined Terry's command, and the force, with him as scout, moved on to the mouth of Powder River. At that point General Custer left General Terry and took his command up Powder River to the country in which his army was soon to be annihilated, while General Terry took his command, under the guidance of Mr. Sargent, to the mouth of the Rosebud. There Mr. Sargent left the command and returned to Fort Buford with dispatches for the commanding officer. He was not sent back to General Terry's command until after the Custer massacre, and subsequently he was transferred to Fort Buford, where he belonged.

During the winter of 1876-7 Mr. Sargent left the Government service as a scout and took up civil pursuits under Joe Leighton, Indian trader, and was sent to Wolf Point to build a store for him and for eighteen months after the store was completed and opened was in charge of it, and subsequently he assisted in building the first store erected at Poplar which latter store was owned by John Thompson and Company. It was about this time that Mr. Sargent became agency interpreter at Wolf Point and later at Poplar. In his communications with the several tribes of Sioux Indians he became acquainted and somewhat intimate with Chief Sitting Bull, Chief Gall anl Chief Red Stone, the latter head chief of the Assiniboines at Wolf Point. Medicine Bear was the big chief at Poplar, but Thundering Bear and Many Horns, Long Fox, Crazy Walker, Black Catfish and numerous others of the lesser chiefs were to be seen daily at that point, all of whom have passed to the "happy hunting ground." Mr. Sargent relieved old Major Culbertson when he was appointed interpreter at that point, the latter retiring and returning to his home in Illinois, where he soon afterward died.

Following the completion of his work as interpreter Mr. Sargent engaged in hunting and trapping along the Missouri River, and also carried on a good business selling wood to the steamboats. A green buffalo hide was worth then $2; a beaver pelt brought from $5 to $10, and a coyote skin brought from $1.50 to $2. After trapping for a time he went back to Wolf Point and entered the store of W. B. Shaw, where he spent two years, and then once more became a Government employe as farm instructor to the Indians at Boxelder, a sub-agency of Poplar.

During 1886 Mr. Sargent realized that with the construction of the railroad through this region settlers would begin to come in and that if he desired to have his choice of a homestead it was advisable to make an early selection, and so he took as his claim, as before stated, the present site of Nashua. He built his first house on the bank of the Porcupine, which continued to be the site of his residence until the erection of the new Sargent home in 1920. For a number of years he was engaged in ranching, although in 1888 he put in a stock of goods in the same log house he was using for postal purposes, as he had been appointed postmaster the preceding fall, and either he or a member of his family has held the office ever since, save for two years when the appointment was refused, and he is the present postmaster of Nashua. The name of Sargent has been connected with the mercantile trade of the place since the initial opening of his store.

Mr. Sargent played an important part in the incorporation of Nashua, and secured for it a separate school district from that of Glasgow, and he served it for twenty years as a member of the school board. He was one of the prime movers in the creation of Valley County, which was formed from old Dawson County, and was a member of the first jury impaneled in Valley County. He also assisted in surveying the first road in the new county.

Charles C. Sargent was born January 21, 1846, in either Louisiana or Texas, although he prefers to claim the Lone Star State as his birthplace, a son of William and Phebe (Lee) Sargent, natives of Alabama and Mississippi, respectively. The parents had two children, the elder being Catherine, who married H. T. Dauley and spent her life in Texas. His parents migrated to Texas, about the time their son was born, and located at Galveston, but not long afterward the father made a trip to Hot Springs, Arkansas, and there died. His widow owned a number of slaves and a large plantation, but lost practically everything during the war between the states. In spite of being born in the South, the sympathies of Charles C. Sargent were with the Union, and he left home when only fifteen years old and enlisted in the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Infantry at Batesville, Arkansas, and when his first period of service had expired he reenlisted at Cape Girardeau, Missouri, in the Second Missouri Light Artillery, Battery G, and served with General Steele's army, and also with that of General Curtis west of the Mississippi River. Later he was under General Washburn east of the Mississippi River in Tennessee, and participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Batesville and Waugh's Farm, and then for a year was stationed with his regiment at Memphis, Tennessee, protecting that city. He received his honorable discharge at Saint Louis, Missouri, in July, 1865, without having been wounded, but with a six weeks' experience as a prisoner of war. He was captured while on a march through Arkansas, being absent from the main body "rustling dinner" for himself and four of his companions, but he was exchanged at Little Rock, Arkansas, from which point he made his way to his command as best he could.

Still only a lad in years, Mr. Sargent's adventurous spirit could not be satisfied with ordinary happenings, as he found during a few months he spent with his sister in Union County, Illinois, and in January, 1866, he enlisted once more, with the exciting and praiseworthy service above noted. He was sent into Montana from Jefferson Barracks, Saint Louis, but he re-entered the service at Memphis, Tennessee.

Long before he had attained to legal age Mr. Sargent, while in the uniform of a Union soldier, in 1864, cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln for the presidency, and has continued to give his support to the candidates of the republican party, and feels that now, more than ever, his party is the one which gives this country the best government for all classes.

Charles C. Sargent married his present wife at Chicago, Illinois, she being Miss Rose Ann Carey, a daughter of Bryan Carey, and a native of that city. His children, born of a former marriage, are as follows: Mrs. Ralph Berger and Mrs. Rose Brocksmith, both of whom are residents of Nashua.

Mr. Sargent is the owner of the town site of Nashua, and was one of the organizers and is president of the First National Bank here. He has borne his part in much of the needed county improvements, including the building of churches, schools, bridges and roads, and has always felt that in doing so he was but rendering a service that was to be expected of any man who laid claims to being a good citizen, for without them no community is in the progressive class.

WILLIAM M. LEONARD, a dairy farmer near Glasgow, has been a resident of Montana since 1907. He came to this state from Park River, North Dakota, but is a native son of Wisconsin, born in Green Lake County of that commonwealth March 25, 1862. During his infancy the family moved to Minnesota and settled in Goodhue County, where the son was reared as a farmer lad.

Ebenezer Leonard, his father, was born in the State of New York February 28, 1818. He went out to Wisconsin in his young manhood and was married in Green Lake County to Miss Mavilla Leonard, of the same family name but not related. She was born in the State of New York in October, 1823. After locating in Minnesota, Mr. Leonard bought land near Zumbroda, and in that locality he made their home for many years, finally removing to Red Wood County, where Mrs. Leonard died at Springfield in 1898. Ebenezer Leonard devoted his life to mixed farming and stock raising, remained in moderate circumstances, reared and educated a numerous family of children and always proved a worthy citizen. He was a republican in his political affiliations, but belonged to no fraternal order or church. Mrs. Leonard was a daughter of a trader who lived in Northern New York, along the Canadian line. The following children were born to Ebenezer and Mavilla Leonard: Emma, who died unmarried; Ernest, of Tacoma, Washington; Joel, who is farming near Minneapolis; Mary, the wife of Isaac Fletcher, of Los Angeles, California; Cynthia, who married Charles Gillette, of Colrain, Minnesota; William M., of Glasgow, Montana; and Mabel, wife of Ed Peters, of Addie, Washington.

William M. Leonard gained a limited school training at Zumbroda, Minnesota, in his youth, and after he established a home of his own his parents lived with him throughout the remainder of their lives. He became a farmer at Red Wood Falls when he reached the age of maturity, was married there, and spent twelve years in that county, during a part of the time serving as a road supervisor. After again selling his interests there he located at Hutchinson, Minnesota, where he resumed farming, but after four years disposed of his interests and moved to Park River, North Dakota. During eight years of his residence there he was engaged in the implement business, later was engaged in the livery business and was a dealer in horses, and when he disposed of his interests in North Dakota he came out to Montana and having friends at Glasgow, settled in that vicinity.

Purchasing land four miles east of the county seat, Mr. Leonard again became a farmer. In time he discovered that a mixed enterprise of farming and dairying was better adapted to this region, and he proved so successful in the business that he was chosen as one of the six experimental farmers of the state, and his farm was chosen as the scene of his operations. He held that distinctive place for four years, and during that time tested out sugar mangles as a food for hogs, determining it to have a good food value, and also tried out sorghum as a stock food proposition and found it to be profitable and reliable to grow. Flax was one of the important crops experimented with, and one year he had seven different varieties on his farm, but only a few of the varieties measured up to the requirements. Four different kinds of flint corn and three other varieties of Dent corn grew side by side in rivalry for the verdict as a reliable corn producer.

Mr. Leonard also carried on dairying with his farming operations, having brought some splendid Shorthorn milch cows with him from North Dakota. He has sold cream ever since he has lived in the state, and has gained the reputation of being the head of this enterprise in this region. In his judgment a farmer without a monthly milk check is taking too long a chance in this country. Hogs have been grown on his farm at a profit. His ranch comprises 360 acres, improved with modern dairy barns, kept as clean as possible, a hog shelter and other necessary farm improvements. The Leonard residence is a two-story, seven-room house, and the water supply on the farm is ideal. His was the first well dug on the "bench," and he found an abundance of soft water at a depth of fifty-six feet.

Mr. Leonard encouraged the movement for a county farm bureau, and his advice has been sought in the carrying on of the work and in the selection of its managers. In reviewing the thirteen years which he has spent in Montana he regards them as a period well and profitably spent.

Mr. Leonard grew to mature years in a republican community, and he cast his first national ballot in the support of those principles, his first vote going to James G. Blaine, and he has the distinction of having voted at each succeeding national election since, always supporting the republican nominee. He is a Master Mason, belongs to Park River Blue Lodge of North Dakota, and is also a member of the fraternal order of Modern Woodmen. The family are members of the Congregational Church.

On the 25th of September, 1887, Mr. Leonard was married to Mrs. Emily Baker, a daughter of Olan B. and Harriet (Hubbard) Leatherman. Mrs. Leonard was born near the birthplace of her husband in Wisconsin, September 20, 1857, was liberally educated, being a high school graduate, and during several years taught school in Red Wood County, Minnesota. Her father, who had migrated from Wisconsin to Minnesota, was a retired farmer during the latter part of his life. Mrs. Leonard, who was the youngest of his four children, passed away in July, 1919, the mother of a large family of children. The oldest, Ethel, is the wife of Paul Grasscup, and they are living on the Leonard farm. Ione married Bertrum P. Langen, of Glasgow, and has two children, Leonard and Robert. Martin, who is a farmer in Webster, Wisconsin, married Mamie Johnson and has a son, Lloyd. Cecil, a resident of San Francisco, California, is head of the reconciliation department of the Bank of Italy, and during the World war served in the Aviation Corps as a second lieutenant, trained in different camps in the United States, spent about a year overseas, and took part in the flying on the German border just before the war ended. Emily, the youngest of the children, is with her brother in San Francisco, and is a stenographer with the Federal Construction Company, and in training as a vocalist. Harriet, Mrs. Leonard's daughter by her first husband, is the wife of James Hemphill, of Rensselaer, Indiana, and has issue Sanford De Leo. Frank Leonard is an adopted son of Mr. Leonard and is a machinery expert at Park River, North Dakota. He married Kate O'Harra and his children are: Harold, Robert and Margaret.

Richard W. Garland, of Malta, is one of the early settlers of what is now Phillips County, and his Montana citizenship is as old as the state itself, since he came here in 1889. He was formerly in the railroad service as a station agent, and went from that into merchandising, an interest which he still continues, though his chief efforts for many years have been devoted to an extensive farm and ranch.

Mr. Garland was born at Cargill, Ontario, Canada, February 7, 1860, son of Patrick and Eliza (Whitney) Garland, both of Irish ancestry. His father was born at Carlton Place, County Lanark, Ontario, spent all his life in that locality as an industrious carpenter and farmer, and died at the age of sixty-nine. His wife was born at Perth in County Lanark, a daughter of Richard Whitney, and she died at the age of seventy-four. Her children were: Richard W., of Malta; Ann Jane, who married V. J. Johnson and died in Ontario; William H., a ranchman in Phillips County, Montana; May, wife of C. S. Johnson, a resident of Cantaur, Saskatchewan, Canada; Eliza, wife of H. G. Robinson, of Malta, Montana; and Belle, wife of C. W. Hunter, of Cantaur, Saskatchewan.

Richard W. Garland spent most of his youthful years on his father's farm, attended local and grade schools, and just before entering high school decided that his education was sufficient and from that time until his majority lived on a farm. He then began learning telegraphy in the office of the agent of the Grand Trunk Railway at Cargill, and from operator he qualified himself for the performance of duties as a station agent. In 1889 he came to Montana as an employe of the Great Northern Railway Company, his first position being as cashier and operator at Fort Benton. Later he was assigned the duty of opening the Sand Coulee station, and subsequently was agent at Dodson until 1891. In that year he left railroading to become a merchant at Malta, and his eight years' training as a railroad man proved invaluable as a business experience. He had established a small store at Dodson, and on moving to Malta he became a partner with R. M. Trafton, the firm of Trafton and Company continuing for five years, when Mr. Garland sold out to his partner and then bought an interest in a similar business with W. Tucker. Tucker and Garland remained as a firm at Malta four years, at the end of which time Mr. Garland sold to his partner his interest in the groceries and hardware and after that conducted an exclusive dry goods store on his own account for several years. Selling out, three years later he and F. W. St. Hill bought the old business, and the new firm of Garland and St. Hill existed for three years. Selling out again to his partner, Mr. Garland concentrated his energies next upon his growing ranching interests. He had already entered the horse business and in 1900 he abandoned this and bought a band of sheep, which he ran on his ranch twenty-four miles north of Malta on Little Cottonwood Creek. That has been the scene of his ranching efforts ever since. He continued as a sheep man until 1917, and since then has emphasized the horse industry with some cattle. He began ranching on a tract of 1,000 acres, but gradually extended his operations over a much larger domain by the use of leased lands; 670 acres of his land are under the Milk River Irrigation Project, and about 400 acres under cultivation for the growing of native hay and alfalfa. His operations rank him as one of the extensive farmers of the state. Though he left merchandising at Malta many years ago, he is still interested as a merchant, with a business at Freewater in Phillips County.

He has had a rare experience in the postal service. He was postmaster at Dodson after Mr. Cleveland's second election, later for many years was postmaster at Malta, and is now postmaster at Freewater. He has filled the office under every president since Grover Cleveland's second election. In politics he is a republican, but has been retained in postal service and has given it his most efficient energies under the various administrations. He cast his first presidential vote in 1892 for Benjamin Harrison after taking out citizenship papers at Glasgow.

Mr. Garland was one of the first Board of Commissioners of old Valley County, serving five years, his associates on the board being C. S. Stafford of Culbertson and C. W. Hunter of Saco. That board built nearly all the first bridges of the region then embraced in Valley County, and established on a permanent basis the affairs of the county after the work of the temporary board.

At Cargill, Canada, Mr. Garland married for his first wife Miss Esther Ellen Keyes, a daughter of George Keyes. She died at Great Falls eleven years after their marriage, leaving no children. September 29, 1897, Mr. Garland married Miss Sarah Ann Routledge, who was born near Cargill, Ontario, July 6, 1873, daughter of George Routledge, who was of English ancestry and a farmer. Mrs. Garland was the fifth in a family of nine children. To Mr. and Mrs. Garland were born four children: Richard Edwin, now associated with the management of his father's store at Freewater; John Arthur, attending high school at Malta; and George William and Earl Whitney.

LAZARE EREAUX. One of the most interesting pioneer characters of the Milk River country is Lazare, universally known as "Curley," Ereaux. Everyone belonging to this region north of the Missouri River knows him, and few can tell his real name. He is known everywhere as "Curley," and seems to have always borne the name. He was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, on Wolf River, July 8, 1841, a son of Michael Ereaux.

Michael Ereaux was also a Canadian by birth, but, as the name indicates, came of French ancestry. His first wife bore the maiden name of Mary La Verne, and they became the parents of the following children: Judy, who spent his life in Canada; Mitchell, who came to the United States in young manhood and passed the remainder of his life in Morrison County, Minnesota; Lazare, whose name heads this review; Joseph, who died in Minnesota and left a family; Dametra, who married and died in Minnesota; Mary, who married a Mr. Valle and died in Minnesota; Arguette, who married a Mr. Vartineau, died in Minnesota; and Julia, who is Mrs. Jo Ducette.

Lazare Ereaux learned to operate a farm while he lived at home, but was given no educational advantages whatever. When he was only eleven years of age he came to the United States with his parents, who located near Little Falls, Minnesota. Later Michael Ereaux, having lost his wife, returned to Canada, was again married, and lived to be over ninety years of age.

Lazare Ereaux was engaged in farming in the vicinity of Little Falls, Minnesota, when he heard of the expedition Captain Fees was organizing to take emigrants from that section into the Treasure State of Montana, then still a territory. The idea pleased him and he joined the expedition, which left Saint Cloud, Minnesota, fifty-three men strong, and after three months reached Fort Benton. There were no happenings calculated to disturb the party, and the Indians gave them no trouble, nor did they even threaten them until after they reached Montana. At Devil's Lake the party found General Sibley's army 1,500 strong, there to make peace with the Sioux, and when Devil's Lake had been passed they saw their first buffalo. From then on buffalo meat was included with their rations.

Reaching Bannock in the fall of 1863 the party dissolved, and the members began to carry out plans for acquiring great riches through the shoveling of a little dirt. They had come to the region imbued with the idea that gold was lying about only waiting for them to pick it up, and bitter was their disappointment at finding that then, just as always, wealth can only be acquired through intelligently laid plans and hard work. The winter was unusually severe, and as was but natural in a newly opened district there was little employment to be secured after the emigrants had realized that the "treasure" of the great territory was securely guarded by the forces of nature.

It was at Bannock that Lazare was given his nickname of "Curley" by the lady with whom he secured board, and it has stuck to him, and he uses it almost entirely, except when signing his name to documents. When he arrived at Bannock he had but $5, and did not retain it long, as a friend of his, who thought he was a faro adept, induced him to loan the bill for another "try" at the game, with the result that both were "broke" in about thirty minutes. However, an energetic young man like Mr. Ereaux who had been self-supporting from the age of eleven years was not much disturbed by the fact that his pockets were empty, and he immediately secured employment with a logger and was sent into the timber. Owing to the intense cold he and his companions nearly froze to death, and received no money for a month's work. Board was then $3 a day, and some idea of his personality can be gained from the fact that he managed to secure accommodations and get his employer to stand behind him for the debt he was forced to incur.

With the coming of spring, work was abundant and "Curley" Ereaux had plenty of it at $6 a day, although he tried to obtain $7. As soon as he had accumulated a little money he and two others undertook to build a bridge over the Big Hole River on the main road to Virginia City, and began the job all right, but numerous obstacles arose and it was not completed until after a disagreement among the partners, which resulted in Mr. Ereaux selling his interest in the project for $1,000, and with this money bought a freighting outfit and entered into a period of prosperity.

He was engaged in freighting between Fort Benton and Virginia City, hauling goods and passengers at fabulous prices, the rate for the latter being $200 each. From this it will be easily seen that Mr. Ereaux was the owner of a "bonanza" business, and in a position, had he saved his money, to become a plutocrat in a hurry, but like so many young men of that period, and of today for that matter, he was a reckless spender. His stream of gold seemed to ooze with opportunities for spendthrift habits, and when he left this business three years after he had entered it he was not burdened with his surplus.

Once more he was induced to undertake a bridge venture, with two partners, one of them proving to be the late "John Barleycorn," who kept himself in the background until actual construction of the bridge commenced over the Sun River, and then showed himself master of the man with whom Mr. Ereaux had formed his association. Disgusted and disheartened by his realization of the unreliability of his drunken partner Mr. Ereaux simply walked away from the job and never received any compensation for his share of the work.

He spent the winter of 1869 at Fort Brown, and in the spring of 1870 located on the Salt Fork of Sun River, and was the first white settler of that locality. Here he engaged in farming, raising oats and other grain for fifteen years and selling his produce to the government post at Fort Shaw. While living there he accumulated a bunch of cattle, and when he moved to the Fort Belknap Reservation in 1885 he took his cattle along. Once more he met with reverses, for he was charged nearly $400 for the privilege of grazing his cattle on the reservation by a dishonest Indian agent. This led him to take up ranching at Bear Paw, but he finally settled at the mouth of Peoples Creek, where he improved his final ranch home and completed his career as a stockman upon an extensive scale. He was the first white man to locate on that creek, and was the pioneer in the building of an irrigation project. His experiences taught him that moisture at the proper time was just as necessary in Montana as in any other agricultural country, and he decided to provide through artificial means what was lacking. Long before the Milk River project was shaped up he had a successful system of his own in operation on his ranch.
